TERMS OF REFERENCE.

"To inquire into the conditions and circumstances under which land in Wales and Monmouthshire is held, occupied, and cultivated."

HEADS OF INQUIRY.

In order to guide the Commissioners in their examination of witnesses, it is requested that persons desiring to submit evidence should forward to the Secretary (Trafalgar Buildings, Charing Cross, London, S.W.) the names and addresses of the witnesses proposed to be examined, together with a brief statement of the heads of the evidence which they are prepared to offer.

The following questions suggest the principal points on which information is desired:—

I. Personal.

1. Occupation and nature of connexion (if any) with the land, or public position held, as owner, tenant, labourer, auctioneer, county councillor, &c.

2. For what district are you prepared to give evidence?

   If your evidence refers more particularly to an estate, agency, or holding, specify its acreage.

3. In what manor, honour, or lordship is the land in which you are interested, or as to which you propose to give evidence, situate? State the extent of such manor, honour, or lordship.

   What courts are held in connexion with such manor, &c., and specify the offices that exist in connexion with them?

II. Ownership.

What difference, in effect, do the following variations of tenure and circumstances produce on—

(a.) The occupation, and
(b.) The cultivation of land?

1. Where land is—
   (i.) Held in fee simple and
      (a.) Unencumbered.
      (b.) Mortgaged or otherwise encumbered.
   (ii.) The property of the Crown, Principality or Duchy, including woods, forests, and foreshores; specify extent and management.
   (iii.) The property of corporations or associated bodies.
   (iv.) Glebe land.

2. Where land is held under copyhold, or other customary tenures; state the peculiarities and effects of such tenures.
   What fines and other charges are made on admission and enrolment?
   Are these charges considered oppressive?

3. Where the land is (or recently was) the waste of a manor, a common, or land reputed to be commonable; specify—
   (i.) Recent enclosures, whether by Act of Parliament, or otherwise, and their effect on the neighbouring population.
   Were recreation grounds or allotments for the use of the labouring poor apportioned? If so, how used at present?
   (ii.) Squatters' cottages, or other dwellings erected on waste or unenclosed land, —how dealt with? If surrendered, on what terms?

(iii.) Existing unenclosed and hill land, and its adaptability for profitable cultivation as compared with the uses to which it is at present put.

Where there are rights of pasture over "sheep runs," &c., in whom are such rights vested, and subject to what payments and conditions? Whether "without stint," or how limited?

What is their effect on—

(a.) The rents of adjacent farms?

(b.) The general condition of sheep farming?

4. (Management.)

(i.) Where land is held by small or large, by absentee or resident landowners? in consolidated or scattered estates?

(ii.) Where there is a difference of either language, politics, or religion between the landlord (or agent), and the tenant (or proposed tenant).

(iii.) Where agents are employed, have they received any special training for the supervision of agricultural land? If not, is there any inconvenience or hardship experienced?

III. Occupation.

1. Term of Tenancy.

What is the usual date of entry in your district?

Are farms let on leases or from year to year?

Is there a great demand for leases, and, if so, are they readily granted by landlords? If not, why?

Do tenants readily accept leases? If not, why?

Is the condition of the leaseholders, and of their farming superior, or the contrary, to that of yearly tenants?

Have changes in tenancy become more, or less frequent, than in former years? If more frequent, to what causes are they attributable?

Have any cases of hardship arisen?

In resuming the occupation of a field or plot out of a holding, for the sake of planting, building, or for other purposes, do owners generally serve their tenants with proper notices for the purpose, and grant them compensation?

What are the usual conditions of tenancy? (Produce copy of agreement or lease.)

Are any of the clauses considered oppressive? What effect have they on cultivation?

Are penalising clauses common, and are they often enforced?

Are there any services other than the payment of rent rendered by tenants in respect of their farms? If so, what are they, what is their estimated value, and are they usually mentioned in the agreements?

State whether they are irksome, and whether they are taken into account in assessing the rent.

(ii.) How fixed.

Is the rent fixed on the basis of a valuation, or by proposal followed by private treaty?

In the latter case is the holding practically let to the highest bidder? If so, does the system result in—

(i.) Fair rents being fixed?

(ii.) The acceptance of tenants with sufficient capital?

Is arbitration ever resorted to as a means of settling or re-adjusting the rent?

(iii.) How varied.

Have rents been raised generally, or in individual cases, within the last 50 years? If so, give particulars.

Have there been any—

(a.) Permanent reductions, or

(b.) Temporary abatements of rent?

If so, when and to what amount?

Is any notice previously given to the tenants of such intended abatements?

When rents are raised or reduced, does the change depend on a re-valuation? If so, by whom conducted, and at what intervals is it usual? If not, does the change depend on fluctuations in prices? or on what other principle (if any) is it based?

What have been the chief fluctuations in prices affecting rent within the last 50 years?

(iv.) Its payment.

How soon after it falls due is the rent usually paid?

What effect has the preferential claim for rent on the position of tenants generally?

(ii.) The respective rights of outgoing and incoming tenants?

(iii.) The liabilities of a tenant as to mode of cultivation, dilapidations, and sale of produce?

Have many (or any) cases occurred in your district where an outgoing tenant has failed to obtain sufficient compensation for his improvements?

Do you know of any instances where compensation has been given for the general improved condition of a holding, and not simply for specific improvements?

Is there any right recognised as belonging to tenants to dispose of their interests in their holdings to any solvent tenant to whom the landlord shall not have any reasonable objection?

What attention is being paid in your district to—

The Town Hall, Cowbridge, Glamorganshire, Tuesday, 23rd May 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

LORD KENYON.
SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
MR. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
PROFESSOR RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
MR. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
MR. EDWIN GROVE.
MR. RICHARD JONES.
MR. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.

Chairman.

Gentlemen, before I make any observations, and before the Commission opens, I think, in the name of my brother Commissioners, I may say that we congratulate ourselves on the attendance that we see here to-day; it shows that a very general interest has been taken in the subject, and it encourages us in our labours which we most honestly hope will be conducive to the public good.

Before we commence the examination of any witnesses who are prepared to give evidence, I think it expedient to make one or two observations, and in these observations I have the entire concurrence of all my colleagues. We have talked over these observations, and what I have the honour to say in their name is entirely and heartily agreed to by us all, although the substance of what I have to say may probably be well known to most of those who are interested in the enquiry which we are about to undertake.

I will now proceed to recapitulate what has already appeared in the Press, but what perhaps it may be advantageous to us all to run through again. First of all, with reference to the procedure. We have decided that all meetings of the Commission for the purpose of taking evidence should, unless otherwise ordered, be open to the Press and to the public. We have also decided, in accordance with the course pursued by similar Royal Commissions, that the examination and cross-examination of witnesses by counsel should not be allowed. We were guided to this conclusion more especially by the precedents of the Devon and Bessborough Commissions, the two Crofters' Commissions of 1883 and 1893, and the Housing of the Poor Commission—all Commissions the scope and nature of whose inquiry were in many respects similar to those of the present one—and also by the precedent of the Welsh Sunday Closing Commission, upon which the propriety of admitting examination by counsel was raised, and was unanimously decided in the negative.

We do not anticipate that the Commission can be made the means of any unfair attack on the character or conduct of any individual, but, in case any individual should feel himself aggrieved by any statements which he believes to be unfounded, we provide the following checks, which we believe will be adequate for the prevention of pain or injury. In the first place, permission will be given to any person present at any sitting to put questions in writing to any witness through me, the Chairman, the Commissioners reserving to themselves the right of deciding whether such questions be permissible or not. Secondly, the Secretary has been instructed to send notice forthwith to every person whose character or conduct is impugned by the statement of any witness, thus giving such person an opportunity of explanation, or of rebutting the charge either personally or by letter. Next, the Secretary has received several letters promising friendly co-operation, for which the Commission is very much obliged, in reference to our sittings in Glamorganshire. There are a good many of them, but the only one that in our judgment calls for especial notice is that from Mr. Edmund Vincent, who writes on behalf of the Landowners' Association of South Wales and Mon-mouthshire. With your permission I should like to read this letter, which is in the following terms; it is directed to me:—"On behalf of the "Landowners' Association of South Wales and "Monmouthshire, I offer my respectful thanks "for permission given to make this brief "statement. It is concerned with the following "points: First, the Association, albeit young in "point of time, represents a large number of "landowners possessed of great and small "estates, and I am expressly instructed to say "that it is the desire of this Executive Com- "mittee to afford all possible assistance to the "Commission towards the common object of "discovering the truth. Secondly, an idea "appears to prevail in some quarters that this "Commission exists for the purpose of trying "contentious issues either between political "parties or between landowners and tenants as "opposed to one another. The corollary to "this wrong idea is the suggestion that, in "some form or another, tenants who offer "evidence may suffer resentment from their "landlords. On the part of my Association, I "am instructed to repudiate this idea absolutely "and to say that, apart from the fact that "witnesses before Royal Commissions have "abundant protection, it is the desire of the "owners composing this Association, that every "witness should give evidence with a feeling "of absolute security that he will not suffer in "any way. Thirdly, the fact that no evidence "will be offered by members of this Association "during the present sittings of the Commission "must not be misconstrued, as it has been, into "a manifestation of hostility to the Royal "Commission. Such a manifestation, indeed, "would be absurd, having regard to the fact that "early in the year 1892, an application for the "appointment of a Commission was made to "the late Government on behalf of a very large "number of Welsh landowners. The only "reasons why evidence is not offered now are: "(1.) That we are aware that the Commission "is abundantly provided with evidence for the "purpose of the present sittings; (2.) That it "is physically impossible for us to present, "upon notice so brief—I received the complete "syllabus on May 5th—only evidence of that "complete and accurate character which is "indispensable. It may be said that, if tenants "can offer evidence now, landowners ought also "to be in a state of preparation, but the cases "are of essentially different character. Indi- "vidual tenants may have specific grievances "concerning which they have a right to com- "plain, but a glance at the syllabus suffices to "show that to answer the various questions "therein contained must require, particularly "in the case of large estates, elaborate investi- "gation of books and estate records. Such "investigation is now being made in the case "of hundreds of estates in South Wales, and "the results of it will be submitted to the "Commission in a form as complete and as "concise as possible. Let me add that I have "pledged myself at the Secretary's request to "fill up two whole days in London in July "with Glamorganshire evidence, and that it is "our earnest hope that the Commission will sit "again in Glamorganshire at some convenient "time, after the corn harvest for choice, in "order to inquire more completely than can be "possible in the course of a week, into the very "important questions which are raised in the "syllabus, and into one or two other points, "undeniably material to the terms of reference, "which have been omitted, by accident no "doubt, from the syllabus. Such a course "would, I am sure, be satisfactory, I will not "say to all parties to the issue, but to every "person who is interested in the inquiry." That is signed by Mr. Vincent, the secretary of the Landowners' Association of South Wales and Monmouthshire.

Well, gentlemen, the Commissioners were anxious to begin their work without any delay, but we were aware that the fact of our having visited Glamorganshire so early may have made it difficult for all the evidence to be prepared. Under these exceptional circumstances we are willing, if it is so desired, to make further arrangements for taking evidence with regard to this county. We wish it, however, to be distinctly understood that we are in no way laying down any precedent. Our rule must be that at each sitting local evidence should be given representing all phases of opinion, and that in the event of any witnesses failing to give evidence it must not be assumed that we can make arrangements for giving them a further opportunity of doing so.

There is only one other matter upon which I need touch, that is concerning the protection of witnesses which has been referred to in Mr. Vincent's letter. Experience has shown that, unless witnesses speak out boldly and without fear, inquiries like the one we are engaged in are futile. We have no reason to believe that undue pressure will be brought upon any class of witnesses or any individual witness; nor have we reason to think that the giving of evidence by any person in this county will lead to his being in any way injured. But it is, of course, possible—we cannot shut our eyes to what has before now taken place in regard to affairs of this kind—that some men are less scrupulous than others, and that it is possible that witnesses who speak here what is in their minds may be subjected to loss and annoyance. We desire, therefore (and it is our duty to do so), to point out that the recent Act, the Witnesses' Protection Act, 1892, affords a remedy adequate to meet any ordinary case.

I have only one more word to say now. In order to avoid waste of time, and in order to guide the Commissioners in conducting this inquiry, we cannot emphasize too much the desirability of attention being given to the direction printed on the Heads of Inquiry. The direction printed on the Heads of Inquiry is:— "In order to guide the Commissioners in their "examination of witnesses, it is requested that "persons desiring to submit evidence should

" forward to the Secretary (6, Old Palace Yard, " S.W.) the names and addresses of the witnesses " proposed to be examined, together with a " brief statement of the heads of the evidence " which they are prepared to offer."

Gentlemen, that is all I have to say, and now, without any loss of time, I think we had better set to work; and we propose to call on the first gentleman who is prepared to give evidence before us. I have been told that, for general convenience, Mr. Edward John has requested that he be examined first, and I shall ask Mr. Edward John, if he is present in the room, to take the witness's chair and give his evidence.

Mr. John Llewelyn (the Mayor).

My Lords and gentlemen, before you proceed to call on Mr. Edward John, I desire to offer on the part of the corporation and town of Cowbridge a hearty vote of thanks to you for opening the Commission here. We consider Cowbridge to be the centre of one of the most important agricultural districts in the Principality, and we are very pleased that the work of the Commission should be begun here. I am sorry that the Commissioners have reconsidered their decision to hold two days' sitting here, but I have no doubt they have done what they considered was best. All I wish to do is to offer a hearty welcome, and I trust that your labours will be productive of much good.

Chairman.

Mr. Mayor and gentlemen, in the name of my brother Commissioners I have to thank his worship the Mayor and the corporation of Cowbridge for their hearty welcome and the vote of thanks, for which we are very much obliged.

Mr. EDWARD JOHN called and examined.

Chairman.

1. You are a seed merchant and agent for agricultural implements?—Agent and seller to all the principal makers of the United Kingdom.

2. You live and carry on business at Cowbridge, and you know the farming condition of the district well?—I do, and for the purpose of this Commission I have acted as organising secretary to the Vale of Glamorgan Tenant Farmers' Association.

3. The first question I shall have to ask you is under what conditions or circumstances in your opinion is the land best cultivated in this district?—What question do you refer to now? Is it a question on the syllabus or a direct question to me?

4. Is there any land in this district of which you are aware not cultivated at all?—Yes.

5. What land is that?—Common land to a great extent.

6. What can you tell us about commons or land that was commonable in this district?—In some instances some of the common land has been enclosed and very largely. In some instances the whole of the commons have been enclosed in different parts of this locality.

7. Were recreation grounds or allotments for the use of the labouring poor apportioned when these common lands were enclosed?—The interests of the class you refer to were not sufficiently protected.

8. Are there any recreation grounds or allotments in existence now?—There are not. There are a few allotments allotted to squatters at different places.

9. But no recreation grounds?—No recreation grounds.

10. Were there any squatters' cottages or other dwellings erected on these wastes?—Yes, a considerable number of them.

11. How were they dealt with?—In my opinion recently very harshly.

12. Do you know any instances that you can give?—Yes, several.

13. Will you give us one?—For a number of years squatters, as we call them, had enclosed portions of land abutting on commons, or portions of the commons, for which they paid a chief rent for a number of years. These enclosures have not taken place recently but they have been held by some owners or different owners for a great number of years, and during the last four years to the surprise of everybody the lord of the manor took and sold the whole of the squatters' cottages and the enclosures—honestly speaking, he confiscated the whole lot of them in this immediate neighbourhood.

14. Were these enclosures under the Acts of Parliament or otherwise?—I could not tell you, my Lord. They were in existence, and a great deal of hardship was at the time felt very strongly by everybody.

15. The commonable land is what you particularly desire to give evidence upon?—I do.

16. Is there any other statement you would like to make about it?—I certainly would, my Lord. I should be very emphatic upon this point. I do not know where the remedy will come. I have said there was hardship, and particularly so where the cottagers had built houses on them—good substantial houses—and were paying chief rents on those, no doubt under the impression that they were the actual owners by paying the chief rents. Then after paying the chief rents for a number of years and occupying the cottages upon the supposition that they were the real owners, these cottages and allotments were sold and the money went to the lord of the manor. I may, perhaps, remark that we, the committee I represent, do not consider that the rights of the public have ever been sufficiently protected in the enclosure of commons in allotments. Generally speaking the allotment that I am speaking of, and that I can give evidence of, was the allotment where these cottagers and others were given the worst piece of the common.

17. That is your opinion?—It is a fact.

18. Can you give us any instances from your own personal knowledge of that?—I can. At the enclosure of that piece of ground known as the Golden Mile, the allotment given to the cottagers was mostly old quarry and waste.

Chairman.

I think those are the leading points of your evidence. Now I shall ask Lord Kenyon to put to you any more questions he may desire.

Lord Kenyon.

See 1762–1804, 5746, 25,573, 26,731.

19. Who is the lord of the manor?—The Marquess of Bute that I particularly refer to as confiscating the property.

20. How long have these squatters' cottages been built?—In the whole of my recollection, that is, during the whole of my lifetime.

21. Have they paid chief rents since they built them?—Yes.

22. They considered that they belonged to them?—They did, my Lord.

23. You generalised it and said: "Many enclosures." Can you specify them at all?—Oh, dear, yes. I can specify enclosures on what we call the Stalling Down, and in the whole of the neighbourhood down from here to Llantwit Major they are very numerous.

24. These were all done under the Act of Parliament?—I do not know whether it was under the Act of Parliament. I do not know what right the lord of the manor had to sell them but they were sold.

25 The common was enclosed under the Act of Parliament?—This common in question has not been enclosed.

26. It is sold, although unenclosed?—It is still open, still unenclosed.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

27. You have used the word "common." Do you mean by that the waste of some manor in this neighbourhood, or do you mean simply land that has not been enclosed?—That is so; land which has not been enclosed.

28. What is the name of the manor which you have been referring to in your answers to Lord Kenyon?—In the manor of this immediate neighbourhood the lord of the manor is the Marquess of Bute; then I should assume it was his Lordship's manor.

29. When you refer to enclosures as having been made by the tenants or the squatters, you mean that they built on and put up some kind of fence round a portion of this waste land?—Exactly so.

30. You have used the term "chief rents"?—I have.

31. To whom was that rent paid in the case you are thinking of?—To the lord of the manor.

32. To whom? Give me his name?—To the Marquess of Bute.

33. What was the name of the agent?—The present agent is Mr. Corbett.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

34. Do I understand the effect of what you have been saying rightly to be this, that after these people had built upon this waste land and enclosed it, and paid rent to the agent of the Marquess of Bute, there was a sale, and they were turned out?—That is so. In some cases I may point out the owners bought them during the sale.

35. The sale took place by auction in lots?—Yes.

36. At Cowbridge?—At Cowbridge.

37. And some of the squatters (we will call them squatters for convenience) bought the tenements?—They did.

38. I do not quite understand you; I think there has been some little confusion about the word "enclosure." Lord Carrington was asking you a general question about the enclosure of common or commonable lands. Have you any evidence to give us about the general operation of an Enclosure Act?—No, I have not.

39. Has there been any common near Cowbridge which has been enclosed by Act of Parliament within recent years?—There has.

40. What is the name of the common?—The common we call the Golden Mile.

41. Do you remember what year it was that that enclosure took place?—No, but I should say 25 to 30 years ago.

42. You remember the circumstance yourself?—I do very well.

43. Was there any provision made for a recreation ground under the Act?—There was supposed to be; I do not know; I could not tell you if there is one in existence now or not.

44. Assume that in the Act there was a provision for the use of a certain portion of the waste land proposed to be enclosed for the purposes of a recreation ground: in fact were the provisions of that Act carried out?—I think so, to a certain extent.

45. Where was the recreation ground; what bit of land was it?—Allow me to remind you that I am speaking as near as possible of the fact, and my impression is that there was a rumour at the time that there was a certain portion of this ground devoted to recreation ground for Cowbridge. Whether it was carried out I do not know.

46. Do you live in Cowbridge?—I do.

47. And if there was any provision for recreation ground, although you have lived here so many years, you do not know where it is?—I do not know it.

48. Can you speak as to any allotments under that particular Act?—Yes.

49. Where were the allotments provided?—The allotments were provided on a portion of the ground where stone quarries were in existence previously.

50. Was it land suitable for allotments in your judgment?—Certainly not. I may mention that the Marquess of Bute is not the lord of the manor of that particular common we are talking about now—I mean the Golden Mile.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

51. The Golden Mile Common you are talking of is in the parish of Colwinston?—Yes, Colwinston.

52. That waste or common ground is not at all the waste ground you were referring to in reference to your evidence as to squatters?—Exactly so; it does not refer to it.

53. Where is the waste ground you are referring to where these people squatted?—Within a mile of the town, and extending from here down to Llantwit Major, you may say; at different spots here and there.

54. Not one big place?—Oh, dear no; different squatters' allotments and cottages.

55. That is to say, that there were, either by the side of the highways or in between different fields, different portions of waste lands which apparently formed no portion of any holding?—Exactly so.

56. And people built upon them?—Yes.

57. You do not speak as to occupation under Head 3 at all, do you?—No, I do not. I may tell you that our committee are trying to assist you as much as possible. We had a committee of nearly 70 farmers, and the evidence that I was deputed to give you was up to "occupation."

58. Are you able to tell us (I daresay there may be some other witness who will tell us, but I may just ask you the question) whether in this district in which we are now holding the enquiry there are many small estates?—Oh yes, several.

59. Are there many instances of what we may call yeoman property?—No.

60. But there are small estates?—Yes, there small estates. There are a few yeoman properties, but not general.

61. Does any difference of language become a factor at all in this part of the country?—No, I think not.

62. Lord Kenyon suggests to me to ask you who the lord of the manor of the Golden Mile Common was?—I could not tell you [Alderman Thomas Rees, of Cowbridge, interposing:—A Mr. De Burgh Thomas, who is now dead; it now belongs to Pritchard].

Mr. J. M. Griffiths.

63. Can you tell me whether these squatters were admitted to the court leet by an order such as is customary in other manors?—I think not.

64. Is there not a court held by the lord of the manor?—Yes, there is.

Mr. Seebohm.

65. We have been speaking generally of commons. I rather gather from your previous answers that the commons which you speak of are not commons over which there has been a common of pasture, but little bits by the wayside?—I mean commons where enclosures have been taken along the commons, as mentioned by the gentleman who last asked me questions.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

66. Are these commons from which these enclosures have been made by the squatters grass land?—Grass land.

67. Entirely?—Entirely.

68. Have you in your recollection had any commons here which were agricultural land—arable land?—No, never.

69. You do not know in this part of the world of the system of having a common open field divided up into strips over which the tenants have common rights after the crop is removed?—No, I do not.

70. Have you ever heard of any in this neighbourhood?—Yes, I have heard within 3 or 4 miles of this town that common allotments were given to cottagers; I think it was in the neighbourhood of a parish called Ystradowen.

71. Of ancient standing?—Simply allotments for garden purposes.

72. Then at present the commons that we are speaking of are entirely grass commons?—Entirely grass commons.

73. Who would have the right of common over them; everybody living in Cowbridge?—No, the copyholders, and the brinkers who are not copyholders.

74. The copyholders of that particular district?—The copyholders of that particular district.

75. The brinkers are those who live on the edge of it?—Yes.

76. They have the right of grazing cattle or sheep?—Cattle or sheep, or horses.

77. Under a common herdsman?—No, I think under the control of some officer appointed at the court.

78. Strictly a manorial right—strictly under the manor?—Under the manor.

79. And confined to the tenants of the manor?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

80. Do you know anything about Penlline Common?—I do. See 540–560.

81. When was that enclosed?—I should think in the year 1854 or 1855.

82. Some part of it was let out for gardening allotments, was it not?—It was.

83. Was there a certain portion in amount in lieu of tithes put on to each of these allotments?—I could not be certain of that; it is so very many years ago.

84. Do you happen to know whether the part that was used as gardening allotments for the labouring poor was treated differently to lands close by, allotted out otherwise?—Yes; in some instances it was very successfully used as gardens; in some instances, not the whole of it.

85. Do you know anything of the Treoes allotment?—I do.

86. Are the conditions much the same there?—Much about the same, with the complaint that the allotments given to the cottagers were subject to floods, and were of very little value to them.

87. Do you know anything of the lordship of Ruthin?—I do not.

Mr. Grove—continued.

88. You speak of common lands having been enclosed. Could you tell us about the date when they were enclosed; could you especially allude to one or two, and give us the dates when they were enclosed?—I should think the Penlline Common was enclosed in 1857 or 1858.

89. Do you know anything about Stalling Down?—I do.

90. Is Stalling Down enclosed?—It is not, only portions of it.

91. Who exercises the right of pasturage over that?—The copyholders and the brinkers.

92. Then as to the part you spoke of where the allotments were given in the old quarry end on the common; was that Colwinston?—Colwinston.

Sir John Llewelyn.

93. I think you said there was an Enclosure Act about 25 years ago?—Yes, I did.

94. Do you know anything about the awards that were made at that time?—No, I do not.

95. I suppose when the Act passed certain awards were made giving the lord of the manor certain rights, and, I presume, under the Act of Parliament protecting the public?—Exactly so.

96. You do not know where those awards now are?—The complaint as to the awards at the time, if my memory serves me, was this: that in most cases the lord of the manor had got his proportion, the copyholders got their proportion, and the allotments due to the poor were usually the worst pieces.

97. I rather gather from what you say that the public rights were not sufficiently protected at that time?—Yes, I do say so distinctly.

98. Who was the lord of the manor of the Golden Mile?—At that time Mr. De Burgh Thomas, now dead.

99. Now it is in other hands?—Yes.

100. It has only been recently fenced in?—For a number of years, I should think 25 years.

101. As long as that?—Yes, quite as much as that.

102. Do you know the lord of the manor of Stalling Down?—Yes, the Marquess of Bute.

103. You also mentioned some other portions between here and Llantwit Major which were unenclosed. Is that the same lord of the manor?—Yes, the same lord of the manor.

104. How long ago is it that what you claim as rights of the squatters, the people who had built upon the unenclosed land, were sold?—I should think it would be four years ago.

105. Was any exception taken then to the legal status?—There was no particular exception taken, but there were grievous complaints at the time and a great deal of hardship occasioned.

106. Were they sold by public auction?—They were sold by public auction.

107. Were there any complaints made at the public auction?—I think not.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

108. I suppose that there were under the Enclosure Acts to which you have referred awards made in accordance with the usual machinery?—I think so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

109. Do you recollect whether, in regard to the enclosure of Colwinston and of Penlline, to which reference has been made, there were any provisions for the appointment of trustees?—No, I do not.

110. In whom is the recreation ground that we have been talking of vested now—the Golden Mile Common?—I do not think it has been vested in anyone. It is left as a piece of waste, and not cultivated.

111. Take the case of the allotments. What arrangement was made about them?—In some of the Colwinston allotments, with a great deal of labour, the cottagers did utilise them and cultivate them successfully.

112. Were the allotments annexed to the occupation or the ownership of the particular cottage, or what was the arrangement? I refer to the Golden Mile. You told us there was a recreation ground provided under that enclosure, and also some ground near a quarry for allotment?—Yes, garden allotments.

113. It has been suggested to me to try and find out a little more in detail as to the allotments. Is the allotment ground vested in any trustees?—That I could not tell you. [Alderman Thomas Rees, interposing:—I do not know whether I should be right in putting before you what I know with regard to this particular allotment.]

Secretary.

The Vicar of Llangan has just handed to me a copy of a Return made in April 1877, to the Inclosure Commissioners with reference to the Golden Mile Common Inclosure, the award of which is therein stated to have been confirmed 10th August 1871. The Return consists of replies to a series of questions as to the management of two allotments made to the Churchwardens and Overseers of the parish of Colwinston, one measuring 2 acres, for field gardens, and the other measuring 4 acres for a recreation ground.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

114. I have here handed in a list of allotments on Treoes Moors, in the parish of Llangan, in the county of Glamorgan, awarded under the Enclosure Act for the manor of Penlline, Coston, and Llangan, in the county of Glamorgan, confirmed the 1st day of March 1860?—I may remind you at once that I do not know anything of the particulars and the details of the allotments; I simply deal with the question generally as common and waste land. I was not prepared to come and give evidence as to details. I will tell you that at once, and it may save the Commissioners' time. You could hardly expect me to know the particulars of such a document as that.

Sir John Llewelyn.

115. I understand the gist of your evidence is this—that the enclosures which have been made recently are ultra vires?—Exactly.

116. Outside the powers of the rights of the property in the lord of the manor?—What I would call attention to is this: first of all we were discussing the first part of the syllabus referring to common lands. I understood you to refer to the effect on adjoining land. The first question is, What advantage is it to a farmer to be adjoining common land? I was going to say there was an advantage.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

117. I understood you, as Sir John Llewelyn appears to have understood you, that these cottages of the squatters had been in the first instance built upon these waste lands without consent?—That would be the fact.

118. But that notwithstanding that fact they then go and pay rent, and I was going to ask, with permission, whether you could give any light upon this matter; did any legal proceedings take place?—No. It was the general impression and opinion at that time that there was a great hardship inflicted upon these people, who really thought they were the owners of the cottages and enclosures at the period that they were sold by the lord of the manor; there was a great deal of talk about it at the time.

119. Do you mean that they thought they were the owners in fee simple?—Yes, in fee simple.

120. Why did they pay rent?—They paid the manorial rents to the lord of the manor's agent; some from a shilling to four and five and ten shillings a year.

Chairman.

121. I think, Mr. John, you have given us a very fair statement of all you know on this subject. Is there anything more you wish to say?—I think not. I should simply like to go as far as "occupation" on the Syllabus, if you will allow me. I have finished when you come to occupation.

122. There is nothing more you wish to say on the commons point?—No.

123. I think you have given us your evidence very clearly, and we are very much obliged to you. Can you give us any evidence upon any other point?—On one question which is put in the Syllabus.

124. On which other clause would you like to give evidence?—Ownership.

125. You leave occupation out altogether?—Yes, that is for other witnesses. There is a question in the Syllabus: "The rents of farms adjacent to common land." The answer to that question is that the rents are generally more for farms when they are adjoining common lands.

126. Where there are rights of pasture over sheep runs, &c., in whom are such rights vested and subject to what payments and conditions? Are they without stint, or how are they limited?—There is a certain limit as to the number of sheep that each copyholder has to graze on the commons; but I say more particularly there is the advantage to owners or farmers having land adjoining to the commons; it is an advantage to have pasturage on the commons when their farms adjoin the common lands.

127. What is the effect of these rights of pasture over sheep runs on the rents of adjacent farms?—An increased rent.

128. I suppose into the general condition of sheep farming you do not intend to go?—I do not.

Mr. Seebohm.

129. In your opinion, would it be an advantage to those farms which lie on the side of the Common to have a particular part of that Common allotted to them, or do you mean that the advantage lies in having a larger space open to several occupiers?—I think the advantage lies in this, with reference to the privilege of running so many sheep, that they would save their own pasturage by running over the common land.

130. If the common land were divided, and they have a certain number of acres allotted to their own sheep only, would that be an advantage or not?—No, certainly not. I have an answer again to the question, "Where land is "held by small or large, by absentee or resident "landowners." The opinion of our committee is that large managements are certainly the best; that is the experience of most of the farmers in this county.

Chairman.

131. That the management of large landowners is the best?—Yes.

132. And resident?—Yes, exactly. Another question is, "Where there is a difference of either "language, politics or religion, between the "landlord (or an agent) and the tenant (or pro-"posed tenant)." Our opinion is that "very "often religious and political differences have "had a detrimental effect on the letting of "land."

133. Have you any instances?—Yes, I have.

134. Give them?—I may say I have instances which I can give you; very strong instances.

135. Have you anything to say about agencies?—I have. That question is, "Where agents "are employed, have they received any special "training for the supervision of agricultural "land?" The opinion of my committee is very strong upon that point. They say that "the appointment of inexperienced agents has "been most detrimental to the best interests of "both landlords and tenants, and we consider "that practical and experienced land agents "should be appointed." My Lord, I may tell you with reference to that, that there is a strong opinion of our committee that land agents should have a special training as regards farming itself, and other works appertaining to the repairs of farms. The farmers as a rule find great hardship in having inexperienced agents for the reasons I have given you, and it is essential, I think, in the best interests of everybody connected with farming land that the agent should have full and great experience not only in measuring building and land, but that he should be a practical farmer as well?

Chairman.

I think we are all unanimous upon that point.

Lord Kenyon.

136. Is it the rule that agents should not have experience?—Oh, yes.

137. You think a number of agents have not experience?—Oh, dear, yes; one quarter do not know anything about it.

138. I am sorry to hear it?—So are a great many farmers.

139. You mean special experience?—My contention is this: it is quite essential that a land agent should know about the tillage of the soil as well as other work in connexion with the farm. They might advise a bad tenant very often.

140. There have been instances in which agents without that practical knowledge which you think requisite have been appointed?—Oh, yes, there have.

Mr. Richard Jones.

141. How does the number of landowners at present compare with what they were about 25 or 30 years ago?—Very near about the same in this neighbourhood.

142. Have a good many estates been sold?—A few.

143. Bought by the large landowners?—Yes.

144. Who are the owners; are they successful tradesmen who have bought property, or are they persons who have inherited the property?—The farmers who have bought property are very rare indeed, but in most instances successful tradesmen bought when in the market.

145. Are there any successful tradesmen who have bought large estates?—Yes, there are some.

146. What kind of landlords are those?—Sometimes they are exceptionally good.

147. You referred to the question, "Where "there is a difference of either language, politics, "or religion between the landlord and the "tenant." Do you know of any instances where the landlord or the agent has tried to ascertain the politics and religion of a tenant when there was a farm to let?—I do.

148. And in that case it acted detrimentally to the applicant?—Yes, I think so.

149. As to the point put by Mr. Seebohm with regard to enclosures, you said you would rather have common rights in common with others than have a special piece enclosed?—No; I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. Grove—continued.

150. Then will you kindly explain that point?—I do not know that the question was asked in that way.

151. That was the intention of Mr. Seebohm's question, and it is rather an important point to have your opinion upon?—I think the best interest of the whole neighbourhood is that all its land should be enclosed.

152. And apportioned?—And apportioned; apportioned fairly and honestly.

Mr. Griffiths.

153. Are these gentlemen you are speaking of who have not received this special training called in to value the farms?—Oh, no. I think as a rule they employ practical valuers.

154. On both sides?—On both sides. They are bound to, because lots of them do not know anything about it themselves.

Chairman.

155. There has been a question put in by Mr. Vincent which I think the Commission will agree to. Will the witness specify instances in which politics and religion have operated prejudicially to the candidate for tenancy?—I certainly can give the names; but in the interests of those persons, I am quite prepared to give them to the Commissioners, but not publicly. I think it is very clear that there must be reasons for it. The persons I refer to are still tenants of the farms.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

156. Is it on your own account, or on account of the persons to whom you are referring, that you are reluctant to give this information?—The people I am referring to. I have not the slightest hesitation about giving it myself, I may say.

Professor Rhŷs.

157. Did I rightly gather from the tenour of your evidence that you admit that the sale of the unenclosed land was conducted according to law?—Exactly so.

158. But that you complain of the whole proceeding and the law as well as occasioning hardship?—That is so.

The Commissioners retired to consult.

Chairman.

On the question of the specification of the instances in which politics and religion are alleged to have operated prejudicially to candidates for tenancy, we have talked the matter over, and it must be distinctly understood that the Commissioners are in no way anxious unduly to press any witness. That I think is perfectly well understood but under the circumstances, we invite Mr. John if he can obtain the consent of the parties that are alleged to have been injured to furnish the Commission with the names and the particulars of each case in writing. Of course, the permission of the parties concerned must be obtained.

Witness.

I certainly will, and I quite agree. I do not think these assertions should be made publicly without being able to be borne out. It is not an allegation of my own, but given us in committee, and I believe it is authentic.

159. You will see into that?—Yes. One word more about common right. I want to point out the peculiar hardship the squatters have had for a number of years. A squatter on the Ruthin Common occupied a piece of land for which he was paying half a crown a year to the lord of the manor, and the lord of the manor is the Marquess of Bute. That is called the Ruthin Common. 18 years ago he built a house upon that piece of waste land that he had been paying half a crown a year for. Four years ago, during the sale of these exceptional properties in the neighbourhood, this house and land was advertised for sale. The owner then of Craig-yr-eos, that is the name of the place, went and reminded his Lordship's agent that he told him he could build a house there, and upon that promise they have given a life lease only, but he is still paying the half a crown a year for the chief rent, and it was only on reminding him of the promise he is now there by a kind of life lease in it. That is another instance of what has happened on commons.

Re-examined. 25,661, 25,762.

Witness—continued.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

I should like to say that the award made in pursuance of the Enclosure Act of the manor of Penlline and Coston and Llangan has been produced, and is dated the 1st of March 1860.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

Mr. D. J. JENKINS called and examined.

Chairman.

160. I believe you are a tenant farmer and land valuer, and that you live at Great Frampton, near Cowbridge?—That is so.

161. You are also vice-chairman of the Cowbridge Farmers' Club?—I am.

162. You have come here prepared to give evidence of the chief rents under "occupation" and "cultivation"?—That is so.

163. I should like to ask you a question or two about the occupation and I will leave the cultivation to my friends who have a more practical knowledge of this district than I have. What is the usual date of entry in your district?—The 2nd of February as a rule. The exception would be the 25th of March.

164. Is it a general rule to let farms on leases or annual tenancy?—Annual tenancy.

165. Are people anxious for leases in the neighbourhood?—Scarcely any.

166. But they would be readily granted if they were?—I should think they would.

167. Have changes in tenancy become more or less frequent than in former years?—Very much more frequent.

168. To what reason do you attribute that?—I attribute it to the fact of land having risen in rent from the year 1875 or thereabouts or prior to that—1872 or 1873—and since 1875 I think a general depression has set in and necessitated the existing tenant either having a reduction, or being unable to pay his rent. When application was made to his landlord as a rule he scarcely saw the necessity until unfortunately the tenant was unable to pay the existing rent and in some instances it led to the tenant having to give up his farm. The hardship I would complain about is this, that the new tenant not only would have the farm at a very considerably less rental than his predecessor, but that he would have all improvements or very many improvements of his farm that the late tenant had asked for in vain, and that has been the cause of the change.

169. Now, a question about agreements. What are the usual conditions of tenancies in this district?—In a yearly tenancy it generally is granted by a lease and in those years I am speaking of they were rather stringent leases, and, I believe, were a hardship upon a tenant. I might say that they have been simplified a very great deal of late years as a rule.

170. Were any of the clauses in these agreements generally considered oppressive or not, or generally pretty fair?—There were a good many that were generally considered oppressive.

171. Are there any particular clauses that you can bring to mind?—There are. The tenant would be restricted from selling any hay or straw. I think that a very considerable hardship, because the tenant might import or bring on to his farm very considerable manurial value and yet he is restricted from selling. I was going to speak as to game, but that has been modified; some would be reserved, and would be very often causing unpleasantness.

172. Is that agreement of not selling straw off the farm in this district very stringent?—I do not know that it is now, but in days gone by it was very stringent and such clauses inserted in leases were very general.

173. As regards the amount of rent asked for a farm, is it fair?—At the present moment?

174. Yes, at the present moment?—I think on properties that are extensive with large owners there is very little to complain about.

175. Is the rent usually fixed in a lump sum or generally taken at so much per acre?—Generally a lump sum.

176. So much per farm?—Yes.

177. Do you think the rent of the smaller tenantry higher than on the large farms?—I do certainly.

178. What proportion: have you any idea?—I can scarcely give the proportion.

179. It certainly is higher?—Certainly.

180. Have rents been raised as a rule or in particular cases within the last 50 years?—Oh, very considerably from the years I have spoken to—from 1872 or so.

181. Have you individual instances of any farm you know of or that you have been connected with?—A great number.

182. What sort of increase of rent has been charged to your own knowledge?—I should think 30 per cent. in those years.

183. The last 50 years?—Well, during those years. I am speaking of 1872 or thereabouts, when rents were increased very considerably.

184. 1872?—1872 and up to 1875.

185. You think as a practical man that rents have gone up 30 per cent.?—Certainly from a prior date say—1870.

186. What is about the size of the farms—what sort of average size are they?—An average of about 250. We have some exceptional ones of 700 in the county, but very few.

187. Were those originally small farms consolidated and thrown into one?—That I could not speak about. They are the same size as I recollect them.

188. They are few and far between?—Very few; there are not above half-a-dozen in the county.

189. One or two questions about cultivation. Are the improvements in your district generally made by the landlords or the tenants? Who have generally made the improvements in your district, the landlords or the tenants?—The landlords so far as permanent buildings are concerned.

190. And draining?—Very little draining in our neighbourhood in my time.

191. Is there anything as to custom that you would like to speak to, anything like the Lincolnshire custom?—There is a custom applied to drainage, which is, I think, a very good custom. It runs over a period of 14 years if done by the tenant and according to the number of years he has enjoyed it, so it is diminishing, and at the end of 14 years any claim ceases. The custom generally I would like you to lead me as to and ask me any question you wish.

192. About allowances to outgoing tenants. Are they pretty liberal?—I think they are under our custom.

193. There is no tenant right or anything of that sort?—Oh, yes.

194. What allowances are made?—In what particular direction? He is allowed for all tillages; they have to be estimated by the valuers according to their worth and cleanliness and so on, and manurial products left in the ground, the growing crops, the seed, and the sowing and the harrowing or whatever it may be that was necessary in putting in the seeds.

195. Are any further improvements made by the tenants?—There is nothing in our custom that would apply.

Professor Rhŷs.

196. I am not sure that I understood one of your answers. I think you say that the incoming tenant would benefit greatly by his predecessor going out who was unable to pay the rent. Would not the custom come in here and compel the incoming tenant to pay the full value of the unexhausted improvements?—I did not at all intend to imply that the incoming tenant would benefit, but what I did wish to convey was that the outgoing tenant suffered by his landlord not meeting him to such an extent that he has of necessity to let his farm to the incoming tenant and where the outgoing tenant has been a resident in the farm for a number of years and has improved the farm, I think it is a great hardship that he is denied the continuance of that tenancy under terms allowed to his successor who is an utter stranger.

197. You meant that there is a reduction of rent to the incoming tenant?—As a rule.

198. You would probably say that the reduction had better have been made to the old tenant?—Well, as a natural consequence. That is what I give as the more frequent cause of the frequent changes.

199. Would you say that the value of the land here generally would vary very much?—Yes.

200. What I am coming to is this: why is the rent usually fixed in a lump sum and not at so much per acre?—I take it that the man who is an applicant for the farm estimates himself what it is worth per acre; he would possibly get the map and see what acreage was pasture and what arable, and he would put so much, and he would arrive at a lump sum, and that would be the arrangement between himself and his landlord.

201. Do you think he would go through the process of saying, "Here are so many acres of "good land and so many acres of bad land," and so on?—I should think he would be a very unfit candidate for a farm if he did not.

202. Are all the rights of the outgoing tenants valued or is anything fixed, one third and one fourth, and so on? In a word do the unexhausted improvements all pass through the hands of valuers?—Oh, yes, certainly. You have to get the statement and vouchers for the statement from the outgoing tenant.

203. Is the Agricultural Holdings Act an improvement on the custom or vice versâ?—The custom here is better. In my opinion certainly I might say the Agricultural Holdings Act is more complicated than we in this part of the country are able to construe as being possibly intended. I know of an instance where the valuers have thought fit to bring in the Agricultural Holdings Act and mix it up with the custom. I do not think this would be quite the place to ask how far the custom would be allowed to override the Act or the Act to override the custom. I will give you an instance where I acted in a valuation, and I took particular care. It is necessary to give two months' notice of claim under the Act prior to the expiration of the tenancy. I made the valuation for the outgoing tenant, and I carefully avoided claiming for anything under any portion scheduled under the Act, and yet the gentleman who acted as umpire varied that and introduced the Act. I might say that this man held his farm without any agreement. There was a counterclaim, and he thought it right to allow so much of the counterclaim. I may say it was for dilapidations in old fenced walls—banks which might have been in the state that they were 50 years ago, for all I know; judging by the appearance they had not decayed in very recent years. That outgoing tenant was made to pay for those dilapidations. I was under the impression that he, holding it without an agreement, was always subject to 12 months' notice under the Act, and there had been no agreement that six months was to be sufficient, and I should have thought that tenancy could have been put an end to by 12 months' notice. I thought it a great hardship that he should pay for dilapidations where the owner had the opportunity of seeing the general decay year by year, and did not put an end to the tenancy, nor did he complain to the farmer, but waited until the tenant went out and then put in this claim. My claim amounted to 75*l.*; I forget the counterclaim; but this man eventually got 14*l.*—he did not go to a court of law, but he eventually got 14*l.* out of what I considered he should have had, which was 75*l.* I refer to this, because if it is right it has upset all calculations in these cases.

204. Considering you have a custom, what is the importance here of a yearly agreement between landlord and tenant?—I do not know, so far as the custom is concerned, that there would be any more importance under any circumstances, under a lease, for instance, because the outgoing tenant, according to our custom, is entitled to improvements so far as the tillage of the ground is concerned, but not improvements so far as building is concerned. There is nothing in our custom that goes for enlarging buildings or anything of that kind.

205. You suggested that the landlord might have seen that these dilapidations were going on, and that it would have been a kindness on his part to have called attention to them sooner. Does that bring us to the question of inexperienced agents?—I do not know that it would; in this case certainly not; the landlord was the agent himself, he represented the property himself.

206. Do you consider that a good state of things where the landlord is himself the agent or vice versâ?—Vice versâ.

207. With regard to No. IV. of the Syllabus as to cultivation, and these various points, do you think with regard to the question of scarcity of labour that there is sufficient labour in the district?—There is at present.

208. Generally?—Yes, but we are close upon a mineral district, and when things are going well in the hilly district we suffer a great deal from the scarcity of labour. That is not the case at the present moment.

209. Is there any land going out of cultivation, or being insufficiently cultivated?—None at all.

210. Has any waste land been reclaimed by tenants within your district within your memory?—Yes, small plots on roadsides.

211. Is there still much waste land that could be reclaimed, taking the district generally?—Well, a few common lands.

212. Now with regard to game. That has not been touched upon. That is No. 3. Is game preserved by the landlord in this district?—Not generally.

213. Do tenants generally avail themselves of the provisions of the Ground Game Act?—They do in some cases. I do not know that it is very general, and it strikes me very forcibly that they have but a very small opportunity of so doing, because it seems that they can either kill them themselves or depute one another to do it. If they are restricted to that—I am only enlightened upon this in consequence of this inquiry which came up amongst ourselves the other day—I fail to see how he can keep the rabbits down, for instance. I am only complaining of the Act. It does not give sufficient opportunity to the tenant. Why may not he have some friends and destroy those rabbits, and if the Act is to be any good to the sitting tenant I should think he ought to have; one man cannot keep rabbits down, certainly.

214. Is there much damage done by game in this part?—Very little, with very few exceptions.

215. Then as to fruit culture; is there much fruit cultivated?—No.

216. Is the climate suitable for fruit here?—I think not.

217. Then the question of railway rates. Are the railway rates excessive in this part?—They are in this immediate part.

218. Are they so excessive that farmers are driven away from the railway and use their own teams whenever they possibly can rather than go near the railway?—Yes, that is so, unless they have a very long distance to go.

219. Then, naturally, you have to keep more horses for that?—Yes.

220. Taking your own individual case when you use the railway: have you a copy of the Act bearing upon this particular line should you wish to see what exactly they could charge you by Act of Parliament?—I have not.

221. Could you give us any instances where an excessive charge is made—from what station to what station?—I think I must leave it to those who will succeed me and to yourselves as well; there has been other evidence upon that. I think it would be to a certain extent wasting your time to ask me.

Mr. Seebohm.

222. With reference to the question of tenant right, I think you are satisfied with your tenant right in this district?—We are.

223. There is no particular suggestion you wish to make?—As to improving the custom?

224. As to improving it?—Yes, certainly. For instance, since wheat has been reduced so much—the British grain, at any rate—there has been a great deal of land laid down to pasture, and it takes a good many years before it becomes of any real value as pasture; indeed, after a lapse of two years there is a certain period of another five or six years where it is of very little value indeed. It depends upon the soil, and the outgoing tenant or the sitting tenant to improve that manures it considerably. There is nothing to compensate the outgoing tenant for laying down the land into pasturage, which is an acknowledged improvement at the present price of corn.

225. That would not be met by the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No. You are speaking of the Act of 1883?

226. Yes.—You have the consent of the landlord for so treating the land, in fact, and then I am not sure that it does not lapse after a period of 10 years.

227. It would be probably difficult to make any legislative change which would meet all the difficulties between landlord and tenant?—I should think it would. I thought you referred to whether our custom required improvement or not. I certainly think that would be an improvement, and there are others.

Mr. Richard Jones.

228. You say that the date of entry is February 2nd?—Yes.

229. What are the advantages of entering at that date rather than Lady Day to the incoming tenant?—The advantages to the incoming tenant are very considerable, according to my way of thinking. For instance, when he has possession on the 2nd of February he has all the early spring opportunities of putting in his corn for the succeeding harvest time.

230. Anything else?—I do not know that there would be.

231. With regard to the question of rents, you say that they were advanced about 30 per cent. about the year 1872?—Yes.

232. Have there been abatements, and to what extent?—Do you mean permanent reductions?

233. No, abatements?—Yes, varying from 5 to 15 per cent., or possibly more. There are a very few instances above 15 per cent.

234. There are none above 15 per cent.?—I will not say none, but very few. I do not know of any except it was Lord Tredegar's.

Mr. R. Jones—continued.

235. Have there been any permanent reductions?—There have.

236. To what extent?—A considerable extent, that is, comparing 1872 with the present time, and that has been the means of a great number of changes in tenancies.

237. What do you consider the amount of the value of the produce from the year 1872 to the present time? How does it compare at the present time with the years 1872 or 1875?—During those years the wheat has sold at as much as 8*s.* a bushel. It now sells at 3*s.* 6*d.*; barley has been sold at 6*s.* 3*d.* during those years; it now sells at 3*s.* 6*d.*

238. That is nearly a fall of 50 per cent.?—It is more than 100 per cent. in wheat.

239. What is your style of cultivation? Is it the four-course system?—Yes.

240. Is it varied at all?—Yes.

241. In what way?—In growing two white crops, for instance; and, unfortunately, that has been another cause of land becoming of so much less value, very much worked out sometimes, and where opportunity allows (where you have a very bad landlord) the sitting tenant as a natural consequence leaves as little for his successor as his knowledge will allow him to do. That is where the influence of a bad landlord comes in.

242. What advantage is it to the sitting tenant to leave as little as possible if he gets compensation for unexhausted improvements from the incoming tenant?—Because he will have taken out that which he cannot possibly be compensated for, even under our custom, if he has farmed highly.

243. Are you allowed to sell seed hay?—I farmed under one landlord where I was not; neither were any of the other tenants. I might say it is an estate which is not a very extensive one.

244. Is the farming in your neighbourhood conducted as neatly as it used to be?—Are farms as well kept?—Yes, certainly, as a rule, with the exceptions that I am speaking of, when there is not a good understanding as between landlord and tenant.

245. Then you know nothing about the labour problem here?—I do most certainly.

246. You do not suffer here from insufficiency of labour?—Not at the present moment. I think I pointed out that we live close on to a mineral district, and when times are pretty good there the men get very much more money, and they go into those districts and we often suffer from a scarcity of labour to a great extent.

247. You do not at the present time?—At the present time we have an abundance. The very bad state of things generally accounts for it.

248. Where do you get your men when the works go well; where do you draft the men from?—We have to put up with the men that remain, and have, as a rule, to increase their wages a little. It has that tendency.

249. Do you find enough men to conduct your operations on the farm?—We find others come round and they are very inadequate, but still we have to put up with them when there is a scarcity of our native labour.

250. What is the average of the rate of wages?—For a man living in his own cottage and having his own food, 15*s.* would be the general wage.

251. Have you any servants living on the farm?—Yes.

252. What do you pay those?—I think a very high wage, as much as 10*s.* a week and their food and lodging, and even more.

253. Do you find the soil as productive now as it used to be?—I think so, if it is as honestly treated, and as liberally treated.

254. You think the seasons have not affected the productiveness of the soil?—I have no reasons to think it has affected the soil, but it has the crops, that is to say, the fruitfulness.

255. Do you find animals thriving as well now on grass land as, say, 20 years ago?—Not in the wet season they certainly do not.

256. Unfortunately we happen to have had wet seasons?—Yes, there have been a number of years of wet seasons, and I think they may have deteriorated the pasture.

257. Are you well supplied with serving maids?—No, very badly. It is most difficult. I know many farms which have not a single servant girl, and very often there is only one where they should have two, and would be glad to get two and pay them.

258. Is there any branch of farming you have been obliged to abandon in this neighbourhood owing to the scarcity of women?—No.

259. Has there been, or is there still any sheep-milking here?—When I said none I was glad that you asked me that question. That has had to be given up to a great extent in consequence of non-ability to get servant girls.

260. Of course, you consider that a loss?—A very decided loss.

261. A considerable loss?—A considerable loss.

Mr. Griffiths.

262. You mentioned just now that tenants did not apply for leases as they formerly did?—I did not put it in that way. I did not say what they had formerly done. I say they do not generally apply for leases.

263. Is it because the times are so depressed?—I should think so. I should be very sorry to hold a farm under a lease with a downward tendency in the value of the land.

264. What do you consider the average value of the corn land in the district?—15*s.* an acre, speaking of the corn land in its entirety, not as combined with the pasture.

265. Are the agents as a rule specially trained?—As a rule I think so, but it is not a rule without an exception.

266. Not when you have solicitors for agents?—Unfortunately that is so, I think that is not fortunate to the tenant.

267. Not beneficial to the tenant?—Not beneficial.

268. Do not things run so smoothly with a solicitor as agent as when you have a practical agriculturist as agent?—I would not consider a solicitor a gentleman educated, as one of the questions asks, for that particular business. I think it is necessary that an agent should be a very practical man indeed, so far as all branches of agriculture are concerned.

269. Is there any difference between the freeholders and the under-tenants as a rule?—No.

270. No differences?—I should think not. Nothing to my mind would beat the tenant farmers in this particular district under the four-course system, and they do it exceedingly well. Two-thirds of the root for sheep and feed them with corn and cake, and it is the general habit in this part to treat the land so.

271. Has the question been asked you before or not: what is the average size of the farms in this district?—It has been asked, and I think I put it about 250 acres. Perhaps I am rather high, I daresay I am. It would be a very difficult thing to average. When I leave out half-a-dozen farms that would exceed 300 acres, possibly there would not be an average of 200, or not above, at any rate—perhaps 200 acres.

272. Are there as many roots grown in this neighbourhood now as formerly?—More. It depends how far you go by the word "formerly."

273. You were speaking of 40 or 50 years ago?—Oh, dear, yes. It was the rule to fallow the land for the wheat, and now roots are grown.

274. Whom do you employ generally to haul your turnips?—We farmers employ a certain number of labourers that do it as a rule. If not, you have plenty of outside labour for that kind of work. We have to pay a little more than we did.

275. Did you not have women years ago to do this work?—It was prior to my time, although I have known it in a few instances, especially when they have gone in with their husbands and children to single out plants.

276. What is your experience of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Well, not a very pleasing one.

277. It is not so good as a tenant would like?—Certainly not, and I think that is very generally acknowledged by those who know our custom.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

278. In what respect do you say that the regulations of the Act are less advantageous than the regulations, according to the custom to which you refer?—That is rather difficult to answer. We find our custom so advantageous to all parties that the valuers, as a rule, have set their faces against that Act, and they are doing their best—and I hope they will be supplemented by the landlords and the tenants—to exclude it as much as possible, because we consider our custom so very good.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

279. Section 6 of the Agricultural Holdings Act enacts that the measure of the compensation under this Act for tenant's outlay shall be the value of his outlay to the succeeding occupier?—Yes.

280. Is not that the essential principle of this custom of Glamorgan?—That is one of them. I do not know that it is as good as applied to tillages. I might say the Act is better than our custom, so far as that portion is concerned which you have just read. It provides for any corn or cake consumed on the land, provided it is bought. At the passing of the Act of 1883, Lord Coventry allowed his tenants to claim for unexhausted stuff if grown on his property, and I know of no other exception. I think it is a hardship that it necessitates the corn or cake being bought before you have the claim.

281. Do you recollect any cases in which the valuers have found difficulty in arriving at an adjustment of the compensation?—Very frequently; in very many instances.

282. It does not often go into court, you think?—It very seldom goes in court.

283. As I understand the operation of the custom, the landlord is responsible for the compensation, although, in fact, it is usually paid by the incoming tenant?—That is quite right.

284. But it is the landlord who is really responsible to the outgoing tenant?—The landlord is responsible to the outgoing tenant. The outgoing tenant need not of necessity acknowledge the incoming tenant at all.

285. In practice, is the compensation arrived at between valuers appointed by the incoming tenant and the outgoing tenant?—That is the rule.

286. And then if the valuers disagree, an umpire is appointed?—Yes.

287. Is there any customary method of enforcing that, short of going to law?—Yes.

288. What takes place practically?—That the outgoing and the incoming tenant sign a document appointing the two valuers, and give them power, in the event of their being unable to agree, to appoint an umpire.

289. The outgoing tenant remains in the house for a certain time after the legal expiration of the tenancy?—He remains in the house until the 1st of May following.

290. Supposing the compensation is not paid by the 1st of May, and he has to leave the house, there is no guarantee for the payment of his amount except the personal ability of the landlord, or the personal ability of the incoming tenant?—No, nothing; they would go to court as a natural consequence if it is so prolonged.

291. You have heard of such cases?—Yes.

292. Do you not think that some simple procedure in a court of justice would be a good method?—I daresay it would.

293. In the first instance, I mean. Supposing the valuers cannot agree at once, would it not be expedient for the court to appoint an umpire, say the county court, or the petty sessions?—I fail to see why they cannot agree, because they can appoint an umpire.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

294. If the court intervened at an earlier stage it would be more simple, because the award of the umpire would be treated as an award at once without any further proceedings?—It has to be done within a certain time.

295. There is a most elaborate procedure given in the Act of 1883?—Yes.

296. Which is enforceable through the county court, and a very expensive method it is, as we all know under that Act. I was suggesting to you a possible improvement, and I am anxious to get your opinion upon it?—If there could be anything of the kind; but I am afraid we must wait for those improvements from you and others.

297. Do you, as a practical man, see any great objection to that? Supposing the valuers do not agree, may it not be expedient for the farmers in question to at once go to the court, say the county court or petty sessions, and ask for the award of an umpire, whose judgment shall, ipso facto, have the effect of a judgment of the court. Let me put it again. Instead of the valuers appointing an umpire, whose award, if it is necessary to enforce it, must be enforced in a court of justice, would not it be expedient to provide machinery by which the valuers might at once go to the court and get an umpire appointed, whose award would have the effect of a judgment?—It might be. I would not like to pass an opinion. I find we have never a difficulty in appointing an umpire, and I fail to see why he should not arrive at his award.

298. There is no difficulty in arriving at his award. The question I put is by way of a suggestion for improving the machinery of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, instead of under that Act going to the county court?—I daresay you are right, but I would not pass an opinion upon it.

299. I think you made a suggestion about the Ground Game Act. You say it is not worth much to the tenant?—I think it is of very little worth to him.

300. Do I understand that you suggest that he should be able to authorise anyone he likes and as many persons as he likes to kill the ground game?—Provided he superintended it and saw that the men did not destroy other game. I would not like him to be allowed to run riot all over the farm, but to keep down the rabbits. I think he should be entitled to employ whomsoever he likes to do it.

301. I certainly understood you to suggest that it would be expedient to alter the Act of 1880?—I think it would be an advantageous alteration if it gave the tenant a greater power.

302. The greater power, I suggest, would be the power to authorise any persons he liked?—I fail to see why he should not. He feeds them, and I fail to see why he should not have his friends to kill them. I may as well tell you I never suffer by an over-run of rabbits. I wish I could see 100 on my farm sometimes, but I never see one. I should like to feed them and enjoy them with my friends, and to enjoy the sport myself, not forgetting my landlord.

303. Has a case come under your notice in which the outgoing tenant has not obtained what was ordinarily considered a fair compensation?—If I thought he had not it has been the fault of the umpire, according to my lights.

304. That is not an answer to my question. Are there many complaints on behalf of the outgoing tenants?—Of course they complain, but that would be a difference of opinion as to their value of the improvements and that of the umpire.

305. Have you ever heard a tenant complain that although perhaps the award was fair enough so far as it dealt with specific matters, still it did not allow him anything for what might be called the generally improved condition of the farm?—There is nothing in our custom which acknowledges a general improvement.

306. The custom is well ascertained?—Yes.

307. I have seen awards drawn up in which there is a certain sum put against each head which would deal with the different incidence of the custom?—Yes.

308. You are a land valuer?—Yes.

309. That is how it is done?—Yes.

310. Is it customary for the umpires to give some lump sum at the end of the award for what is called generally improved circumstances?—Certainly not.

311. Do you not think that is a little hard on the tenant?—I do not think so. It may be an equal hardship on the part of the incoming tenant. It is only a supposition on the part of the valuers whether it is an improvement or not.

312. Now suppose you are speaking of an ordinary tenancy from year to year. You said the landlord effects the improvements generally?—As a rule.

313. Does that apply to the dwelling-houses as well?—Oh, yes.

314. Does that apply to fences?—No.

315. The tenant supplies the labour?—Our custom applies to that.

316. How does that apply?—It acknowledges any improvement for three years, and no more—knocking off one third for each year.

317. Take gates?—The landlords generally supply them and posts.

318. The landlord supplies the gates and posts but the tenant puts them up?—As a rule. In some cases the landlord puts them up as well.

319. As to the buildings for stock?—The landlord: it is a very unreasonable thing that the tenant should put them up. I have known in some cases a tenant has erected temporary erections for stock. That is a very great hardship. There is no custom in our part of the country to compensate him for it. It is a considerable hardship where a man is tenant, and he is apt to lay out this bit of money when times are good, and when his holding becomes of so much less value it is hard that he is not met by his landlord so as to enable him to remain on the ground and enjoy his own outlay.

320. What do you say with regard to the condition of the farm buildings in this part of the country?—They vary very considerably. In some estates they are all that can be asked for, I should think, and all that was required, but in others they are simply frightful. I have the privilege of occupying a farm; the buildings are simply a disgrace to the ground—the quality of the ground—and the acreage.

321. Have you made improvements yourself on your own account?—I have not, nor am I likely to do. I did on my late tenancy improve it very considerably, and I have laid out some hundreds of pounds for which I was not compensated.

322. How many hundreds?—I could not specify how many. I might say that the gentleman who owns the land I am now speaking of has only a life interest and I cannot expect him to lay out a lot on it. Still I suffer in consequence of the bad state of the buildings. I have 70 head of cattle, sometimes more, and my only shed room, for instance, is a place to tie 14, and one very poor open shed where you might keep perhaps a dozen cattle. I do every year winter out in the open fields 30 cattle to a great loss. If I had shed accommodation for them the farm would be a better thing.

323. How are the fences on your farm?—The fences are pretty good, but they are not as good as they would have been if there was a better understanding between my landlord and myself. I have taken particular care not to improve them at any rate.

324. What is the acreage of your farm?—245 acres.

325. How many labourers do you employ through the year, if you do not mind giving us the information?—Four, and sometimes more.

326. Are those men living in cottages near by or on your own premises?—I generally have two on the premises in the house, and two or three or four men living in their own cottages.

327. You mean cottages which they rent themselves on their own account?—Quite so. There are no cottages attached to the farm.

328. What wages do you generally pay to the off-men?—15*s.* a week.

329. What are the terms of the indoor men?—They get as much as 10*s.* a week and more.

330. They get food and lodging as well, of course?—Yes.

331. Would you say the tenant farmers of this neighbourhood do a great deal of work themselves or do they confine themselves to the superintendence generally?—They do a great deal of the work themselves. That is not a rule without the exception either.

332. Do their children help them?—They do.

333. A good deal?—A very considerable deal. I know a farm near me of 300 acres where it is worked by the father and four sons. They are scarcely ever employing outside labour, except for harvest purposes, and hoeing turnips, or something of that sort, and those men work very hard, I may say.

334. Are the sons in such cases generally paid?—That I know nothing at all about. I should not think they would have a regular wage, I daresay they are adequately paid somehow or other, but that I would not like to venture upon.

Lord Kenyon.

335. Who is your landlord?—I have two landlords, I should have said. Colonel H. C. Gould is my landlord who owns the house and 159 acres of ground.

336. And the other you take a certain amount of land from?—Yes, from Mrs. Mirley, 86 acres.

337. You could hardly expect Colonel Gould to attach buildings to the land of Mrs. Mirley?—No.

338. Are there any buildings belonging to Mrs. Mirley?—There are not, but it is a considerable addition in value to Colonel Gould that the other land is attached to it, and I have reason to think that on a change of tenancy it will not be attached.

339. What proportion does the grass land bear to the arable?—I have 114 of pasture and 129 of arable.

340. About half and half?—Nearly so.

341. Is that the average in the district generally?—It varies very considerably in different farms.

342. I suppose the corn land is going out of cultivation?—It is, to a great extent.

343. And more grass land is being laid out?—It is.

344. Do you consider the value of the grass land has depreciated?—I do not know that it has.

345. Within the last 30 years?—No, I think not.

346. You said the value of the corn land had depreciated?—The produce. I said I did not think the crops of straw had; it did not seem as if the land had got weaker, but that, nevertheless, in wet seasons there is a less yield of corn per acre.

347. You said rents had been raised about 30 per cent.?—Quite, in the years I have mentioned.

348. Have there been any reductions within the last few years?—Yes.

349. Are the rents now arrived at very much the same as what they were, say, in 1870?—Yes.

350. And coming back to very much what they were before?—Yes, and in some instances much below. I could give you instances if you thought fit to ask me.

351. You said there were some clauses in the agreements which you thought were oppressive against selling hay and straw?—

352. Have those clauses been allowed to drop lately?—I think they have not been so generally inserted in new leases.

353. Probably on account of the use of artificial manures?—I think the reason is that landlords find that land has so depreciated in value that they are glad to get a good tenant without putting those restrictive clauses in the agreement.

354. But it is a fact that artificial manures are used very much more than they were 30 years ago?—Yes, 30 years ago, but not more than they were in 1872, which is the year I was speaking about.

355. And the reason of putting in that clause against selling straw and hay was directed against taking the manure off the farm?—Yes.

356. And a bad tenant might possibly sell manure off the farm?—Yes. I think a landlord is fully entitled to protect his ground against a bad tenant. I may say I know of no instance where penalties inserted in the leases have been acted upon, although as a natural consequence the clauses have been violated by selling hay.

357. Is this a dairy or stock-raising district?—Stock-raising, not much of a dairy district.

358. They have given up cheese making?—Very considerably.

359. On account of the difficulty of finding dairy-maids?—That is so. In this part of the country there was never very much cheese made, but I may tell you it was a custom to milk the ewes, and that is very much a thing of the past, in consequence of not being able to get the servant maids to attend to them.

360. Are the farm houses pretty good in this part of the country?—Yes.

361. And the labourers' cottages?—They are particularly bad, distinctly in many instances.

362. Are they better on the large or smaller estates?—Really, I can hardly draw a distinction.

363. Do the landlords in this district support the local shows?—Yes.

364. Is there much of that?—Yes, a good deal.

365. And they have a good effect?—Oh, yes, when supported by all the landlords.

366. Is there any co-operation amongst the farmers in buying?—None whatever.

367. Can you tell me if any accounts are kept. As a land valuer you must know?—Well, I am afraid not.

368. Have the labourers attached to their cottages any pasture or gardens?—Not pasture, but gardens.

369. They have good gardens?—As a rule.

370. Can they sell the produce of those gardens?—Yes, but I am afraid it pays them better to consume it. They can just grow what they require.

371. Are damsons grown in this district at all?—I do not know that they are.

372. Would there be any sale for them if there were?—I do not know that there would be. I do not think that the climate is adapted for fruit growing.

373. It seems to me, according to your account, that you would rather have the rabbits for sport and chance the trespass?—I would not like to have them if I had not the power to keep them under to a certain extent. I would like to have a few.

374. You think under the present Hares and

Rabbits Bill the farmer has not sufficient power to keep them down?—That is what I do think.

375. At the same time you say you do not think there is much game trespass in this district?—It is very hard to say. I do not think there is much.

Chairman.

376. There are four questions handed in to me. The first question handed in is: What remedies do you suggest for improving the profits from land? Have you any suggestion to make?—That is a question embodied in the syllabus. It would be more convenient to answer that question if the question immediately preceding it was answered, but I will try and answer that as you put it. As to lands held by tenants under the large landowners in this neighbourhood, their rents were not as a rule raised, and have not been during my time, consequently those tenants would have something to go back upon. I would not like to say that those rents should be very much reduced, although they are being met by a rebate for the time in consequence of the depression. I am speaking of the large landlords, and they are as a rule trying to do their best to retain their tenants. I scarcely know what the remedy would be as between landlord and tenant, but there are properties held by less fortunate owners who are not as well off as the lords and landed proprietors, and their farms as a rule are higher. The remedy in this case certainly I must say, I should think, would be a considerable reduction of rent the first thing, lands that are over-rented, and that applies more generally to the small owners. As to the remedies in a general sense, the question preceding that. we suffer so much from foreign competition that I think it would be a retrograde step for us to impose a duty upon wheat, but I would suggest that there should be a duty upon manufactured articles, even if it was flour, if it was manufactured, because it does away with the industry that is necessary to convert it into flour, which might be employed here. More especially upon malting barley, that certainly when converted into beer is more a luxury than a necessity. So far as wheat is concerned it would be a retrograde step, and I would hardly advocate putting a duty on wheat. But foreign barley I think certainly ought to be taxed, and all other manufactured goods. We have had three decades of 20 years of the repeal of the corn laws. Cobden and Bright suggested that 20 years from that time all countries would be free-traded and we are suffering from the fact that they have not become so. I should like to impose such a duty on manufactured goods, and I think that would be one remedy.

Chairman—continued.

377. Are there many instances in which the tenant's family have continued on the farm for several generations?—Oh, certainly, that is so. My father occupies a farm, where I think his family have been for some 300 years—a continuous string.

378. Does a shortness of cottage accommodation cause the labourers to go into the industrial districts in preference to the farming districts?—Yes. I think the scarcity of cottages has a tendency in that direction.

379. Do the children of labourers now take to farm work as they did in former years, or have you found that they seek other employment?—They certainly seek other employment after they have arrived at a certain age, and indeed at an early age just now. And at an early age when they used to be helpful to their father's farm they are kept at school, but that, we do not complain about, although we feel we are passing through a time most awkward to the farming interests in being deprived of that help.

[Adjourned for a short time.]

Mr. George Thomas called and examined.

Chairman.

380. I believe you are a tenant farmer and land agent and valuer, and you live at Ely Farm, near Cardiff?—Yes.

381. Are you one of the representatives of the Cowbridge Farmers' Club?—I am.

382. And as their representative you are deputed and requested to speak for them?—I am. I have been requested by the Cowbridge Farmers' Club to give evidence here to-day.

383. You are, I understand, one of the oldest valuers in the county?—Yes.

384. You have had great experience in that branch of business?—Very much.

385. And you desire principally to be examined under the head of cultivation?—Yes.

386. Before we go to that I should like to ask you a question about the rents in this district. Have rents been raised generally within the last 50 years in this neighbourhood?—Yes. Rents were risen from somewhere about 1872 to 1874 and 1875. About the middle of the summer of 1875—about the 15th July 1875—we had great floods all over the country; we have never had what they call good weather ever since—that is the whole of the summer; it was St Swithin's Day, 1875.

387. Have there been any reduction or permanent reductions since that time to your knowledge?—Not that I am aware of.

388. Not as a general rule?—No.

389. Now we will go on to the cultivation, which is the head you wish principally to give your evidence under. I will ask you about improvements. What improvements are made in your district? Are they generally made by the landlord or by the tenant?—The landlord undertakes to keep the house and farm buildings in repair generally. The tenant cultivates the land on the four-course system generally.

knows well that he can recover in leaving his farm, the tenant right or what I call the landlord's right as well, because the landlord is always safe for his rent if the outgoing tenant is in arrears. The incoming tenant comes and pays the outgoing tenant by arrangement. We know that it is optional with the outgoing tenant whether he will settle with the incoming tenant or the landlord, but by arrangement the outgoing tenant settles with the incoming tenant if he finds that on his outgoing he has sufficient means to pay his claims.

390. Can you give us the usual custom of the country in the district as to the allowances to outgoing tenants in respect to growing crops, tillages, manure, and permanent improvements?—Yes. There is a custom prevailing from Aberavon, near Neath, to the River Rhymney, and it is as nearly the same custom beyond the Rhymney to the River Usk, in the county of Monmouth. Glamorganshire at one time reached to the River Usk, until, I think, the 34th of Henry VIII. The custom prevailing is that the outgoing tenant is paid for tillages, half tillages, manure, and unexhausted manure. If he drains the land it runs over 14 years, and it is considered that he has reaped the benefit in 14 years. For instance, if it cost 14*l.* this year, there is a pound taken off next year, and so on; the 14th part.

391. As regards permanent improvements, that is all you have to say?—Yes, that is, upon the landlord.

392. There is a question put in that I am to ask you. Are you not mistaken in saying that there has been no permanent reduction in rent in the district since 1875?—Since 1875, not that I am aware of.

393. That is your opinion?—Yes, that is my opinion.

Lord Kenyon.

394. No permanent reduction since 1875?—No permanent reduction, but an abatement in the rent in several cases.

395. Year by year?—No, not every year,

396. You are a tenant farmer, I think you say?—Yes.

397. Who is your landlord?—One of my landlords is the noble Lord Windsor, the other landlord is the noble Lord of Tredegar.

398. You farm two separate holdings?—No, I hold two lands, but the farm which I occupy with my home and premises belongs to Lord Windsor, and I have paid Lord Windsor 100 rents in 50 years.

399. Do you consider that there is any land going out of cultivation in this district?—I do not know of any.

400. Do you think that the state of agriculture is progressing?—I do not believe that it is progressing. The expense in cultivating the land is very much, and the price for the produce of that land is very little, more especially I mean as to arable land.

401. Is there a scarcity of labour or not in the district?—Well, labour is much higher than what it was 35 or 40 years ago.

402. That would be owing to other causes, to minerals or works?—Well, we are living in a district where labour is demanded. We find that many of the men are going to the collieries, some are going into the police force, some into the towns and railways. We find that the best of our young men are leaving the country districts and going into the town districts.

403. Is that the case with the farmers' sons. Are they leaving the district and going into the towns?—Yes, farmers' sons. Sometimes they go into the police force.

404. Do not the farmers set up their sons as farmers during their own lifetimes?—No. If a man has half a dozen sons he cannot put them all on farms.

405. Does he put any of them on farms?—There may be one or two perhaps.

406. The others he does not provide for at all?—They migrate somewhere.

407. You cannot tell us where?—They go to the works or go to the towns.

408. What is your opinion as to the Glamorganshire custom? Is it better than the Agricultural Holdings Act or worse?—I say the Act passed on the 25th August 1883, what they call the Agricultural Holdings Act, is an abominable Act.

409. With regard to the game, is there much game?—Here and there, and if the game laws were done away with it would be a very good thing unless they employ respectable men to look after the game. It is frequently the case that some old poacher is appointed to be a keeper.

410. I suppose if the game laws were done away with we should be all poachers?—But I am not bound down to the game at all. I am at full liberty, and I have no agreement, and there are no agreements on the whole of the estate.

411. As to preserving game at all?—There may be a preservation of game near where the landlord lives, in that immediate neighbourhood.

412. Is there any co-operation among the farmers about here?—None whatever.

413. As to the labourer's cottages, do you think that they are satisfactory or not?—There are many of them taken down. They were old cottages, not good for much. I have been over most of the estates in Glamorganshire and Monmouthshire and a great many in Breconshire.

414. Are they satisfactory or not at the present time?—Those built in late years are satisfactory.

415. How many bedrooms would they have?—They generally have what they call a little room in front and a back room, and they have two rooms, or sometimes three rooms above.

416. Is it the rule in this part of the country for the labourers to hold their cottages direct from the landlord or are they held with the farms?—Generally from the occupier of the farm. In some cases the landlord lets the cottages, but the tenant would rather he had power over his workmen living in cottages on the farm.

417. Is it the rule, supposing the cottage is let with the farm, for the tenant to do the repairs to that cottage—the farmer or the landlord?—Not that I am aware of? The landlord has to do it, but the tenant has to do the haulage for those repairs.

418. Do you think it is a hardship on the farmer if the cottage is held direct from the landlord by the labourer?—Well, I do not think that that would have very much effect.

419. You think the farmer would get his labour just as easily?—I do not think he would. He would not have power over them if they were rented direct from the landlord.

420. Which do you think is the best condition for the labourer?—Well, I believe that it is better that the labourer should have his cottage from his employer.

421. From the farmer?—From the farmer.

422. Are accounts kept by the farmers?—Very rarely indeed.

Chairman.

423. This is a question put by Mr. Vincent: are you aware that the permanent reduction of Lord Windsor's estate is 739*l.* a year since 1877?—No, I am not aware of that. I have no reduction—I am not aware of it. I know they have given a certain per-centage back on several occasions, but there is no reduction in the rent.

424. Are you in a good position to deny this statement?—I am not in a position to deny it, but I am not aware of it. That may allude to some of Lord Windsor's tenants on the hills, or in Worcestershire or Shropshire.

Lord Kenyon.

425. May I ask you what is the acreage of your farm?—About 100.

426. Under the two landlords?—Under the two landlords.

427. And your rent?—I have held that land under Lord Tredegar for 48 years; it is the same rent now as it was 48 years ago, it is the same rent as it was 60 years before that, and it is the same rent as it was 108 years ago.

428. What is that rent?—Sixteen shillings an acre near the town of Cardiff, within two miles of Cardiff.

429. How many acres do you hold under that rent?—I do not occupy more than 10 acres under Lord Tredegar.

430. What is the other rent under Lord Windsor?—The other rent is not yet fixed, because there is an additional 30 acres to be added now, and I must tell you that the agent told me I should have it on my own value, whatever it is. He knows I have had great experience in valuing farms for rentals, as well as other things, for railways and other purposes, and he told me "you shall have it on your own valuation."

431. You have told me that you paid 50 years rent to Lord Windsor. What has been that rent?—My rent is 80*l.* a year, and now there is 30 acres to be added.

432. Eighty pounds for the 90 acres you have from Lord Windsor?—Yes, 80*l.* for about 55 acres.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

433. I notice that in the evidence which you have been good enough to give, you draw a distinction between the reduction of rent and the abatement?—Yes.

434. Why, may I ask you, do you do that? Does the tenant farmer find the mere abatement of slight importance as compared with a reduction?—An abatement is given to the tenants when they are not aware that they are to receive it.

435. In the instances that have come under your notice, of abatements of rent, no notice has been given beforehand before the due date of the rent by the landlord or the agent?—Not the least until the rent day.

436. You have evidently had a good long experience of agriculture in this county, I think your experience goes back to 50 years. Have you noticed during the last 50 years that there has been any considerable change in the nature of the methods pursued by tenant farmers?—The changes have been more the last 20 years than 40 years ago.

437. In what direction are the changes? Are tenant farmers availing themselves more and more of machinery?—Some of the small farmers who have had their children perhaps working for them have been able perhaps to take larger farms.

438. I was not on that point at the moment. I was rather asking you as to the mode of farming?—I think the mode of farming is carried on as well now as it was 40 years ago.

439. Not better, but ——?—But it was not the same system perhaps 50 years ago. There was not so much of the four-course system 50 years ago as there is to-day. That is the reason there are so many root crops, and the root crop intervenes between the cereal crops, and they find the crops better, and the root crops are far better now than what they were in my memory 50 or 60 years ago.

440. Do you find the tenant farmers of this neighbourhood are ready to take advantage of new discoveries and new methods and new machines?—No, I do not know that they have adopted a system of chemistry, but they use a lot of artificial manure.

441. You do not think they do use a lot of artificial manure?—Yes, they do, for the production of root crops.

442. Now you said that the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883 was an abominable Act?—Yes.

443. There are some clauses, for instance, which I can understand anyone fixing upon, I mean the clauses as to procedure. You remember those?—Yes.

444. Was it those clauses that your mind was fixed upon when you used that word?—I say it is more liable to lead to litigation than our custom prevailing, and the custom of the country is preferable to the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883.

445. You mean what are called the substantial clauses of the Act are so worded as to lead to litigation?—It is suitable to many parts of England, and many parts of Wales, but not for East Glamorgan.

446. Would you, as a farmer and valuer of experience, tell me why you draw that distinction between the Vale of Glamorgan and other parts of the country?—Because we have a custom prevailing from time immemorial.

447. The mere fact that you have a custom here which you yourselves find satisfactory does not necessarily involve the failure of the Act of 1883, does it?—I do not say that, but the Act of 1883 provides that you should give two months' notice before the end of the term of the tenancy. You are to make your claim before you part with your farm.

448. I think I understand now the point you are making. You do not like those stringent clauses of the Act referring to notices?—No, I do not.

449. You do not like, I understand, the procedure clauses about the appointment of valuers, and so on? You do not like the arrangement made under the Act about that?—There is no arrangement made.

450. There is an arrangement. I will not quarrel with you about that; we will pass that by. There is a reference to the valuers and umpires?—Yes, in the Act.

451. But in the principle of the Act is there anything that you object to?—In the 44th section of the Act you will find that the landlord can distrain. If he does not distrain by a certain time he goes minus the rent.

452. What do you object to in the 44th section?—Well, it has caused many farmers, in order to meet that rent, to borrow money of money-lenders; when his landlord before could give him time to pay, and could recover in six years.

453. But that clause, as I understand the effect of it, was inserted rather to limit the landlord's powers of distress. As I understand your point, the effect of this limitation of the landlord's right has been in practice to make landlords distrain sooner than they would otherwise have distrained?—Yes, sooner than otherwise.

454. Is that your point?—That is what I am driving at.

455. That fact leads the tenant to borrow money when perhaps he would not have otherwise done it?—Yes.

456. Do I understand you to suggest that you would like a repeal of the 44th section of the Act?—Yes, I would like to have it repealed.

457. So that you would like the landlord to distrain at any time he liked by common law distraint?—Yes, as usual under the old law. We find that they go to money-lenders to make up their rents frequently.

458. So that you would rather have a power of distress for rent, for any amount of rent, however long the arrears, instead of the limited powers which the landlord has under the 44th section?—Well, you know, and I have no need to tell you, as a lawyer——

459. You are speaking as a lawyer, I presume?—I must bow to you, Mr. Jones.

460. No, Mr. Thomas, that is not the question. You have put your point about the 44th section?—I have also tried to follow Lord Bacon's advice to King James—to know as much law as to know the way to keep out of it.

461. Have you ever known the lawyer who has not given you that advice?—I like lawyers very well. I have had a lot to do with them, but I am like Lord Mansfield; I do not like to go to law with a man who has nothing.

462. I am asking you your opinion on the Act of 1883, which you have condemned so much. I am inclined to agree with you about the procedure clause from my experience, but I want to know whether you object to the method of enforcement of claims under this Act?—I object to it in this county.

463. That is because, so I understand you to say, you really prefer things to remain, so far as you are concerned, the same as they were under the custom of Glamorganshire without the powers of the Act at all?—Yes, and it is generally so in this county from Neath to the River Rhymney.

464. And is that opinion the general opinion amongst the farmers in this part of the country?—Yes, a general opinion. They would rather have the custom of the country than the Act of 1883.

465. Do not think me unduly pressing, but I still fail to understand, from what you have told me, whether your preference of the custom to the Act of 1883 is due to something essentially in the nature of the rules or incidents or whether it is a mere matter of procedure—whether it is the mere notice and so forth that you object to?—There is only one thing in the Act of 1883 that is deficient in the custom of the country. Certainly there is one thing. They allow for lime for seven years, and our custom allows it over five years on grass land. There is no allowance made for land laid down in the custom of the country, but there is a provision in the Agricultural Holdings Act for land that has been laid down.

466. I may tell you at once what is in my mind, that Mr. Daniel Owen has pointed out, if I remember aright, that the essential principle involved in the application of the custom of Glamorganshire is that involved by section 6 of the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883?—Not that I am aware of. I have read his pamphlet.

467. Do you agree with that?—I do not agree with everything that is in Mr. Daniel Owen's pamphlet. Mr. Daniel Owen has never had the experience that I have had. I have settled more than 2,000 farms in 44 years.

468. Have you any experience of the operation of the Ground Game Act, 1880?—The Game Act, as I have said before, is a very sore point between landlord and tenant.

469. Do you suggest or do you know of any general wish for the alteration of the Ground

Game Act, 1880?—Yes. I say that every occupier ought to have the right on his occupation. You go to a town, and you go to an allotment; they will not allow the game to go into that allotment. Why should not a farmer be the same?

470. You are agreed with what Mr. Jenkins said that every occupier ought to be allowed to authorise anyone to kill game?—Yes, he ought to, and if he keeps too much on his farm it is own fault. Most tenants that I have met in this and other counties are always pleased to see their landlord coming to shoot over their farm, and in fact the tenants should be the best gamekeepers for the landlords.

471. When you talk of wishing to get rid of all game laws, had you in your mind any of the laws relating to trespass in pursuit of game?—That would be done away with altogether.

472. You would like that to be done away with altogether?—Except the person who is the occupier of that land. He should have power to proceed against trespassers by some law, but I do not see that it is right that an agreement should be drawn up between landlord and tenant, and that the tenant should take proceedings against those who are trespassing on the farm that he occupies.

473. I do not quite follow that answer?—There are agreements that provide that the tenant should proceed or assist in the proceedings against trespassers for game, and there are very few tenants that would like to do so, but there are many tenants who are afraid of their agents or their landlords. They will speak behind their backs, but they will not come to a public place and speak before the public what they will say in private.

474. Do you happen to know whether in any cases compensation is given to a tenant for what may be called the general improvement of his holding as distinguished from specific?—No, I do not know of any case in our district where he has received for improvement of his holding. He merely gets the custom of the country. The custom of the country is the labour—that is, the tillage, the half tillage, the manure, the unexhausted manure, the seed sown in the land, and allowing for fences and ditches for three years. If the outgoing tenant has reaped the benefit for three years there is nothing charged, but on the hilly parts (and I have been over dozens and dozens of farms in the hilly parts of Glamorganshire) they allow for the walls 14 years, the same as we do in the vale for drainage. You will allow me to tell you that we are perfectly satisfied in Glamorganshire and the Western Division of Monmouthshire with the custom prevailing.

Chairman.

475. A question is put to you by Mr. Vincent: your farm is Ely Farm, is it not?—It is.

476. Are you aware whether 1,000*l.* has been spent in improvements and repairs on that farm by the landlord in the last ten years?—800*l.* was spent when I built the house, and Lord Windsor paid me the 800*l.* that I paid for building the house.

477. There is another question that is asked by Mr. Vincent; are you aware that on the Margam estate four months' notice of an intended abatement was given before the last audit?—No, I am not aware before the last audit. It must be a new thing. It must be since the death of the late Mr. Talbot. I have settled some farms with Mr. Talbot in 1867, 1868, and 1869, and I am going back a long time.

Mr. Griffiths.

478. Do you consider that the rent of small holdings is higher than that of larger ones?—I do.

479. On what ground?—Small holdings are generally let higher than large holdings.

480. Why should they be let higher?—I suppose they are let higher, because there are more applying for the small farms than for the large farms.

481. How are they farmed? Are they farmed as well as the larger ones?—I think they do farm as well.

482. You said you paid 100 rents. How many times during that period have you had abatements made?—Two or three times. I had manure in 1845 or 1846—that was the first time that they introduced the guano into this country—from the Honourable Robert Henry Clive, the grandfather of the present Lord Windsor—instead of cash.

483. Can you give me an approximate idea as to the difference in the amount of your labour bill at present to what it was when you commenced farming?—Oh, yes. There is something more than one-third paid now to what there was then—one-third more. As to servants—servant girls,—their wages are nearly three times more than they were when I was married, 50 years last January.

484. What per-centage of your rent do you think the total of that would make?—10 per cent.

485. Do you follow me?—What per-centage of your rent has this increase in your labour bill been?—It would be about one-third more, as I have said before.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

486. Mr. Griffiths asks you what per-centage does this increase of labour bear to your rent?—I understand you now. It may make a difference of about one-fourth in the rent—25 per cent.

Mr. Griffiths.

487. Have tenants not generally sufficient building accommodation to carry on their farming?—In some instances they have—in many in fact. There are a few landlords that perhaps have not the means of putting up buildings for their tenants.

488. Is there much attention paid to poultry farming?—Not very much.

489. Fruit?—Nor fruit, only near a town.

490. You spoke of the power of distress. Do you think that the landlord should have the preference in being able to distrain upon the tenants more than the people who lend the tenant the money to pay the rent?—I think the landlord should be the first; that is my opinion, and I consider that the landlord is a great protection to many tenants.

Mr. Richard Jones.

491. You have already condemned the Agricultural Holdings Act, and yet you state that provision is made in it for paying compensation to the outgoing tenant for laying down permanent pasture?—Yes.

492. And also he can recover compensation for the application of lime for seven years?—Yes.

493. Whereas your custom only provides for three years for tillages, and five years for top dressing grass land?—Five years top dressing grass land, and seven years under the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1875.

494. I want you to give me specific instances of where your custom is an improvement on the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I have told you that it is better than the Agricultural Holdings Act, except for land laid down and the lime, is only two years more—for seven years—and our custom is for five years.

495. That is a general statement. I want you to furnish the Commission with a number of specific instances?—Well, I do not know. I cannot tell you.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

496. A definite point; Mr. Richard Jones does not mean a specific instance in relation to any particular farm, but some specific point—some specific incident in which the custom is preferable to the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I may tell you there is very little liming the last 15 years in this district.

Mr. Richard Jones.

497. Supposing I asked you this question now; in case a tenant puts up machinery, is he allowed under your custom to remove that machinery?—He is not, but if he gets the consent from the landlord under the 14th and 15th Victoria, chapter 25, by giving one month's notice he can remove it before the end of the term of the tenancy, that is if he has had written consent to erect.

498. What length of notice is required to terminate the tenancy under your custom?—Six months, the same as the 33rd clause in the Agricultural Holdings Acts.

499. Which do you consider preferable, six months' notice or twelve months' notice?—Twelve months.

500. Why?—One year's notice, then the landlord or the incoming tenant can see how the outgoing tenant farms during that year.

501. What is the reason that lime is not applied to land now as it was formerly?—Well, I cannot tell you that. They find, I suppose, that it is very expensive, and they use superphosphate of lime to a very great extent.

502. What is the custom with regard to fallowing?—The custom with regard to fallowing is is this. If you plough the land in the autumn or Christmas, a year before the end of your tenancy, you may plough it four times, drag it, roll it, and so on. If it is a bare fallow, you are allowed for all those ploughings, draggings, and rollings, and one year's rent, rates, tithes, and taxes for the bare fallow. Turnip land is allowed for the manure and tillages as well. If you consume all the roots you are allowed the full tillages, and the full manure and in some districts if you consume two-thirds of the crop, if it is a fair crop you get just the same amount for tillages and manure, perhaps 5*l.* or 6*l.* an acre. The next year (to tell how the custom is) after taking a crop of corn out you are allowed a moiety of that. If you take what is called a legume crop afterwards, there is something allowed afterwards, perhaps a moiety, but if you take two crops of clover and one crop of corn there is no claim.

503. What is your custom with regard to farm-yard manure?—Paid for. Our custom upon farm-yard manure is, if it is carried over this year, it is paid in full. If you have carried it last year, two-thirds, and if it comes to the one-third part it is considered you have reaped the benefit off grass land, but if you carry farm-yard manure and take two straw crops out, there is nothing.

504. With regard to stubble and seeds?—The seeds are sown with the corn crop generally. Then the following year it is in clover, and you may mow it twice perhaps, and then it is fit afterwards for oats as lay ground, and the expense is little when you come to the third crop. But the whole system of farming when I was a boy 50 years ago was two white crops in succession, and they fallowed the land then, perhaps every seven years, took a crop of wheat, a crop of barley, and a crop or two of clover, and then they would graze the land for two or three years, and they would plough it up and make a bare fallow of it, and lime it.

505. I want to know what compensation an incoming tenant would pay to the outgoing tenant for growing stubbles?—About 12*s.* an acre, and 2*s.* 6*d.* for dragging it, and perhaps 1*s.* 6*d.* for rolling. Then as to the fences it is paid by the perch, 18 feet to the perch, what they call lineal measure, the same as a mason's perch.

506. I will ask you a question with regard to the charges on the land. Tithes, land tax, chief rents, local rents: are they paid by the owner or the occupier?—The rates?

507. Yes?—The rates are generally paid by the tenant, by the occupier, but it is not always the case with the land tax. Some landlords have redeemed the land tax under the Act of 1793, but you will find many landlords have allowed the land tax to the tenant after the tenant has paid it, and other tenants are obliged to pay the land tax. Lord Windsor's tenants pay the land tax, but Lord Tredegar's grandfather redeemed the land tax, and there is no land tax on his estate.

508. How does the amount of the local burdens compare now with what they were before the passing of the Education Act, 1870?—Well, they may be something more. I think, that is the School Board—where there is a School Board in the parish or where the sanitary laws are carried out—and the highway rate—the highway rate is now added to the poor rate. The highway call for the district since the Rebecca riots in 1843 is heavier.

509. On whom have the increased charges fallen—on the landlord or the tenant?—It falls on the tenant generally—the tax, that is the rates. I do not mean the income tax or the property tax—what we call the Government tax—but the rates of a parish.

510. What do you consider have been the chief causes of depression in agriculture?—That is more than I can tell you.

511. Tell us some of them?—It is more than I can tell you. I know that they are grumbling a great deal. A man named Morgan came over to this country and bought 15 ponies, and they cost him, after they landed in America, 3*l.* each for duty; and I know that I bought that in London, and the British Government gave a patent to a German to have it made in Germany [producing railway carriage key]. It is a simple thing, there it is.

512. Anything else?—No. I have nothing else to tell you.

513. We should like to get the point of that. What do you mean by showing us that German article?—I say they give patents to foreigners to make something cheaper than what they can do in Great Britain.

514. Why did you buy it, then?—I wanted to buy it so that I could see that it was a proper thing.

515. And you wanted to buy in the cheapest market?—I bought it in one of the arcades of London, near Regent Street, and they told me it came from Germany, and not only that, but there is the patent on this article.

Mr. Seebohm.

516. There are only two questions which I wish to ask. First I should like to clear up this point about the abatements and reduction of rent. As I understand it, you object to abatements as contrasted with reduction of rent, because they leave in the landlord's power the claiming of the full high rent at the end of the tenancy. Is that what you mean?—The landlord keeps the rent the same, and then he holds a power in reduction; it is not an abatement in fact. In fact I have never studied Dr. Johnson nor Dr. Kenrick.

517. But the real objection is that it keeps alive the high rent to the end of the tenancy?—Yes, that is the point.

518. The other point was with regard to labourers' cottages. You gave it as your opinion that it was best that the farmer should be the holder of the cottages?—Yes, I do believe so.

519. And on the ground that it gave you the full power over the labourer that you think is necessary for your business?—Yes.

520. Now let me ask you another question, How much notice do you give to a labourer when you discharge him?—It depends entirely how you have agreed with him. You may let his house to him at so much per year.

521. Now would you give him any compensation for what he left behind him in the shape of manure or plants in his garden when you discharge him?—I have known it to be so, more especially if he has crops in his garden the crops are paid for.

522. You do not think that the farmer being the owner or practically the controller of the cottages has in the past had the result of hardship to the cottagers?—I believe so, and I think the Allotment Act of 1888 provides for that.

523. I am afraid you do not quite understand the question. What I really mean is this. Although I can see that simply looking at it from the tenant farmer's point of view it is useful for him to have full power over the labourer, yet it may give rise to hardship to the labourer for him to be so entirely in the hands of the tenant farmer, as not only to be dismissed and lose his living, but also to be turned out of his cottage at short notice?—It depends entirely upon the arrangement between the occupier of the farm and his labourer.

524. That is not an answer to my question, but I will not pursue the subject?—I think it would be hard to give power to the farmer to turn him out at any moment He may be a weekly labourer, and he would turn him out of the cottage in a week. I think it would be a hardship.

Sir John Llewelyn.

525. With regard to the size of the farms in this district, what do you say is the acreage?—The most convenient farms would be, I think, from perhaps 100 to 250.

526. Do they utilize more labourers than they used to or less?—I do not think they use as many labourers as they used to do, because they are not so plentiful.

527. That is the point I was going to—why?—As I have said before, they migrate to the towns, and to the railways, and the police force, and so on.

528. And are the labourers you have as useful as they used to be?—They are not as useful as they were 30 or 40 years ago.

529. Not so skilled?—No, not for general work.

530. Young men go elsewhere?—Yes.

531. Are they natives belonging to the district?—A few natives, but mostly from many parts of England, and some parts of Ireland perhaps.

532. They come in from a distance?—They come in from a distance.

533. How long on the average do they stay with the farmers, more than one year, or less than one year?—Sometimes four or five, or six years.

534. Is that commonly the use?—Not of late years. When we used to have servants in the house. I have seen them stay perhaps seven, or eight or nine years, servant girls and servant men as well.

535. What is the condition of the cottages. Are the cottages generally in good repair?—They are now. Of late years they are putting cottages in better repair, because the sanitary board interferes, and get their inspector to interfere.

536. Is it in consequence of the better or worse accommodation that the labourers stay longer or shorter times?—They stay longer in the better cottages, and of late years they are trying to provide them with a good garden.

537. Is that the case in most instances, that they give them a good garden?—When there are new cottages built, they generally give them a good garden.

538. Have they done the same with old cottages?—The old cottages in many instances are taken down. They are condemned by the inspector of the sanitary board.

539. So that there is an improvement in that direction?—It is an improvement.

The witness withdrew.

Chairman.

I have been asked to call on the rector of Llangan, who wishes to speak for a few minutes and to be asked a question with reference to the enclosure award, which has been handed in to Mr. Brynmor Jones. Therefore, with the sanction of the Commissioners, I shall ask the reverend gentleman to go to the chair and make a short statement.

Chairman—continued.

Rev. Henry James Humphreys called and examined.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

See 80, 113, 114.

540. You are the rector of Llangan?—Yes.

541. Do you produce this award dated the 1st of March 1860?—Yes.

542. May I ask how it happens to be in your custody?—It was given by Mr. Munden, who is the overseer for Penlline; I sent to him for it, as being interested in that part of my own parish, and he sent it to me.

543. Are there trustees now of the portions of the land awarded for general purposes such as recreation grounds or allotments?—There are.

544. There are trustees now?—There are trustees now.

545. May the whole thing be looked upon as a working, operating trust at the present moment?—No.

546. Since when has it become inoperative?—The trustees from the very beginning, I think, seem to have failed to understand, or have neglected, their duties. The portions were allotted to the poor to be rented to them for fair rents; they neglected that. The portions were allotted by them, but they collected no rents whatever, so that at the present moment the occupiers have freehold possession.

547. By freehold possession do you mean that they have been in possession for over 20 or 12 years?—Over 20 years really.

548. Do they assert as against the trustee now a right to the freehold?—They do.

549. Has the matter been contested at law?—No. When I arrived there I found that they had been in possession over 12 years, so that it was not contested.

550. Was there no document in writing at the time the allotment was made?—I believe there was, but they neglected to collect any rents, so that they now have resisted payment.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

551. They were only tenants from year to year?—Tenants from year to year.

552. It is no use my going into the legal question with you. I want to ascertain the fact. At present the overseers or churchwardens or you yourself who may be taken to represent the public interest in that behalf, cannot collect the rents and do not get them?—We cannot collect them and do not get them.

553. Have these people built upon the allotments at all?—No.

554. Simply used it for garden grounds?—And very often not used them at all, and in some cases sold them.

555. Sold them?—Yes, sold them.

556. That is very odd. How about the recreation ground?—That has not been enclosed according to the directions given to the trustees and it is still open.

557. Who are the trustees now?—The churchwardens and overseers.

558. The churchwardens and overseers for the time being?—Yes, for the time being.

559. Is there anything you would like to mention in regard to the common, or upon the points that the first witness gave evidence upon? He gave evidence about certain squatters on waste land. Has anything of the sort come under your notice?—Except, I think, the interests of the parish and of all the poor in the parish were looked after in this particular case. There was one case where there was a squatter close by, and he had the garden and another piece of land. It was found he had no claim to this piece, so that he was left in possession of one half and the other was taken away from him and added to the common ground, which was divided amongst the public.

560. This was regular waste of the manor at one time, I suppose?—It was.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. W. V. Huntley called and examined.

Chairman.

561. I believe you are a tenant farmer?—I am.

562. Where do you live?—At Welsh St. Donatt's, about three miles from here.

563. What is the size of your farm?—A little over 200 acres.

564. You are also a valuer and land agent?—I am.

565. And secretary to the Glamorganshire General Agricultural Society and to the Cowbridge Farmers' Club?—Yes.

566. And you wish to give general evidence as to the ownership and management of estates?—Yes.

567. You say your farm is between 200 and 300 acres in size?—Yes.

568. Is it partly arable and partly pasture?—Yes.

569. Have you laid down any in pasture yourself?—Yes, considerably the last 15 years.

570. What is your average rent?—From 25*s.* to 26*s.*

571. What sort of land is it?—It is on the limestone, light working land, what you may call sheep and barley land.

572. Are the buildings and the cottages pretty good?—They have been greatly improved lately. They were in a bad state for some time, but since the Sanitary Inspector has come round they have been improved very much.

573. Do you consider the rent high or moderate?—I consider for the quality of the land it is a fair rent.

574. You have farmed the land some considerable time, I suppose?—I have been in the same place since the year 1851.

575. What has been the state of business in farming during the last 15 years?—Well it has been very bad the last 15 years.

576. Is there any serious instance which you think you would like to specify?—The labour question is one of the most serious we have had to contend with. When I went to Welsh St. Donatts first I had as good men as could be got in the county of Glamorgan, and I only paid them 10*s.* a week, without house. Now I am obliged to pay them 15*s.* to 16*s.* with a house and garden.

577. Have you a lease of your farm?—No.

578. The usual date for entry is 2nd of February?—Yes, it is.

579. Have you anything to say on the question of tithes?—No, nothing particular. Our tithes average about 3*s.* an acre in addition to the rent.

580. What do you consider the general condition of the tenant farmers in the Vale of Glamorganshire on the whole?—I consider them to be as good as any part I know of anywhere. I do not hear as many complaints in this district as I do in many others.

581. You think it is satisfactory on the whole?—I think so.

582. There are not many complaints about the rents?—No, my Lord.

583. Do you think the rents generally speaking are pretty fair or not?—They are very much lower in many instances since the year 1875, on from 1875 up to the last few years.

584. Have you any idea of a remedy for the agricultural distress?—The only remedy, and I should think the best remedy, would be an embargo upon all agricultural produce that is imported into this country. I think that would be the greatest remedy.

585. You have a leaning towards protection?—I do not see any other way that it can be met now.

Sir John Llewelyn.

586. You know the custom of the country, Mr. Huntley?—I do.

587. Do you consider that it is better or worse than the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883?—Very much better.

588. Is there any land in the district not let?—Not any that I know of.

589. Which do you think let more easily, the larger or smaller farms?—The smaller as there are many more applications for the smaller farms.

590. At higher or lower rent?—At higher rents for the smaller farms.

591. Is that, in your opinion, owing to the increase of competitions?—I believe it is so. There are so many more that have capital to take the smaller farms who could not go into a large farm.

592. That causes the competition for the smaller farms?—Yes.

593. Would it not be partly owing to the fact that there is a larger proportion of expenditure upon buildings upon a smaller acreage than a larger acreage?—Well, there is considerably more.

594. That would naturally be taken into consideration, I suppose, by anyone?—Yes. The landlord would naturally consider that because his per-centage would be so much more to lay out in repairs.

595. That would be a proper item to take into calculation in fixing the rent?—Yes.

596. And as a valuer you would take that into consideration?—Yes.

597. Do you consider that the quality of the labour is as good now as it used to be?—Oh, dear, no. I consider it takes three men to do what it used to take two men to do, at least.

598. Is that in consequence of men not being skilled and accustomed to that particular class of work because of their migration. The best men, as they naturally would, go to the works?—Yes, they do not go into all kinds of work now as they used to. The young man goes up to the hills, and there are only perhaps one or two not much good that will stay in the country.

599. In consequence of that, do you find that the sons of a farmer are in great request to stay at home to do work on the farm?—I do.

600. Do you think they are fairly and properly paid for their labour upon that farm?—I think they are mostly. I know many instances where the sons work the farm and then the father saves sufficient money to put them in farms of their own, one or two at a time as they come of age or it is suitable for them to go away.

601. So that if they were not paid any direct weekly wages they would be paid indirectly in another way?—That is so. I find every new machine brought out is utilised in this district, and very much so. I do not know what the farmers would do were it not for the machinery which has been utilised now lately.

602. What do you say is the average size of farms in the Vale of Glamorgan?—They are about 160 to 180 acres, to take the average.

Mr. Grove.

603. Have there been abatements of rent within your knowledge?—Considerably within the last few years. I have known instances myself of letting a farm 23 per cent. under what it was let before, on the exchange of tenants.

604. That is distinguishing abatement of rent from reduction of rent?—Yes. I think the landlords would do very much better to make an abatement of rent, because when it is only reduction the tenant has to pay taxes on the full amount of the rent, whereas if it is a permanent reduction those rates are lowered accordingly.

605. When these abatements are made, does not the landlord give the tenant previous notice that an abatement is intended?—They have been doing so lately, but it used not to be so. It used to come as a surprise to them.

606. I suppose very often the tenant would have to sell stock or make other arrangements for getting money on purpose to get his rent paid?—I think many of the landlords in this district meet them and give them time if they are not prepared to meet it, rather than that they should sacrifice their stock. I have known many instances where it has been done.

607. I suppose there is no rule in this district that a tenant must offer the whole rent before he gets any abatement allowed?—No.

608. How long is allowed for the payment of rent as to the due date?—Six months as a rule—six to seven as a rule. There is generally one half year's rent in the hand of the tenant.

Mr. Seebohm.

609. Are there many cases in this district in which families have lived for many generations on the farm?—Yes, many.

610. In those cases is there any tradition that in early times there were leases for lives or long leases?—Yes, there are a good many fallen in on the property the last five, six, or ten years.

611. Could you say whether those leases were given up owing to the wishes of the tenant or the wish of the landlord?—It was for lives and they die out.

612. In the old times they would be renewed, would they not?—Yes.

613. How many years ago would it be that that system died out?—I should say it is 50 or 60 years ago since many of those leases have granted because there is not one lease now where there were 20 when I knew it 20 years ago. They are all dying out gradually and the property is reverting back to the original owners.

614. Is it not possible that one of the reasons why that system was given up, was the high price that corn went to in time of the French war?—I have no idea. I have never thought of it in that way.

Mr. Richard Jones.

615. You say that protection is the only remedy which you proffer for the present distress? Do you think it possible to protect the farmers at the expense of other classes and other interests in this country?—No, I do not say that, but I think the farming interest is an interest which ought to be looked to as much as any interest that is going, and I do not know any better remedy than that would be.

616. But we have to consider other interests as well?—Yes, I quite understand that.

617. What do you say is the position of the labourer now compared with 40 or 50 years ago?—I think the labourer was never so well off in his life as he is at present.

618. Supposing we had a system of protection, how would it affect the three classes who live upon the land?—I think they would be able to do very well, under these circumstances, say a shilling a bushel on wheat; it would make but very little difference to his wage for the week.

619. Do you think he would submit to it without protest?—Not very kindly, I suppose.

620. Do you not think that we should have a recurrence of the position of the labourer 40 or 50 years ago, if we put a duty on corn?—No, I do not think it would be anything like that.

621. How would a system of protection affect our export trade?—Well, I do not know.

622. What is the relative standard of comfort among farmers now, to what it was 40 or 50 years ago?—I think they get to work harder, but I think they live better a great deal, and more comfortably. I think he exerts himself a great deal more to make more of things than he used to, and he lives up to it.

Mr. Griffiths.

623. Do landlords advance the rent when putting up new buildings?—No, not as a rule.

624. Are there any abatements made to tenants that have leases?—I do not know of a lease hardly in the district now. I should not think there are half a dozen farm leases in the county at present, very few indeed.

625. Which do you consider the best off, the small tenant farmer's wife or the labourer's wife?—Well, they are about equal now, I think.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

626. I understand you are secretary of the Cowbridge Farmers' Club?—I am.

627. Do the landlords in your district aid the tenants in any way by introducing the best blood for pedigree sires in horses, cattle, pigs, and sheep, suitable for the use of the tenantry at a nominal price?—Yes, at a nominal price many do it.

628. Are there not many sires used which are very unprofitable to the tenants?—There are many, but not near so many as there were some few years ago.

629. Then agricultural shows have done some good?—I think considerable.

630. I know a district where every eight out of ten sires ought to be shot?—Yes, I think so too, but the farmers are beginning to see the folly of using a bad sire now, and are coming round to encourage the better class of horses.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

631. I think you said the labourer is very much better off now than he was 50 years ago?—I believe so.

632. But 50 years takes us back to 1843, does it not?—Yes.

633. The protective system was in vogue then, was it not?—Yes, I suppose it was.

634. Then to what causes do you attribute the improvement in the labourer's position? May I ask you, has the rent of cottages gone down in the last 50 years?—No, they are about the same, but there is a better class of cottage and more comfortable for them to live in.

635. Now?—Yes.

636. As to the wages; have they gone up or down on the whole in the last 50 years?—Oh, gone up considerably.

637. May I ask you generally to what you attribute the improvement in the labourer's position?—To the general improvement in the colliery districts and the iron works.

638. You think that the fact of the demand for labour in the coal districts in this county and in the manufacturing towns in this county has had the result of raising the rate of wages among agricultural labourers?—I think that is the principal reason.

639. The fact that food has gone down in price to some extent, and that clothing has gone down in price to some extent, has something to do with it perhaps?—Well, there is something in that, I suppose, but they have got more money now to spend on their clothing and comforts and things of that sort.

640. To turn to another subject upon which a preceding witness gave some evidence I think, you are in a position, are you not, to produce one of the awards under the Enclosure Act?—I am.

641. Which manor is that?—The manor of Tal y Van.

642. What is the date of that award?—The 28th of January 1863.

643. Can you without looking at the deed tell me—(we are not here as a court of law where the exact words are of importance)—the general effect of the clause in the award as to the allotments?—Yes. In my own parish there were two acres set apart for exercise and recreation ground, and three acres for allotments for labouring poor on which a certain charge of 10*s.* is demanded.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

644. Two acres for the inhabitants of the parish of Pendoylan and Welsh St. Donatts?—Yes.

645. Two acres for those other four parishes?—Yes.

646. What has been done with these recreation grounds now?—Well, they are not made much use of. They are open for recreation if any one goes, but there are very few go there and they have been let out at a nominal rent to pay the ten shillings a year.

647. Let out?—Yes, for grazing. I am one of the trustees.

648. How many are named in the deed?—The churchwardens and overseers for the time being. I happen to have been the churchwarden since that date.

649. When was this recreation ground first of all let out?—Well, it has been very seldom. We thought it better to do that than to charge the poor for the garden ground, and we have just let it for grazing purposes. It is still open for recreation.

650. That is to say, it is not enclosed?—Open for the public, I mean. It is enclosed, a fence put round it.

651. I do not want to suggest that you have been wilfully doing any wrong, but is it within the scope of the trust, do you think, for you to let that ground at all?—I have never thought of that. We thought it better to get a little from that than to charge the poor who had the gardens.

652. Supposing I lived there and I wanted to play cricket there?—You would be quite welcome to go at any time.

653. But you have let it?—We have let it on those conditions, only just the feed of the land, the keep only.

654. What is the cause of what I may call the failure of this recreation ground? Is it really that a recreation ground is not needed by the inhabitants of these parishes, or do you suggest it is inaccessible for the purpose?—It is situated between the two parishes.

655. And I suppose the young men do not care much about going the distance. Do they not play any games, football or cricket, here? Are there no football or cricket clubs there?—No.

656. What is the population of the parish of Pendoylan?—Some 300, and the parish of Welsh St. Donatts is 282, but it is a very scattered parish round.

657. Is there no village there?—Only about five or six houses in the village: it is quite scattered, two or three little hamlets.

658. No complaint has been made by any one as to your letting the land?—Not at all.

659. As to the allotments for gardens, how are they dealt with?—They are apportioned out to about 20 perches to each cottage and then if there is an exchange of tenants in the cottage they generally take on the same piece of land.

660. You give a preference in the allotment of the land to those who are inhabitants there?—Yes.

661. Are there sufficient allotments for all the cottages?—Yes, more than it takes.

662 So that there is no need to ballot for for that or make an arrangement of any kind?—No, there is something like one third of them idle for this year.

663 Why do you think the cottagers do not avail themselves of it?—There are not sufficient labourers. They go away to the hills and they find it cheaper to buy potatoes than to work the land

664. In other parts of the county we find it quite different, so that—pardon my pressing you upon that point — do you mean that the cottagers in these two parishes do not care for the bits of land?—They do; most of the cottagers within convenient distance make use of them.

665. Are the allotments far from the cottages?—About half a mile from some and three quarters of a mile, or something like that, and from Pendoylan they have never made use of them.

666. What is the average size of the allotment?—About 20 perches.

667. What rent do you charge for that?—We have not charged any rent for that. We have made use of the money from the recreation ground to pay the charge.

668. So that many of the cottagers have received an allotment rent free?—They have always up to this time.

669. How long as that been going on?—Since 1864.

670. Is it good land?—No, not very.

671. What do you say about the quality of the land in these parishes?—This happened to be on the common not very good, but after cultivation it will give a fair crop.

672. What wages do you think the men living in these cottages get generally, taking one farm with another?—I should say 15*s.* quite.

673. What does he pay for his cottage?—They generally have them free in addition to the 15*s.*

674 Do you know whether there were any squatters upon the waste of this manor?—Not one, I believe.

675. Who are the chief landowners?—Mr. Charles Aubrey Aubrey is the principal in the manor; he is lord of the manor.

676. Before that time have there been common rights on this waste?—Yes.

677. I mean really exercised?—Exercised by the farmers, and when the common was enclosed it was apportioned according to the acreage of the land that each owner had in proportion to the acreage of his freehold.

678. Was there any opposition to the enclosure?—Not at all. It was reported at one of the annual meetings and sent up to the Commissioners.

679. Your farm is in this parish?—Yes.

680. Was your rent raised in consequence of the enclosure?—No.

681. Were any of the other rents raised?—No.

682. So far as you are concerned all that took place was that a certain portion of the waste was given to you, and you depastured your cattle there, instead of doing it on unenclosed common as before?—Yes. At the same time I made an application and there was an acre given for building a school and an acre for the vicar's house.

683. Were those used?—Yes

684. The school has been built?—It is let out for the benefit of the parish.

685. When you say for the benefit of the parish I am afraid I do not quite understand that?—Well, the clergyman lets it out. It is ready at any time if a school or vicarage house should be built there.

686. Who takes the rents?—It is used for the benefit of the parish generally.

687. That is very vague. What particular fund does it go to?—I cannot say exactly.

688. Are you a churchwarden?—Yes.

689. Who keeps the books?—I do.

690. Who receives this rent actually in cash from someone?—The vicar.

691. What does he do with it?—Oh, give it for the benefit of the church.

692. How does he do it for the benefit of the church? The money is not a benefit to anyone until it is expended in some way or other. What does the vicar do with it?—It is for the benefit of the poor and for the general expenses of the church. It is thrown in with the offertory.

693. The general offertory?—Yes.

694. Do you so enter it in your books from year to year?—I do.

695. Has any complaint been made of that method of dealing with it?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

696. We were talking some time ago about reduction of rent. Do you consider that a temporary reduction of rent is better than a gift of bone or Dutch barn or manure? Which form do you consider the best?—In many instances where the buildings are deficient a Dutch barn, or something of that, I believe, would be better than the rent.

697. My point is this, that partial temporary reduction of rent is only a temporary benefit, and that a gift of bone or manure is a permanent benefit for a certain time?—Yes; I should consider a gift of manure would be a greater benefit: you would get more returns from it in the future years.

698. Both to the landlord and the tenant?—Yes.

699. With regard to the game laws, do you think they are a source of trouble and hardship?—I think not. So far as I am concerned I have the game on my own farm.

700. Does your landlord shoot on your own farm?—He comes occasionally, perhaps once or twice in the year.

701. You do not suffer ?—No.

702. Not from the gamekeeper's trespass ?—No.

703. Have you any difficulty in keeping down the rabbits on your farm ?—No.

704. Have you ever had compensation for damage done by game ?—I have the benefit of the game myself. Then I invite my friends there as I wish.

705. What do you consider the general relations between landlord and tenant—friendly or otherwise, in this district ?—Very friendly in this district—very, I think.

Chairman.

706. You have answered this question before, but it has been handed in, so that I may ask you this question again. What distance are these allotments which were mentioned from the habitations of the people for whom they were intended ?—From the village of Welsh St. Donatts they are about half-a-mile, but from Pendoylan about a mile-and-a-half, I should say.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Rees Thomas called and examined.

Chairman.

707. You are a tenant farmer ?—Yes.

708. What is the name of your holding ?—Boverton Place, Cowbridge.

709. Under whom do you farm ?—Under Lord Wimborne.

710. Is your holding a large one or a small one ?—Between 700 and 800 acres.

711. That is as big a farm as there is in the Vale of Glamorgan ?—Yes.

712. I believe you will give us some evidence as to agreements ?—Yes.

713. Is yours a yearly holding ?—A yearly holding.

714. You have no lease ?—I have no lease, only an agreement.

715. Is that your agreement ?—Yes.

716. Is there anything unusual in that agreement ?—Well, it was done exactly as I wished it to be. I had everything altered to my own wishes, so that I have nothing to say against it whatsoever.

717. Could you give us any rough outline of your agreement with Lord Wimborne ?—I will hand it over and you will see it (handing agreement).

718. Have you seen any considerable change in the method of agriculture or farming in this district during the last few years ? Is there as much corn grown ?—Yes, I think equally as much grown.

719. Has much permanent pasture been laid down ?—There has been the last ten years. I may tell you my own case. I have turned down something like 100 acres of arable land into pasture.

720. Have you anything to say about compensating tenants on leaving a farm ? Have you any experience of that description you can tell us ?—Yes, I have, under the former landlord I was living.

721. Who was that ?—Mr. Rayer. I may as well tell you, gentlemen, how it occurred. In 1884 I was leaving St. Athan and going to Boverton Place. In the usual manner, I engaged a valuer on my behalf; in the course of a week, or something of that kind, the agent of that farm asked me if I had any objection for my valuer to be sole arbitrator. I said no, I had not the least; I had confidence in my man that he would do what was right for both of us, and he was actually appointed sole arbitrator between us. Then the agent asked me what were my claims. He had, by this time, engaged a farm bailiff. I asked him to go down and take a copy of my claims off my books himself. That was done. The arbitrator in the case appointed a day to go down, and we went over the land. Myself and the arbitrator, and the farm bailiff on behalf of the landlord, went over the farm, and I made all my claims in writing, and gave it to the arbitrator. I told the bailiff if he had any objection to make to any item, of course he had to make it, but he never made any objection to one single point that I claimed, and the arbitrator went home. In the course of a few days he happened to meet the agent at a sale, and eventually they went and talked about the valuation. The arbitrator told him it would be an unusual valuation, a very high one; the agent said he could not understand that at all; but the arbitrator said it was so; then after that there were interviews, and here is the copy of the letters the agent wrote to the arbitrator. The result of that was the arbitrator turned round and said he would not value as sole arbitrator, but he would value for me, and the agent was to fix upon another on behalf of the landlord, and they were to fix an umpire between them, and this was the result; we had three arbitrators instead of one. Well, my agreement was a very stringent one under that landlord. I was not to sell any straw, any hay, or any roots, or anything whatsoever but wheat, barley, oats and stock. I remember an instance very well, when I was offered 6*l.* 10*s.* a ton for a rick of hay on the premises. I asked my agent to consent to sell that one, and he said he could not do it. The result was I could not sell it.

722. How long ago was this ?—A few years before I went to Boverton Place. Well, he put it that everything was to be done according to that agreement, in what you may call a model farm. I had it pretty tidy, as the valuer told me. If I had been an untidy man, that agreement I had signed was enough to ruin any tenant. After the deductions that they made against my claims my award was 1,115*l.* 11*s.* When I went out as an out-going tenant, and after all his screwing, he could only secure 18*l.* 15*s.* out of me for all the fences, and all the buildings, leaving everything in tenantable repair, thus:—

No. 1.

Deductions of Landlord.

Nine one-horse loads of straw taken away at 9*s.* per load	4	1	0
Allowance for glass and windows at Rock	1	0	0
11 tons 10 cwt. mangolds at 6*s.* per ton	3	9	0
Claims for fences all over Rock	7	0	0
Allowance for gripping moors	1	5	0

No. 2.

Deductions in respect of Glebe Land.

Deduction for fences	3	0	0

Acreage of Aberthaw and Rock, 453 acres.

Aberthaw	398	0	9
Rock	638	1	9

But there was another point which I wished to make. There was a pill, a brook, or a deep ditch, we may call it, conveying the water. That pool was not cleaned within the memory of man when I left there, but the valuers had to value that, but I am sorry to say I have not the exact figure; I have lost it. But at any rate it was a considerable sum, something between 30*l.* and 40*l.* if I remember rightly. Well, I totally objected to pay that. I said I was not under an agreement to pay that; but, however, when this award was paid over to me this deduction was made out of it, and the result was I had to sue the landlord in the county court for that sum, but before the court day came he paid the sum and all expenses attached to it. You will see in the agreement there was a clause that for every 100 acres of land held we were supposed to make 300 reeds for thatching the cottages in the villages. That was under our landlord. I made my usual quantity, and there was a certain amount of small straw coming out of those by making the reeds,—nine one-horse loads of straw were taken away: I sold that straw because I did not want it. Now they charged me 9*s.* a load because I sold it, and my own straw. Another thing, I took 11 tons 10 cwt. of mangolds to my next farm, my own mangolds. They charged me 6*s.* a ton again upon that. So that they took every halfpenny they possibly could out of me in respect of that as an outgoing tenant.

723. I believe you have prepared a table showing the price of wheat between 1869 and 1893?—Yes; I have worked that out.

Chairman—continued.

I find that—

In 1869 wheat was at	8*s.*	per bushel or	128	per cent. above the present price.
barley	6*s.* 3*d.*	„	87	„
In 1872 wheat	7*s.* 8*d.*	„	120	„
beef	8*d.*	per lb. or	33⅓	„
mutton	10*d.*	„	33⅓	„
In 1875 wheat	6*s.* 6*d.*	per bushel or	95	„
barley	5*s.* 10*d.*	„	65	„
beef	9*d.*	per lb. or	50	„
mutton	11*d.*	„	46	„
In 1877 wheat	7*s.* 3*d.*	per bushel or	106	„
beef	8½*d.*	per lb. or	41	„
mutton	11*d.*	„	46	„
In 1879 wheat	6*s.*	per bushel or	71	„
beef	8½*d.*	per lb. or	41	„
mutton	11½*d.*	„	53	„
barley	4*s.*	„	14	„
mutton	11*d.*	„	46	„
In 1889 wheat	4*s.*	per bushel or	14	„
barley	4*s.*	„	14	„
beef	7½*d.*	per lb. or	20	„
mutton	10*d.*	„	33	„

And this year (1893) wheat is at 3*s.* 6*d.* per bushel.
barley „ 3*s.* 6*d.* „
beef „ 6*d.* per lb.
mutton „ 7½*d.* „

The average loss for the last 23 years on wheat, barley, beef, mutton, and wool, has been 61 per cent.

724. Have you any suggestions of labelling foreign meats or cheese?—No, because my farm is more of an arable farm.

725. Have you anything to say about the repeal of the malt tax?—I have thought of that. Since the repeal of the malt tax barley has been going down in price every year. We have been talking of duty, and I think that if a little duty was put upon imported barley it would relieve us. I think imported barley is not a necessity in this country; it is a luxury, and is very detrimental to us. I have made a note or two: "During the last three or four years the quan-"tity of beer brewed has shown a fair increase, "which one would think would show a corre-"sponding increase in the demand for malt, but "that article is in a lifeless state. Farmers are "urged to grow barley instead of wheat; they "must not look to brewers to increase produc-"tion." Therefore, as well as that, I say every cask of beer should be labelled what it is made of. I had the pleasure some time ago to read a paper before our Farmers' Club on malt and barley, and I found out that beer was made of every possible stuff to be found in the shape of glucose.

Lord Kenyon.

726. What proportion does the arable bear to the grass?—I have 400 of arable and 300 of grass, since I have laid down 100 of pasture.

727. Are you laying down more?—No, I do not intend to lay down more. I find I can keep more stock on the farm as it is now.

728. What is the rent of your farm?—Now about 18*s.* an acre. I have had a considerable reduction.

729. All round?—Yes.

730. Do you happen to know what the rent was about 20 years ago?—I could not say then.

I have only known about the last 9 years of my present holding.

731. Have you any difficulty in getting labour?—No; our labour is pretty plentiful.

732. Is it equally good to what it used to be?—Yes, I do not complain at all.

733. Have you the game?—I have the game.

734. Are the improvements in your district generally done by the landlord? What improvements are done by the landlord?—The landlord as a rule pays for the repairs of the buildings; the tenant has to haul, and the haulage is to be within five miles of his homestead.

735. And as to drainage, does he find the tile?—I have done nothing in my present homestead, but according to the custom of the country we are allowed a certain drainage.

736. And as to fences, does the landlord find you any rails?—Yes, he finds rails.

737. And gates?—Yes.

738. And hangs them?—No, I hang them myself.

739. What is your opinion as to temporary reductions of rent?—Well, my Lord, temporary reductions are not what they should be, because if we get temporary reductions we are not relieved by that as regards rates; we cannot appeal before the Assessment Committee. I urged that upon our agent the last time we had conversation, and by the next audit he made the per-centage a permanent one. Therefore all Lord Wimborne's tenants the last six months have relieved themselves of 10 per cent. from the rates and taxes.

740. Is that fair to the landlord, supposing there was an improvement in agriculture?—Our rent is based upon the prices of different commodities.

741. Is it on a sliding scale?—No, it is not. It is the fluctuation of corn, beef, and mutton.

742. Are the labourers' cottages good in your district?—Very fair, and they have good gardens.

743. Are they able to dispose of their produce?—They do not grow really more than they require for their own families.

744. Do you know of any case in which the labourer has a cow?—Not with us.

745. Can the labourer get milk if he wishes it?—Not without he buys it.

746. He can buy it?—Yes, he can buy it.

747. What do the wages average?—My average wage is 15*s.* a week of those not living in my cottages. Those that are living in my cottages get 14*s.* a week and their houses. To others again, more active, such as the herdsmen and shepherds, I give 14*s.* a week, house, and coal, and in the summer time I put them upon piece-work as much as possible. I mow all my hay by the acre; we have self-binders, and it is cut up and carried by the acre, also hoeing turnips and thrashing hedges, and in fact everything I can.

748. Do you think they like it?—Yes.

749. They make more by it?—Yes, their average wages are 18*s.* to 1*l.*, according to that.

750. And the work is more expeditiously done?—Yes, otherwise I should be in a fog; the more work they do, the more money they get.

751. Do you find any difficulty in getting labour?—No, any amount of labour just now; it was a little scarce a few years ago.

752. Are the general relations between landlord and tenant friendly?—Very good, nothing could be better at the present time with me.

753. Is there any co-operation amongst farmers?—No, quite the reverse, I think.

754. I mean, as regards buying stuffs, or examination of manures?—No, nothing of the kind, so far as I am concerned.

755. You receive no advantage from the Agricultural Society in the district with regard to the analysis of manure or seeds?—I analyse myself. I have three samples ready to go now. Dr. Voelcker is my analyst.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

756. You say the condition of the labourer is fairly prosperous, as I understand it, in your farm and in your parish?—I think the labourers are very well off with us.

757. In what parish are you?—In Llantwit Major.

758. Is there any recreation ground in that parish?—I do not think any.

759. What are the terms on which you ordinarily engage one of the men to be labourer whom you put in your cottage?—By the week.

760. Who furnishes the cottage?—The labourer.

761. If he comes in on one Monday and furnishes the cottage, you can get rid of him at a week's notice, can you not?—Yes, that is the term—a week's notice.

762. Do you think that is being well off?—Very few labourers will remain otherwise with you. They will not tie themselves for a month or twelvemonth to you. If they see they can better themselves, they go off in a week. There are temptations to get up in the hills, which of course they will take advantage of.

763. As I understand, the persons to whom you refer in your parish are people who come and go; they are birds of passage?—They can please themselves.

764. Do they, I ask you?—The labourers I have are with me now these last nine years.

Mr. Griffiths.

765. Do you consider the labourers you employ have sufficient allotments in their own gardens?—Quite as much as they require, and if they had more it would be only neglected by them.

Mr. Grove.

766. A question about railways. Do you think the high charge by the railways is now detrimental to the farming interest?—Very much so. I can give you a local instance. We have had a new railway made from Cowbridge to Aberthaw. They charge on manure 4*s.* a ton from here to St. Athan's Road, a distance of five miles. If we were to pay that rate from Bristol here the railway rates would exceed the value of the manure; in fact, the last lot I had I refused to pay it.

Mr. Grove—continued.

767. What is the distance from Cowbridge to Aberthaw?—Five miles.

768. What is the railway company?—The Taff Vale Railway Company.

769. Have you a copy of the recent publication by the Board of Trade, showing the rates they can legally charge on all the railways in the country?—I have not.

770. This book is only one shilling and can be obtained at the Board of Trade. I do not want to say a word about the Taff Vale Railway Company or any other railway, but that seems to be a very heavy charge. You think this high rate is injuring somewhat the farming interest?—Very much.

771. And on other farm produce?—We have to pay in proportion upon everything. I make it a rule that, when I sell wheat, if it goes by rail, I always make the buyer pay carriage, because they have special rates and can deal better with the company than the farmer can.

772. If you were to convey animals for any long distance, do you find it is dearer now than it was before this railway rate?—No, I do not think it is dearer, but we always consider it excessive. For instance, from here to Cardiff we have to pay 5*s.* a ton upon wheat, and if the foreigner were to pay upon wheat from America and Australia to England at the same rate, wheat would not be so cheap. Therefore we are considerably handicapped.

773. Where do you send to Cardiff from?—From Crowbridge to Cardiff 5*s.* a ton.

774. What is the distance?—About 17 miles.

775. As to the way in which the income tax is made up under the schedule, do you think the right principle is applied in that?—I do not see why a large farm should pay upon Schedule B. more than a small farm, because here are large farms as well as my own, and here they go by father and son, and in that way they escape the income tax; and as brothers they escape the Schedule B. Therefore I think that Schedule B. should be done away with altogether.

776. Will you explain that, because the matter is divided between the father and the son, how do you mean they escape?—That is the reason they do escape; they farm what we call a company.

777. You disagree with the principle on which the income tax is arrived at?—Yes, I do.

778. Is there any co-operation amongst farmers so as to get the proper analysis of manures and feeding stuffs?—No, there is none at all.

779. Is there any attempt to analyse the products of the soil?—I have not heard of any in this neighbourhood.

780. Not any regular system of it?—No. Although it is not a case I am interested in, I have always been very much against the Agricultural Holdings Act, because I think our custom is good enough to carry us on in this county; in one sense it does not go far enough; it does not give us any compensation for land which we have turned from arable into pasture; in that case what we have to do at present is to go to the agent before our time expires and try to make arrangements with him, but in some instances the agents will not have anything to do with the outgoing tenant, and the result is in many cases that land is ploughed up after being in pasture for very, very many years. I will give you a case now in point as regards that; our custom pays us for everything that we possibly can do on the farm as outgoing tenants; that is, if it is done systematically, and the farm being clean. Here is a case in point; a farmer leaving his farm (his name was Thomas Bowen, of Broughton, near Wick); the valuer on his behalf values his claim at 77*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*; the landlord's valuer comes in and claims dilapidations to the amount of 88*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.*; in that case those two parties cannot agree; the result is that there are two lawyers employed, one at each end, one on behalf of the tenant, and the other on behalf of the landlord. In that case the lawyers fix upon an umpire; the umpire fixes the claim of the outgoing tenant at 54*l.* 2*s.*, the counter-claim for dilapidations at 24*l.* 4*s.*, and expenses of arbitration 29*l.* 3*s.*, which leaves the outgoing tenant the handsome sum of 15*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.* So that there the Agricultural Holdings Act comes in, and it half ruins the tenant farmer. It is on behalf of the landlord that the Agricultural Holdings Act is good in this country, and if it was not for that, this outgoing tenant would go out under the custom of the country, and he would be paid everything reasonable as an outgoing tenant.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

781. I think we are all agreed that the costs in the case you mentioned were somewhat excessive. That was a case under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883?—I cannot tell you, because I had nothing to do with it. I have only brought it to show the unfairness of the Agricultural Holdings Act upon the tenant farmer.

782. That was a case in which the machinery of the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883 was followed?—I am just informed by one of the valuers, that it was the umpire who introduced the Agricultural Holdings Act.

783. That is to say, he began the steps mentioned in this Act of Parliament as necessary to be taken for the ultimate enforcement of a claim. As I understand it, you say, and for ought I know you may be right, that the whole thing can be done much more cheaply under the custom of Glamorgan. But supposing no one will obey the valuer, or one party will not appoint a valuer, and the other party does?—It is always the case—the custom compels them to do that—for each party to appoint a valuer, and they fix upon an umpire, and get the outgoing tenant and the landlord to sign an agreement which they cannot withdraw from.

784. As long as men are sensible and reasonable, there is no need to appeal to any court at all; there is, in fact, no need to go to an umpire, if the two valuers will behave like reasonable men and put themselves together, in nine cases out of ten?—In nine cases out of ten they do not.

785. How would the custom help you?—He is bound, according to the custom, to appoint a valuer.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

786. Supposing he does not?—He is bound according to custom.

787. Supposing he does not?—He is bound to appoint.

788. Do not think I am against a custom or otherwise, but I am threshing the matter out. Supposing there is an unreasonable man, who says, "I do not care twopence-halfpenny for your custom," how do you get your money?—In this way; if the landlord does not get a man on his behalf, the outgoing tenant makes a claim and sues him in the county court.

789. Then your idea is, and that I follow, that it is far better to trust to what I may call the common law in the matter than to have this special and elaborate machinery mentioned in the Act of 1883?—Yes, quite so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

790. You said just now you liked the custom better than the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883. You suggested an improvement, and that was in respect of laying down arable land into permanent pasture?—That is so.

791. What remedy do you suggest?—A remedy would be this, to add another clause to our custom.

792. What would be your suggestion?—Here is arable land, for instance. You get full benefit for that permanent pasture for a few years, say two or three, but that in the next ten years it is not of much value to the tenant, but at the same time he is improving the landlord's interest very much by keeping this.

793. Have you thought at all how to word a new clause of custom?—No, I have not thought it, because I have not taken an interest in a valuation as a valuer. I have done a few small cases, but never made it a point to do anything of the kind. That is what I have always urged upon the valuers upon this particular point.

794. You are not prepared yet with a definite remedy?—No.

Professor Rhŷs.

795. You mentioned that you formerly held under a landlord who bound you down under a very stringent agreement?—Yes.

796. Was that the suggestion, do you think, of an agent of experience, or what was it?—I believe it was the agent.

797. Was he a man of experience at the time?—Yes, because he had been farming himself for some years; he is the clergyman of the parish of St. Athan, and was a brother-in-law of the landlord where I lived.

798. May I ask if you have that agreement?—No. I never had an agreement of him, although we had to pay for it. We could only see it when we went to the house to ask him to see it.

799. Can you get us a copy of that agreement?—Mr. Jenkins of Great Frampton says he has one.

800. You are one of the largest farmers in this part of Glamorganshire, and I take it that you are very successful. You know that there is a saying that a Welsh farmer, generally on a smaller scale than you, differs from an English farmer in the way he treats his workmen: the English farmer says to his workmen, "Go and work"—Cerddwch; the Welsh farmer says Dewch—"Come and work?—Quite right.

801. Have you had any practice in farming work: could you take up a spade or shovel, could you plough and show how it should be done?—I can take anything, from a spade to a steam engine; there is no one can show me anything about a farm that I do not know; I know how to do everything upon a farm.

802. I forget whether you have already been asked about shows and ploughing matches and things of that sort?—Yes.

803. Have you ever taken any part in them?—I always won when I competed.

804. How often might that be?—In ploughing I won three champion prizes and I had Horsby's, Howard's, and Ransom's, men against me. In sheep shearing I met 20 Englishmen at Llanishen, Cardiff, and I won the champion prize, which was open to all England. There was again a prize given to those that mowed a piece of ground best with the machine; I won that on two occasions. On my present farm I am working steam tackle; otherwise it would be very difficult to cope with a large farm without it at the present time. That is the only one in the country.

Chairman.

805. There is a question put by Mr. Vincent. Will you say that the practice as to repairs and improvements as described by you is general in the district?—That is in regard to buildings and haulages.

806. Repairs and improvements?—Yes, I think it is general. I do not know that the distance is as according to our agreement, but generally speaking the landlord makes the buildings and the tenants do the haulage. That is general throughout the county.

Lord Kenyon.

807. Can you give a table of your piece-work wages for information to the Commission?—Yes, I can give you it very well. I will send it. (See Appendix.)

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Morgan called and examined.

Chairman.

808. I believe you are a tenant farmer?—I have been a tenant farmer all my life, but lately I have retired.

809. You have been a tenant farmer for 50 years?—Yes.

810. Where do you reside now?—Colhugh Villa, Llantwit Major.

811. Have you lived there all your life?—No, but I have been very near there. I have been for 38 years under the same landlord.

812. You are a representative of the Tenant Farmers' Committee, and you are prepared to give evidence under the head of occupation?—Yes.

813. What is the usual date of entering in your district?—It is counted from Lady-day generally.

814. Are farms let on leases, or from year to year?—Generally from year to year. There are very few leases.

815. There is no great demand for leases?—No, there is not.

816. Have changes in tenancies become more or less frequent than in former years?—I believe so.

817. To what cause do you attribute that?—To the depression of the agricultural produce mostly, and it may be that the landlords feel that they cannot make the abatements which the tenants should fairly expect from their hands. Under the circumstances they are obliged to give the land up and then they let the land, and for less money than they were let to the old tenants.

818. Do you know many cases of hardship that have arisen?—Yes, I believe I do. If you will allow me I will state this case, I will just make my statement and you can see the agreement afterwards.

819. Are you prepared to give the names?—Yes, I have no objection. Here is the agreement.

820. I think we had better have now the cases of hardship?—I shall mention a farmer that took a farm in 1842.

821. Can you give us his name?—Thomas Morgan, myself, under the Nash Manor, within two miles of this town. We went on all right at first, and ten years after I went there we had a very heavy lot of clay, wet land, and we could not make it good. I made a proposal to the landlord to drain it. He was quite prepared to give me money to drain it, and I should pay 5 per cent. on the outlay, and to provide as little as possible to swell the rent. I was to do the haulage of all the materials to the drains and spreading this out again to get it level after. Then the money laid out was only to cut drains and put the stones and pipes in. We did that, and we were at it for years until we spent somewhere about 300*l.* At the time when we finished, which was about six years before there was a change of landlord, I asked him if he would grant me a lease upon the land for fear something might happen to his life or myself, to give me some security for my share that I had taken in the work and the expenses. He said he would willingly, that he would grant me a lease, but he advised me not to take it on the ground that he would take care that I should keep the farm as long as I should want it because also restrictions would be made perhaps a great deal different in the lease than what it was in my agreement. I found it would be so. Then I agreed to let it remain as it was. Unluckily he died after I had been there 30 years. During that 30 years I fenced and made two pools. I made one myself, and another pool I sunk and had the haulage of all the materials over a mile or a mile and a quarter distance. He paid the masons for that and about 40 acres that were drained, which came to some amount of money. At the end of 30 years he died. Then I had a new landlord, and it went into the hands and under the management of a trustee. After that he gave me notice in two years to raise my land 40 per cent. on my own improvements. Before I took it my farm was let to a substantial tenant, who gave it up for want of repairs, and I took it because I was a young man and had a wife, and I was obliged to get a living. I stuck to it, and after I had been there 30 years I had this notice to raise the rent, and they raised it 32 per cent. before I should be allowed to keep it. I would not keep it very long. I could not agree to that. I could not suffer myself to be on a place where I thought I was very much wronged. I went from there to Monkton, where I pay 600*l.* rent.

821*a.* In resuming the occupation of a field or plot out of a holding for the sake of planting, building, or for other purposes, do owners generally serve their tenants with proper notices for the purpose of granting them compensation?—He took from me five acres and he never gave me a penny.

822. If damage is done to the land in timber cutting is the tenant compensated?—A little of that was done with me and nothing was allowed.

823. If any mining, brickfields, quarries or other industrial operations have been commenced on land in your occupation has the rent been readjusted or compensation granted in consequence?—There was nothing of the kind on my farm.

Sir John Llewelyn.

824. Have you a copy of your agreement?—Yes.

825. Did you consider that any of the clauses were oppressive?—Yes.

826. Will you tell me which they are?—Those that I have underlined.

827. "The landlord reserves to himself the "power of taking at any time any portion "of land for planting or for the purpose of any "other improvements, allowing to the tenant "a proportionate deduction from the rent for "every acre or part of an acre so taken. And "it is hereby declared that this present writing "contains the whole of the agreement and under-"standing between the parties hereto with re-"spect to the premises demised without regard to "reference to any local or other customs?"—Yes.

828. Was this an arrangement with your old landlord or with the subsequent trustee?—With the subsequent trustee.

829. You do not complain of your tenure under the original landlord?—No.

830. But after his death you had a stringent agreement with the trustee?—More stringent by far.

831. And if I follow your evidence you found yourself with a rent raised 32 per cent.?—Yes.

832. That you felt to be an injustice?—Yes, and besides that there was a difference of 32 per cent. in money and taking away five acres of plantation without allowing anything for that as well.

833. That you naturally would consider to have been detrimental?—Yes, I thought so.

834. In fact, the words you used were that you considered yourself to be wronged?—Yes.

835. What is the amount of money that you yourself considered that you had laid out. I understand you say that part of the drainage was found by the landlord?—I consider I spent over 100*l.* When I took the farm there was no shed there for any shelter for any beasts. I first paid 100*l.*, and that would be only about 100 acres of land, but before my landlord died I had about 180 acres and paid about 205*l.*, and then for nothing it was raised to 220*l.* and they were taking the land away as well.

836. What was the amount of your rent?—205*l.* if I remember now. That agreement which I had at first I destroyed and many other agreements which I had with him at the same time.

837. Can you tell me whether that rent was fixed at a gross sum or at any particular amount per acre?—Well it is a gross sum taking into consideration how many acres I had, but whether it was more or less that was the rent that we fixed upon.

838. Can you speak of the neighbouring estates, whether there was a uniformity in the rents of land of similar quality in the neighbourhood?—I think in that parish they were very fair.

839. Are the smaller tenants rented higher per acre than the large farms?—Yes, they are. There are more applications for small farms than for big ones.

840. And taking it all round at what would you put the rent per acre in your neighbourhood?—The land was so very much different, but it was from 15*s.* to 35*s.* that was grass land at 35*s.*

841. Would you average it at 25*s.*?—I suppose we could.

842. You tell me it varies between 15*s.* and 35*s.*?—Yes, I think it would be so.

843. Have you any commons in your neighbourhood?—There are no commons.

844. Are there any services other than the payment of rent?—No, no other service.

Professor Rhŷs.

845. Is the rent fixed on the basis of a valuation or by proposal followed by private treaty?—I believe by private treaty and mostly to the highest bidder

846. In that case is the holding practically let to the highest bidder?—Yes, mostly, I think.

847. Does that result in what is called a fair rent being fixed?—No, you cannot call that a fair rent, it would be accommodation rent very often.

848. But the amount of the capital of the proposed tenant has doubtless to be taken into consideration?—It ought to be.

849. Do you think it is?—Not always, certainly.

850. What other considerations do you think enter into it?—Take the land at the price and run the risk without any consideration of price.

851. Does the consideration of the capital of the tenant have much to do with it at all?—No, I do not believe it does.

852. What considerations then enter into the selection of a tenant?—I cannot give you an answer for it. I am not prepared to give an answer, but I believe it is let mostly to the highest bidder without taking much into consideration what capital he has to take the undertaking. I am under that impression.

853. Have you known arbitration resorted to as a means of settling or readjusting the rent?—I do not know of any.

Mr. Grove.

854. Have rents been raised generally during the last few years?—Yes.

855. Have there been any permanent reductions?—I do not know of any, but I have heard there is, although I am not certain. The only estate I have heard where there has been a permanent reduction is Lord Wimborne's, but whether that is right or not I do not know. Mr. Thomas gave it in his evidence. It is only abatement; there are many give abatement from 5 to 15 per cent., I should say.

856. And the landlords generally, I suppose, have given these temporary abatements?—I am afraid not.

857. In many cases?—In some cases no doubt.

858. Half in some cases?—Upon that I should not like to give an opinion.

859. You say from 5 to 10, or 15 per cent.?—Well, I do not know. I have not heard of more—I cannot say I have heard of more.

860. When that abatement is made is a notice given by the landlord beforehand?—I have seen it and sometimes the tenants only know at the time when they are going to pay the rent.

861. If rents are raised or reduced is there a general revaluation on purpose to get new figures?—No, it is only just as it comes into the mind of the agent, I believe, or the landlord. They put it before the tenant and they try to come to terms, and, if they fail, I believe, then there is a notice given. I believe they try that game first and then if it fails, the tenant has to look for another farm.

862. What time do they give you for the payment of rent after it comes due?—From four to six months. I do not know of any case longer than that.

Mr. Seebohm.

863. You stated that the agreement which was handed in was imposed upon the death of the previous landlord?—Yes.

864. Was the same form of agreement used throughout the estate?—I believe it was.

865. Were there a good many tenants?—I daresay from 40 to 50 tenants. I believe the biggest farm was about 240 acres, and then it comes down to a few acres.

866. Then about the charges on land. Have you anything to say with regard to them: the tithe, land tax, and chief rent and local rates? Is there any hardship with regard to these?—The tithe is paid by the landlord, but is reclaimed again at the next audit by most of the agents. I know one or two who pay the tithe themselves and perhaps half the rates.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

867. Do you think a division of the local rates between the landlord and the tenant is a fair, equitable arrangement?—I do not think that the landlord pays any local rates.

868. Would you think it would be a good thing to do, to divide the rates, of course with an adjustment of rent?—So far as that would go of course it would help the tenant, but I do not believe that would be sufficient in these days to meet the times that the tenant is having under it.

869. Have the local rates on the whole increased during the last 25 years?—Yes, they average somewhere about 20 to 25 per cent.; they made it out according to the Committee that was appointed, to endeavour to go into this matter. It may not be my opinion exactly, but at the same time I went the same way with them very nearly although not exactly.

870. Is it true that although the education rate and the highway rate is increased the poor rate has gone down?—No, I could not say that.

871. Then what do you say is the average size of farms in this district?—I say a farm of 240 to 250 acres is an ample farm for any man to manage beneficially to his own self. Of course it may be in a man's favour to say that he can manage more, but at the same time I believe by giving him much more he deprives other families from having a beneficial livelihood. I say about 240 to 250 acres is sufficient for any man to look after and not to leave anything waste one end when he is at the other. A farmer must pay attention to all parts of his farm to make it pay.

872. Would a man with a family be able to conduct a farm of 250 acres without assistance from outside?—Yes, if his family is large enough, because he does not then require to pay so much for labour.

873. Would he be able to do the whole without much labour from outside?—Oh, no.

874. If it was a pasture farm perhaps he would?—No, he could not; he must have some labour. He has a lot of work to do with his cattle and sheep and with everything.

875. Has there been much consolidation of farms here?—There may have been some years ago, but not now lately.

Mr. Richard Jones.

876. One question on the charges of land. Do you say the charges on the land have increased 25 per cent.?—Yes, that is what they made out it was.

877. Who has borne that increase, the tenant or the landlord?—The tenant.

878. Do you think it would be advantageous to the tenant to have the rates divided between the landlord and the occupier?—Yes, certainly, it would be so far as that would go, but I do not say that is sufficient.

879. What has been the effect of consolidation on production?—I do not think there is much difference.

880. And in point of labour?—There is less labour when there is a consolidation of farms. A man could do with less labour and cheaper because he will have just the same amount of implements to work, you may say, 100 acres and 120 acres as 220 or 250. Then he has men to do everything with everything at his command if he has say 200 or 300 acres, which he has not perhaps at all times when the farm is smaller.

881. What has been the effect on rent?—The rent is higher on the small as compared with the large undertakings.

882. And the population and inhabited houses?—That is growing less. In the town where I live now not less than 18 houses have been thrown down the last three years or cottages the labourers used to live in; they go to the works or elsewhere.

883. That causes a deficiency of labouring men?—It causes a deficiency of good skilled men, but not of some sort. There are plenty of some sort, but good skilled men are growing scarce in that place, and I know it too because there are complaints.

884. Do you know of farms being cut up into small divisions?—No.

885. What are the relative effects of small and large holdings respectively on their occupiers as to their practical skill in farming? Which are the best class of farmers, large or small?—Large ones have the better chance, but I do not believe after all they are a better class of business men than the smaller ones, only that the practical skill can develop better when you have a big farm.

886. Which are able to tide over a period of depression best, the small or large farmers?—I will give you the opinion of the committee that small farmers have the better chance. The opinion of the committee is that small farmers have a better chance of tiding over hard times.

887. Because their children work on the farm?—Yes.

888. The consequence is that these children do not get paid for their services?—Oh, no, they do not get anything. I paid no wages to my children.

889. A little pocket money when they go to the fairs, I suppose?—Yes, that is all. I am one of 12 children brought up on a farm, and I have brought up 10 children myself on a farm, and then, of course, I did not require much labour at one time, and that was an advantage to me to enable me to rise from a small farm and to have a bigger farm.

890. When you were farming that farm and having to pay for the labour could you pay for that farm?—I did pay for it before my children rose up, and I did not make anything more, but when they grew up I made something better. Is that a satisfactory answer for you?

891. Do you think you could pay for it now?—I think not.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

892. I want to ask you a few questions. Did you have any agreement in writing when you took the farm first of all?—Yes.

892*a*. Have you got that?—No, I have not.

893. When the landlord to whom you referred died how was it that the new arrangement was come to. Was a notice to quit given to you or a notice to increase the rent sent to you, or did they meet you first of all to talk over matters?—The new trustee gave us notice all round first of all to make us tenants he said of the trustees at once after the land came under his management, and within 18 months or so after he gave notice again to everybody. He thought I have not the least doubt, that they could bear any rise. He gave them notice to raise the rent again, and so we had to raise it. Then they had those notices. One had to go because he could not pay. Another died, and I do not know whether they broke that up.

894. I think you told us this before or part of it?—Perhaps I did.

895. I was rather on the method, was there simply a notice given to increase the rent so much?—No, it was a notice to quit, and when I went to see him I told him I had a notice from him, and he said yes, and I said, "What is the meaning of it?" He told me he thought my farm was worth more money than I was paying for it. "Well," I said, "if it is, I made it so." I had laid down three fields of 20 acres in permanent grass. He knew the land as well as myself. I went over it and told him that I had to make pools for three different fields and another pool he knew and the haulage I had done for it, and all the drainage I made as well with his brother. I paid interest to his brother for the capital he laid out, and therefore I told him I believed that was sufficient rise for me to pay for the loan of the capital, because it was increasing the value of his land, and by doing so I ought to keep that farm.

896. Ultimately you signed a fresh agreement on a printed form?—I did. The first agreement was on a printed form.

897. That is the printed form you have put in?—Yes.

898. Did you raise any objection to the clauses?—Yes, I made an objection to the clauses at the time and also afterwards.

899. I want to call your attention to several of these clauses, and to ask you a few questions about each of them. I see that here you are "to pay your rent without any deduction for "tithes, rentcharge, county road rate, or on any "other account whatsoever except for property "tax." Did you consider that oppressive?—I not know that I did.

900. That is usual, is it not?—I think it is.

901. Is there any land tax on this estate?—No, it is redeemed.

902. "The tenant is to keep gates and fences "in good repair, and to do all the haulage for "other repairs when called upon by the landlord "so to do." Is that a usual clause?—I do not know. What I considered was oppressive in it was that he could command me to haul at any time for the improvement of the farm whether I went out of it or not.

903. To do all the haulage for all the other repairs?—Yes.

904. Do you know whether that clause is used in this part of the world at all in written agreements apart from this written agreement?—I know I have seen other agreements in which that clause is included without paying any interest.

905. You have underlined the next clause, "The tenant shall feed, consume, and expend on "the premises demised, all hay, straw, turnips, "and other produce, and the manure grown "and made therefrom." Is that a usual clause?—I do not know exactly about that, but I thought it was a great hardship for me to pay perhaps from 20*l.* to 30*l.* a year for bone manure to go to the land to improve the crops, and I should not have the benefit of selling any produce from the crops for which I had bought the manure.

906. Was this in the old agreement?—That was not in the old agreement.

907. The next is that you are not to "assign "or underlet any part of the premises or plough "any pasture land without the consent in writ-"ing of the landlord." As to the mere assigning and underletting, that is a common clause enough?—Yes.

908. What do you complain about it?—I do not know that I complain now.

909. Do you object to ploughing the pasture land?—That is quite right.

910. You do not object to that?—No.

911. The next is as to the order of crops. Is there anything wrong about that?—Yes.

912. Is that a usual clause?—I cannot say.

913. "The tenant shall not grow any two "successive white crops without the intervention "of some green crop to be grazed and fed on the "land, except by leave in writing from the land-"lord so to do"?—Yes, I think that is too much, that I should have to ask my landlord what I should put in the land. If I did not know what to do with it then I should not be there at all. I think I should grow if I chose, occasionally, when it was wanted, without asking him, a crop of wheat and a crop of barley, instead of as put there.

914. Is it a usual clause? Have you seen any other agreements in this neighbourhood?—It may be, but at the same time I cannot say.

915. The next clause you have underlined is: "The tenant shall not at any time lime to a "greater extent than 35 cranocks of lime per "acre, and shall not be at liberty to lime at all "the last year of his tenancy should he receive "notice in writing from his landlord not so to "do?"—I consider that arbitrary. Why should I keep my horses and my men in that way? I do the thing every year—that is, liming. Why should not I do it the last year as well as some other year if I do it for the benefit of the farm? It would be a benefit for the new tenant to have it on the same conditions when I leave.

916. Is it usual or unusual?—I think it is unusual.

917. Was it in the old agreement?—Oh, no.

918. Another clause underlined is: "All game, "rabbits, fish, and wild fowl are reserved to the "landlord, with liberty at all times by himself "or his servants to take or pursue the same on "or over any part of the premises." That is usual, is it not?—Well, it may be, but is it fair?

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

I call it unfair that the keeper should have a right to come over my land, go into my clover, and go into my wheat and my barley, to look for eggs or pheasants or anything at any time of the year when the crops are in the field, and I have no chance to stop it.

919. Let us thresh this out a little bit. This is a license which the landlord reserves to himself. If the license is used excessively you have your remedy?—I have no remedy because I have agreed he should have it.

920. He only reserves to himself a license to go upon the land. That being construed reasonably seems to me not to extend so far as you are now suggesting?—If I put that remedy in force against my landlord he would take another remedy to meet me.

921. That is to say, that whatever your legal rights may be, seeing you are only a tenant from year to year, under this it would be awkward for you to make any representations to the landlord?—Yes, because I should have a notice to leave.

922. Then you have underlined the next clause: "The landlord reserves to himself the "power of having at any time any portion of "land for planting, or for the purpose of any "other improvements, allowing to the tenant a "proportionate deduction." What is the objection to that?—It may be that he would take some of the best land from the best field I have, and allow me what I was paying for the other.

923. Have you seen a clause to the same effect usually in these agreements?—Yes; it is usually inserted.

924. Was it in the old agreement?—No, it was not. My old agreement was very short and very simple. It simply mentioned the number of acres and the fields, and the amount I pay, without any restriction. I know I was not to plough any of the old pasture lands without his consent.

925. This being a tenancy from year to year, the landlord might, by giving you notice to quit the whole land, practically secure to himself any portion that he wanted?—Yes, exactly; he may do it if he chooses to do it. At the same time I consider it would do me a hardship in this way, that he should have the power, without giving me notice, whether I should like it or not, to take the land from me.

926. There is a proportionate deduction in the rent?—Yes. That is what I paid for my farm, whether he took some of the best or some of the worst.

927. The words that you really complain of are these words, apart from the general complaint of the inconvenience that you would have to take back this land without notice: "a pro-"portionate deduction from the rent for every "acre." You think if he did take any part of the land that the question of the quality of the land ought to be taken into consideration in estimating the deduction from the rent?—Yes.

928. Then another clause underlined is:—"The landlord reserves to himself all timber, "stones, and minerals, together with the right "by himself or servants of at all times entering "in, upon, or over any portion of the said "demised premises for the purpose of cutting "down, quarrying, mining, and carrying away "the same respectively, or for any other pur-"pose whatsoever during the continuance of "the tenants holding"?—I object that he should go over this land at any time in the year when I had crops there without paying damage for it.

929. In saying that this clause is oppressive, I understand you assume that upon the true construction of the clause the landlord might go anywhere?—Yes, exactly; at any time.

930. In fact exercise the power quite unreasonably and to the damage of the crops and other interests?—Yes, exactly.

931. Has it occurred to you that possibly the clause does not mean what you are now suggesting?—I do not know, but at the same time it is open to that.

932. The last two clauses I see you object to also. I see the agreement excludes the operation of any local custom including the custom of Glamorganshire?—Yes.

933. And also the operation of the 38 & 39 Vict. c. 92.?—Yes, and includes all claims.

934. Why was it that so competent a farmer as you were you signed such an agreement as this?—I cannot tell you. At that time, if I remember right, farms were rather scarce, and I had a large family, and I could not go out without I did know where to go.

935. You had been there many years?—Thirty-eight years before I gave that notice. I told him there and then I should take the first opportunity I had a chance open to give the farm up, and also I was at the same time leaving my labours and a lot of what I had laid out for the benefit of somebody else.

936. Was there an agent for this or did you see the landlord or the trustee?—He was agent himself—he was acting for himself.

937. What was the acreage of your farm?—From 170 to 180 acres about, I believe.

938. Was it rented at about 1*l.* an acre?—A little above 1*l.* an acre. I think about 25*s.* So far as I remember now it was 25*s.* That was the rent under the agreement there.

939. You said you thought that farms were as a rule let to the highest bidder?—Yes.

940. And totally irrespective of capital?—I believe so. There is no doubt that that is not sufficiently taken into consideration.

941. Surely the landlords look after their own interests better than that, to let a farm to a man without capital who says he will pay a high rent?—I know farms that are advertised, where you have to send a letter, and if you apply for the farm you must send a tender of what you will give for it.

942. If a man has no capital and pays a high rent it merely means that he farms for a year and then leaves—he is broken at the end?—We find them take them with very little capital and run the risk of keeping them, and if they be lucky to get a harvest and get the crops and dispose of them they gain something. A man with no capital has nothing to lose, but he may gain.

943. Who is the greatest loser in the end?—That is another question. That is for the landlord to look at.

944. You said you objected to being tied down to any particular course?—Yes; I think the farmer should have more freedom.

945. Surely it is usual to be tied down to some recognised course?—It may be, but at the same time whether it is good or not I say not.

946. Supposing you were to give notice and you were not bound to any recognised course, would not that be detrimental to the farm?—Yes; and the outgoing tenant would have to pay for his bad farming. If I left the farm in a dilapidated state I should run the risk of paying a fine for doing so, because the valuers would take into consideration that I had made the farm of less value than it ought to be. Therefore, it would be deducted out of the bill of the incoming tenant.

947. Would you not consider that a recognised course of agriculture was a good course?—I do not mean to say no, but I do not agree when we are tied.

948. I only want one answer. Would you consider that a landlord has a right to have his farm treated according to what he considers a good course looking at his estate as a whole?—Certainly he has.

949. He could not make individual exceptions in his agreements?—Well, I do not know why he should put it that you are not to rise two crops, because that is not much; if he had put three or four that would be different—two crops of white after you have a green crop.

950. Surely if you had seen the agent and objected to a clause like that for one particular year and for some particular reason, that clause would have been set on one side; do not you agree to that?—Very likely it would.

951. As a safeguard to the landlord I think it was reasonable that some such clause should be in to prevent what I may call farming out?—It may be, but I think the man who is a practical farmer will take care that he himself when he is in the farm will not farm so as to injure the farm, because he would be the sufferer himself.

952. Then you objected to the landlord taking a certain number of acres, or having such a clause for the sake of the plantation? You said he might take the best?—Exactly.

953. Do you think a man ought to damage his own farm by taking away the best part?—He may. I believe I know of a case where the landlord has taken the best plot on the farm even for game. I should not like to mention it, but I have heard it upon very good authority.

954. You have had some land taken off your farm—five acres?—Yes.

955. Was that the best land on your farm?—No, it was not. He took from an acre and a half to two acres of the best of the land, and another portion he took about three acres, which was not the best.

956. You said your rent was considerably raised?—Yes.

957. And you thought the reason was because you had improved it, and it could pay more rent through your improvements?—Yes.

958. Did the tenant who followed you remain upon the farm?—He is there still.

959. And does he still pay the same rent?—I do not know, but he had 5 or 10 per cent. back this last time.

960. You think the rent was about 25*s.* an acre?—It was high. The farm would not let at 35*s.*, but I say 35*s.* may be given, but not for any farm.

961. That would be an extreme limit—between 15*s.* and 35*s.*?—There was a farm let at 32*s.* or 34*s.* free without tithes and rates, that was adjoining the forest.

962. Your farm was let at a low rent before?—No, it was not.

963. Not too low?—No. The fact is, that a farmer who took it before I took it was an experienced farmer, but because the landlord would not lay out 200*l.* in improvements on the house and the buildings he would not keep it, and that is the way in which it happened to come to me. I was just newly married and we thought we could live upon it, and I took it as a place for myself and my wife to go to. Then I stuck to it and tried to improve it, and did improve it, and was there 30 years. After that 30 years when I had a little dispute I did nothing to improve the farm, but I kept it as it was before.

Mr. Grove.

964. You hold your farm now yearly? It is a yearly taking?—I live now only in a small cottage and one field. I have retired from farming entirely.

Chairman.

965. I have two questions, one of them from Mr. Vincent. Have any of the stringent clauses in your agreement been insisted upon, or is your complaint against the possible construction of the agreement?—It was not, only I took care that everything in my agreement was substantiated in my way of doing it. I know of cases when the tenant opposite, who was a neighbour of mine, left after me, and because he did neglect to carry out some of the agreement he had to suffer.

966. There is another question from the same quarter. Can you mention any specific estates in Glamorganshire, on which you believe the rent is determined by the highest bidder?—No, I cannot take an estate; I do not know of any estate. Letters have gone out to applicants for the farm, and the return came, and then it was let to the highest bidder.

Re-examined, 25,867.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. R. Thurston Bassett called and examined.

Chairman.

967. You are a master of fox hounds?—I am.

968. And a landowner?—Yes.

969. And you live at Crossways, near Cowbridge?—Yes.

970. You are deputed to give evidence by the Farmers' Club, I understand?—Yes, I am.

971. You wish to speak to ownership and game preserving?—Game preserving and the general condition of the farming population.

972. Shall we take the game preserving first?—Yes. I should like to say that I am the only landlord selected by the Farmers' Club to give evidence on this Commission. I am not here of my own seeking. In fact, I was in London when my name was selected, and I declined, at first, to give evidence when I was told I should be asked to do so; but I was very much pressed by the tenant farmers of the club to come here, and I thought it would be ungracious on my part not to assist men I am mixed up with in more ways than one, and try to assist them to the best of my ability.

973. What do you wish to tell us about the game preserving?—This is not a game preserving country at all. Game is very scarce, except in two or three places. I should say I shoot the greater part of the county. I go out to most places, and if 200 pheasants are killed, we consider it a very good day indeed. With regard to hares, there are no hares in the country, except in three places. I can mention Lord Windsor, and Lord Dunraven have a few at a place called Coity, and a tenant farmer has the largest number of all at a place called Sully, where, I believe, they are preserved for coursing. There are, no doubt, a great many rabbits in some places, but I think in those places they are generally wired in and a warren is made. Where there are many on other farms I consider it entirely a question between the landlord and the tenant. I may mention that prior to last year I occupied the position of land agent for 10 or 12 years, and I had a good deal of experience in game and the management of game. I found during my experience that most farmers availed themselves of the Ground Game Act. Those who availed themselves of the Ground Game Act we did not compensate, and those who did not do so we compensated, and I never had any bother with them at all. I think I may say I satisfied their claims to the fullest extent.

974. We understand that there is no damage to speak of done by game to the crops and pasture of the tenant farmers?—Certainly not by game. There may be by rabbits.

975. How are you off for foxes?—There are plenty of foxes, and they assist very materially in keeping down the rabbits.

976. Not much wire?—A good deal of wire.

977. Any barbed wire?—I am afraid so.

978 That is all you wish to say about the game?—Yes; that is all, I think. I think the tenants wish me particularly to speak on the general head No. 6, the condition of the farming population, and especially as to the tenants' farms and their mode of life.

979 We have thrashed that out pretty well, about the children working, and the condition of the tenant farmers and their wives?—I am sure the vale of Glamorgan has greatly to thank the fathers of the present generation for the way in which they brought up their sons. I am sure if the tenant farmers' sons did not cultivate the soil as they have done we should be in the same plight as you are in a great many parts of England.

980. Your opinion is that the condition of agriculture is fairly satisfactory?—Yes, I think so; and that is one of the great reasons of it that the tenant farmers' sons do a very vast amount of work, and in a very superior manner too.

981. And, so far as you see, the rents are not excessive?—No; I should say not.

982. And, as a whole, the feeling between landlord and tenant is very satisfactory?—Yes. I should like to say that there have been permanent reductions on the estates I have had the management of.

983. Which estates are those?—The estates of Captain Homfray, of Penlline Castle, and on the estate of Mr. Geo. W. Tyler and on my own estate there have been permanent reductions.

984. We have heard in evidence that on the estates of Lord Windsor, Lord Dunraven, and Lord Wimborne there have been reductions?—Yes; as high as 20 per cent. I believe Lord Wimborne has sometimes given back as much as 25 per cent.

985. Given back; not permanent?—No; abatements I am talking of.

986. We understand you to say there has been no permanent reduction?—Yes; there has been permanent reduction on the estate where I had the management. Where I thought the rent was excessive, then I gave a permanent reduction; but where I thought the rent was fair and the times might mend, and there was no need of making a permanent reduction they had an abatement, so that we could go back to the old rents if times did change.

987. There has been nothing like the one quarter per cent. of reduction such as has been made in Lincolnshire?—Oh, no.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

988. You have been good enough to speak with regard to game preserving in this district. As I understand it, you do not think it is a cause of much dispute between the landlord and tenant?—I do not think so. I do not hear much about it.

989. Do you sit at Petty Sessions?—I do.

990. Can you tell me whether offences against the game laws are common at your Petty Sessions?—Not more than other Petty Sessions. No; I think they are rather uncommon; we are generally employed with breaches of the Sunday Closing Act and the School Board.

991. You can answer the question; what proportion are the offences against the game laws to other offences, say against property; you say a small per-centage?—Yes; but I should not like to say, because I really do not know. I should not think there were half a dozen breaches of game laws in six months; certainly not.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

992. I think you said you came here at the request of the tenant farmers?—I did.

993. Are you a member of the Farmers' Club?—I am.

994. How is it that you, a landlord, are a member of that club?—There are many landlords members of it.

Re-examined, 36,029.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Edmund Lewis called and examined.

Chairman.

995. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

996. Where do you live?—At St. Mary Hill Court.

997. You are one of the representatives of the Farmers' Club?—Yes.

998. You wish to give evidence as one of the spokesmen of the Farmers' Club?—Yes. I may say that according to the arrangements made, I and Mr. Akers were to have spoken on occupation principally. That was the arrangement.

999. You wish to speak on cultivation of the land?—I have no special knowledge of that, and I do not see any utility, therefore, in my speaking upon it.

1000. Kindly tell us what part of the occupation question you would like to speak to?—If you would follow the syllabus there are many questions here that I have no great interest in.

1001. We have many witnesses yet to come, and we do not want to go all over the ground again. Is there anything particular you wish to speak to?—I may mention fluctuation in prices.

1002. What have been the chief fluctuations in prices affecting rent within the last 50 years?—I may say from my own local knowledge, I very much agree with the evidence tendered by Mr. Rees Thomas, and I do not know that I have very much to add to that. Besides that I have looked at a few statistics from other sources, which agree very much with my own local knowledge, that is notably, some evidence offered by a Mr. Clay, of Yorkshire, before the Central Chamber of Agriculture. He compared the prices of 1871 against 1891, and he took the principal articles of produce, in wheat for instance, between the two years. There was a fall of 2*s.* 7½*d.* in wheat per bushel; in barley again, 1*s.* 2*d.* per bushel; oats, 9¾*d.* per bushel; beans and peas, 10*d.* per bushel; meat generally 2*d.* per lb.; wool 11½*d.* I think those are fair comparisons between the two years, although there have been fluctuations more or less in the interval between that time; that is to say, the produce has been higher and perhaps lower within some of the last years. He estimates a loss per annum of 77½ millions in agricultural produce, from the united loss on all those articles of farming produce, and he further puts the depreciation in stock at 64,000,000*l.*, and I myself agree with the figures. Those have been the causes that have operated in causing fluctuation of rent.

1003. Have you any grievances about the rates?—Yes, I have. I think that land has to bear far more than its due proportion of local burdens, and I find that during the last 30 years local rates have increased considerably. Take my own parish. I happened to find an old account book with regard to the parish accounts, and from that I took the average amount extracted in rates from the parish from the years 1850 to 1855 inclusive—six years—and I found that the average amount then—it is a small parish—was 94*l.* 15*s.* 9*d.* Taking the last six years included up to 1891 within the same parish it has averaged 145*l.*, an increase of something like over 50 per cent.

Mr. Seebohm.

1004. Has the population increased in the meantime?—It has decreased in the meantime.

Sir John Llewelyn.

1005. Does that include the School Board?—Yes, but it is a School Board which is worked as reasonably as any I know of. The average rate is only 4½*d.* in the £, and while this increase of 50 per cent. has been going on in the local rates, the amount collected for the poor rates within our Union have considerably decreased.

Chairman.

1006. Have you anything to tell us about railway rates?—Yes; so far as they affect us they are excessive. They are very much against us in the conveyance of cake and manures, and again in sending our corn away.

1007. And in the removal of stock?—Yes they tell against us there.

1008. Now about the size of farms. I think we have had every sort of information about that, and about the way in which the rents are paid?—Yes, I agree with everything said there.

1009. You agree that they are not excessive on large estates?—No, they have not been, but

I will say this, that there is not perhaps a general acceptance of the present situation.

1010. That is to say, you have not had the permanent reduction that is general in most other parts of the country, at any rate in England?—No; permanent reductions have not been made on anything like this scale. I only know of one case, that is Lord Wimborne's.

1011. There has been no such permanent reduction of rents as there has been in many parts of England?—No; there has not been; not so much as there should be.

1012. Still we may take it that there is no great complaint in this part of the country?—Oh, yes. I certainly say the agriculturists in this part of the country are not escaping the general depression, or anything like it.

1013. They have not been lucky enough to escape it in this part of the world?—No.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

1014. We have heard mention earlier of the day of the manors?—Yes. I have a general knowledge of that.

1015. Are there courts still held in connection with the manors?—Oh, yes, in many cases.

1016. Which is the nearest court to Cowbridge?—There is a court held here, I do not know whether it is held annually, but the Marquess of Bute holds his courts fairly regularly.

1017. Here?—Yes, I think so, and there is a manor adjoining my farm, the manor of Ruthin, and a leet court is held annually at Llanhairan.

1018. Who is the steward there?—I hear it is Mr. Corbett, I am not intimately connected with it. Mr. Corbett, of Cardiff, is the Marquess of Bute's agent. I live within an old manor myself, the manor of Gelligarn, but the last court there was held about 60 years ago, and I have heard my mother speak of having the last court held at our house some 60 years ago.

1019. Who is the landlord there?—Mr. Aubrey Aubrey.

1020. Are they the same manorial rights which he now exercises?—No, not now.

Mr. Seebohm.

1021. There are not any copyhold tenements, perhaps?—Not within that manor. There are some leaseholders there.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

1022. Is there much copyhold property in these manors in the district?—There is in some cases. The Earl of Dunraven is lord of two manors to the north of where I reside.

Mr. Seebohm.

1023. Would that copyhold property be let from year to year?—As a rule copyholders occupy their own property.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

1024. Is there not some Duchy property here?—Yes, in the parish of St. Bride's Major.

1025. Who manages that? Do you remember the gentleman's name?—Mr. Thomas Collier is the local agent, of Aberkenfig, near Bridgend.

1026. Do you know of anything special in regard to the duchy property you would like to mention to us?—I only know that this common, which is of considerable extent, what extent I could not specify, but many hundreds of acres, is open as to rights of pasturage to all the inhabitants of that parish of St. Bride's Major, irrespective of their holding any land—all who have a house, or to put it locally, all who possess a chimney, have an unlimited right of pasturage.

1027. Is there a Welsh phrase for that that you can recollect?—"Pob un a simne."

1028. Is there any technical Welsh term handed down for describing the exercising of this right of common?—Not that I am aware of. With regard to that property I would express this opinion I do think, in the public interest, it would be desirable that that land should in some way be brought into public use. I do not think it is fair that a very wide area of good agricultural land like that should contribute nothing towards the local burdens, as that does not.

1029. Is it unenclosed?—Yes, unenclosed.

1030. None of it arable?—No, none arable; all pasture.

Mr. Grove.

1031. You say they pay no rates upon that at all?—No rates at all.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

1032. Are any dues paid to the duchy?—Yes, the public have to pay. They own the foreshore for some miles, and if sand or gravel is taken away you have to pay a royalty to the duchy.

1033. If you have a house or chimney in this parish, and you use the right of common, have you to pay anything?—Nothing is paid to the duchy in the right of the exercise of common, but as to provisions as to houses built on the waste I could not speak. As I have said before, I have never resided within the parish, and I have not an intimate local knowledge. The sporting rights over this are held by the Earl of Dunraven, but under what conditions I do not know.

Professor Rhŷs.

1034. Where is Gelligarn?—Near St. Mary's Hill. Gelligarn is the ancient name of the hamlet. It is equidistant between Bridgend and Cowbridge.

Mr. Grove.

1035. You spoke of railway rates being rather oppressive for the farming industry?—Yes.

1036. Has there been any large increase in railway rates of late?—I am not a large user of the railway myself, and since the new rates have been in force I have not had much to do with the railway. I may specify the last case where I did use the railway. I had some manure down from London the week before last. It was a cheap manure (kainit), and it cost me two guineas a ton, and on that I had to pay 17*s.* 6*d.* a ton for carriage. I sent my order to the Anglo-Continental Manure Company under the impression that they would have sent me the manure from the Bristol depôt, otherwise I would not have had it, and they sent it from Poplar, and it cost me 17*s.* 6*d.* a ton.

1037. You did not test that by the rates published in Clause D.?—No.

1038. You can get this book at the Board of Trade for 1*s.*, and it gives you all particulars?—Yes. I heard you say so to another witness. What I would chiefly emphasize as a mode of relief, next to having a fair rent adjusted, would be the great desirability of having our local rates more fairly adjusted in the interest of the land. I have some statistics on that point. I find that income tax is paid annually on 57½ millions in rent from land, and on profits from trade, on the other hand, income tax is paid on 587,000,000*l.* Now, this 57½ millions bears over 4*s.* in the £ in charges for local purposes. The other comes away with something like 7½*d.*, and all this is really paid by the occupier. I think if we were only fairly dealt with in that respect it would amount to at least giving us in one form a very substantial relief at once. I think it is only fair, so long as the commercial classes will insist on our growing food for them in open competition with the foreigner they should at the same time take a fair share of the public burden for all local purposes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

1039. How would you localise personal property for the purpose of paying the local rates?—By paying local charges more largely out of Imperial funds.

1040. By Government intervention?—In that form, if no better means can be devised.

1041. In case you have Government intervention how would you get Government supervision, and that would be a restriction of local government?—Well, it might operate in that way certainly, but still I do not see why what is done now partially might not be done in a much more extended way. I do not know that we should object to Government supervision if at the same time we got Government relief, I would not call it relief. I say it is what is justly due to us. I do not see why one form of property should be called upon to pay something like eight times as much as the other.

1042. A difficulty is to get a way out of it—how to manage to do it?—I really cannot see that. Take, for instance, the last step in that direction—that of free education. Hitherto we had all the money coming locally for that purpose, now it is paid from Imperial sources, it is paid direct from the Treasury. That is a relief for local purposes in a form.

1043. With regard to the character of the farming in your district, is it mixed farming?—Yes, it is.

1044. Do you pay any attention to dairy farming in it?—In some cases, but it is not carried on extensively.

1045. Is not the land suitable?—Yes, fairly suitable.

1046. Do you not think it would be a profitable branch of farming?—Yes, I do.

1047. Why is not more attention paid to it?—There is one insuperable difficulty, that if you are able to do it yourself, then you may do it, but if you are dependent upon hired labour for that purpose then you cannot get it on anything like an extensive scale. That applies to the whole of the Vale of Glamorgan.

1048. You cannot get qualified persons to look after the dairy?—You cannot get the milking done to begin with.

Mr. Seebohm.

1049. Have the County Council in your district done anything in that way under the Technical Education Act?—Yes, they have held milking and butter classes in various centres of the county during the last 18 months.

1050. If that were properly done it might aid you in getting rid of that difficulty?—It might tend in that direction, but there is this fact. It is quite impossible to get female labour for that purpose, and it is very difficult to get sufficient labour to do the present household work alone. Our men look upon it as a sort of degradation to go and milk. They will not do it, and further than that I find we have a considerable amount of labour supplied from the opposite counties of Somerset and Gloucester, and when those men come, they are always willing to milk for the first few months but they very soon find it is infra dig. to go on with that sort of labour and they will not do it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

1051. Will the daughters on a farm not do it, are they above that kind of thing?—In some cases they do it.

Lord Kenyon.

1052. Is there any dairy school in the district?—No, none, except the classes. There were classes held in connexion with the Bath and West of England Society and the County Council—they arranged with the Bath and West of England authorities.

1053. Only classes?—Only classes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

1054. They held a meeting at Pencoed?—Yes, and here at Cowbridge and at Llantwit

Major too. I have one fact here that I think fairly illustrates the position, the effect of the competition, of foreign corn growing on home production, and that is on unimpeachable authority, Lawes and Gilbert, with regard to wheat growing. Taking the years 1852 and 1853 inclusive to 1859 and 1860, the home production then was 13,403,310 quarters, and the imports were 4,820,246 quarters, and the prices stood at 57*s.* 8*d.* per quarter. Coming down to 1884 and 1885 up to 1891 and 1892, the home production has fallen down to 8,746,970 quarters, and imports have gone up to 18,657,281, and the average price for that time was 32*s.* 5*d.* per quarter. I think those figures show that wheat-growing anyhow as a branch of farming is in a fair way of going out of use altogether. There is another thing I wish to say as a remedy. I think it is only fair that all foreign produce, butter, cheese, and meat, should be clearly labelled in such a way that the consumer who is better able to pay for the home-grown article should have it. There is no doubt he does not get it in a great many cases now, and I also think that where beer is not made from the genuine article of hops and malt that that also should be fairly distinguishable to the consumer.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

1055. How would you carry that out? How would you label butter, for instance?—You could do it at all the ports. You could see that all the casks had certain marks. Let it always be exposed for sale from such labelled casks.

1056. It would be very difficult?—Perhaps.

Lord Kenyon.

1057. In the same way in which margarine is marked?—Yes, margarine is so marked. But

I think it is the work of our "patent-ship" to devise such means as to do this in fairness to the community.

Sir John Llewelyn.

1058. Is there much competition here by means of foreign butter?—In our towns.

1059. It does not extend here so much as in Cardiff and Swansea?—Not to the same extent, but our proximity to those places brings it there.

1060. Do you assert that that butter is not genuine butter?—From the accounts I see of it, it is anything but genuine.

1061. It was stated at the last meeting of the "Bath and West of England" that they have only just discovered a way of detecting the deception, and it was stated that there was a very unfair competition going on, very difficult of detection. Are you aware of anything of that nature in Cardiff and Swansea?—No, I have no special knowledge, being simply a farmer.

1062. Your last suggestion was that the butter, meat, and cheese should be so dealt with that foreign produce should not be given an advantage against our own home growing?—That it should be so distinguished from our own produce that the buyer would always know what he was buying.

1063. You would include in that foreign meat?—Yes, decidedly.

Sir John Llewelyn.

1064. You said butter, cheese, and milk?—I thought I emphasized meat more than anything else—meat, not milk; I do not think I mentioned milk.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David John called and examined.

Chairman.

1065. Are you a tenant farmer?—I am.

1066. Where do you live?—The Ham Farm, Llantwit Major.

1067. You represent the Tenant Farmers' Committee, and you wish to speak to the fourth head, cultivation?—That is so.

Mr. Griffiths.

1068. Is there any scarcity of labourers, and, if so, are fences, ditches, watercourses, &c., properly attended to?—There is a scarcity of skilled labour, consequently much detailed work is neglected.

1069. Is there any land going out of cultivation as being insufficiently cultivated in your district?—No land out of cultivation, but much of the heavy and poorer soils have been laid down into pasture, which are still very unremunerative to the tenant.

1070. For what reason?—That they have been very imperfectly laid down.

1071. Do the landlords assist in laying down the land?—In some cases the landlords pay for the seeds, but generally, I believe, the farmers have to pay.

1072. To what extent has waste land been reclaimed by tenants within your district within living memory?—There has not been a great deal of waste land in our district, barring pieces of land taken in from the sides of the road.

1073. Has there been any considerable change in the nature of the agriculture pursued within your district within the last, 50 years?—Yes, as I have said, a great deal of the arable land is being laid down into pasture, which has caused a change in the system.

1074. What have been the cause and effect of such changes?—It has resulted in a slight reduction of labour.

1075. Have many cases occurred in your district where an outgoing tenant has failed to obtain sufficient compensation?—Yes, many.

1076. In what form?—In some cases, I think it has been mentioned to you to-day, the Agricultural Holdings Act has been introduced in preference to the custom.

1077. Any other?—Well, there have been many cases, I think, in my memory, cases of permanent improvements done by tenants, and not been compensated for, such as outhouses, stock, and improvements to house property.

1078. What is the custom of the country in your district as to the liabilities of the tenant as to the mode of compensation, dilapidations, and sale of produce?—That would come under the "custom," I should think. You would have that in the pamphlet.

1079. Is there any right recognised as belonging to tenants to dispose of their interest in their holdings?—No, I think not, but it is time the tenant should possess the right. It is strongly felt I think that the tenant should have the right to sell his goodwill in his holding the same as a publican would in his business.

1080. You mean to say the tenant does not obtain what he really should have under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Quite so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

1081. Then you are in favour of goodwill for the outgoing tenant?—I am.

1082. Which do you think preferable and more equitable between an outgoing tenant and an incoming tenant to have the system of goodwill or compensation for unexhausted improvements?—I mean the system of goodwill will go further. Let the custom stand as it is, but the system of goodwill should go further than the custom. For instance, I do not think there is quite enough of distinction, as I understand the custom between good farming and bad farming.

1083. Would it meet your case if the custom or Agricultural Holdings Act would give compensation for general improvement of the holding and not for specific improvement?—Yes.

1084. Do you not think that would be satisfactory?—It would amount to pretty well the same thing, would it not, provided the tenant is fully compensated for his improvements and unexhausted manures?

1085. If there is a system of goodwill you would not give the landlord any choice at all in the succeeding tenancy—he would sell it to the highest bidder?—I fail to see that. The landlord would have still the same power in selecting his tenant, but that tenant would have to pay the outgoing tenant his goodwill.

1086. Any sum he liked to contract?—I do not say that. It would be settled by arbitration.

1087. What right has the arbitrator to decide that?—I do not know that it is for me to make out the rule, but I think the tenant should be fully compensated on that score.

1088. We do not object to that?—It would be more encouragement to good farming.

1089. You would have dual ownership by having the system of goodwill of necessity?—Yes.

1090. Do you not think it would meet the case now if your custom recognised the general improvements of a holding?—Well, possibly it would, if the custom went far enough.

1091. Possibly that is a better suggestion?—I should like to say something about game preserving, on page 5 of the syllabus.

Lord Kenyon.

1092. You said that in some cases there was a want of compensation to the farmers on leaving their holdings. Do you ascribe this to the failure of the custom of the country?—The custom of the country does not go far enough, I think.

1093. You mentioned, I think, buildings, stock and sheds?—Yes, outbuildings, general improvements.

1094. You think that should be attached to the custom of the country?—I think so. I think the tenant should be compensated for them.

1095. You agree with the custom of the country otherwise?—Yes.

1096. Supposing you were an incoming tenant, would you care to buy the goodwill?—I should agree to be compelled; I think it is fair on both sides.

Sir John Llewelyn.

1097. You did not pay for the goodwill on going in; I should like to know exactly what you mean by goodwill. If you compensate and pay for all permanent improvements that you do, what further goodwill is there in the matter? Supposing you have been in a very short time?—But the custom does not go far enough to pay for general improvements.

1098. Again, would that satisfy you?—Yes, I think it would.

1099. I think the reason why goodwill has not been taken to is because of the hardship to incoming tenants? The incoming tenant it is desirable should be called upon to pay as little as possible?—I think it is much harder on the outgoing tenant to leave his buildings behind him, and his improvements.

1100. I agree. But that, you say, ought to be safe guarded under the system and under the Agricultural Holdings Acts; is that so?—Yes.

1101. And if so, would you be then satisfied as to the question of goodwill?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

1102. Have you considered this, that according to the practical working of this custom, the outgoing tenant has the security of the landlord and the security of the incoming tenant for the payment of any compensation due to him? Under the system of goodwill which you suggest, where would the liability of the landlord come in?—The tenant is protected now with his custom. If an incoming tenant refuses to pay he can refer to the Court.

1103. Strictly technically the custom is between the outgoing tenant and the landlord; only in practice, where there is another tenant ready and willing to come in, inasmuch as the incoming tenant would have to pay the landlord what the landlord has to pay the outgoing tenant, the two meet together at once and appoint valuers themselves; that is how it practically works?—Yes.

1104. If you were to substitute for that a system of goodwill unless the landlord is giving notice to quit to the particular man, the outgoing tenant has only the person to whom he sells his tenant right or goodwill to look to for the purchase money?—Yes, quite so.

1105. Does, that not strike you as a disadvantage?—Well, there may be a disadvantage, certainly.

Lord Kenyon.

If the landlord took the farm into his own hands he would get nothing.

Mr. Seebohm.

There is one point with reference to goodwill, and as we are upon that, we might as well clear it up. It seems to me that goodwill, in the sense that we do not want it, is the premium which the hunger for land raises as between one person and another taking a farm. If you are going out of a farm, and you have two persons bidding for the farm; if you once establish the right to goodwill you impose upon the incoming tenant a premium which is not represented by any real foundation in the estate, but it is simply the result of land hunger, and the competition between the two parties.

Sir John Llewelyn.

1106. It would be against the interests of all parties, and once started I do not see it would be ever stopped. Once admit it, and you pay for it in going in; it would be yours to sell, then, undoubtedly. It seems to me that if that system was once started, you could not ever stop it again, good or bad. You did not pay for it when you went in to your farm, therefore it is not yours to sell on going out?—You mean the improvements. It would be an encouragement to good farmers.

1107. You think neither the custom nor the Agricultural Holdings Act go far enough in compensation?—That is all.

1108 If they went further you would be satisfied?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

1109. Are rabbits, hares, or other game preserved by the landowners in your district?—They are, far too generally, I may say.

1110. Have you any trouble with rabbits?—Yes, great trouble.

1111. You cannot keep them down yourself?—No, we find it impossible for one man to keep them down.

1112. Have you too many hares?—No, very few hares.

1113. You are not like another witness. You do not wish there should be more rabbits. I would not wish to have one on the farm.

1114. Do tenants generally avail themselves of the provisions of the Ground Game Act?—In some cases they do, but often not.

1115. They would rather make private arrangements with their landlord?—No, they dare not in some cases.

1116. Is there much damage done by the game to the crops and pasture of tenant farmers?—Yes, great damage.

1117. Are they compensated?—No, I do not know of any case of compensation.

1118. Have you any special instances?—Yes, I may say we suffer ourselves a good deal from game, and we are not compensated for it.

1119. Have you ever asked for compensation?—No, I do not know that we have. We have complained of it and asked for the game.

1120. But never asked for compensation?—Never asked for compensation.

1121. You cannot expect compensation if you do not ask for it?—It would be the same thing if we did.

1122. How is the damage assessed?—We have to grin and bear it.

1123. Are you tenants expected to beat the covers?—No, I think not.

1124. How does the game preserving otherwise affect cultivation?—Well, it is most injurious to cultivation, I believe.

1125. Do you think it strains the relations between landlord and tenant?—Yes, I do, in many cases.

1126. You do not believe it brings the landlord about the farm?—No, I do not think it does. In our case the landlord is not a sporting man.

1127. And yet he preserves a lot of game?—I may say the game is let. That is what we complain mostly about. If the landlords are sporting men themselves every tenant in the Vale of Glamorganshire would be glad to see the landlord over his farm, but we complain of the game being let to strangers, who come over the farm and tear the fences down, and we get no compensation.

1128. I do not see why you do not get compensation from the sporting tenants, it is not from the risk of offending your landlord?—That is the case.

1129. You do not like to offend your landlord by asking for compensation from the sporting tenant?—Well, I have asked for the game. If the landlord would give us the game we would be most pleased to sell it to the gentlemen who now rent it off him.

1130. Of course your landlord gets a certain amount of sporting rent. You ask him to give up that sporting rent to you?—That is between himself and the gentlemen he lets it to.

1131. You ask him to give that up to you?—Quite so.

1132. How does the game affect the labourers? Do they get any advantage?—It has a demoralising effect, I think.

1133. You mean it makes them poachers?—Yes, in some cases it does; the temptation is rather strong for them.

1134. And the public generally?—Well, it fills the game shops at the expense of the farmers—I mean by poachers, and keepers and that, who sell the game off unawares to their employers.

1135. Can you mention any instances?—Yes, I believe I can.

1136. Do you happen to know what proportion the offences against the game laws bear to the proportion against the property of persons?—No, I do not know that.

1137. Is the law of trespass in other respects satisfactory in your opinion?—That I know nothing of.

1138. There are no Crown lands and commons in your district?—No.

Chairman.

1139. There is a question handed up by Mr. Vincent. Is the farm occupied by you one belonging to Mr. John Nicholl?—It is belonging to Mr. Iltyd Nicholl—the Ham.

1140. Another question handed up is, are not the rabbits which are complained of settled in cliffs over the sea, from which it is impossible to get them out?—Well it is impossible to get them out—to clear them out by ferreting—but I believe if the tenant had the right to put three or four, or as many as he liked to kill the rabbits, then we could manage to keep them under very easily by shooting them.

1141. Have you no power to do that?—I believe that the Hares and Rabbits Bill gives the power to one man.

1142. And that is not sufficient?—No; and that man has to have written permission by the tenant.

Lord Kenyon.

1143. Or yourself?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

1144. What are the causes of the present depression?—I could not say. It is a very broad question—bad prices for agricultural produce.

1145. What is the reason of bad prices?—That is because of foreign competition.

1146. Anything else? Do the seasons enter into the question?—The high price of labour and bad seasons.

1147. Have you any suggestion to make as a remedy?—Reduction of rent, I think, is the principal thing we shall have to look to. I cannot see any other.

The witness withdrew.

Chairman.

I should like to say that the Commissioners notice that there have been no representatives of the labourers of the district called. We shall be at Pontypridd to-morrow, and we shall be very glad if any arrangement could be made to have the labouring classes represented, and we shall be very glad to hear what they have to say. We notice that we have had some capital evidence given to-day by the tenant farmers, but we should like very much that the labouring class should be represented in some sort of way before us.

Mr. Edward John: I am afraid that those who speak to the labour question find it impossible to come to Pontypridd to-morrow. There are two other men here who could speak to it.

Chairman.

Who are they?

Mr. Edward John: They are both farmers, Mr. Iltid Williams, Castleton, and Mr. Walter Savours, Roose.

Chairman.

It would be desirable to know a little about it, and we should like to have some representative called before us.

Mr. Edward John: I shall be at Pontypridd myself to-morrow, and being an old farm labourer, I should be happy to give you as much evidence as I possibly could on the subject.

Chairman.

Could not the other gentlemen accompany you?

Mr. Iltid Williams (Castleton): I think the other matter has been thrashed out, and I do not see that there is much to add to what has been said.

Chairman.

We wish evidence about the farm labourers.

Mr. Iltid Williams: Of course we farm ourselves, and we could only answer the same as any other farmers.

Mr. DANIEL JENKINS called and examined.

Chairman.

1148. Are you a tenant farmer?—I am.

See 5817.

1149. Will you tell us where you reside?—At Ruthin near St. Mary Hill.

1150. You wish to speak on the subject of commons?—I live on a common called the Ruthin Common.

1151. Whose property is it?—Lord Bute is the lord of the manor.

1152. Is that the common on which the squatters' cottages were?—There are some squatters' cottages.

1153. Can you tell us anything about them?—Yes; 18 years ago there was an old ruin there, what they call the old turf house, and they allowed a workman to build a cottage in one of the ruins. He asked the consent of the lord of the manor to build the cottage, and he gave consent, and he had to pay a rent of half-a-crown for the cottage, thinking he was thoroughly safe of the cottage. In about 12 or 13 years after he had built that cottage it was advertised for sale here, with several other little plots.

1154. Was it sold?—Several pieces—I have three pieces on the farm myself—adjoining my farm a garden and a piece of enclosure and two pig-cots which my poor father had taken. He paid for those; and those were advertised, but unfortunately for them they had enclosed the cottage in those pieces which belonged to my farm, and I made that objection, and it was not sold that day. In reference to this cottage the parties went up to the agent, Mr. Corbett, and he said he would consider the matter afterwards, and it came before the leet court at Llanharran, and the leet court said it was very hard for them to sell that cottage after the work and labour in building it, and they granted that they should keep it in the life of the man and wife—that is David David and his wife. I do not know what will become of the property afterwards; it will very likely be sold again. This lord of the manor has no right whatever to do that, and so it has been proved. He has no right whatever to give consent to building, because since that it has opened the eyes of the parishioners very much. Another cottager came before the leet court and wanted to enclose a piece of land for his convenience. The steward of the manor gave him permission on paying a shilling a year. One of the landlords said, "If you do enclose it I will take it down," and the steward asked, "For what reason?" and he said, "For the reason that it comes into "possession in 12 years," and that was adopted and not built. To express my opinion, I think it would be a great advantage for the public at large if those commons were enclosed, they would help in taxation, and could be made much more of.

Chairman—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

1155. Is this the common above Pencoed?—Yes, this side of Pencoed. It is Ruthin Common which could 80 per cent. of it be put into cultivation.

Mr. Grove.

1156. When that cottage was put up for sale it was withdrawn because they included some little bit of land belonging to your farm?—Yes, in my part.

1157. You objected to that?—Yes.

1158. And that stopped the sale?—Yes, on that spot.

1159. Were any squatters' cottages sold at that same sale?—Yes, in different places two or three were sold at Aberthin. I think they sold up to 300 that day of squatters' cottages similarly situated to those of mine.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

1160. May I ask what court leet you are referring to of this manor of Ruthin?—Manor of Ruthin at Llanharran.

1161. Where is the court leet held?—High Corner House, Llanharran, once a year.

1162. Is Mr. Corbett the steward?—Mr. Corbett is the steward.

1163. Do any of the labourers at Ruthin graze upon this common?—Yes, they have been grazing, but they find it of very little value unless they have a little land with it.

Adjourned.

Mr. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.

Mr. THOMAS EVANS called and examined.

Chairman.

4811–75, 3328–3363.

1164. Are you a tenant farmer of Penhefyd, St. Fagans?—Yes.

1165. Who is your landlord?—Lord Windsor.

1166. How large is your holding?—133 acres.

1167. What agreement have you; a lease or yearly tenancy?—A verbal agreement at present.

1168. You are a yearly tenant?—A yearly tenant.

1169. Can you give us any details of your tenancy?—I have my statement in writing here, and, if I should be allowed, I will read it.

1170. Yes, do so.—I have no written agreement with the landlord; but a verbal agreement (between Mr. R. Forrest, Lord Windsor's agent, and myself) was entered into in 1887; prior to my becoming a tenant on the Windsor estate. That agreement has been shamefully violated by Lord Windsor, to my detriment and injury. Inasmuch as the circumstances of my present tenancy are, perhaps, unusual, I ask permission to briefly relate them to the Commission.

1171. If you please.—My father, Thomas Evans, entered into possession of the glebe farm, called "Tynewydd," in February 1844, as a tenant of the Rector of St. Fagans, at a yearly rent of 97*l.*, free of all tithe and land tax. He continued in the tenancy on the same terms, down to February 1880, when the glebe farm was transferred to me, and I entered into possession of Tynewydd. My first agreement with the rector, the Rev. W. David, made in 1880, was as follows:—In consideration of my erecting certain buildings, outhouses, &c. on the farm, which I did at a cost of about 300*l.*, I was to hold the farm at a rental of 90*l.* per year, for the first 10 years, free of tithe and land tax. This arrangement lasted seven years. In 1886, the rector, with the assent of the Lord Bishop and the patron of the living, granted me a lease for 20 years, dating from January 1st, 1887, at a yearly rent of 120*l.*, free of tithe and land tax. But, by a verbal arrangement between us, the rector allowed me a rebate of 10*l.* a year, thus reducing my net rent to 110*l.* During the first year of the lease, Mr. R. Forrest, on behalf of Lord Windsor, pressed upon me, with many inducements, proposals for an exchange of land, by which a portion of the glebe farm I held would be included in the park adjoining the castle, Lord Windsor's residence. Eventually, in September 1887, it was verbally agreed between us, that about 30 acres of my holding should be so included; and a line of demarcation was made, with pencil, on an Ordnance map, in Mr. Forrest's office, defining the land to be annexed. It was further agreed, that I was to surrender my lease to Lord Windsor; and that in return, I was to occupy "Penhefyd" Farm as a tenant for life, retaining also the residue of the glebe farm, at a rent at the rate of 1*l.* per acre for plough land and 35*s.* per acre for grass land, that being about the rate I paid the rector, the glebe being all grass land. Further, I was to be repaid the 300*l.* I had spent on "Tynewydd" buildings; and certain water ponds were to be constructed on my holding, to compensate for the loss of water resources on the land to be taken into the park, to wit, a running stream and "Pwll Arthur," a pond thus named on the

Ordnance map. Accordingly, I surrendered my lease and was paid the 300*l.*; but, in other respects, the verbal agreement has been seriously departed from, on Lord Windsor's part, much to my loss. As evidence of this I submit: (1) That despite my protests, eight acres of the best pasture land, in excess of what was agreed upon in September, were, in the following February, taken from the glebe holding, and enclosed within the park boundaries, as will be seen from the special survey I hand in—(The witness handed a document in.) 1172. Is there any wall that goes round the park?—Iron railings.

1173. And your railing was about how much?—An inch iron tube with iron posts also.

1174. When were they put up?—They were put up between the park and my farm, somewhere about the month of February 1888.

1175. Could you explain to the Commissioners on the map exactly where your land is, and how it lies?—Yes. (The witness explained the position on the map.)

1176. We are much obliged to you, and we quite understand the position of the land now. Will you go on with your statement?—As will be seen from the special survey I hand in, and by reference to the Ordnance map, this encroachment deprived me of a valuable supply of water from a reen and of the overflow from "Pwll Arthur." No farmer in his right senses would voluntarily have consented to the line of demarcation arbitrarily insisted on by Mr. Forrest, when erecting the new fencings in February 1888. The special survey handed in accurately defines the extent to which the present boundary deviates from the one I agreed to in September 1887. (2.) That the promised ponds have never been constructed, and the want of a convenient supply of water has put me to much expense in driving cattle. Even access to a supply of water near to, was denied me. (3.) That land tax has been exacted for the entire holding, even for that portion comprised in the glebe farm, whereon I was specially exempted by my lease, and for which neither my father nor I ever paid the tax; the rent paid the rector, covering the land tax and tithe charges. In this way my rent has been increased beyond the sum verbally agreed upon, and beyond what was customary. (4.) That about 18 months since, Mr. Forrest notified me that my rent would be raised from 180*l.* to 200*l.* per year, that is from 27*s.* per acre, through and through, to 30*s.* per acre, whereas, tenants of farms on the Windsor estate, adjoining my own, are only rented at the rate of 1*l.* per acre. The threatened increase was, I now believe, a device to make me give up the tenancy. (5.) That notwithstanding the pledge given me that my tenancy was to be for life, I was, on February 1st last, served with a year's notice to quit, and to deliver up possession of both farms. This is the outcome of placing my tenure under the will of Lord Windsor, and of trusting to Mr. Forrest's word. In July of last year I submitted to Mr. Forrest, and subsequently to Lord Windsor, a statement of the grievances I enumerated, a copy of which I hand in. (The witness handed in a statement.)

1177. This is a copy of a statement made to Mr. Forrest and Lord Windsor in July last?—Yes.

1178. Practically enumerating the points which you have made?—Yes. I therein appealed for relief; I offered to submit my claims to arbitration, or, failing other concession, I asked to have my lease, and original holding restored to me, and I undertook to refund the 300*l.* and give up possession of "Penhefyd." But no redress, nor arbitration, nor the cancelling of the verbal agreement and the going back to our independent positions, has Lord Windsor assented to. Since my appeal, the notice to quit has come to hand.

1179. Will you hand in the notice to quit?—Here it is. (Notice to quit signed "R. Forrest," and dated 1st of February 1893, handed in.)

1180. Will you kindly explain to us one thing. You are now a tenant of Lord Windsor?—Yes.

1181. You originally started by being a tenant of the glebe farm of the rector?—Yes, and my father before me.

1182. How was it that you ceased to be a tenant of the rector and became a tenant of Lord Windsor, so that he could give you notice to leave the portion of the glebe that you still occupy?—Inasmuch as they wanted a portion of the glebe farm to be added to their park.

1183. I understand you were originally the tenant of the rector?—Yes and a lessee of the rector.

1184. Then you became a tenant of Lord Windsor as well?—Yes.

1185. And according to a verbal agreement you gave up a portion of your holding to Lord Windsor?—I gave over the lease altogether.

1186. You surrendered the lease?—I surrendered the lease on the understanding that they paid me the 300*l.* that I had paid on the buildings on the glebe farms.

1187. And your lease, if I am right, began in 1887?—Yes.

1188. You gave up this land in 1888?—Before the end of 1887; before the first year ended we had come to an agreement.

1189. Then you became entirely a tenant of Lord Windsor by the arrangement between Lord Windsor and yourself?—An arrangement between Mr. Forrest and myself; of course it is all the same.

1190. Therefore, having surrendered your lease to Lord Windsor he paid you 300*l.* for money expended on the glebe farm, and you practically became tenant-at-will under Lord Windsor?—Yes.

1191. That is right?—Yes, that is quite right.

1192. Then, in 1893, that is six years afterwards, you received notice to quit at the end of the current year in which your tenancy expired?—Yes.

1193. Did Lord Windsor buy the glebe farm from the rector?—No.

1194. I do not quite understand what the rector had to do with it. How did the land become Lord Windsor's?—With the sanction of the Bishop and the patron (Lord Windsor being the patron); by the old ecclesiastical law they have a right to give a 20 years' lease.

1195. To Lord Windsor?—No, to myself, and I merely surrendered this lease to Lord Windsor. That is the way in which he became a tenant of it.

1196. He is a tenant under the rector?—Yes, he is a tenant under the rector, and he pays his rent to the rector. He is not the owner of the glebe to-day.

Chairman.

1197. I think all the Commissioners understand perfectly the position of affairs. That finishes your statement?—Oh, no; I have a lot more to say if I may be allowed to.

1198. Now, you want to speak about improvements, and the circumstances connected with them?—With respect to improvements by landlord and tenant respectively: (a.) The "Penhefyd" Farm (of itself) comprises 73 acres of arable and only some 30 acres of grass land. These proportions are detrimental to good farming, which requires exactly the reverse proportions, that is, two-thirds of grass land to one-third plough land. (b.) Prior to my tenancy two farmers failed to make "Penhefyd" pay, and were sold up, although they were rented at only 1*l.* per acre. Naturally the land was left in an impoverished condition; it had been starved, and had practically gone out of cultivation. When I entered upon it, it was a wilderness. (c.) Lord Windsor did absolutely nothing to improve or restore the land. Manuring, fencing, or hedging, &c. have been done by myself. Altogether I have laid out in the six years fully 1,000*l.*

1199. That is since 1887?—Yes, in improving the land, in putting the farm in order, and in attaining the high state of cultivation to which I have brought it. No penny piece has been allowed me in compensation, and the notice to quit must deprive me of much of the reward due to my industry and outlay. (d.) Further, Lord Windsor has been indifferent as to the condition and sufficiency of buildings on the farms. My applications to the estate office have been met by fair promises but no performances. By way of illustration: (a.) The w.c. at Tynewydd fell in over a year ago, but neither my complaints, nor the claims of decency or of sanitation, have been successful in moving Mr. Forrest to fulfil a very obvious duty. In any urban district, the sanitary authority would assuredly prosecute the owner of property so neglected. (b.) The two labourers' cottages on Penhefyd, are also allowed to continue in a dilapidated and unsanitary state. (c.) Outhouses for cattle are insufficient in extent and those that exist need much repair. I think it right say, that my treatment by the estate is, in these matters, exceptional, and arises from the animus of the agent. Other tenants—especially those of them who have relations with the estate office—get attention paid to their requirements.

1200. I believe you would like to say something about game?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

1201. Have you the lease which you have been referring to here?—No.

1202. Have you a copy of it?—I have a copy of it here.

1203. Will you let me look at it?—Yes (handing it in).

1204. I see here that you were saying that the lease dated 5th January 1887, was from the rector and the Right Rev. the Bishop and from Lord Windsor?—Yes.

1205. And that they acted in pursuance of an Act of Parliament giving those persons—the rector, with the consent of the patron and the bishop—the power to lease for a certain number of years?—Yes.

Chairman.

1206. There are three questions handed in by Mr. Vincent, which, according to our custom, we think it right to put to you. Do you mean that Lord Windsor's agent was guilty of breaches of the verbal agreement, being one subject to the custom of the country, for which you had no legal remedy? Do you understand that question?—I think I have a legal remedy.

1207. There is a second question: Have you ever tried to obtain a legal remedy?—No, I have not.

1208. A third question that is put in, is: Are you aware that whereas the rents of some farms on Lord Windsor's estate near Cardiff have been raised, others have been reduced?—I never knew a case of reduction, but I know plenty of farms which have rose, and rose to 100*l.* per cent., some of them the last year. I do not know of one case of reduction which I can call to mind, but I can mention many where they have been rose in my neighbourhood on Lord Windsor's estate.

1209. There is another question handed in from the same source: Will not your claim for compensation mature when you go out of your holding? Will you not have your claim for compensation, according to the Glamorganshire custom, when you go out of the holding?—Yes.

1210. I understand you claim to be tenant for life?—Yes, I claim to be tenant for life by the verbal agreement, otherwise I should never have surrendered my lease. That was the promise made to me.

1212. In consideration of your receiving 300*l.* and a lease for life?—No, I think not.

1213. Why did you not look after that?—Anyhow, I put a penny stamp on and wrote my name on it.

Lord Kenyon.

1214. You went away with the impression that you were a tenant for life?—Of course I did.

Chairman.

1215. Can you give the Commissioners any information about game preserving in your district?—Yes, I can.

Sir John Llewelyn.

1216. You assert you have a legal claim, and you mean to take steps to insist upon it?—Providing that Lord Windsor will be agreeable that it should begin and finish in one court, I do.

Mr. Grove.

1217. How many years of the lease were unexpired when you surrendered it?—I surrendered it the very first year; in September of the first year.

1218. There were 20 years unexpired?—Twenty years, comparatively speaking, unexpired. I surrendered it in September, whereas my lease was dated in January.

1219. I am not sure that I understand your answer to Sir John Llewelyn about going to court?—I have not made up my mind as to going to court, but I think I have quite a case for court.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

1220. You suggest, as I understand it, that although the agreement for tenancy for life was only verbal, yet there has been a part performance on your side; you have given up the lease and a portion of the land comprised in the lease?—Yes, that is quite right, but I can only come in under the Encroachment Act, inasmuch as I never had the land acquired for me according to his promise.

1221. You entered into possession at Tynewydd under the lease, as I understand it?—Yes.

1222. And you expended 300*l.* of the 400*l.* that you contracted to expend?—Yes, and spent that money on the first permanent lease.

1223. That is before the 5th January 1887?—According to this lease there is another 400*l.* to be expended at Tynewydd.

1224. I am only dealing with the document which you have been kind enough to hand in to us. Here there is a covenant on your part that you will at your expense during the term ——?—The 300*l.* was agreed upon in 1880, whereas this lease is only dated in 1887.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

1225. Then the 300*l.* that you had expended was the 300*l.* expended before 1887, and not under this lease at all. It was under a preceding arrangement?—Yes, in a preceding arrangement, not under this lease at all.

1226. After the 5th January, did you expend any of the 400*l.* that you were to expend under this lease?—Nothing at all. I had not completed the one year of my tenancy, because there was a talk of this exchange taking place soon after I received my lease.

1227. It was in September that the final arrangement was made?—Yes.

1228. You then gave up this lease of the 5th January 1887, and you were paid 300*l.*?—Yes.

1229. Under what agreement, or what clause in a lease or agreement, did you claim this 300*l.* expended in 1880?—Inasmuch as that I had expended the 300*l.* after 1880, and on the strength of that I took the other lease, thinking our landlord was rather delicate in health, and if anything should happen to him I should lose my claim altogether to the 300*l.* I had expended.

1230. It was the same farm?—It was the same farm, but then it would come to the next clergyman or to the next rector, and if anything had happened to Mr. David I should have been at the mercy of the next rector. I was not aware at the time that I could have got a permanent lease, but I found out through a friend of mine that I could have got a permanent lease under the old ecclesiastical law, and I went in for it at once, and Mr. David agreed that I should have it by all means.

1231. There is no evidence of this. This is a lease under the 5 & 6 Victoria, not what may be called commonly under the ecclesiastical law?—That is what the solicitor who took it out for me considered the term.

1232. This lease purports to be made under the statute law. What was the lease of 1880?—That was a lease for 10 years should he live.

1233. What you had got was really a kind of tenancy for the life of another man?—A kind of agreement between himself and me.

1234. Was it under seal?—Oh, yes, it was under seal.

1235. There was a formal document on parchment?—No, on paper.

1236. Was it under seal?—No, I do not think that it was. It was simply a memorandum signed by both of us.

1237. On the strength of the fact that you were to be in possession as long as the Reverend Mr. David should live, you expended 300*l.*?—Yes.

1238. As I understand later on, in the eighties, you discovered that it was possible for you, although there was a rector in possession and this was glebe land, to get a lease for a term of years?—Yes.

1239. And then this arrangement embodied in the document came about?—Yes.

1240. This provides that you were to expend 400*l.*?—Yes, that is 400*l.* under the present lease.

1241. You have paid nothing at all of this 400*l.*?—No, nothing at all.

1242. And the 300*l.* you received was 300*l.* paid under the preceding agreement?—Under my preceding agreement for buildings I had already erected.

1243. In what way do you say that you were injured by the new arrangement. You seem to have agreed to it?—By an encroachment of eight acres of the best pasture land, and I have to pay the same rent now as if I held the land.

1244. Were these eight acres taken before or after the lease was given up?—After the lease was given up; after the money was paid to me. 150*l.* of the money was paid to me as a deposit on the 21st of September, and I think I have a memorandum here from the office showing that my arrangement was made the 21st of September, whereas the 150*l.* was not paid to me until February.

1245. I understand you had several conversations with Mr. Forrest?—Yes, before the lease was given up; but not many after.

1246. As a result of these conversations you gave up the lease?—Yes.

1247. Tell me what was the effect of the arrangement you came to with Mr. Forrest, because I am still in some doubt about it. What did he promise in return for this according to you?—He promised me all this acreage of land with Penhefyd and Tynewydd House. I said, "Well, "I have a 20 years' lease, and I think a lot of the "old place; I have been brought up here since I "was four years old, and I have been schooled "in the village, and I should like my children "to have the same education as I had myself." He said, "It is not a 20 years' lease on the "estate; you are a tenant for life now. It is "not a 20 years' lease; it is a tenancy for life." Thinking I was under a good nobleman, I thought it was so, but the moment the fencing was put up I found I was robbed of eight acres, and I objected and kicked up a noise about it, and the foreman went and told Mr. Forrest about it, and he said it would be made up, but it has not been made up to this day.

1248. Has there been an abatement?—No.

1249. The effect of it is what we should call a readjustment of the fields, the parcels, the portions of the demised premises?—Yes. I did not have the portion promised me within the eight acres, and I could bring witnesses to prove, if necessary, that the lines were shifted. I can bring six or seven witnesses to prove that the line was not where it should have been. There was only a line on the Ordnance map when I agreed with Mr. Forrest, but that was departed from, and the iron line was brought into my land 30 yards, and I was deprived of the water and also eight acres of the best pasture land.

1250. Where is that map which you drew the line upon?—It is in Lord Windsor's office to day.

1251. I daresay we can get that?—I am told that they have taken that line out, but I think it could be found out now, and the very clerk that put the line on my map off that map is alive and well to-day.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

1252. Are you now in possession of the farm?—Yes.

1253. When does the notice to quit expire?—It is supposed to expire by their notice next February.

1254. We cannot go into nice legal distinctions, of course, but it seems to me somewhat ambiguous, upon what you have said, as to what the legal effect of your arrangement with Mr. Forrest was, taking your version of it. We cannot advise you upon that. Is this farm of yours, and is Lord Windsor's estate, within the operation of the custom of Glamorgan?—Yes.

1255. Supposing a man takes a farm without any express arrangement, he is within the sphere within which this custom operates?—Yes, unless the Agricultural Holdings Act deprives him of the custom.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

I think so far as this particular case goes, we have now the facts so far as this witness can tell us them.

Mr. Seebohm.

1256. You said that when you gave up the lease you did it on the distinct verbal understanding that you were practically to have a life interest in your next farm?—Yes, otherwise I should not have given it up.

1257. Is it a general fact that a tenant in this country would accept a mere verbal statement to give him a lease for life. Do you not mean when you say that, not a lease for life, but that the landlord was not in the habit of turning out his tenants, and therefore, under ordinary circumstances, you had as good a tenancy as a tenancy for life?—That is just what I mean.

1258. You do not mean to say a verbal lease for life?—A verbal promise for life.

1259. Was it a promise that you should remain in that farm for life, or was it simply a statement on behalf of the agent to this effect:—"You know perfectly well, on coming into Lord "Windsor's estate, that he never turns out his "tenants, and therefore you have a better thing "than a lease"?—Of course it was a promise made on behalf of Lord Windsor by the agent.

1260. Was it a promise by the agent?—It was a promise.

1261. Or was it a statement that looking at the general run of things on the estate you were practically there for your life?—Yes, of course it was a promise on the part of the agent.

1262. You must see that there is a clear distinction between the two things. I may make a promise that the tenant shall remain for his life in the farm. That is one thing. On the other hand, I may say that the custom of this estate is that the tenants are not turned out. You may look at it in that way, and see that if you come on Lord Windsor's estate without a lease at all it is just as good as a tenancy for life. Which was it?—There was a direct promise. That was one of the inducements why

I gave up my lease. He said, "It is not a lease "for 20 years, remember, you have now a lease "for life; we never turn a tenant out with a "notice."

1263. Then you distinctly say you had a verbal promise for what was practically a lease for life?—Yes.

1264. Do you think it is reasonable for a man who understands business to trust to a mere verbal promise of that kind, when by the Statute law of England it requires something in writing to make an agreement binding which goes beyond three years. To give a lease for life it must be in writing under the law of England, or, as a rule, it cannot be enforced?—I do not say I can enforce it; I do not mean to say that.

1265. Then apart from the question of right or wrong in this particular instance, you would admit that a tenant farmer was not wise in trusting to a mere verbal promise?—No, indeed I should not. I have found it out when it is too late.

Mr. Grove.

1266. Was there any promise of a written agreement made to you. Did you say to Mr. Forrest, "Well, I shall be glad to have a letter from you to confirm this"?—No, I do not know that I did. I had that confidence in him and his lordship that they would not do anything that was dirty.

1267. Then was there any one present when this conversation took place?—Not with the exception of one or two of his clerks, and they would not dare to second me. It would not be worth their places.

Mr. Griffiths.

1268. To enable us to understand this matter, kindly tell us what are the reasons given that you should have had this notice to quit?—I shall be able to explain that presently, in the matter of the game preserving and trespass.

Chairman.

1269. There is another question handed in by Mr. Vincent: What did the agent say in relation to this alleged tenancy for life. Can you remember the words which he used about it?—Well, what he said is what I said before.

1270. This question had better be withdrawn, I think. Now we will go on to the game question. I think you have something to tell us about the preservation of game in your district?—In the matter of the game preserving and trespass. Rabbits and game are strictly preserved on the Windsor estate; and tenants are not allowed to shoot, trap, or destroy any whatsoever; whilst to prefer claims for losses sustained by the depredations of rabbits and game, or even to protest against the latter, gives offence to the agents, and jeopardises one's tenure. The rabbit-breeding warren and the pheasant-breeding preserves, immediately adjoin portions of my holding; and the rabbits literally swarm over my land there. They, and the pheasants, have occasioned me the loss of hundreds of pounds. In 1889, I ventured to claim compensation for the current loss, when the agent allowed me 7*l.* for damage amounting to 50*l.* On one occasion I was obliged to pay a sum of 26*l.* to a purchaser of standing crops for depredations of game and rabbits, done subsequently to the date of purchase and prior to the removal of the crops. A claim preferred early this year for damages by rabbits to a field of swedes, measuring 8a. 3r. 23p., doubtless influenced the agent in giving me notice to quit.

1271. You have given your evidence very fairly and straightforwardly, and perhaps it might be better not to give any opinion of your own which you cannot absolutely prove. Do you particularly wish that to go in with your evidence?—I think I should prefer it. If it will not hurt the Commission I should prefer it. I wish the public to know generally how I am dealt with.

1272. You say "doubtless influenced." That is a matter of opinion, and everything has been so straightforward and practical so far, that it is for you to choose whether that should be put in or not?—You can please yourself, my Lord.

1273. It is for you entirely yourself to say whether you wish that to go in, or would you like wholly to confine yourself to statements of fact?—Well, it is so.

1274. Then you expressly wish that to go in?—Yes, if you please.

1275. Could you point out the field measuring 8a. 3r. 23p. in this map in which the damage was done, and will you tell us what your claim for that was?—It is here. (The witness pointed the place out on the map.)

1276. Is that the rabbit warren at the back?—It is all wood, and that is a preserve.

Mr. Richard Jones.

1277. Is this warren enclosed by wire?—No, it is not. Sometimes they put a little wire between us and the preserves.

1278. But in your case there was none?—They were put too late; the damage was done practically before. A part was put up, but they wired a part of the field, whereas the rabbits could come round it and over it. When rabbits are used to wire netting, it is proved that they will creep over it unless the wire is very high.

Chairman.

1279. Can you tell us what the extent of the damage done was?—Yes, in this case I had the damage done, valued by Mr. John Lewis, a licensed valuer, of Brigam Farm, Cowbridge, and Mr. E. D. Lewis, of St. Mary Hill Court, both farmers of high repute. I beg to hand in their award. It is based upon a maximum value of 10*l.* to the acre, and gives my loss at 39*l.* 18*s.* But inasmuch as another field (of similar soil and seed), unmolested by the rabbits, produced a yield of swedes of 26 tons 8 cwt. to the acre, and realised for me 20*l.* to the acre, my actual loss was double the amount given in the valuer's award. This paper is a valuation of a part of a field of swedes which was unmolested.

1280. That was 85*l.* odd ?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

1281. The question arises to what extent did the rabbits consume that field of swedes. Did they completely destroy the crop ?—I think you will find the award here, which will explain for itself.

The Secretary read the award as follows:—

"8a. 3r. 23p.—Valuation of damages done by rabbits on Garn field, 8a. 3r. 23p. of swedes, on Penhefyd Farm, in the parish of St. Fagan's, the property of Mr. Thomas Evans, tenant to Lord Windsor and landlord of the said farm.
1a. 3r. 23p. of the above field is nearly or completely ruined, and estimated at a loss of 10*l.* per acre - -	18	18	0
7a. 0r. 0p.—It is evident, by portions of this field that is not damaged by rabbits, that the above is a low estimate, seeing it is an excellent crop of swedes and the land in first class condition.
7a. 0r. 0p.—The larger portion of this field having all been damaged, but not to the same extent as the nearest part to the plantation, estimated at 3*l.* per acre - -	21	0	0
Total - -	39	18	0

January 18th, 1893.
Valued by—John Lewis, Brigam Farm, near Cowbridge, Licensed Valuer.
E. D. Lewis,
St. Mary Hill Court, Farmer."

1282. Now, please continue your evidence ?—Although three and a half months have elapsed since Lord Windsor was furnished with particulars, not one penny of compensation has been paid to me. Since my demand was first put in the number of rabbits has been decreased; but that is a mere temporary relief. The preserves, being so close to my land, caused frequent trespasses by the keepers, partly to engage in vain attempts to "wire up" the hundreds of rabbit burrows opened up into my land; and, partly, to watch, and drive in, the young pheasants which trespassed to feed off the young shoots of clover, sainfoin, and other tender crops. Again, hunting and shooting parties are given permission to trespass on the farms by the agent, who does not think the tenant has any right to be consulted. The privilege of permission is exercised exclusively by the landlord, and the tenant is expected to silently submit to his fences being broken, and his crops being trampled in, without any remedy. That is all I wish to say about game.

Chairman.

I might ask, is Lord Windsor's agent in the room ?

Mr. Vincent: No, he is not.

Chairman.

He is not in the town ?

Mr. Vincent: No.

Chairman.

This evidence has been very clearly put before the Commission, and we direct the Secretary to send notice at once to Lord Windsor's agent to give him an opportunity of explanation, and of rebutting the charge, either personally or by letter.

(To the witness.) Your statement has been very fairly put before us, and as Lord Windsor's agent is not here in the room to give us his version of the affair, we instruct the Secretary to have your evidence copied out, and any more evidence that you may have to give us, so as to give Lord Windsor and his agent full knowledge of your evidence that they may have the opportunity of reading it over and giving their side of the question.

Mr. Griffiths.

1283. Will you kindly explain this; I do not quite understand it; it is with regard to 26*l.* which you were to pay. What was that for ?—I sold three fields of clover, two of the fields being adjoining the oats (that is five out of my seven fields of ploughed land adjoining where the game and rabbits are preserved), and the damage was so great that they got a valuer from Cardiff to value the damage, and I was obliged to allow 26*l.* for the damage done to the clover.

1284. This is the field which was not damaged so much. How do you make out that that realised about 20*l.* per acre ?—I sold the swedes. I sold four acres. That is got out by one of the estate clerks, and by one of his head foremen. I sold it at the rate of 15*s.* per ton.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

The Secretary read the document as follows:—

"St. Fagans,
January 25th, 1893.

Mr. Evan Thomas,
Dr. to Thomas Evans (Penhefyd).
(Swedes)

To 4a. 1r. 20p. at 15*s.* per ton = 113¾ tons = 85*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.*

John Robertson."

Robertson is the head foreman labourer on the estate, and he usually measures for the whole parish and also for Lord Windsor.

Professor Rhŷs.

1285. Have you got that award of 26*l.* which you had to pay?—I had to allow that.

1286. Have you got a receipt for it?—I have not it with me. I can get it. Of course that was allowing it to them out of their bill.

1287. You have a paper on which that is stated?—I can get a voucher from them to show the allowance, but I have not it here, inasmuch as it was allowed out of their purchase money to me.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

1288. Did you make your claim for compensation for the damage done by game in writing or verbally to Mr. Forrest?—In writing, in 1892.

1289. Did you get any answer from Mr. Forrest?—Not from Mr. Forrest.

1290. Any answer from any one connected with the estate?—From the estate solicitor.

1291. An answer in writing?—Yes.

1292. What was the answer?—I think the answer is here somewhere.

Professor Rhŷs.

1293. Who made that award of 26*l.* odd against you?—A surveyor from Cardiff. I do not know what the gentleman's name was.

1294. You were satisfied that the valuation was about correct?—Oh, yes, I was.

Lord Kenyon.

1295. Why do you call this a rabbit warren. It is not enclosed?—Yes, it is.

1296. Not with any fence to keep the rabbits in?—No.

1297. You did not avail yourself of the Ground Game Act?—No.

1298. Not at all?—I do not.

1299. Why not?—Well, we are not supposed to touch them

1300. Yet no compensation is given?—I have had compensation but once, and that was only 7*l.*, in 1889, I think.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

1301. I did not gather the date of the damage that was done. Was it after the surrender of the lease of 1887 or before?—It was done last year—last year's crop. The lease was surrendered six years ago.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

1302. They gave you a notice to quit on the basis of your being a tenant from year to year, according to the custom of Glamorganshire?—Yes.

1303. Is there any incident of the custom, do you suggest, which applies to game at all?—I do not know that there is.

1304. In the lease there was a clause specially reserving any right to the landlord to enter for the purpose of shooting?—Yes, for the purpose of shooting the birds.

1305. When the lease was surrendered, according to the intention of this notice to quit you became a tenant from year to year, subject to the custom?—Well, subject to custom of course.

1306. The usual terms, if you like it, in the district?—If I thought proper of making use of the Ground Game Act.

1307. Are you aware whether there is any incident concerning game, which is a usual term or a part of the custom?—I do not know many that have the right of killing.

1308. In the evidence we had at Cowbridge yesterday, according to the statements made in regard to the custom, nothing was said as to the rights of the landlord to enter to shoot?—I think we are subjected to the Ground Game Act in that case.

1309. I am dealing with the hares?—According to the Ground Game Act the landlord has a right to go on to the land to shoot the birds, and also the hares and rabbits.

1310. As I understand it, you are subject to the custom?—No, I do not think so. I do not think there is any custom belonging to it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

In the statement of the custom we have had no reference to game, so far.

Lord Kenyon.

1311. You have been a tenant for some years of this farm?—My father and myself have been tenants since 1844.

1312. Has the game given you trouble long, or only just recently?—Only since I have come into the Penhefyd Farm. My father and myself never had any ploughed land before to be troubled with game, neither was any game preserved at the time when I was a boy. It is only since the present agent has come into power that the game has been preserved on Lord Windsor's St. Fagans estate.

1313. Does the agent have the shooting of the game, or Lord Windsor?—Lord Windsor himself comes for a day or two.

1314. Has it increased of recent years?—There was none preserved there at all—neither game nor rabbits—before Mr. Forrest came as agent.

1315. Can you tell me at all what amount of rabbits are killed there?—Indeed it would be a job to tell you. It would be some thousands in the year, I should think.

1316. It would be a great number?—A very great number.

Mr. R. Jones.

1317. You say you do not like to avail yourself of the Ground Game Act. You are not supposed to do so?—No.

1318. Is that generally the case on Lord Windsor's estate, that when a tenant takes a farm he waives his advantages under the Ground Game Act?—I know one tenant farmer turned off the estate for carrying a gun to kill hares and rabbits, with a notice.

Chairman.

1319. Have you any objection to give the name of that tenant farmer?—Not the least.

1320. With the consent of the individual, would there be any objection?—Not at all, with his consent, but he is not here to-day.

1321. Will you see if you can get his consent?—By all means. I will get it for certain. He would be only too proud of it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

1322. Which section of the Act are you thinking of, Mr. Evans. I do not find anything except a saving clause of rights which already exist? I want to ascertain what is in your mind about this matter. By the Ground Game Act, 1880, every agreement, condition, or arrangement which purports to defeat or alienate the right of the occupier as declared by the Act is void?—Just so.

1323. Consequently, whether there is any incident with regard to the Ground Game Act or not, you would have a right?—It amounts to this, that if we interfere with them, then we get notice to quit very quickly, but there is no agreement to the effect that we are not to kill them. I know by the Ground Game Act we can kill them if we like to run the risk, but the risk is that we are thrown out of our holding on Lord Windsor's estate.

1324. Apart from your getting into trouble on any point, is it or is it not the custom on the estate that families should go on holding the same holding from generation to generation?—There have been some going from generation to generation, unless they are sold up before by failures.

1325. So that as a general thing, except in such a case as yours——?—There used to be, but I do not think the feeling exists now as it used to do in former years—if I am allowed to go on, you will thoroughly know the reason. Until Mr. Forrest became the agent, I never knew a tenant leave the estate unless it was the father leaving for the son or for the daughter to take his place, but I have known very many to leave since Mr. Forrest came there, and very many sold up on the estate, and go away for miles.

1326. And yet you thought it wise to take that promise for life?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

1327. You were satisfied in your mind when you took that?—Yes, I was satisfied at that time that I was becoming the tenant of a nobleman, and that I needed no better security than a promise.

Chairman.

1328. Will you tell us anything more that you have to state. Have you anything to say about insecurity of tenure or anything of that sort?—Yes. As to insecurity of tenure and my relations (generally) with Lord Windsor and his agent. As already stated, having been promised a life tenancy, I am treated as a tenant at will, and ordered to quit both the farms, although 13½ years of the lease of the glebe farm, which I obtained at much cost, are still unexpired, and although my father and I occupied the said glebe for just on 50 years. I attribute this harsh, ungenerous treatment to the personal animosity of the agent, Mr. Forrest. He is a Scotchman, a stranger to the district, who has no sympathy with the Welsh tenantry around him, and had little knowledge of our customs or our methods of farming. I realise now that I have been outwitted, designedly outwitted, by this shrewd agent. Until September 1887 my tenancy was quite independent of the Windsor estate and its agent; and it was the one farm in the parish and district in that fortunate position. Until then, I was free to speak and act as I deemed right, unfettered by the fear of any consequences from the influence of Lord Windsor's agent. I freely exercised that independence. I quite see, by the light of after events, that this was unpalatable to Mr. Forrest, and that, in securing the possession of my lease, by means of promises scandalously dishonoured, his motives went beyond the trivial extension of the park, he designed to suppress my political and social independence; or failing that, to remove me out of the neighbourhood. Otherwise, my request to revert to former conditions would be acceded to. Had I known that the exchange of land, so plausibly and unctuously pressed upon me, would reduce my leasehold tenure to the security of one year's notice, I would never have parted with my lease and the independence of my position, nor placed my prospects in life at the mercy of a vindictive agent.

Professor Rhŷs.

1329. How long had Mr. Forrest been agent to Lord Windsor at the time when you accepted his verbal promise?—He had been agent some 10 or 12 years, I suppose, but I had nothing whatever to do with him.

1330. He was a comparative stranger to you?—Yes, I had had nothing whatever to do with him.

Chairman.

1331. I think, as Chairman, I ought to point out to you when "vindictive" is a very strong word. Would you like that word to remain in?—Yes, my Lord, I should. I attribute Mr. Forrest's animosity to my outspokenness, and my attitude on political, social, and agricultural affairs. I have not hesitated to oppose my views to those of Mr. Forrest, in matters pertaining to Welsh farming, and in parochial affairs. I openly opposed his candidature for the county council; I differed from his party views in the general election. I have resented the preservation of game and rabbits; I have appealed to Lord Windsor against Mr. Forrest's evasion of our agreement and for compensation for game trespass; and I have once threatened Mr. Forrest with personal chastisement for insulting my father's memory. These explain, with other matters mentioned, the cause of the ungenerous and dishonourable treatment to which I have been subjected. Lord Windsor has been made personally acquainted with my grievances at his agent's hands, and I have in vain appealed to him for redress. But I have come to the conclusion that his lordship does not understand the affairs of his estate, that he will not venture upon the exercise of his authority, save and except in the direction approved by the agent. *He is, in fact, the puppet of his own servant; a nonentity in the active management of his estate—the agent is the lord.

1332. There were two questions handed in by Mr. Vincent. The Commissioners have no objection to these questions, if you could kindly answer them. Did the tenant who received notice to quit for carrying a gun receive that notice during Mr. Forrest's agency?—Yes, he did within the last half a dozen, well it might be half a dozen, years or so.

1333. The answer is he did?—Yes, Mr. Forrest was the means of giving him notice to quit.

1334. Another question handed in by Mr. Vincent is this. You spoke of tenants being sold up?—Yes, in many cases.

1335. Could you mention more than two in all during Mr. Forrest's agency?—I think I can mention more than six in South Wales—big tenants that have been holding, and their fathers before them. You cannot help being sold up when the agent takes up the stock.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

1336. Mr. Vincent's question is about Lord Windsor's estate?—Yes, Lord Windsor's estate.

1337. During Mr. Forrest's agency?—Yes.

Chairman.

1338. You can mention more than six?—Yes, I believe I can on large farms.

1339. Would there be any objection to those names being handed in?—With the permission of the parties, by all means.

1340. Will you make a note of that, and send it to the Secretary?—Yes. Either sold out, or valued out, penniless pretty well, insolvent, it is all the same.

* The witness subsequently expressed a desire to withdraw the words italicised above, and forwarded to Lord Windsor an apology for having made use of them.—Secretary.

Lord Kenyon.

1341. Have you some statement with regard to labourers?—Yes.

1342. Will you give it to us?—Labourers, and their wages on my farms. During winter I employ six labourers, and about 12 in summer. I pay 15*s.* per week wages, with cottage and garden to some, and in summer time 18*s.* per week with part food and ale. Those who live in the house are paid 10*s.* or 12*s.* wages per week, and provided with board and lodging free. Extra summer hands are paid 1*l.* per week wages, with board and lodging free.

1343. Do you find there is any difficulty in getting labour?—Well, not so much in my district, by paying them very high wages.

1344. Has the rate of wages increased very much?—Very much indeed. I pay now at the rate of 26*l.*, when I can remember the best of men in the house, with board and lodging, at 13*l.*

1345. That has very nearly doubled itself?—Quite doubled, 100 per cent. rise in the farm servant. It is not quite so much in the farm labourer.

1346. To what do you attribute this increase of wages?—The collieries and works and everything, the development of the country has been so great.

1347. If you do not pay them higher wages they go off?—Yes, to the collieries, or some distant tin-plate works, or some place.

1348. Do you find that the labourers are as skilful as they were?—No, they are not. It is difficult to get a good farm labourer, and when we get hold of one we take care of him. One of the best farm labourers that I have, I pay 12*s.* a week in the winter. In the summer I must give him something else, or I shall lose him. That is 12*s.* a week, board and lodging.

1349. Do you do any dairying?—I sell milk.

1350. Has that a bad effect on the labourer?—I am a milk merchant, besides selling my own milk. Otherwise I should not be able to pay for my farm.

1351. Do you send your milk round. I send it into Cardiff. I have my own children who do it for me.

1352. I have heard it stated there was a difficulty in getting male labour, and it has a bad effect on them?—Yes; I have my own children to do it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

1353. You have been telling us the circumstances of your own case. Do you know many other tenant farmers in the neighbourhood. Do you know other tenants of Lord Windsor?—Yes.

1354. Looking at the matter broadly and dropping your own individual case, what complaint have you to make with regard to the ordinary relations of landlord and tenant?—Well, there is very little attention paid to the farm tenant. We are regardless of any respect whatever, on our estate. I do not think we are valued on the estate by the agent any more than a dog. If I could not value a labourer more than I am valued by the agent, I would not keep one.

1355. You say in your proof: "I venture to "observe that until tenant farmers are secured "in their holdings, they will not enjoy the social "and political freedom to which they are "entitled"?—They will not.

1356. What do you mean by "secured in their holdings" in that paragraph?—By having a fixture of tenure.

1357. Have you got a lease that secures you for 20 years?—Yes, that is the very reason why I took the lease before.

1358. Is there any difficulty in getting leases at your end of the county?—I do not know of any tenant farmer who has taken a lease on Lord Windsor's estate. If he did take it he would have to take upon himself the repairs, and I do not know but what there would be an additional rent on him.

1359. Do you suggest where the leases are given the conditions are such as to make a tenancy from year to year, notwithstanding its insecurity, preferable?—Yes, he has to pay for it.

1360. Apart from the question of leasing, what suggestion do you make for securing tenants in their holdings. Do you suggest legislation, for instance?—Yes, I do; and there will be never any good in this country until there is legislation in the matter.

1361. What kind of legislation?—To fix a term for the tenant, a fixture of tenure. I should say similar legislation as to Ireland; I would not object to that.

1362. Fixity of tenure according to our law is a matter of degree. A tenant from year to year can only be turned out on a notice to quit?—I think I am explaining further on, what a term would be.

1363. Will you explain to us what it is you desire?—I venture to observe that, until tenant farmers are secured in their holdings, they will not enjoy the social and political freedom to which they are entitled; nor will the utmost yield be obtained from the land: I strongly favour legislation—(1.) Providing fixity of tenure, with option to the tenant to purchase his holding, with the aid of State loans, repayments of which to be acknowledged by negotiable vouchers. (2.) Establishing land courts, with power to give fair rents, to arbitrate between landlord and tenant, to appraise improvements and determine the landlord's liability therefor; and to fix the purchase price, and ratify, and register the sales of holdings. (3.) Abolishing all game laws; and endowing tenants with the unrestricted right to kill all wild animals and wild birds found upon their holdings. (4.) I also favour the transfer from lord lieutenants to county councils of the privilege of nominating persons to the office of justice of the peace; and I would invest the county council with the absolute control of the county constabulary.

1364. Why, in case you have fixity of tenure, and have the right to sell your holding, should there be any appraisement of improvements and determination of the landlord's liability by a court?—I do not quite understand you.

1365. In your first suggestion you ask for fixity of tenure?—Yes.

1366. I am going to ask you what you mean by that presently, but supposing that the ordinary tenant at will, the man who is now the tenant at will, has obtained by legislation fixity of tenure, you go on to suggest that there should be a court to appraise improvements and determine the landlord's liability therefor. Why, if you have fixity of tenure, should there be any question of the landlord's liability?—I do not know exactly how to put a fixity of tenure, unless we have a court of commission to investigate the matter between landlord and tenant.

1367. I quite understand the suggestion for the establishment of a land court, or, if you like to put it in this way, for the investing of the county court with jurisdiction summarily and cheaply to decide disputes between landlord and tenant. Do you follow what I am saying?—No, I do not exactly.

1368. Supposing you are a tenant at will, we know you are subject to the custom of Glamorganshire on your farm Tynewydd?—Yes.

1369. And of course the landlord is extremely unlikely to refuse, but supposing the landlord should refuse to appoint a valuer when you go to carry out the custom and to assess the compensation, or supposing the valuer when appointed neglected to do something, or if, when the valuers have agreed, or an umpire has been appointed and has awarded, the landlord will not pay you your money; the custom itself does not provide any remedy except the ordinary legal remedy?—But there is a legal remedy for it.

1370. Of course you can go to a court?—Yes.

1371. Do you think it would be any good to have a provision in the Act of Parliament for a more summary method of going to a court than an ordinary action at law. I suggest this, for instance, that two valuers might go to the court and ask if they cannot agree, for the award of an umpire, and the award of the umpire shall be ipso facto, by itself, the judgment of the court?—That would not be a fixture of tenure.

1372. If you are going to have fixity of tenure, why do you want to have a court to assess compensation as between landlord and tenant at all?—In this way: if we had a land court, and whenever a dispute arises between landlord and tenant that dispute is settled in the land court, and the landlord has no power to turn the tenant out while he pays his rent; and then for fair rental we have the land court to investigate the matter, and to value, and to see into the matter as to whether the tenant pays more than he should pay for this land, and consequently that is a fixity of tenure.

1373. Do you think a land court should be established with a power to decide whether or not a notice to quit should be given?—Just so.

1374. And that the court should only permit the landlord to give notice to quit for certain good reasons?—That is just what I mean; that is just my suggestion, and without that we shall never do any good in this country.

Mr. Griffiths.

1375. You told us just now that your children aided you in selling the milk. Do you find any difficulty in getting people to milk. At Cowbridge, yesterday, people would not adopt it because they could not get people to milk?—Sometimes when a milkman leaves it is difficult to get one, but I cannot say so much of that difficulty, and I have my own children disposing of the milk.

1376. Do you find the labourers' children now taking to the farming as they formerly did?—No.

1377. What is the cause of it?—They are obliged to attend a school now until they are past a certain standard.

1378. After that I mean—over 14 years of age?—No, they take up clerkships and something of that in our district. There are very few labourers' children now taking to farming. Really a farmer has to deal with his own children now in the main.

Mr. Richard Jones.

1379. Do you consider farming a profitable occupation at present?—No, indeed I do not; far from it.

1380. When did it cease to be so?—Before I became a farmer, no doubt, on my own hook.

1381. In what year did you become a farmer?—In the year 1880.

1382. Then why did you go into farming?—I had a liking for the old place. I was brought up to it, and I was not so averse to it as I am now.

1383. You are a sadder but a wiser man?—I do not know whether I am much wiser or not, but I have experienced any way that there is nothing got by it.

1384. Supposing a farm becomes vacant, are there a good many applicants for it?—A good many.

1385. What is the cause of it?—I have never seen a man in my life but what he has an inclination for the land. If he is only a tailor or shoemaker he has an inclination for the soil; it is a healthy calling undoubtedly, and after we have said that I think we have said all.

1386. You contend that there is such a thing as land hunger?—Yes, in our locality. I do not know whether Wales is all like St. Fagans or not.

1387. Do you think that the question of rent between landlord and tenant is ever likely to right itself, that is, that the rent will become assessed at such an amount as will make farming a profitable occupation without the intervention of some sort of tribunal, such as a land court, as you have suggested. Do you think so?—No, I do not think it will. Unless Government take it in hand it is all up.

1388. And for the simple reason that there is a keen competition for farms?—Oh yes, there is

Mr. R. Jones—continued.

1389. As to the reason why you think you have had notice to quit. Do you mean that the farmers generally in the district have been meeting together to agree upon the claims of compensation against the landlord, or in what way do you put that?—I do not understand what you mean exactly.

1390. I will just put it very shortly. You speak as to the political bearing of the county council and so on. You also use the words "agricultural policy," I think. Do you mean by that that the farmers have been meeting to discuss the policies of landlords, and their claims upon landlords for compensation?—I never knew any case of the sort.

1391. Have you taken any special prominent part in matters of that kind?—No, not so much of it.

1392. Not more than your neighbours?—I have spoken rather freely, perhaps, when in company, but not in meetings. I do not know that I was ever in a meeting of the sort. In fact, we must not hold meetings on the subject in St. Fagans. If I went there to a meeting I should be there alone.

Professor Rhŷs.

1393. I wish to ask you which language you prefer to use, English or Welsh?—I am not very versed in either, but I am better in the Welsh than the English.

1394. You would have preferred to have read your statement in Welsh?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

1395–6. Do you know of any case of a notice to quit for causes other than nonpayment of rent?—My case is not for nonpayment of rent. My rent is paid. I do not owe a farthing.

1397–8. Do you know other cases?—In another case in which a farmer had notice to quit, it was for carrying his gun; that was not nonpayment of rent.

1399. That is the one already spoken of?—Yes.

1400. Do you know of any other case?—For nonpayment of rent?

1401. Of cases other than nonpayment of rent?—I do not know that I do.

1402. You spoke on several occasions of change of tenure being more common of recent years than in old times?—The cause has been chiefly through rising the rents.

1403. And not paying the existing rent?—The increase of rent. There is never a farm let on Lord Windsor's estate since I have been at St. Fagans without an endeavour to increase the rent, and in most parts the rent has been rose, and rose very greatly. My farm has been rose from 1*l.* to 30*s.*, or an endeavour to do so.

Chairman.

1404. There has been a question handed in by Mr. R. N. Hall. Is it not a notorious fact, generally known amongst the farmers of Glamorganshire. that Nonconformists are at a great disadvantage in applying for and occupying holdings?—Yes.

1405. That is your opinion?—I can prove it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

1406. Can you speak of other parts of Glamorganshire besides this neighbourhood?—Not far from this neighbourhood—close to this neighbourhood—within three or four miles.

1407. You are speaking of your own knowledge?—Yes, I am speaking of my own knowledge. I am not very widely known here, but I know of certain estates where Nonconformists need not apply, not only for a farm, but also a cottage; they are actually turned out of their cottage through going into chapels.

Lord Kenyon.

1408. Can you give us an instance of the last case you mentioned. Will you give an instance to the Secretary?—Yes, I will.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

1409. And the cottages have been refused?—Yes; actually, one tenant was turned out of a cottage last May Day. He had not turned out before the 1st of May, between 6 and 7 in the morning. He was told, "You must turn out by "12 o'clock—now, you must turn out into the "road, because you are a chapel-going man." He had been a tenant of the cottage 50 years.

Mr. Seebohm.

1410. And been a Nonconformist the whole time?—Yes, throughout his life.

Mr. Grove.

1411. Why did they not turn him out before?—Well, they were not bigoted in their creed then as, I suppose, they have become now. Re-examined, 26,334.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Williams called and examined.

Chairman.

1412. Where do you live?—1, Glossop Terrace, Cardiff.

1413. You are a contractor and corn dealer, and a retired tenant farmer?—Yes.

1414. Do you come from a farming family?—Yes.

1415. Your business keeps you very intimate with the farmers of Glamorganshire?—Yes.

1416. What portion of the country do you give evidence for?—The Vale of Glamorgan. I refused to go to Cowbridge to give evidence, but they have asked me to come here.

1417. Do you find there is any difficulty in getting evidence from the farming interest in this district, or do they readily come forward to give evidence?—Yes, they are afraid of their landlords to come and give straightforward evidence.

1418. In your opinion there is some difficulty of getting witnesses to come forward?—Yes.

1419. What is the general tenancy in the district?—Mostly yearly tenancy.

1420. No leases to speak of?—Very few.

1421. What are your opinions as to the sale of produce, and the custom of game in the district?—I think it ought to be left open for the tenant to farm as he likes, and if he cannot farm up to the mark he will not be very long farming. The better he farms the better the farm will pay him.

1422. Free from restrictions?—Yes.

1423. Have you any ideas about game?—I know something about that, too. I have been farming under a lease, which is an abominable lease all through. I will give you my evidence, if you like, from the start, and I will give it from memory. In 1879 we had losses on that estate, which was eaten up with game, to the extent of 300*l.* It was valued by Mr. George Thomas, of Ely, who gave evidence yesterday at Cowbridge, and he can give you every information and all the details. On my own farm in Llansannor they eat me up to about 160*l.* That was valued by Mr. Thomas, and I never got a penny for it, and Mr. Noah Rees' farm was eaten up very much in that year, and some others were obliged to go to Cardiff and give up their farms.

1424. On whose estate?—Sir Joseph Spaerman's, Llansannor Court.

1425. Which do you consider best for a tenant in Glamorganshire; a yearly tenancy or a lease?—A yearly tenancy. Provided he gets a fair agreement and fair rent a lease would be better, but he cannot get it from his landlord; he must take it according to his writing out, or be without it, and then he is at the mercy of the landlord to turn him out at any moment.

1426. Are there any very restrictive or harsh clauses in leases that you have known of?—Yes, if you will only look through this lease it will tell you.

1427. Are these harsh clauses generally enforced, or are they a sort of dead letter?—In some cases they are enforced. They did not enforce that on me because I gave notice in the seventh year to get a reduction, and I got it.

1428. With regard to unexhausted improvements at the expiration of a tenancy, would a tenant receive a proper valuation of unexhausted improvements?—Yes, so far as the tillages go, and for all the work he will do in the arable land, and the manure and the pasture land as well, he will get amply repaid for; but as to permanent improvements our custom does not go far enough, it does not protect the tenant there. As for the tillage he is amply paid for it.

1429. Can we take it that the permanent improvements are generally by the landlord in your district?—Well, very little is done by them, only to some of the buildings, or something of that kind.

1430. Is any interest ever paid or charged for permanent improvements?—In some cases they are.

1431. But not generally?—Not generally. In some estates they have to haul towards it.

1432. As regards the tenants hauling, is there any allowance made for that?—Only they get free, perhaps, of paying their interest. It means 10 per cent. interest in many cases.

1433. As regards reductions in rent, which have been very general, have you heard of any permanent reduction of rent in this neighbourhood. Have they been necessary?—Not in my district.

1434. Or temporary abatements?—A little temporary abatement, 5 or 10 per cent. and 15 per cent. in some cases for the last two years, but I have heard of land being risen the same as the last witness said, in many cases to a very great pitch.

1435. How do the rents of the farms compare. Is a small farm rented higher than a larger one or not?—The small one is dearer, 5*s.* an acre or more in many cases.

1436. We have been told in some cases that rent has been paid with borrowed money. Does that come within your experience?—Yes, I believe so in nine cases out of ten.

1437. They have to go to the bank?—Yes, they have to go to the bank, and they will borrow of anyone to pay the rent. They will sell their shirts, I think, rather than go to the audit without paying the rent.

Chairman—continued.

1438. We have heard of land going out of cultivation, and being laid down to grass. Have you had any experience of that. Have you seen that done?—Yes.

1439. At whose expense is that done?—At the tenant's expense. In some cases the landlords allow the seeds, and when the landlord allows the seed he will not allow the tenant to plough it up at all; it must lay there whether it pays the tenant to keep it up or not.

1440. Is the land keeping up its quality or not in your district?—With a small farm on the upland going over years sometimes it will go over 10 or 20 years. It must be manured, and manured every year or every other year at some expense, before it will come to anything.

1441. Can you tell us anything about the enclosure of commons and mountains?—Yes, a few in my district, I know, have been enclosed.

1442. Has that had a good effect or bad effect on tenants?—It has a little both ways. It is good for the adjoining tenants; it is relieved from trespass. The landlord has that benefit. He closes it in and charges a rent on the land, and before they had the privilege of grazing free of payment.

1443. Has any reduction of rent taken place in consequence of that?—I do not know of any.

1444. You say the right of pasturage would add to the value of a farm?—Exactly.

1445. Can you tell us anything about game. Does that come within your knowledge?—Yes. I was building on that estate in 1879, and Sir Joseph Spearman has preserved very greatly over it. I know of the case of one tenant where he made him sign before he touched the land that he would not touch the ground game or anything; and I could mention others. They are prepared to sign any information with their names and everything attached to it and give it to you privately as Commissioners.

1446. We have heard something about game farms. What is a game farm. Is that a farm where game is strictly preserved, or is it a farm solely and entirely kept for the preservation of game?—There is no farm to my knowledge kept purposely for it. There are spaces picked out here and there, for instance, out of my little estate there are enclosed pieces here and there.

1447. For rabbits?—Yes.

1448. A game farm in this district means a farm on which game is preserved and kept for the sport of the landlord?—Yes, for his sole hobby and so forth, and not for anyone but himself.

1449. You are not in favour of the game laws at all, I may take it?—Far from it.

1450. Can you tell us about the condition of the farmers' wives and children. Do they work on the farms?—Yes. They are obliged to work from early to late, and from bed to work and from work to bed.

Chairman—continued.

1451. How long do they stay with their parents. Do they stay up to the age of 21 years?—Some of them do not care to stay very long. If they can find a better place to go to, they will go, and some are obliged to stop with their parents to keep them.

1452. Do these children receive wages or not?—No, only in one case. I know of where they receive some pocket money, and that is very little, many a time.

1453. May I take it that this work done by the children of farmers is very valuable?—Yes.

1454. In fact it enables the parents to keep on?—Yes.

1455. As regards labourers, you have plenty of labour, or is it scarce?—I think labour is plentiful just now. The only thing is, the tenants are not in a position to encourage them and to till the ground in the way it should be tilled. The produce of the farms will not enable them to farm as they ought to do, and get a profit for themselves.

1456. Has there been any advance in the wages of labourers in your district?—It is just the same now as when I took that lease.

1457. How many years is that?—When I took that lease was 18 or perhaps 19 years ago, and it was just the same then as it is now.

1458. How many acres did you farm?—That one there is about 750 acres.

1459. A very large one?—Yes, in two farms. I only farmed the bottom farm, called Llansannor Court. A brother-in-law of mine farms the top one.

1460. As regards the allotment of small pieces of land for garden purposes, are they easy to obtain in your district?—They do not make very much use of them in many instances.

1461. There is no demand?—No. They do not have a proper place for them. They are put in a corner and out of the way, and it will take them half an hour to go there, and perhaps more.

1462. May I take it that the inconvenience of the position makes the demand small?—Yes.

1463. There would be a demand if they were in a better place?—Yes; if there was a good cottage and garden it would be an inducement for the tenant to stop there and make the best of it.

1464. Have you any ideas about a land court, or anything of that sort?—My idea is this, that if we do not get a land court to go in between the agent or the landlord and the tenant, I do not know what will become of this country in a very short time. I think that a land court would be the only remedy to have a fair rental fixed. I know farms now where if you were to reduce them 50 per cent. it would be impossible for the tenant to go on. They are 25 to 30 and 40 and 50 per cent. too high in many cases. The taxes, again, are very high. I think the ground rent and the royalties and the tithes ought to reduce the taxes.

1465. Are the tithes high?—Yes. I was paying at my place seven rents every year. I was in three parishes, I should say, I was paying the parson 60*l.*, 30*l.* every half year, and in another parish 10*l.*, and in Penlline parish once a year, that was about 5*l.*, I think, and altogether between 70*l.* and 80*l.*

Sir John Llewelyn.

1466. You said that many of the rents you know of have been paid with borrowed money. Who is it generally lends the money?—The bank generally, or some friend.

1467. Is that continued from year to year. Has it been in existence for a series of years, or is it very recent?—I think the last few years it is worse than it has been. I have been borrowing money myself nine times out of ten to pay rent.

1468. No one would continue to go on lending money year after year unless it was repaid?—No, it is a very hard case when you have to go and pay the landlord for extravagant rent, and they cannot stand it.

1469. I understand the tenants would first of all borrow the money rather than go to the landlord, and ask for a reduction or abatement?—They would borrow from anyone rather than go without the money to pay.

1470. Do they do that for more than one year consecutively?—I could not say for how many years, but I know in many instances they do.

1471. I ask you about the sequence of time. I quite understand its being done for one year?—I could go back as long as I was farming, so far as that goes, that is nine or ten years ago, and during my time ever since the wet season came in 1879–1880 it has been so.

1472. What is the character of the cottages for the labourers in your district. Are they good?—No they are not good, far from it in many cases.

1473. Do you find that constitutes a difficulty in getting the labourers to stay with you?—A great difficulty.

1474. The condition of the buildings?—Yes.

1475. Have they got any large cottages, or any plot of land attached to the cottages generally?—They are small cottages and very small pieces of garden as a rule.

1476. I think your holding was in Llansannor?—Yes.

1477. Is that the same land as Sir Joseph Spearman tried some agricultural experiments on?—He went to the same house that I had and tried to make a mansion of it for himself.

1478. You had 790 acres there?—Yes.

1479. How long have you been there?—Nine years.

1480. You held it upon lease?—I held it upon lease. I had two farms, one was at the Windmill, and that lease is in Llansannor. I farmed Caercady in the same year, 1875.

1481. You were a very large farmer at that time?—Yes, I paid 300*l.*

Sir John Llewelyn.

1482. You tell us about the time you were farming with your father, and the treatment you had from your landlord?—I could make a sermon like my friend Mr. Evans if I had time to go over it, but I am only a short preacher.

1483. You were protected by a short lease?—Yes, I took Llansannor in 1875 or 1876, and I went on very well for the first three years, and farmed as well as I could, and I raised up new banks there over 800 perches, and it cost me from 3*s.* 6*d.* to 6*s.* a perch.

1484. When was that?—1875, 1876, and 1877. The first three years I did all I could there, and I had it just like a model. I took down all old fences there for over 500 perches. I went on until Sir Joseph came of age in 1878. I never knew he was in existence when I signed that lease, but I was persuaded by the under agent, that is Noah Rees, and he said, "Oh, you "are safe enough on the Llansannor estate, "you can sign any mortal thing. We have "every privilege for ourselves," and so I had for the first three or four years, because I had the game to give to any gentleman I liked, but when Sir Joseph came of age he preserved at once, and we had notice not to touch them, and 1875 came and we were eaten out of our crops, as I have told you.

1485. During the time of your lease?—During the time of my lease.

1486. That was before the days of the Ground Game Act?—Yes, it was.

1487. I suppose in that lease the game, including the rabbits, was reserved out to the landlord?—Everything was preserved to the landlord. I did not know there was a landlord to come, or I would not have signed that lease.

1488. Who was the land agent at that time?—There was only an under agent. Wood and Merrick, of Crickhowell, were splendid agents, and if they had kept to Sir Joseph Spearman's agency I should have been in Llansannor court to day, and Sir Joseph Spearman would have been 5,000*l.* or 6,000*l.* better off, and I should have saved 2,000*l.* which I had to leave behind.

1489. In consequence of the game did you give up the lease?—No; I went on till the end of the seventh year, when I gave notice to my landlord for a reduction. The time had turned from 1875 until that time of the lease. There were seven years before the lease, and two in the lease. I had a short agreement between me and the present agent at the time. Then we went on for about a twelvemonth. But the agents and Sir Joseph could not draw it at all; he wanted this and that, and they would not be the agents any more, and resigned. Then Mr. Huntley, the present secretary of the "noble" farmers club at Cowbridge, came on, and if it were not for his action I should be there to-day, I am sorry to say. The first three years when I went there I bought some implements to the amount of 1,500*l.* in value, and more. You heard yesterday one gentleman say that his was the only farm on which there was steam tackle, but I had some steam tackle there, and my landlord having to take the farm and everything from me, would not take over the steam tackle, and the consequence was I had to have a sale, and I made 400*l.* out of implements which had cost me over 1,500*l.*

1490. Was that upon a forced sale?—No, it was not. After I went on upon the second term in the lease, I had a reduction of 90*l.*; somewhere under 100*l.* Everything went on nicely for the first year. When the new agent came on he wanted to alter this and that, and I had a notice to quit, and I was obliged to quit, and I had no place to go to. I had six months' notice, and I had to make the best of my stock and implements that I could.

1491. You were rather driven into a corner about your sale?—Yes, I was, very much.

1492. That is what I mean by calling it a forced sale. Now, as to the evidence you gave before. When you spoke of the custom of the county, I think you said it did not go far enough in respect to permanent improvements?—No, it did not.

1493. What do you mean by permanent improvements?—Such as the banks, and what I did outside on the farm.

1494. The buildings are usually done by the landlord?—I spent hundreds of pounds on the buildings, and I only got about one-sixth what I should get for them from Sir Joseph. I received something about 50*l.*, and I had to pay interest at 5 per cent. on it while I was there; but I should not grumble about it if they would have allowed me to go on upon the second agreement, but I had to go.

1495. Was that money, 52*l.* paid to you under the award?—Yes.

1496. In respect of embankments, ditches, and fences, you think that more ought to be allowed than is allowed under the custom?—Yes, I think the valuers ought to have more power to go into it.

1497. And in respect to laying down permanent grass?—Yes.

1498. Do you think that a further term should be given, that the valuer should be permitted to give more than they are under the custom?—Yes, I think so. I think our custom is better than the new Act, although I do not know much about the new Act, but we do not want a better custom than we have in our country at present.

1499. Only you think it may be a little extended?—Yes, that is for permanent improvements. As for the tillage, it is fair enough, because, as I have said before, the better for the farmer to go out the better for the incoming tenant. Then there were the new banks I put up. I planted all over the farm 60,000 quicks, which cost 30*s.* a thousand, and I did not get any benefit for the new banks. They did not come to "preferment" at all the first three or four or five years, and since that they are beautiful fences. It was like a wilderness before I took it.

1500. Did not the rabbits eat the quicks?—No. They were three year old quicks, and they were on the bank, and it was too high for the rabbits to get on to the top of the bank to eat them. The bank is 3 feet high, and the quicks were on the top. They could not get there, or else they would, I daresay.

Professor Rhŷs.

1501. I understood you to apologise to the Chairman at the beginning that you had not a sermon prepared?—Quite so. I am a short preacher.

1502. I hope you have not forgotten any important point in the sermon which you wish to give us?—I will endeavour to answer any question which you please to ask me.

1503. Do I understand you to say that you laid out a good deal of money on the buildings on your farm?—I did.

1504. Under a yearly tenancy?—Well, I put the buildings up when the lease was in power.

1505. But you would not invest much money in your buildings under a yearly tenancy, would you?—No.

1506. The custom does not cover that, does it?—No.

1507. Is the tenant usually expected to keep up the permanent buildings?—No, but in many cases he is obliged to, if he wants them, or he would be without them.

1508. With regard to borrowing money to pay the rent, is that not rather an advancing of money to await a sale of produce, or to await the sale of cattle at a fair, or something of that sort?—In some cases it is.

1509. Would you not think that was mostly the case; the banker could not go on for ever lending money to pay the rent?—No, but it comes like this. When he goes to the fair he gets less than he expected, and the balance is greater against him.

1510. But might he not get more?—Not the last few years. We do not remember such a year as this year; everything is very low.

1511. We cannot bring that home to anybody very much, can we, except the season and other things which we cannot control. What would you say was the cause of it?—Plentiful supplies from other parts, corn, beef, and mutton, and everything else.

1512. What would you suggest as a remedy?—You cannot put a tax on it, only get a lowering of the rent to compete with the foreigner.

1513. Do you consider that rents in your neighbourhood are generally too high?—Yes, 25 and 30 and 40 and 50 per cent., and more than that in many places. The farmers are afraid to come here to say so, but it is so.

1514. When one of those farms becomes vacant which are 50 per cent. too high, what about the competition for them?—In some cases they lower it to the incoming tenant, and give him more privileges than they would to the old tenant, if he wanted to stop there. They will give a reduction to the incoming tenant, but not to the old one.

1515. Is not that bad management?—That is the doing of the agent in many cases, and I am sorry to say they are the curse of our country.

1516. Now, about the children of the farmers who help them on the farms. How do they live. What do they have to eat and drink as compared with years past?—They have plenty to eat and drink. Milk is plentiful.

1517. Do they have better food than they used to have 20 or 30 years ago?—I do not think so. Food is not so plentiful in a farmhouse as when I was a boy. I know that from my father's time.

1518. What kind of food is not so plentiful?—There was plenty of everything in the house; there was bacon hanging, and you would not go to a farmhouse scarcely without seeing half a dozen hams, but now there is perhaps one, or one and a half—and it all goes to the landlord for extravagant rent.

1519. Is that quite so?—I am certain it is.

1520. Do you not think that they eat more fresh meat or butcher's meat than they did?—Well, they could, because it is a lot cheaper, I know. In my time I remember selling mutton at 11*d.* a pound, and now it is not more than 7*d.*

1521. What did you pay for tea and coffee. Did you have tea and coffee in those days?—Yes.

1522. What did you pay for them?—I left that to the women. I did not know anything about that, but I do not think it was much higher then.

1523. On the whole do you think they fare as well now as they used to do?—I do not think they are so homely. Food is not so plentiful. Certainly, they get enough of food, and they work hard enough for it.

1524. You spoke of a small farmer's family in the Vale of Glamorgan. What bread do they eat?—Wheat bread.

1525. Any barley bread?—No, no barley bread. In my time it was an option. If they wanted to eat a little barley bread in my time there was plenty of everything, so far as I can remember.

Mr. Grove.

1526. One question as to cottages for farm labourers. Do you think there is a scarcity of cottages through the district, taking it altogether?—Very scarce in many places.

1527. You farmed yourself 750 acres. How many cottages for labourers would there be on that quantity of land?—Well, only two.

1528. On 750 acres?—Yes. The top farm, the Windmill, I did not farm, only the bottom, that is about 500 acres.

1529. If more cottages were built on the farm, do you think it would have a tendency to make the labourers remain on the land, rather than go to the iron works and to the collieries?—Yes, it would be a great inducement for them to do so, and to keep them comfortable, and if you cannot do that you cannot expect them to work. I heard some of my friends give evidence which I did not like at all. They said you required now something like three to do the work of one 30 years ago. That is the fault of the farmer, and his own management. If he has good men and keeps them in good encouragement, they will do well.

1530. You think it is an important thing to have cottage accommodation?—Yes.

1531. As to railway rates, do you suppose that they are excessive now for farming produce in the district?—Very excessive.

1532. Do you think that farmers very often use their horses and waggons where, if they had lower rates, they would be glad to send by railway?—Yes, I know of many cases now. I am buying wheat all round the country, and I know, from places 12 or 15 miles off, that instead of putting it on at Cowbridge, which they would do if it were a fair charge, they bring it all the way to Llandaff Mills.

1533. And do you think that the farmers keep more horses in consequence of having to do that work?—Oh, yes, certainly; a team for every 100 or 150 acres.

Mr. Richard Jones.

1534. You said in many cases the landlord would not reduce the rent to an old tenant, but he would do so to a new one?—Yes.

1535. What conclusion do you draw from that?—Well, bad feeling from the agent.

1536. Anything else?—No, I do not know of anything else.

1537. You would not draw this deduction, that practically speaking the place is rented to the highest bidder?—Yes, it is so.

1538. When the landlord allows the old tenant to go, he finds that the place is only applied for by persons who will give a reduced rent?—Yes, that is so.

1539. I will ask you a question that is down in the syllabus. Has there been any considerable migration of farmers or labourers from your district within the last 50 years into other districts?—Yes.

1540. Into what districts?—Into the mining district: that is the labourers you mean now?

1541. No, farmers?—No, the farmers are really the same, I think. There is somebody farming the farms all the time.

1542. Are there any farms unlet in this neighbourhood?—I do not think so.

1543. You say that there is no migration of farmers from this neighbourhood into places like Essex, and other English counties, where a great many farms are unoccupied?—I do not know of any.

1544. What do you think is the reason that they do not go?—They do not like to lose their farm and go from their native place. I thought when I took that lease of spending the rest of my time there, or I would not be so foolish as to do that work, I lost 2,000*l.* when I had to go.

1545 Do you think the domestic ties among the Welsh people are closer than they are amongst the English. Do you think the relationship between the Welsh farmers is closer han it is among the English people?—Certainly.

1546. That is your opinion?—I know it is so close as this, that a farmer will not say anything against his landlord in case he loses his farm. He does not want to go from a particular place on any pretext whatever. You had a lot of farmers before you yesterday, but I do not know of one who wanted to get rid of his farm. What they wanted was a fair rental and fair play to pay for it.

Mr. R. Jones—continued.

Mr. Griffiths.

1547. Are the farm agents generally practical men; I mean have they received any special training?—I believe not in this country. There are Scotchmen coming down here, and they do not know anything. They have no sympathy with us down here, and even if they want anything done for themselves it must come from some other place. There is the Margam estate—Mr. Knox is there—he is farming it himself instead of letting it out to a tenant, and for everything he wants—if he wants a bailiff, for instance—he must go up to Scotland for it, and most of his workmen if he can get them, and even for an entire horse he must have a Clydesdale. They have no sympathy with us down here. I know that estate is full of game. It is the curse of the country. If you go down there and look at them you will see they are more like crows all over the place. Sir John Llewelyn knows something about that, I suppose; they dare not touch them, because if they did they would have to leave at once. I will give you an instance. There is Mr. Powell, of Eglwysnunydd, who had to leave in consequence of the game nuisance. I have not had authority to give you this information, but I will say it for the sake of the present farmers. The game is so much there, that if you put a piece of mangold in you are obliged to put wire all over it, and you could not see a mangold on the field but what has been partly eaten up by the hares, and you can see their marks on the wire as well, and yet the farmer would not touch them on any account, because he knows that he would insult his landlord. That was in Mr. Talbot's time. Now Miss Talbot is managing it, and then Mr. Knox came. The agent sent a man to the corner of a field to cut the ground for a house there without Mr. Powell's consent at all. I think I am in a position to prove that. Mr. Powell ought to be bound to give evidence. Mr. Alexander, who is here, knows something about that, because he had the sale there, and you know about it, Sir John. He is one of the best farmers in the Vale of Glamorgan, and I can prove it in this way, that when the Royal Agricultural Show was in Cardiff there was a prize given of 100*l.* or a cup for the best cultivated farm produce and stock, and Mr. Powell won the prize—I think it was for Monmouth and the Vale of Glamorgan, and the second prize went to Monmouth. That gentleman would tell you all about the game, and he ought to do so for the sake of his brother farmers.

See 49 5001.

1548. You consider that the agents are a little arbitrary?—Oh, yes.

1549. You spoke of the labourers just now. Do not labourers generally have potato ground with the garden besides the land they occupy?—Yes, in a good many cases they do.

1550. They find that sufficient as a rule?—Yes, they have plenty of time to plant new potatoes for the season.

1551. The farmers, of course, cultivate their land for them?—Yes, and he keeps it after.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

1552. You have used the term "fair rent"?—Quite so.

1553. You have also told us that the rents are almost invariably paid. By what method would you arrive at what is a fair rent, and what do you mean by it. Is it a rent distinguished from a competition rent?—I mean a fair rent to be fixed by a disinterested party—by a land court.

1554. Supposing a dozen men wanted the same farm, and the rent is what may be called a constant fixed rent at a fair sum, who is to decide which of the twelve applicants shall receive the farm?—The land court would do that, I suppose; everything must be left to the land court. If it is left to the agent, I do not know where they would finish.

1555. Let me put my question again. You were paying a very high rent, I mean high in the gross, I do not say high relatively—I do not know about that at present—736*l.* I suppose when you left the farm Sir Joseph Spearman tried to let it, did he not?—No, I was obliged to go out for him to go into farming. His present agent advised him to go in farming; to try his land for himself, to make a bit at my expense.

1556. The man who wants to get it gives as much as he can and the highest bidder gets it?—As a rule the landlord will let it to the highest bidder in this way. He knows he is safe of his rent because he is the first to catch hold of anything on the farm, and if he was on the same footing as other creditors he would be very careful to pick out the best tenant and not the highest bidder. In that way there is no fair play at all for a good tenant. He is obliged to compete with those who have not much experience or much money, although there are not many farmers who have much money in our country. I know that very well.

1557. That is a competition rent?—That is.

1558. That is a rent which some tenant farmer is ready to give for the particular holding?—Yes.

1559. And it is arrived at amongst persons desirous of going on the farm?—Yes.

1560. That is a competition rent?—Yes, the highest bidder.

1561. Calling that a competition rent, what do you mean by a fair rent? Let me put the point to you again. Do you mean by a fair rent a rent which a tenant farmer would be able to pay to the landlord, after allowing himself a reasonable per-centage by way of interest on the capital and labour which is involved in the carrying on of the farm?—Yes, that is what I mean, but if it is only worth 5*s.* an acre the landlord should not get more than that, if it is worth 2*l.* let him have it.

1563. I have rightly grasped your meaning of the term "fair rent"?—Yes. I say when an old tenant wants a reduction there ought to be a land court to fix the fair rental of the place. Now, if you ask about a reduction, I can name some places where they say: "Oh, you have "your remedy." "What is that? I have been "there so many years and I cannot pay for it, "I am losing money every year." "Well, give "notice, I have plenty who will take it." That is the answer directly. We want something to enable the present tenants to keep their holdings as long as they want to hold and pay a fair rental.

1564. The introduction of your system would involve some loss to the landlord, would it not?—In what way?

1565. Instead of the rent being fixed as it is now by bargain between landlord and tenant, or by putting farms to auction, or arriving at a competition rent in some way or other, you propose to have a court that would fix a fair rent?—Yes.

1566. That, I understand you, would be in most cases somewhat less than a competition rent?—Yes, quite so.

1567. That would involve a loss to the landlord, would it not?—Yes, because the landlord will let it if he does not farm the farm properly, and it is his loss at the end, no doubt. If he let it to a good farmer it would be for the landlord at the end too. But he does not; he lets it to some one who is the highest bidder, whether he can farm it properly it or not.

1568. I am only trying to ascertain your views; do not think we are taking one view more than another. By reference to what principle do you justify the infliction of this loss upon the landlord?—In this way. The farmer would perhaps go in there, and he would not farm up to what we call the four course system, and up to the mark which he ought to do, because he would not know what minute he would be turned from there. That is what I mean. If he was under the impression that he was to keep it as long as he liked to keep it going, and there was a land court, he would farm it up to the mark.

1569. You put it in this way, that if rents instead of being fixed by competition and bargain, as they are at present, were fixed by some other means at a fair rent according to your definition of the term, the result would be a benefit to the whole community although it might involve loss to the individual landlord?—Yes, it would be a benefit to the community at large and to the tenant. The landlord might lose, because it would be a lower rent.

1570. If what you suggest is to take some money from the landlord and put it into the pocket of the farmer, how does that benefit me or some person carrying on business not involving agriculture?—I say it is better for the landlord to have a good tenant than have the highest bidder.

Lord Kenyon.

1571. Are changes in tenancy frequent in this neighbourhood?—Yes, they have been.

1572. Very frequent?—Yes.

1573. What do you ascribe that to—depression in agriculture?—That is the main point, and the game eat it up.

1574. And too much competition?—If the tenant wants a reduction he is obliged to leave before he will get it, and someone else will come and give it. I know a couple of tenants had to leave because the game had eaten them up.

1575. We had evidence yesterday that the changes were not very frequent?—I say they are not in our district, but they are in some places, and more under the Margam estate than many other estates.

1576. Have the rents been raised in the Margam estate?—I could not say that. I think the other way about, because they left all the buildings to go to rack and ruin in Mr. Talbot's time. Although he died worth six millions of money he let all the estate go to rack and ruin.

1577. Is it not the fact that they are repairing the estate?—Yes, after the poor tenants are gone.

1578. That is not the fault of the present owners of the Margam estate. Are they not doing all they can to repair them?—Yes, they are doing so now, but they allowed them to go away when they ought to have made them stop.

1579. When you refer to any difference between landlord and tenant, you say it is no good referring to the agent. Are we to infer from that that it is difficult to get access to the landlord in this part of the world?—It is difficult, and it is more difficult still to get to the agent too in some cases, because they are higher than their landlord.

1580. Do you think it would be better if you could get easier access to the landlord?—Well, I could not say; it might be.

1581. Do you think the intervention of a third party is for the good of the tenant or harmful?—A third party disinterested to both would be a benefit for the community at large, and all the tenants as well.

1582. Even if that third party had no knowledge of the estate?—He would not be chosen by the land court if he had no knowledge of the estate. They would fix upon some umpire or practical gentleman who has experience and knows all about it, and if we do not get that this country will be very poor in another 12 months.

1583. Can you state at all the average of rent about here, roughly?—About the Vale, 1*l.*, more or less. In some situations, 30*s.*, and I know Lord Windsor has let some of his land at 2*l.* and 3*l.* an acre. I know some of his land has been let under the hammer the last few years, a lot of which the tenant ought to get instead of doing such a dirty thing as that.

1584. You would put the limit to 2*l.* or 3*l.* an acre. What is the highest rent in the neighbourhood?—I could not say the highest rent.

1585. Roughly speaking?—I am speaking of what has been taken now lately, some of it 2*l.* and some of it 1*l.* and a little more, and some 3*l.*

1586. And the lowest rent would be what?—1*l.* an acre, perhaps, but not on that farm alone, on other estates.

1587. And I think on your farm which you mentioned you paid about 736*l.* for 790 acres, according to this lease?—Yes, some of that varies again, some of it you can put at 10*s.* an acre and some at 24*s.* and 25*s.* when I took it.

1588. The average was a little over 18*s.*?—Yes, very likely, putting the two together.

1589. You would value the pasture higher than arable?—Yes, certainly, and some arable higher than the pasture too.

1590. What was the proportion of arable to pasture on that farm?—I could not say exactly; about 15*s.*

1591. I want the number of acres to average between arable and pasture?—The top farm there might be 400 perhaps of arable land, and the other 300 would make the pasture—pasture and moor.

1592. Very nearly half and half?—Yes, very nearly.

1593. That farm was not over rented?—Yes, it was.

1594. Although you were only paying an average of 18*s.* an acre for it?—Yes; I know it is too high now, and some of it has been let at 5*s.* an acre.

1595. You also said that the pasture sometimes took 20 years before it became profitable?—And sometimes never became pasture.

1596. Would not that be ground unsuitable for pasture?—Yes, certainly.

1597. And also ground unprofitably laid down?—That might be the case, too, in some cases.

1598. My experience of pasture differs from your own, if it takes 20 years to become profitable?—Well, in some parts of the country it will take more.

1599. You have given rather an unhappy account of the condition of the farmer's children, but in some evidence we have discovered that they do not take to farming life now?—Some do.

1600. Do they go up higher or lower in the scale?—Lower. The children of the working men are better off in many cases. They have schooling, and the children of the farmers cannot go—they are obliged to go by law, but in some cases they could not afford it.

1601. You think they do not rise but they rather fall in the social scale?—Yes; a party told me to-day that even the education of the children of the gamekeeper on the estate was better than he could afford to give to his children.

Sir John Llewelyn.

1602. You said that a good deal of land was being let under the hammer?—Yes.

1603. I presume you mean near to towns. Is that it, or is it so in counties outside, far away from the big centres of population?—There was a little sale in Cowbridge the other day when the St. Hilary estate was selling under the hammer.

1604. Is it common in the county or becoming more common. Is there much letting under the hammer by auction?—Yes, by auction. There was one farm often let, but now Mr. Howell, the draper, has it.

1605. Is it the common practice?—No, it is not.

1606. How is that injurious. Who does it hurt?—The farmer certainly.

1607. There is more competition?—Yes, but those tradesmen from the town will come out and give more than any farmer will ever manage for it.

1608. You do not say it is common in the county?—Oh, dear no, only an instance here and there.

1609. Only to a limited extent?—Yes.

Chairman.

1610. I have two or three questions to ask you that have been handed in by Mr. Hall. First, about the game; a witness stated at Cowbridge that in the Vale of Glamorgan there was very little game. Mr. Hall wants to know, is this your opinion?—No, it is quite the reverse.

Chairman—continued.

I could answer that if you will allow me a few minutes to explain. The gentleman that answered that question at Cowbridge had the sole right of shooting over the very estate on which I was brought up, that is Sir Aubrey Aubrey's. They are paying 6*d.* an acre since 35 years ago, I should think, and they held it ever since. The game is a great nuisance to the farmers all round. Take Penlline Castle again. There is more game in that corner until you get down to Margam than any other part I know.

1611. It is not your opinion that in the Vale of Glamorgan there is very little game?—No.

1612. I want you to understand that these are all questions put by Mr. Hall. Have you heard of 700 odd head of game being killed within two days?—Yes, I have.

1613. Do you know anything of the state of the farms on the Margam estates, especially with regard to game?—Oh, yes, they are swarming there.

1614. Do you find a landlord threatens his tenant with notice to quit unless he agrees to waive his right to ground game?—Yes, I am not allowed to mention names, but I know one who is prepared to send a statement with the name of his landlord and everything.

1615. Is there much competition for large farms?—No, not so much for large farms. Re-examined, 26,861.

1616. Is it not notorious that Nonconformist tenant farmers are at a great disadvantage in applying for or holding farms?—In some cases.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. THOMAS JOHN MORGAN called and examined.

Chairman.

1617. Where do you live?—At Plas y ddrainen, Rhigos, Hirwaun.

1618. What is your occupation?—A district road surveyor.

1619. Have you been brought up on a farm?—I have.

1620. You are the son of a farmer?—Yes.

1621. You know the farmers and the farming in this district?—I do.

1622. Is there, in your opinion, any difficulty of getting evidence from the farmers in this district or not?—There is.

1623. For what reason?—For fear something might happen to them, and they might be injured in some way.

1624. Do you know of any tenant farmers that have refused to give evidence?—Yes.

1625. Can you tell us anything about occupation. What sort of agreements are there in this district?—Verbal.

1626. Yearly or leases?—Yearly.

1627. Are the changes in tenancy frequent?—Not so very frequent.

1628. What is your opinion about rents; are they high, low, or moderate?—They are too high.

1629. Do they refuse to spend money owing to any circumstances in this district?—Yes.

1630. What is the reason they do not spend more money on their holding?—If they would spend money the rent would be advanced.

1631. Is there any permanent reduction of rent in this district?—No permanent reduction.

1632. What is the abatement of rent?—There has been 10 per cent., some years ago.

1633. What is the size of the farms in this district?—They vary to a great extent.

1634. Do you know of any farms having been consolidated?—Yes.

1635. With what result?—To the injury of the land.

1636. Why do you think that. What is the reason for it?—Because they cannot cultivate it so well; the farmer has not been able to do so.

1637. On account of labour?—On account of labour being too high.

1638. Do you agree with what we have been told, that rent is often paid with borrowed money?—I do.

1639. What is your opinion of the farmers of the district. Are they practical men. Do they know their work?—Yes, they are practical men, but not all of them.

1640. Is there any land going out of cultivation?—Yes.

1641.—Why is that?—Because the farmers cannot pay for cultivating it to the extent it ought to be cultivated.

1642. Do you know of any farms unlet?—Yes.

1643. How many?—Six or seven.

1644. Do you consider that land is in the same condition as it was, or has it deteriorated?—It has deteriorated; it is getting worse.

1645. Have any farmers to your knowledge reclaimed any portion of their own land?—Yes, some of them.

1646. Have you ever known during the last 30 years any improvements done by draining by the landlords?—Not the least.

1647. Is there any allowance made in the rent if the tenant makes any improvements?—Not at all.

1648. When tenants leave their holdings, are they able to get the value of their general and unexhausted improvements?—They are not.

1649. Not according to the custom of Glamorgan?—No.

1650. Do you know of any instance where rights of common belonging to the public have been disturbed?—I do.

1651. Was the land allotted then to the various farms?—No.

1652. What was done with it?—It was allotted to the landlords.

1653. Where land was allotted to the farms was an advance in the rent demanded?—No, not an advance in the rent, because they are letting this land to other people, not to the farmers.

1654. Can you tell us anything about game in this district?—The game do not trouble us much in this district. There is no game preserving round us to speak of.

1655. Are there more farms farmed by owners now than there were in days gone by?—Yes.

1656. More than in days gone by?—Yes.

1657. With regard to the farmers, do they work on their own land generally?—They do generally.

1658. They do the farm work?—Yes.

1659. And their wives also?—Yes.

1660. And the children?—And the children.

1661. Are they paid wages as a rule. Do the fathers and the mothers pay the children wages?—No, they do not.

1662. As regards the price of labour, what is the condition of the labourers at present. Are they better paid?—There is very little labouring upon the land in that way. They do not cultivate much of the ground.

1663. There are not many labourers on the land?—No.

1664. Do the labourers board and live at the farmhouse generally, or do they live in their own cottages?—They live in their own cottages generally.

Chairman—continued.

1665. In what sort of condition are the farmhouses and buildings and cottages generally in your district?—Very good under some landlords but not all the landlords. The buildings on some landlords' estates are very poorly.

1666. And some very good?—Yes.

1667. Is it easy to obtain small plots of land for allotments?—It is not.

1668. Nor to build labourers' cottages?—No.

1669. I suppose you will agree that the value of produce has fallen very heavily in the last few years?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

1670. For what district do you speak?—Rhigos.

1671. That is mostly mountain land?—Yes.

1672. So that it is very different to the land we have been hearing about down in the vale?—Yes.

1673. Do you say there is a difficulty about getting land for building houses?—Yes.

1674. There are no agricultural labourers as such in that district?—No.

1675. So that when you speak of a want of cottages for house room it is for men working in other industries than land?—Yes.

1676. You say you know of six or seven farms unlet?—Yes.

1677. Is that for want of tenants?—No, it is that they keep the rents so high that no person would take to them, and they would not drop the rent or reduce it.

1678. How long has that been the case?—That has been the case now for about 15 years. This is part of Breconshire, I am speaking of now.

1679. Up in the northern boundary of the county?—Yes.

1680. Are they sheep walk farms?—They are.

1681. And you say the land is going out of cultivation?—I do.

1682. Are they sheep walks not covered with sheep, or are they farms which were cultivated farms?—They are going out of cultivation.

1683. Were they once cultivated for corn?—No, for haymaking.

1684. What do you mean when you say they are going out of cultivation?—They do not mow the land.

1685. Do they put sheep on them instead?—Yes.

1686.—You spoke also of the commons being enclosed?—Yes.

1687. Were they enclosed under an award?—I cannot say; I do not think so. It was about 20 years ago that it was done.

1688. Were the rights of the public recognised at all?—Yes, then.

1689. And I suppose there was some award of the enclosure—some record kept somewhere or another of the enclosures?—No doubt of it.

1690. With regard to the six or seven farms that you say you knew of as being vacant, are they entirely unused. Are they not used for sheep walks?—The landlord keeps them in his hands.

1691. Does he make any use of them. Has he any stock on them?—There is stock there.

1692. They are not quite useless?—No, not quite useless.

Mr. Seebohm.

1693. You are speaking of mountain land?—Yes.

1694. Has the mountain land generally been enclosed about 20 years ago?—Yes.

1695. In great square blocks with high walls, or simply shut out from the neighbouring farms?—Not walls, hedges and ditches.

1696. Where it has been enclosed, has one farmer one of the blocks of land which have been enclosed and another farmer another, or has the landlord taken the whole?—He has given a block to other tenants.

Mr. Richard Jones.

1697. You said that you knew of several farms that were unlet and farmed by the landlord?—Yes.

1698. Was it because the landlord failed to let them to any tenants?—Yes, the rent was too high.

1699. And he chose to keep them himself?—Yes.

1700. You say also that there are more owners farming their own land now than formerly. Does that apply to large farmers or small farmers?—It varies. Some are small farmers as well.

1701. Do you know of any instances where small farmers have bought their holdings?—No, not small farmers. I know an instance where the large farmers have done so.

1702. Have they sufficient capital to pay for it?—No, not all of them. Some of them had.

1703. What do you think prompted them to buy the farms?—Owing to their families having been there some hundred years, and so on, and they do not like to go from them, and the fear of making any improvement, they were not encouraged to do so, and the fear of being turned out.

1704. Does the custom of tenant-right down in the Vale of Glamorgan extend to your district?—Yes, it does.

1705. Do the mountain farmers find it hard to pay their rents?—They do.

1706. Do the children generally stop at home working on the farm?—They do, and they go from home when they cannot get more money, and they assist their parents by doing so better than keeping them at home.

1707. These young people who go into the towns, such as drapers and ironmongers' assistants, you say send home money to the parents to assist to pay the rent?—Yes, they do.

1708. Could you furnish any instances in which that has been done?—I could.

1709. Is that frequently done?—No, not frequently, going away like clerks and so on, but frequently going to work.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

1710. Did you mention the name of the manor as to the common of which you gave evidence?—It is Hirwaun Common.

1711. That is Hirwaun, near Aberdare?—Yes.

1712. Was there a manor of Hirwaun?—Well, the Marquis of Bute is the lord of the manor.

1713. Was it he who prompted the Enclosure Act?—I cannot say for certain.

1714. To where did the waste of this manor extend. Was it in the valleys, the low lands, or the high lands?—In the high lands.

1715. So that the waste enclosed under this Act was a strip of the territory at the top of the hills?—No, the lower part of the hills in the valley.

1716. That before was regular waste land, unenclosed?—Yes.

1717. Although it was in the valley?—Yes; reckoning from the mountain it is in the valley, it is flat land.

1718. But with the hills rising each side of it?—No, only one side of it.

1719. What is the condition of the land say at the top of the hills there. Is that enclosed, and does that form part of the different farms in the district?—It has not been closed in, but the Marquis of Bute is the owner of that, and he rents it out to the farmers for sheep walk.

1720. For pasturage purposes?—Yes.

1721. Do you know anything of the term "ysfa"?—Yes, we call it "rhysfa."

1722. What do you mean by that?—As much land as one farmer has to keep his sheep or cattle on, or whatever it is.

1723. That is generally on what is called the table land of the mountain?—The mountain land.

1724. In this case that you are thinking of, are the farms all round the mountain on the slope of the hills?—Not on the slope of the hills; on the level ground.

1725. Are the holdings that are taken by the tenants on the slope of the mountain?—Yes, some of them.

1726. Have they a right of turning out their sheep on the mountain land above?—No, it belongs to another farmer or another tenant.

1727. You do not seem to follow the point I am putting to you?—I think I do.

1728. What do you say about it?—You asked me if they had a right to send to the mountain from the farms adjoining. This common has been allotted between different landlords, and now some of the landlords go up as far as the bottom of the mountain. Some farms belong to another landlord.

1729. You have told me that the waste of this manor of Hirwaun was on the land below?—The waste of the manor?

1730. Yes?—But the waste of the manor had been let out and closed in.

1731. I was asking you whether on the top of the hill there was any waste unenclosed land still?—Yes, unenclosed.

1732. It is all unenclosed and appropriated?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

1733. What is done with the land so enclosed and appropriated?—It is let out to tenant farmers.

1734. For ordinary farming purposes?—For sheep, what we call "rhysfa."

1735. They pay a rent to the Marquis of Bute for that?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

1736. Can you give me any information about labourers?—Yes.

1737. Are the houses good in your district?—Some good and some poor. Some have gone down to ruin.

1738. Those inhabited now?—Some of them are good now.

1739. How would you describe a good cottage now?—Say, three bedrooms.

1740. That would be a good cottage, I think. Are there any left with only one room?—Yes, there are.

1741. Many?—Twenty, perhaps.

1742. With only one bedroom?—Yes.

1743. You said it was difficult to get allotments just now. Is there any demand for allotments in your part of the world?—No, not at present. The demand has been, and they could not get it.

1744. Have they gardens to their cottages?—Yes, generally.

1745. Sufficient to supply their own wants or more than sufficient?—Some are more than sufficient and others not.

1746. Would you tell me who is the landlord of these six farms that you say were uncultivated, and which I take it the owner has taken to farm himself?—One Mr. Vaughan.

1747. He owns the six farms?—Yes, he holds the whole six.

1748. And he now farms those farms himself?—Yes.

Chairman.

1749. There is a question sent in by Mr. Hall: to what age do children work on farms without receiving wages?—They work to 20 years of age, perhaps.

1750. As late in life as that?—Yes.

1751. Mr. Vincent asks two questions: first, on what estates in this district do you say that there have been no permanent reductions?—Do you mean to mention the landlord?

1752. Yes?—The Marquis of Bute and another, De Winton, of Maesllwch.

1753. Any more?—No, I cannot recollect any now.

1754. Are there any small freeholders. Do you know of any small freeholders who own their land?—Yes.

1755. Do you consider that they are better or worse off than tenant farmers?—Some I do think are worse off.

Lord Kenyon.

1756. You say that the children work up to 20 years without wages, but do the parents provide for them in the future, and would not that be considered in lieu of wages?—The fathers or parents may not be able to do so.

1757. You think they may not be able to do so?—A great many of them.

1758. You do not know of cases in which a farmer has set up his son in another farm?—No.

1759. No case at all?—No.

1760. Or in business?—Yes, some in business.

1761. Do the sons when they are of sufficient age go to the works?—Yes, they do.

Chairman.

1762. There is another question sent in by Mr. Vincent: have the Marquis of Bute's rents been raised within the last 50 years?—They have.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. D. T. Alexander: Might I take this opportunity of saying that I could give you information in connexion with some property which was disposed of by Lord Bute in the district of Cowbridge, which was spoken to yesterday by Mr. John. I simply ask if it is a convenient time, as the auctioneer who conducted that sale, to state that I have in my possession the documents in connexion with that sale; and I should like to say a word or two which may perhaps be the means of removing a misconception which was created in the minds of the gentlemen who were present yesterday, if such a misconception did exist. I am quite in the hands of the Commissioners. I can only say, as you have been good enough to invite me to give evidence, my services are at your disposal at a later date, and if you think I should give this evidence now, I should be quite ready to do it. I think, with regard to the evidence of the late Mayor of Cowbridge, for whom I have the highest esteem, he was under a misapprehension with regard to some of the statements he made; and, as that has gone into the public press, I think I ought to state at once what were the facts connected with that sale. On the other hand, I am in the hands of the Commissioners.

Chairman.

I understand you wish to give evidence on one particular point on which you have personal knowledge, and you intend to confine yourself entirely to that point.

Mr. D. T. Alexander: That is so.

Mr. Edward John: If there is a statement made, I hope I shall have the same opportunity given to me for replying.

Chairman.

You can send up any questions you like to the Chairman, and they will be put through the Chairman.

Mr. E. John: I am obliged to you. I should like either to make a statement or send in the questions.

Chairman.

That the Commissioners will decide when the time comes, but so far as I am concerned, I can only allow questions to be put in the regular way.

Mr. D. T. Alexander: I can say in a few words what I have to say.

Mr. D. T. Alexander called and examined.

Chairman.

1763. I believe you are an auctioneer?—Yes.

1764. You live in Cardiff?—That is so.

1765. You are of the firm of Stevenson and Alexander, auctioneers, surveyors, and land agents?—That is so.

1766. You want to make a statement with regard to one particular point?—I see in the report of Mr. John's evidence, yesterday, that he says, in examination by Mr. Brynmor Jones:—"The squatters had fenced in portions of such "waste lands, and the chief rent was paid to "the lord of the manor, the Marquis of Bute, or "to his agent, Mr. Corbett. After these people "had built upon this waste land and enclosed "it, and paid rent to the agent, the enclosures "were sold, and they were turned out."

1767. What is that paper you are reading from?—I am reading from a paper Mr. John puts into my hands, the "South Wales Daily News"; it is the paper Mr. John gave me, and it is a recognised paper in the district. I think the "Western Mail" report is much the same. I have taken the version which appears in the paper he handed to me. What I want to say with reference to the sale is this, that these properties were not advertised as copyhold or customhold properties, but they were advertised as absolutely Lord Bute's freeholds. What I want further to say is this, that I think it is only fair towards Lord Bute to say, that my instructions were these before that sale took place; that every individual person who was in occupation of these lands was first to be offered the opportunity of purchasing at a nominal price, before they were put into the market to be sold in a public way. I think it is fair to Lord Bute that that statement should be made. I want further to say, that out of 60 lots which were for sale by auction, I think safely I may venture to say that more than half of those were purchased before we went into the auction room at a nominal sum by private contract by the occupiers, the tenants in possession. My instructions from Lord Bute were not to put any excessive price upon these properties, but to put some nominal consideration, and to accept whatever was fair and reasonable.

Professor Rhŷs.

1768. What was the nominal price?—In respect of the rent paid. For instance, the rents are stated here to have been chief rents. My instructions were that they were absolute rents and not chief rents. But so far was Lord Bute anxious that these people should retain their holdings that my instructions were to receive anything fair in consideration of the properties which had to be sold.

1769. Will you give us an instance which we can judge by?—Yes, I sold to the tenant of Llanmaes a garden near the Blacksmith Arms containing one rood. He gave me 1*l.* for it.

Mr. Grove.

1770. No building upon it?—No building upon it. I sold a garden at Llanmaes—two pieces, one two roods and another 31 roods—for 50*l.* to the tenant.

1771. That varies from 1*l.* to 50*l.*?—Yes; and in some cases probably more. The total amount of the sale came to 1,500*l.* There were 60 lots, so that it is easy enough to strike an average.

1772. Sixty houses?—No, very few houses.

1773. How many, because that is the gist of the whole thing?—There appears to have been 18 cottages. That is all I have to say.

1774. Eighteen cottages built upon small plots of land?—Yes, with land.

1775. I understand you to assent to the statement of Mr. John that the persons who were in possession, or who had recently been in possession, at the time of this sale, had built these cottages at their own expense?—Oh, no; I am not able to prove that.

1776. Do you assent to it?—I know nothing of that.

1777. I thought you came to disprove Mr. John's statement?—What I came to say was this. That I thought it was fair towards Lord Bute that the statement should be made that in every individual case these persons were offered the opportunity of purchasing the holdings before they went into the auction. That is all.

1778. Why should he offer property at a nominal sum if there were no peculiarity about it?—It is a matter for Lord Bute, not for me.

1779. You are not authorised by Lord Bute or his agent to come here and make this statement?—Undoubtedly not; I do it perfectly independently.

1780. So far as Mr. John's evidence goes, stating that these cottages had been built at the expense of these persons, you are not able to contradict or affirm it?—Undoubtedly not.

1781. And so far as your evidence goes there is some confirmation, is there not, in the fact that you were able to sell at a nominal sum to the occupier?—You may take it in what way you like with regard to confirmation. That is a matter for individual opinion.

1782. A large part of your evidence is individual evidence?—Exactly.

1783. How many of these cottages were bought by the occupiers?—Well, as near as I could judge without going through those particulars, more than half of them.

1784. At sums of 1*l*, and upwards?—Yes.

1785. You said something about absolute rent. What is this distinction between absolute and chief rent in your mind?—I understood these rents were being paid by these people in return to Lord Bute as freehold, and not as customary-hold or copyhold property.

1786. That they were ordinary tenants?—Yes, ordinary tenants.

1787. Mr. John's evidence goes to show that they were very extraordinary tenants; that seems to be the point?—I am unable to disprove that—extraordinary tenants in what way?

1788. That without any agreement having been come to with reference to building or building lease they had, as I understood it, trespassing upon waste, built their cottages?—Yes; possibly.

1789. And remained in possession some years?—Possibly.

1790. But they had to attorn, so far as they could attorn, to the Marquis of Bute by paying a small sum?—Yes; they had the opportunity of becoming purchasers.

1791. Then you mean it was not a rack rent when you say it was not an absolute rent?—So I understood it to be. It would appear to me from that statement in the papers as though Lord Bute had been selling really what did not belong to him.

1792. I did not understand that at all?—That was the impression created in my mind.

1793. So far as your evidence goes it rather tends to confirm the suggestion of Mr. John?—That is a matter for opinion.

Mr. Grove.

1794. In what way did you communicate with the tenants of these plots so as to give them the opportunity of purchase?—I sent a special notice round, and then I may tell you on the morning of the sale they came there, a large number, and settled before we went into the auction room. There were a considerable number who did not settle, and they went and took their chance in the regular way.

Sir John Llewelyn.

1795. I want to see whether your instructions were to sell this property as ordinary property?—It is advertised as freehold property—here is the advertisement—it is sold as 70 lots of freehold land.

1796. At the sale were any challenges raised as to ownership?—Yes, they were raised at the sale. I assumed that if the title had not been perfect the purchaser, under the usual conditions, would not have taken them.

Chairman.

1797. The following questions have been handed in, and they are all questions from Mr. John. Why were certain lots withdrawn?—Because they had been bought previously by private contract.

1798. If these waste lands were Lord Bute's freehold, how is it that he did not own the adjoining land?—That I cannot answer, and do not pretend to answer. I cannot possibly answer that.

1799. Why did Lord Bute, in one instance, pay compensation rather than dispute ownership?—That I do not know. Lord Bute must answer for himself; I cannot answer for Lord Bute.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Well, I do not know. I think you should. You volunteered.

Chairman.

1800. There is another question. Does Mr. Alexander admit that Lord Bute sold houses for his own benefit on which he had not expended any capital himself?—That I cannot answer. I do not know whether he had or not.

1801. Are the papers shown by Mr. Alexander a proof of Lord Bute's ownership, and is there a proof of this waste land being hereditary property?—Well, the answer to that is that the Commission must determine and not Mr. Alexander.

Mr. Grove.

1802. You say that some of the lots you think were not sold at the sale because they had been previously sold. Do you give that answer?—Yes.

1803. Were not some lots withdrawn at the sale because the question of title was raised or some dispute as to title?—I do not think there was a single dispute at the sale. I think every one was sold. No, I am wrong. Here is a lot withdrawn at 66*l*. It was a cottage and brewer's house at Sigginstone; it probably did not fetch as much money under the circumstances as they thought a place of this kind may have been worth. I want to say, as I have received a cordial invitation to give evidence generally, I shall be pleased to place myself at your disposal when you require me.

Mr. Edward John: I may say, my Lord, I shall be able to substantiate any evidence that I have given.

Mr. David David called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

1804. You are a tenant farmer and live near Pontypridd?—Yes, at Ty Maen, three miles below Pontypridd.

1805. What district do you give evidence for?—Eglwysilan parish.

1806. Have you valued many farms in this district for in and out tenants?—Yes, many.

1807. Is there any demand for leases?—I do not know of any. The price of cattle and corn is too low, therefore there is no demand for leases.

1808. Could the Vale of Glamorgan custom be improved by making the valuation include all tenants' improvements?—No doubt it would be an improvement.

1809. Have any tenants failed to your knowledge, and if so, why?—They have failed because the rents are too high, rates and taxes too high, and the price of labour too high.

1810. How are farms generally let?—By an agreement between the tenant and the owner.

1811. Are they generally let to the highest bidder?—Yes, if the landlord is not a good one.

1812. Are farmers reluctant to lose their holdings, and do they struggle very hard to keep them?—Yes, they do.

1813. Have rents risen during the last 30 years?—Yes, they have risen and gone down, and they have risen again.

1814. Are tenants generally taxed on their improvements, is the rent raised on their improvements?—That depends upon who the agent is. When the agent dies, the agent who succeeds him is very apt to make the place pay better than the preceding one, and consequently he takes advantage of the improvements made upon the land by the tenant.

1815. Have you known of any permanent reductions of rent?—No, not permanent.

1816. Any temporary abatements?—Yes, there was 10 per cent. from our own landlord at the beginning of this month, and we are much obliged to him for it.

1817. Is the increase in rates paid by the tenant or by the landlord?—By the tenant, if the rent goes up the rates and taxes will go up.

1818. And they are paid by the tenant?—Yes.

1819. What sort of land is it in your district?—Middling ground throughout the district. The district is eight miles long and six miles wide, and there are upon it over 18,000 inhabitants.

1820. Is any land going out of cultivation or going down in value?—Yes, much.

1821. Are there any farms unlet?—I do not know of any.

1822. Do you know anything about the enclosure of mountain land?—Yes, I know there is a piece within a short distance of this town enclosed mountain land.

1823. What is your opinion about railway rates?—I cannot complain much about the railway, for I never travel by it.

Chairman—continued.

1824. Do the farmers' wives and children work on the land?—Yes, otherwise the farmer could never pay for his land.

1825. Have you ever known children up to the age of 35 years receiving no wages?—Yes, scores. They have had only food and clothing and a shilling in their pockets now and then.

1826. May we take it that labour is insufficient in your district?—Only old people stay behind. The young people go to the work districts, receiving more wages and having fewer hours for their labour.

1827. What sort of labourers' cottage accommodation is there in the district?—The next district to where we live there are but very few of them, there are a great many in the district.

[From this point the witness was examined in English.]

1828. I can ask you in English what remedy do you suggest for this state of things?—According to the present time the only place I could look for it is from the landlord. The taxes are going up, workmen are going up, and in the face of depression so much as it is, I think we have no other place to go to but the landlord for a reduction in rent.

1829. This is a question handed in by Mr. Hall, is it your opinion that given fairness of rent and security of tenure, more capital and more industry would be employed by the tenant in the farming of his holding?—Yes, I believe so, because they would have a little more money to put out.

Lord Kenyon.

1830. You said you knew a number of tenants who had failed. Can you give any instances?—Not so very many, but there are in our district tenants who have failed—who could not pay the rent; it was too high.

1831. Not from bad farming?—Well, perhaps a little bad farming as well.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

1832. One question about mountain land, if you please. Have you anything particular you would like to tell us about that as to the effect of the enclosure?—No. There is another from our district who will give evidence on upland farming. That is Mr. Thomas Williams.

1833. Perhaps you can tell me this: When the enclosure took place was there any part set aside for recreation ground, say?—A few acres here by the town.

1834. How many?—I cannot say how many, perhaps four or five.

1835. How far from town?—About a mile.

1836. Is it used by the people of the town?—It is.

1837. That is vested in some trustees?—Well, I believe so.

1838. Somebody manages it?—Yes, some one from down here; but I do not know who.

1839. It is in fact used by the people?—Yes, it is.

1840. Was any part set aside for allotments for labourers?—Not that I know of.

1841. How are the labourers off in this district you speak of, Eglwysilan?—They are pretty fair I think. We are obliged to pay them good money and then they can live well.

1842. What money do you pay the hired labourers outside generally?—From 15*s.* to 18*s.* a week.

1843. What do they pay for their cottages generally?—They do not live in a cottage belonging to the farm. There are only two little cottages belonging to my farm, and I cannot say much about others.

1844. The people who live on your farm pay you the rent for that?—Yes.

1845. That is included in your holding?—Yes.

1846. How many rooms are there?—Two rooms downstairs in one and two in another, and one cottage is very poor on our farm. I hope the college will mend the one going out of condition

1847. This is a college farm, is it?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

1848. Are there any provisions made by the landlord for laying down the land in grass?—No, we hope there will be more of it, because I have put fields down these six years ago. When the turn came in the corn to go so low, I put it to grass ground, but it will take 20 years to pay for its own self. I manured it well; that is a great advantage. I carried from Pontypridd in the year before 400 tons of dung, and I am in a very bad position. If the agent dies, and the college send another agent, he will be sure to rise my farm on my own improvement.

1849. You do not tell us how these 18,000 people are supported?—Over 18,000 in that district.

1850. How are they supported. They do not live on the farms?—Dear me, no—coal works, and the water—sour water—running from the coal works in our district, ruin the ground and it makes the ground poor through it, and makes a mess of it because it is the Rhondda coalfield. I hope the landlord will get very rich at some time from having the coal, and then, perhaps, he will do something for us.

Mr. Richard Jones.

1851. What is the character of the farming in your district?—Some low land and some up land.

1852. Do you rear stock, or go in for dairy or tillage, or what?—A little of both—try to keep as many as I can, rearing some, milking some, and with sheep again I try to do my best to get money to pay my landlord and pay my way.

1853. Where the population is so thick one would think that they would require a good deal in the shape of butter and milk and bacon.

Mr. R. Jones—continued.

Now, do you try as farmers to turn your attention to those profitable branches of farming?—I have not seen these five years any profits for anything I have tried.

1854. Have you tried to rear pigs?—Yes, and they pay very well at the present time, but in a twelvemonth they will not be good enough to look at.

1855. You ought to be able to accommodate yourself to circumstances; breed when it is good time, and do not breed but take up something else at another time?—If you do not keep breeding all the time you are sure to miss some good time.

1856. Is the herbage suitable for dairy purposes?—You cannot see it better about here. There is not a patch of good ground in my district. We get a middling good grass and good hay, only you must carry plenty of good manure to it. It is all sand and gravel.

1857. How are you off for water?—Plenty of water.

1858. That is necessary for getting butter and cheese?—You cannot make butter or cheese with water.

Mr. Grove.

1859. One question about railway rates. You said you did not know much about railways. Have you ever sent any stock or any of the produce of the farm by railway?—I travel myself now and then. The canal comes by our side, if we want to send to Cardiff, Pontypridd, and Merthyr, and that is cheaper than the railway and we take little trouble about the railway.

1860. Do you think that the high railway rates in the district are damaging to the interests of farming?—I cannot say much about it.

Professor Rhŷs.

1861. Were you born at Tymaen?—Yes.

1862. Your ancestors had been there before you?—I asked Mr. Edward David, of Llandaff, when he was alive and agent, if he could make out how many years the family were in Tymaen, and he said, "I will look into it and let you know." About a couple of months after I was going to him on business, and I asked him if he ever did find out anything, and he said, "No——." "I know that it is over 300 years. I "believe it is nearer 400 than 300, according to "what I heard my father say." He said, "I can- "not say; there are no books keeping an "account of how long the family were in the "farm."

1863. You and your ancestors have occupied the farm for about 400 years?—I believe, near it, and you must have a good landlord before the family would stand there so long under it, and get their bread and cheese. (The witness turning to the Chairman.) That is my master who is asking me these questions.

Chairman.

1864. There is a question put in by Mr. Hall. I do not know whether you will be able to answer this question, but is the recreation ground enclosed for Pontypridd now quarried by the lord of the manor?—It is. There are three quarries there on the recreation ground.

2026.

1865. It is now being quarried?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

1866. Is there any explanation of this quarrying upon this land allotted for recreation?—I believe, because Lord Bute receives some money for it.

1867. You mean for the quarrying?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

1868. Do not those who are concerned in the maintenance of the recreation ground, the trustees, or the churchwardens, or overseers, or whoever they are, intervene. How is it they do not intervene?—I cannot tell you what is the reason of it. (The question was interpreted to witness.) Because they are more simple than they ought to be. I think that with the benefit Lord Bute received from the quarries, the trustees or the managers do not like to interfere, because he is a landlord and a big man in our country.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Jenkins called and examined.

Chairman.

1869. You are a tenant farmer?—Yes.

1870. And you have been selected by the farmers of your district to give evidence for the eastern district of Glamorgan?—Yes.

1871. Where do you live?—At Wernydomen Farm, near Caerphilly.

1872. Are you well acquainted with the district?—Yes.

1873. Do you consider that there is a demand for leases?—No, because people do not like to be fixed in farms that do not pay.

1874. Are changes in tenancy more frequent?—I could not say that changes in tenancy are much more frequent, but they will very likely be in the course of a very short time.

1875. If the depression continues?—Yes.

1876. Are there any small grievances in the district that you are aware of; any difficulties between landlords and tenants. Tell us anything that comes within your practical knowledge?—Well, a case was brought under my notice a few days ago of a widow having been served with notice on the 2nd of February last to deliver up a field on or before the 2nd February 1894. The field has been taken possession of by the landlord before the expiration of the notice, and a house is being built there. The widow had hauled 25 loads of manure to the field last winter. The agent told her she might possibly get 1*l.* as compensation, when, according to our custom, there is over 4*l.* due to her for manure alone. Undue advantage has been taken of the widow, who has asked me to see to her claim and interest in the matter.

1877. Under the custom there is 4*l.* due?—Yes.

1878. Why is that 4*l.* not enforced?—It will be enforced.

1879. Why did the widow not get the 4*l.* if the 4*l.* was due?—Her claim is equally good now, although possession is taken of the field; she will eventually get it.

1880. That is the only case of hardship that has come under your notice?—That is one which has come under my notice recently. All who live by agriculture have their hardships, their chief hardships are to pay their rent and meet their other liabilities.

Chairman—continued.

1881. Under the large landlords do these sort of cases occur?—No, I do not mean to say that they do; not so frequently.

1882. Can you tell me about rent. The land is let. Who generally gets it?—Well, the land is let to the best man, and the one that will give the most money for it.

1883. Whether he is the best farmer or not?—They try and ascertain whether he is a good farmer, and whether he is likely to pay them and all those things, and of course they value a good farmer better than a poor one.

1884. You think that a legitimate farmer could not afford to take land near a town, because it would be too expensive?—I do not consider land of the same value to everyone. Some people may give a little more for land than others, and it will pay them to do so. Take, for instance, the land near a town. A man who has horses and hauling near the town, if there are 20 acres to let near the town, it will pay him better to give more than a legitimate farmer for that land. For market gardening also they go to high prices near towns. No doubt they pay these people, but they would not pay the farmer to farm in that way.

1885. When you readjust rents do you generally go to arbitration?—No.

1886. In the last 30 years have rents gone up to your knowledge?—Yes. During those prosperous years rents rose considerably; but I could not say good landlords took advantage of those times.

1887. They did not take advantage of those times?—No, I do not think the best landlords did.

1888. As regards permanent reductions, have any come within your knowledge?—Very few. I may say I had a permanent reduction myself of 20 per cent.

1889. Have you had an advance?—I had a little previous advance. There were two little additions made to my farm, and there was a little extra put on to what I paid previously. Those additions increased it a little, and then I found the farm too dear for me, so I gave notice to my landlord, and got an abatement.

1890. What do temporary abatements run to?—10 to 15 per cent.

1891. Have previous notices been given of those abatements?—No.

1892. Have you ever known cases where rents have not been reduced until three or four tenants have failed in their holdings?—When rents are reduced under bad landlords, we require two or three, or half a dozen failures, and then the rents are reduced. I know two or three instances of the kind, where rents will not be reduced unless there are those failures.

1893. As regards charges on the land, are they generally paid by the tenant?—All charges on the land, with the exception of the landlord's income tax, are generally paid by the tenant, but there have been additional rates upon the land upon many farms since those farms have been taken by the tenant, such as school board rate. I do not suppose that a great many tenants ever agreed to pay that rate. Under those circumstances I believe that is the landlord's tax, if the tenant never agreed to pay it.

1894. As a practical man, what sort of farm do you think is the best— a small or a large farm?—I think large farms are preferable to small farms.

1895. What do you call a large farm?—A farm from 400 to 500 acres.

1896. Is there any waste land reclaimed in your neighbourhood?—There was a great deal of that done in prosperous years, but not so much now lately. Land will not pay for a lot of expense in connexion with reclaiming at the present day.

1897. There has been a lot of pasture laid down?—Yes, a lot of permanent pasture. I have laid down permanent pasture, I daresay, on 100 acres, and I have laid 10 acres the last season.

1898. Have roots decreased in the district;—Where arable land has decreased, roots must in consequence decrease, if the same rotation of crops are kept.

1899. With good landlords you think the tenants feel secure, and do a great deal more to their farms?—Yes, that is my experience. I do not think the best landlords take undue advantage. I have not experienced it.

1900. As regards the custom of Glamorganshire, do the farmers value it although they think it does not go quite far enough?—We value the customs of Glamorgan, because I believe it is preferable to either of the Agricultural Holdings Acts that we have. Under those Acts you have to give notice to the landlord of the intending improvement, and you in consequence get under the Act of 1883. Then when you get under that Act, and the tenancy is determined, it gives an opportunity for the landlord to claim dilapidations against the outgoing tenants' compensation, which leads to litigation oftentimes.

1901. Can a tenant dispose of his interest when he goes out of a holding. Can he bring in the man he wishes?—Yes, by the consent of the landlord.

1902. Is that generally given?—Yes, it is generally given under a good landlord. I know a good many instances in which it has been done. I have not found they object.

1903. I suppose you have the same sort of evidence to give about tenant farmers and their wives that we have heard before—that they work hard, and their children are a great deal of use to them?—Yes. Farmers and their wives work very hard, and they work for nothing at the present day.

1904. And without them the farm could not be kept on?—Unless he is a practical man he cannot make anything of a living at all. It is an up-hill game altogether.

1905. Have you any remedies you would like to suggest, to make a better state of thing?—I do not know with regard to the remedies. I have a table worked out here. I find the depression is more than the rents. In that table I have taken what I consider the fair prices for the produce in this district, in times neither very prosperous nor indifferent, and then I have taken the present prices. I have worked out the per-centages upon eight items, and averaged that by dividing it by eight and I find 35¼ per cent.

1906. The average depression?—I have taken as an example a farm at 100*l.* rent. Now we all agree that a farmer at 100*l.* rent must make three rents, or in some cases four. I am obliged to make four myself. I have an expensive farm to work. My farm is over 400 acres, and I have 200*l.* rent to pay for it. In nearly all cases it cannot be done unless the tenant farmer makes three rentals.

1907. Do you mean four times the rent?—Yes, four times the rent.

1908. To live?—Yes, to live and pay my way.

1909. And have something laid by?—No, not even any per cent. on my invested capital in the farm. Well, take any fair per-centage on your investment, which I do not think you can get when you only get three rents. We think we ought to make three rents with the greatest economy, and without any expenditure in artificial food stuffs, manures, or anything of the kind. I do a great deal of that, but then I am obliged to make four rents to meet it. The next is, if we take the depression upon the three rents, it would mean 5*l.* 15*s.* more than the rent. We talk about 25 per cent from the landlord, I should like to have 50. I think we must take what we sell off the farm. It is not the rent. It is the three rents or four rents, and the depression upon the three or four rents. Take a rent of 100*l.* a year, the depression upon that rent is 105*l.* 15*s.* according to this table I have worked out.

Chairman—continued.

1910. The rent averages 100*l.* a year?—Yes, on the low land; I believe they are 15*s.* to a pound on the low land here. The average side land is from 10*s.* to 12*s.* an acre.

1911. You would like that table put in with your evidence?—It is at your disposal.

	Fair Prices.	Present Prices.	Reduction.

Sir John Llewelyn.

1912. What have you to say about labour. Do you employ much labour upon your farm?—Yes, I have eight men and a boy.

1913. Have you good cottages for them?—I have five on my farm.

1914. In good repair?—Yes, fairly well. I have two new ones now lately.

1915. You find that an important element in getting good men?—Yes, I do.

1916. Have they land attached to them?—No, a good garden and place to run a pig, and a potato ground in the field. They have my horses to work it, and I give them 18*s.* a week, and they have been a great number of years with me. I have been paying as much as 1*l.* a week to the same men.

1917. Being in a colliery district you find you have a pretty good market close to your door?—I send my produce generally to Cardiff. I keep a dairy and the produce of that also is sent there, as I have a house and milk walks in Cardiff.

1918. Do I understand you have about 500 acres?—Over 400.

1919. What proportion of that is pasture land?—About 300, but a good deal of it is rough pasture and very useless land.

1920. About two-thirds?—Hardly one-quarter arable—for my own use in growing roots.

1921. Are you very near Caerphilly?—Yes.

1922. Do you make cheese?—No, I do not.

1923. You find milk most profitable?—It is not very profitable, there is a lot of loss on that. I have lost in Cardiff in the aggregate 150*l.* on milk through bad debts. There is a lot of loss to it, and the railway rates are high, they charged at one time a penny a gallon for the milk going down there.

1924. Do they charge for returned empties?—Not from Cardiff to Caerphilly.

1925. Was that increased?—It was increased a few months back, but they have lowered it a little. I pay over one halfpenny a gallon for that short distance even now.

Professor Rhŷs.

1926. You say that you do not make cheese?—I do not.

1927. Does any one in the district about Caerphilly make cheese now. It has been celebrated for its cheese, I know?—Yes, a great many make cheese there now, and I think there is a good market for it; and I think they are as well off as those selling milk, and better, perhaps, and I have been in the trade some years. Winter feeding for the cattle producing milk must be considered.

1928. You do not think that making cheese at Caerphilly is a bad business?—No, not if they can get a fair price for it.

Mr. Grove.

1929. What remedies would you propose to apply to improve the state of things you have mentioned. You have put in a table showing that on typical farms 100*l.* rent would lose 105*l.* 15*s.*, so that if you pay no rent at all, at the end of the year you would be 5*l.* worse than nothing. Is that right?—Yes.

1930. Clearly we cannot expect to get much help in that direction, because no landlord would let his farm for nothing at all and throw in 5*l.* 15*s.* to the bargain. Have you any suggestion to make?—I am positive of this other fact, that some 25 years ago tenant farmers could pay the present rentals better than they could if they had the farms free to-day.

1931. What does that arise from?—From the depression and foreign competition; that is the root of the evil. I could possibly name something which would be a remedy, if we got it, but I doubt very much whether we should get it.

1932. What is that?—The only remedy is protection.

1933. In the meantime, is there anything else, do you think, which could be done. Does not foreign produce come into this country and compete with our own produce to a great extent. Could we not do something by having the butter and cheese labelled, and should not the foreign meat, for instance, be labelled?—Yes, that is Lord Winchelsea's scheme. I have it in my pocket, and I read it this morning.

1934. As to taxation, do you think it possible that the burden of taxation might fairly be taken from the land and put on some other sources?—Land is made to bear more than its proper share, and I believe that personal property should be taxed. If a man has 5,000*l.* or 6,000*l.* invested in anything, he does not pay any poor rate, or rate upon it at all; he pays income tax. I cannot see why that should escape when the land has to bear the burden.

1935. Do you suggest anything else?—It would lighten our taxation very considerably if the stocks and those things were taxed, ground rents and things of that sort—it would lighten the burden upon the land.

1936. Ground rents and royalties is what you mean, I suppose?—Yes.

1937. What is your idea as to a land court?—Any burdens that would be taken off the soil, of course, would be beneficial. I look at it in this way: if there was 20*l.* in taxes taken off a farm, that farm is at once of more value to the landlord by 20*l.* He cannot take advantage of advancing that rent until he finds an opportunity of doing so, and I have no hesitation in saying that bad landlords would, when they had an opportunity, take advantage of that. They would turn round and say, "You have less rates "and taxes on your farm, so that you can pay "additional rent." I do not mean to say our best landlords would take those advantages, but if we had a few flourishing years no doubt those advantages would be taken by some. The land court would be a remedy in that direction. Whether it would be wise to have a land court is another matter. We like to let our own property, and any property people have I do not know whether they would like others to manage it better than themselves, but I believe in cases where those advantages are taken, the only remedy for that state of things would be a land court.

1938. As to co-operation amongst farmers. Is there any co-operation amongst farmers, to your knowledge, for the purpose of seeds, implements, and so on?—Not that I know of.

1939. Would not co-operation be useful in somehow bringing the farmer nearer to the consumer, and so saving the profits of middlemen?—I have no doubt it could be done more than it is. Take for instance a sack of five bushels of wheat, which is sold for the miserable price of 15*s.* That is bought by a miller, and then by the shopkeeper and the baker, and when it reaches the consumer it costs him about 2*l.*

1940. You think that co-operation might in some way be beneficial?—Yes, I do.

1941. Do you think that any central depôts for the making of butter and cheese the same as in foreign countries, say Denmark, and so on, could be utilised with benefit to the farming interest generally?—Yes, I believe it could be, but that interest at present is not very flourishing, and if a great many more went into it the prices would go down.

Mr. Richard Jones.

1942. One of your suggestions for remedying distress is protection. What would you protect?—The agricultural interests.

1943. What do you mean by that?—Well, I do not know. The foreigner sends things here free. We have to pay rates and taxes upon our cattle and sheep, and he comes here free. It is upon the land, and it is the same as if it is upon our cattle and sheep. Why should we love the foreigner better than ourselves. Why should we sacrifice our country?

Mr. R. Jones—continued.

1944. Kindly specify what you would protect?—The agricultural produce that comes across here, which competes with us.

1945. Would you protect anything besides agricultural produce?—Agricultural produce only, let others protect themselves in another form if they like.

1946. Do you think you can protect one interest at the expense of all other interests?—Can they expect us to make slaves of ourselves to benefit them?

1947. Now, supposing you were protected, and also that other interests were protected. Say a duty was put upon foreign articles that came to this country. You, as a farmer, produce only one class of article, whereas as a consumer you consume several classes of articles. What would it benefit you when you only produce one thing, and have to consume so many, to have 100*l.* more for your produce when you have to pay 1,000*l.* for everything that you consume?—But it is not the same.

1948. It practically amounts to it?—I do not see that we should have to pay 1,000*l.* for that produce or anything of the kind. I look at the thing in this light. Foreign competition has been the cause of this depression. We have sacrificed our country to the foreigner. I do not see any reason why we should. We cannot live by farming as our forefathers did. Take the working classes. They are as well off as we are, and I wish them to be better off again—I say nothing against that. We cannot afford to pay for labourers on the farms. They go into the towns. There is competition and there is depression in consequence of that, but if farming paid there would be thousands of those men employed upon the farms, and they would be able in that case to get much better wages than they get now.

1949. You have to buy implements, do you not?—Yes.

1950. You have also to buy clothing?—Yes.

1951. And other articles which are produced by different manufacturers?—Yes.

1952. If the manufacturer who produces those articles advances the price of those articles, what the better are you. Of necessity you are obliged to buy them?—Those articles are made here, a good many of them, and every one of those that are sent abroad are taxed.

1953. But do you not see the producers could command their own price, because the consumers would have a restricted market. They would not go into foreign markets. Is the market restricted in foreign countries?—They have only to pay the taxes there.

1954. It would be restricted if a duty was put upon the articles sent from foreign countries to our country?—They put a tax upon them now. I do not see by our protecting ourselves that they should increase that tax. I cannot see any reason for it. The pith of the thing is this. When the depression is more than the rent, what remedies can we get other than the landlord. I would go in for any remedy. I do not see we can get any remedy from the landlord, unless he gave us the whole rent and 5*l.* 15*s.* in addition to the rent.

1955. Do you use Indian corn?—Yes, sometimes.

1956. Why do you do it?—I like to take any benefit I can from what they send here.

1957. You want to buy in the cheapest market?—Yes, I do.

Mr. Griffiths.

1958. You told me just now that the tenant farmers and their wives work hard on the farms?—Yes; I have always worked hard myself.

1959. They do not work many hours, do they?—There are no people work such hours as farmers and their wives. I am working now every day when I am home. I am never a minute idle, and if I did not do it, I should not be able to pay my rent.

1960. How long do they work?—In the summer time from about 5 in the morning to 9 in the evening, and sometimes to 10 or 11, if we have a field we want to finish very badly.

1961. Can you give us the amount of increase in your wages bill or labour account?—The increase in my wages bill would be something equal to 40 per cent.; the last 30 years wages have gone up 40 per cent.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

1962. You have drawn rather a depressing picture of the agricultural industry near Caerphilly?—I have.

1963. Are you farming at a loss yourself now?—I do not say I am farming at a considerable loss, but, unless I used all my energies and did my best in every possible way, I should be farming at a loss. I am not making money now. Another thing, I should not be able to provide for my children like my father did in prosperous times provide for me.

1964. That amounts to this, that paying the rent you do and doing your best, you are not able to get such a per-centage of profit from the business you carry on as enables you to put by a fair proportion each year?—We cannot get any per-centage—and giving our labour—upon our invested capital. We get our bare living only.

1965. If you saw your way to go into a business in which you would get a somewhat higher per-centage, you would leave the farming business and go into that?—If I was paid my full compensation to-morrow, I would risk it and go out.

1966. You say farming is a very poor business now?—In the best of times it has never been a money making pursuit.

1967. And one remedy is, you think, putting a protective duty upon foreign corn and upon foreign meat?—We must go somewhere to try and get remedies when we are in these straits.

1968. Supposing a remedy is not available; supposing that the majority of the people are against you on that?—No doubt, that would be the case.

1969. What other remedy do you suggest?—What I have suggested is lowering the rents, and taxation. We have nothing else to depend upon.

1970. Then you advocate alteration in the incidents of taxation, and the general lowering of rents?—Yes.

1971. But have you heard it stated by other witnesses here to-day that when a farm gets vacant there are always plenty of applicants for it?—Yes.

1972. Is that so?—Oh, yes.

1973. On what principle would you justify the lowering of the rents?—There is a great deal of difficulty about that. You cannot possibly do that here in Wales, for the reason the competition is so keen for land with others than farmers. People living in towns go four or five miles out of town; they are obliged to pay high rents in town, and they will get a farm, and possibly a good house, for the rent they paid in the town. They compete with the legitimate farmer for those places, and they can pay more, because they make their money more easily in the towns than we do.

1974. How would you suggest that the landlord, in order to keep up this business of yours, should lower the rents?—The landlords say our interests are one. Here is Lord Winchelsea's scheme. He says, the tenant farmer's and the landlord's interests are one. If our interests are one the landlord upon those grounds should share the loss with the tenant.

1975. You say to your landlord, "I, Thomas Jenkins, want you to take less rent." The landlord says, "No, indeed, Thomas Jenkins; I will "not, because I can get a higher rent from some-"body else"?—That is our difficulty, and I hope you, Mr. Brynmor Jones, will help us out of the fog.

1976. I want you to suggest what you think will be right?—I have only to fight my own battle, and, so far, I think I have succeeded fairly well.

1977. You are not fighting any battle with me?—I mean with my landlord.

1978. Do you suggest legislation for that purpose, the compulsory lowering of rents?—Well, I do not know what to say about it, I am sure.

1979. You spoke a good deal about good landlords and bad landlords, which would you say are the most frequent in this district, good or bad landlords. Are there plenty of good landlords, do you think?—No, very few. The bad landlords are more numerous than the good ones. There are very few good ones indeed. Lord Windsor, Lord Tredegar, and the Marquess of Bute, I consider good landlords, and there are other good ones.

1980. There are some good landlords?—Yes, I admit that.

1981. You say you like large farms, up to 400 and 500 acres?—Yes.

1982. They take a great deal of capital?—Yes, but you generally get them cheaper.

1983. Do you think there are men with that amount of capital willing to go into the farming business now, seeing things are so bad?—I do not know. If those in the business could get out of it satisfactorily, I hardly think they would go in for it a second time.

1984. Would not a lot of those large farms go out of cultivation from lack of applicants?—The large farms are taken up, but they are not so very numerous.

1985. And you have always a better chance of making a good bargain with your landlord for a large farm than a small one?—I think it pays a landlord to take a smaller rent. Take a farm of 400 or 500 acres. Now that is as one farm, and we will say on the other hand that that farm is let to four or five tenants. There are four or five houses to be kept, and they always say that a house is a thief, whereas on the other hand only one house would be required.

1986. What I was thinking of was this. Is it not better for the land to support as many farmers as it can, instead of their all being concentrated on one big farm?—I do not dispute that.

1987. Is it not better for the 400 acres to support four families?—I do not dispute that point.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

1988. You said something about competition, and you said you thought good landlords would look to the man himself, and see whether he was a good farmer and had capital. Which do you think weighs with the landlord most, the high rent or the good farmer?—I daresay it balances, the good farmer and the higher rent, I do not know which he is tempted the most to take.

1989. Which is the most profitable to him in the long run?—Well, the small rent that he is sure to have.

Chairman.

1990. There are two questions handed in by Mr. Hall. He asks me to ask you, ought land to pay to the landlord more rent than what it can yield after duly reimbursing the farmer for money and time expended?—In that case the landlord must pay 5*l.* 15*s.* for every 100*l.* rent.

1991. There is another question he wants me to ask. If rents were fair and secure, would the tenants spend more in cultivation and in their own interests and would they give greater attentions to a farm than is done under present rents and uncertainty of tenure?—No doubt if farming paid, greater attention and more capital would be put into the soil. As it is at present neither will be done.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS WILLIAMS called and examined.

Chairman.

1992. Where do you live?—Hendre Farm, in the parish of Eglwysilan.

1993. You are an upland farmer?—I am.

1994. You know the position of upland farms in your district?—Yes.

1995. I think we need say very little about the Glamorgan custom, which has been very fully gone into, so will you therefore make what statement you desire to submit to us?—Yes. The upland farmers depend mostly on sheep and store cattle, hence the present agricultural depression affects them so seriously. Most of these farms contain only a small proportion of fairly good pasture fields, and in almost every instance these fields are kept for hay. Outside these few fields there is no land belonging to the holdings that will fatten the stock. Therefore the upland farmers are obliged to sell their cattle, and most of their sheep, as storers. Although beef and mutton have been very low in price for many years, yet the store stock have been much lower in comparison. To show the position of the upland farmers, I shall take the average prices for store stock for the 10 years previous to 1890, and compare them with present prices. To make certain of being accurate, I will state my own case. On my own holding, the following stock are drawn for sale annually:—

Total for average stock sold in 1892-93=72*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.*

The above table shows that the depression in prices in 1892–93 has affected my pocket to the tune of 45*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.* Cheese and butter have not come under the depression so much as stock, but the upland farmer cannot produce a good quantity of either. The high climate and the inferior grazing land are all against a good yield of milk, two gallons a day per cow is the average yield on an upland farm for the best four months of the year. The winter sets in in the first week in November, and the cows must be kept in until the middle of May. The upland farmer cannot turn to dairy farming for any good result. The majority of these holdings are too far from the centres of population to retail the milk, and as for selling the milk to a milk vendor, the price is only 7½*d.* to 8*d.* a gallon. The want of good roads to most of the upland farms is a source of great inconvenience and loss. If the upland farmer wanted to try his hand on dairy farming, very few of the holdings contain proper buildings to carry on the business according to the various Acts relating to the milk trade. As to the question of roads, the upland farmer has to pay his full share towards them; and in return for his money, he has the consolation of climbing to his homestead over steep and rough parish roads, roads that our town neighbours would be afraid to break their necks in riding or driving over them. Sanitary rates again. The collector finds us half yearly without fail, but so far as we are benefited by the sanitary authority, it can be included in three letters, nil. Many a farmhouse and farm building is outside the pale of sanitary conditions or arrangement, except plenty of ventilation. I know of farmhouses in worse condition than many in towns condemned as uninhabitable. I know of some farmhouses with only two bedrooms for the use of husband and wife, grown-up boys, and servant girl, and further, I know of one farmhouse with only one bedroom for a whole family. The upland farmer is greatly inconvenienced with the scarcity of outbuildings, no extra building to put in some extra stock, and no place to put all the implements under roof, so that carts, &c. are wearing out in half the time that they ought to last under cover. This means a great annual loss to many an upland farmer. The excuse for this generally is, that the rent is so small, and that the landlord cannot afford plenty of buildings. This may be a good argument from the landlord's point of view, but it is a very poor one for the farmer. The best landlords in this respect in our district are Lord Windsor, Lord Bute, and Lord Tredegar. On some upland farms, the farmers have to pay for gates on the holding, or be without them, while other landlords provide their tenants with gates and posts, and some even send men to set them up.

1996. Have you any idea about a land court?—No; I have not much to say on that.

1997. Would you, individually, care for a land court?—I believe, if you could get the land court to take your grievances to, in many cases it would be very good to help us to tackle these bad landlords that we cannot get reductions in rent, no abatements and no accommodation, and no buildings from.

1998. About the upland farmer; how is your holding with regard to common lands?—In our parish most of our holdings are adjoining the common.

1999. Is that any advantage?—Well, years ago, when there was a good price for mutton and wool, it was an advantage, but at present I cannot say it is, because the price of mutton and wool has gone down so much that the sheep on the mountain do not pay.

Chairman—continued.

2000. The mountain in winter is really useless, I may take it?—Oh, useless; it will not keep a rabbit in winter. We are turning the sheep up the mountain inside the middle of May, and the feed is so bare that we do not get a good crop of hay. By the sheep grazing so late we are losing on the hayfield, and the sheep will not make up for the loss on the mountain, and that, we say, does not pay as it ought to do, and as it used to do years ago.

2001. What kind of fences do you have on the mountain?—Dry wall fences mostly.

2002. Are they mud walls?—No; built of stones, without any mortar, about five feet, or between five and six feet, high.

2003. What compensation do you get for those, according to the Glamorganshire custom?—The compensation for the wall runs, according to the custom of Glamorgan, to 14 years.

2004. Is that long enough, in your opinion?—No, I believe not. It ought to run on to 20 or 30 years, at least.

2005. Is there any compensation for draining?—That is 14 years' compensation for draining, but I believe that ought to go again about 20 or 30 years. If they are kept well I think most of them would be quite as well at 20 as at 5 or 10 years, if made middling well with stone. Perhaps, if made up with tiles, they are not quite so good.

2006. How about fixity of tenure; are they anxious for it in your district?—No; I believe they are not at the present price of agriculture.

2007. Did you say anything about a land court?—I think, if we had some court of the sort to appeal to, it would do good to tackle these bad landlords. We can get nothing out of them.

2008. We have been told that Lord Bute, Lord Windsor, and Lord Tredegar, have families on their estates who have been there for generations. Do you agree with that?—That is, probably, quite right.

2009. Is the money borrowed in many instances for the rent?—Yes, that is quite a fact.

2010. Then, as to the farmers' children, you give the same evidence as we have had before?—Yes.

2011. The children are of great value to the parents?—Yes; and they could not pay the rent if the children did not work for them for nothing, in many instances. Another thing concerning upland farmers is, about 30 years ago wool was about 1*s.* 8*d.* and 1*s.* 10*d.* a pound. I remember 30 years ago, when I was at home, the money that was made from the wool paid the rent and the taxes, but at present it will not do much more than pay the taxes.

2012. What is the price now?—6½*d.* last year.

Lord Kenyon.

2013. Have you had losses amongst your sheep on the mountain this winter?—Not this winter.

Chairman—continued.

2014. Last winter?—A good many last winter.

2015. Do you think there is a tendency for the price of sheep to rise?—There is no sign of it now. It has been going down the last two or three years.

2016. At the present time?—I do not see any sign of a rise at present.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

2017. Do you know anything about Coedpen Maen Common?—Yes.

2018. When was that enclosed?—About 25 years ago, or something of the sort. I was only down here 20 years.

2019. Do you know anything about the piece that was set apart for the recreation ground?—Yes; I know it well.

2020. Has any quarrying been done upon it?—Yes, two or three quarries.

2021. Can you give any explanation of that?—I believe the minerals belong to the lord of the manor, Lord Bute.

2022. Has any compensation been paid for the damage to the surface?—I have not been told so. There has been some agitation, I believe, with the Board of Health.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

Chairman.

2023. This is a question put by Mr. Vincent. Do you think the present depression in the price of stock is permanent?—A lot of this depression is caused by bad seasons and by foreign competition. If we had two or three good seasons it might alter a bit.

2024. Do you not think that last autumn the depression in the price of stock was due, largely, to the deficiency of the English hay crop, and consequently a falling off in the demand?—It was no doubt a great deal due to that. I put down the depression in stock to 40 per cent., but I believe I can put 10 per cent. of that owing to bad seasons.

2025. What we have found in the other part of the county was that there were very few English buyers coming to the various farms?—That is the case here. In fact, you could take cattle and sheep to the fair, and you would not get them to take them out of your hands for anything.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. H. S. DAVIES called and examined.

Chairman.

See 5753, 25,395, 26,800.

2026. You are an accountant and a member of the Glamorganshire County Council?—I am.

2027. Where do you live?—Pontypridd.

2028. You wish to speak about this common that was dealt with by the Enclosure Commissioners in the year 1861?—Yes.

2029. Under which there has been quarrying?—Yes.

2030. Can you tell us the acreage of the common?—The total acreage is 135 acres.

2031. Two pieces of the common were reserved to the use of the inhabitants of the district for recreation ground?—Yes.

2032. What was the acreage of it?—29a. 1r. 15p.

2034. Has anything been done in this case?—The quarrying has been done, and I believe from three to four acres of the surface destroyed, so far as recreation ground is concerned.

2035. Has it made portions of it unfit for the purpose of recreation?—It has, and dangerous.

2036. Has any request been made to him or his agent to desist from doing that?—Yes.

2037. What was the answer?—They have declined to desist, but they have paid some compensation for what damage has been done.

2038. Are you able to state what the compensation was?—30*l.*, I believe, for three acres.

2040. How far should you say it was from this spot?—Well, it may have been half a mile, I should think.

2041. Is it the same sort of land?—The same kind of land; perhaps it is more sloping. The rise is greater on this.

2042. The other is more sloping, but the same sort of land?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

2043. Who is the lord of the manor?—Lord Bute.

2044. Did he give the site for an intermediate school?—No, Lord Tredegar gave the site.

Mr. Grove.

2045. Was the 30*l.* paid for compensation proposed to be compensation for injury to three acres of the surface?—Yes.

Re examined. 26,805.

Adjourned.

THIRD DAY.

The Guildhall, Swansea, Glamorganshire, Thursday, 25th May 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

LORD KENYON,
SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.,
MR. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.,
PROFESSOR RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.,
MR. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS,
MR. EDWIN GROVE,
MR. RICHARD JONES,
MR. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

MR. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.

Chairman.

Before we begin, as the Chairman, I should like to ask if there is any person in this room who is aware whether Lord Windsor's agent is present here to-day. While the evidence of Mr. Thomas Evans, of St. Fagans, was being given yesterday at Pontypridd, we thought it our duty to inform Lord Windsor's agent of the evidence that was being given, in order that explanation or rebutting evidence should be given at the earliest opportunity. The Secretary obeyed our directions, and communicated with the agent, Mr. Forrest, and I should like to know whether there is any gentleman representing Lord Windsor present in the room, and we would take his evidence the first thing this morning.

Mr. Vincent: Perhaps I might say, I have heard from Mr. Forrest, who tells me he is heavily engaged in an arbitration in London, and was actually in Ludlow yesterday when the telegram reached him, but he has asked Mr. Reece, of Cardiff, and Mr. Roper, one of his clerks, who carried out the arrangement with Mr. Thomas Evans, to attend at Swansea, on Saturday, in order, so far as possible, I suppose, to rebut the evidence given by Mr. Thomas Evans. I have telegraphed to him myself, saying that it was most important, if possible, for him to come here to-day.

Chairman.

The first evidence this morning will be given by Mr. John Jones, and his evidence also forms the basis of the examination of the Neath Valley witnesses.

Mr. JOHN JONES called and examined.

Chairman.

2046. You are a tenant farmer?—Yes.

2047. Where do you live?—Pontneath Vaughan, Vale of Neath.

2048. Who is the landlord of your farm?—Mr. Jenkin Stephen Jones, but he is dead, and his estate is in trust now.

2049. What part of the country are you able to speak to from personal knowledge?—Neath Higher.

2050. What sized district is it?—I should think it would be about 8 or 10 square miles.

2051. You are personally acquainted with many of the tenants in that district?—Yes.

2052. Is it your opinion that there is any difficulty in getting evidence round your part of the country?—Yes.

2053. For what reason?—They do not like to speak; they are afraid of the consequences; they have appointed me to come here on behalf of the committee. The tenant farmers are rather poor, and they are afraid that they will suffer in some way, either direct or indirect.

Chairman—continued.

2054. Can you tell us how the land is held?—The yearly tenancy commences the 25th of March, as a rule, in our district.

2055. What sort of conditions for tenancies are there?—Some leases and some under agreements.

2056. What sort of agreements are they?—Very oppressive, my Lord, in my opinion. The Agricultural Holdings Act is evaded and the Ground Game Act is evaded. I will hand you in an agreement.

2057. Do they introduce into the agreement clauses waiving the advantages of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes, clause 18, I think, will show that.

2058. Whose agreement is this?—It is the Aberpergwm estate.

2059. Who is the tenant. Is there any objection to state his name?—I have no objection He is Henry Williams, of Brynceiliogau Farm.

Chairman—continued.

2060. On what estate?—Aberpergwm estate, belonging to Morgan Stuart Williams, Esq.

2061. Do you wish to call attention to the clauses marked?—Yes, nearly all of them, so far as that goes.

2063. "(8.) Also to keep the land free from "docks, thistles, and all other noxious weeds; "to repair the glass windows and interior of "the dwelling-house and other buildings, and "all negligent, wilful, or avoidable damage "done to the house, or other buildings, or pro-"perty on the premises; to haul all materials "gratis for any repairs." Is that complained of?—Yes, to a certain extent, and the ploughing again.

2064. "To clean out, scour, and cast the open "ditches and drains every year at the proper "season; and drive off the cleansings and "scourings to some part of the land for compost; "to keep in good order all other drains, sluice "gates, and culverts; and to keep in good and "perfect repair all fences, gates, gate posts, and "stiles, timber in the rough for gates, posts, "and stiles being assigned by the landlord, or "his agent, on application, or should the land-"lord prefer providing gate posts and gates "ready made, the tenant shall pay one shilling "each for posts, and five shillings for gates as "the cost of sawing and making them. Not to "throw the stones taken off the land into the "fences, but cart them off and spread them "on roads upon the farm, or in the fold-"yards as may be required (9.) In default of "the due and regular performance of the last-"mentioned condition, the agent of the landlord, "on inspection of the premises, shall be at "liberty at once to cause such repairs, amend-"ments, or renewals to be executed at the "expense of the tenant, and the tenant shall "repay to the landlord such sums as he may "expend in making any needful amendments "and reparations, included in such condition, "and any such expenses so incurred in carrying "out this provision, if not paid on demand, shall "be recoverable in an action at law. (10.) Also "not to plough up any meadow or pasture land,

"which during six years preceding shall not "have been ploughed. In case of his infringing "this condition, he shall pay an additional rent "of ten pounds per annum per acre, and so on "in proportion for any greater or smaller quan-"tity broken up; such additional rent to be "payable on the half-yearly day next after "such land shall have been so broken up or "converted into tillage, and be recoverable by "distress and sale." Then 18 is also complained of?—Yes, and 13.

2065. 13 is: "The landlord also reserves all "game (including rabbits) and fish, with the "exclusive right to himself, and all persons "permitted by him, to hunt, course, shoot, fish, "or otherwise sport on the premises. The "tenant to abstain from doing so, and to warn "off all persons not having the landlord's per-"mission, who may come to the premises for "these purposes, also to prosecute all persons "trespassing, if required so to do, at the expense "of the landlord." Then 18 is: "Neither the "Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1875, "nor any custom of the country, shall apply to "these presents, or the tenancy hereby created"; and 19 is: "The tenant shall not cut or carry "away, or allow to be cut and carried away with "his knowledge, any timber tree under a penalty "of five pounds for each such tree, and one "pound for any smaller tree or sapling." Those are the clauses generally on that estate?—Yes, on that estate.

2067. What permanent improvements are made by the landlords?—Nothing except a few buildings—no permanent improvements to my knowledge.

2068. Is any payment made for the cartage or hauling done by the tenant?—Not to my knowledge.

2069. As regards rents, has there been a rise of rents in this district within the last 30 or 40 years to your knowledge?—Yes.

2070. What is your opinion of the rise?—It is to the extent of 10, 20, and, in some cases, close up to 80 per cent. I could cite the case of my own father; that would be 1862 or 1863. He held a farm at a rent of 25*l.* a year. He had notice to leave without any cause; he made a lot of improvements; he left without compensation, and after he left, the farm was raised to 45*l.* a year, and it is the same to-day.

2071. Who is the landlord?—Captain John William Fredericks at that time. His estate is in trust now, I believe.

2072. Are there any more instances to your knowledge?—Not to that extent. There are others who will speak, I believe, in the same district of other cases.

2073. How is rent paid?—Half yearly as a rule.

2074. We are told that rents were paid with borrowed money?—Yes, very often.

2075. Can you explain that. Is the money borrowed for the rent from the bank?—From the neighbouring farmer or the banker, as the case may be.

2076. That is instead of selling stock or going to the barn door for it?—Yes, that is so, and stock being so low we cannot have a sale at any time.

2077. You get accommodation from the banker, and then he is repaid at your leisure?—Yes or from a neighbouring farmer that may be in a position to do so, but they are very few.

2078. One farmer would help another in that way?—Very often, but the banker as a rule.

2079. Do you know anything about the consolidation of holdings in your district?—Several.

2080. What is your opinion about that? Has it been prejudicial or beneficial to the neighbourhood?—It has not been beneficial—the reverse.

2081. Can you give us any instance on that point. Do you know anything of your own personal knowledge?—Yes, I know as many as seven or eight farms have been consolidated.

2082. What size of farms were they?—Thirty or 40, or 50 acres each, I think.

2083. That made a farm of about 400 acres?—Yes, or 700 or 800 in some cases.

Sir John Llewelyn.

2084. Are those Mr. Vaughan's properties up in the same districts you are speaking of now? It may be the same instance in which four or five have been thrown into one. It was up in the Rhigos district?—No, I refer to Ystradfellte. This is Mr. Vaughan's, but not Mr. Vaughan, of Rheola.

42. 2085. You are alluding to the same circumstances as we received in evidence yesterday?—In one instance.

2086. I want to point out to you that I believe you are now telling the same case as we heard of yesterday. It is not a distinct case. One of the witnesses spoke of four or five farms having been consolidated, and I believe it is the same instance you are now speaking of. He said it was Mr. Vaughan who held the farm?—Are you speaking of the parish of Ystradfellte?

2087. He did speak of that district. What is the name of the owner?—David Vaughan is the owner. The tenant is the brother.

2089. The witness was speaking of the district between Hirwaun and the Breconshire frontier, and he stated there was a Mr. Vaughan, not Mr. Vaughan, of Rheola, who now held for sheep purposes what had been five or six different farms?—Yes, seven—all the buildings dilapidated.

2090. Are you speaking of the same district and the same holding?—It is quite probable under the circumstances. If he spoke of Ystradfellte it must be the same district, but I have others as well.

Chairman.

2091. Can you give us any more instances?—Yes, take Neath Higher, Aberpergwm.

2092. On whose estate?—Mr. Williams'.

2093. What is that case?—Seven small farms. This would be 1840 or 1845. I cannot give you the exact date.

2094. Any more?—Yes. In Ystradfellte we have several farms, as much as three and four holdings together.

2096. Is there any land to your knowledge going out of cultivation altogether in your district?—Yes.

2097. What do you mean by going out of cultivation—having sheep put upon it?—Yes.

2098. Or being of no use to anyone?—Yes, ferns are grown now and game preserved in some instances.

2099. Does that mean that it is no use to anyone—that there is no use made of it, or that it is not cultivated?—It might be a sheep walk.

2100. It is made into a sheep run or sheep walk?—Yes.

2101. Are these farms put together for any other purpose besides putting the sheep on?—Yes, and dilapidated buildings.

2102. These farms are not what we call strictly going out of cultivation, but they are put under sheep?—Yes; and all the buildings are dilapidated. There are 15 farms quoted here, and there is not a single building on the lot.

2103. They are all tumbled down?—Yes.

2104. Now, about mountain land and common land?—I have not a great deal to say about that, but there was a lot enclosed 50 or 60 years ago. Take the parish of Ystradfellte. There were about 2,000 acres taken in.

2105. I suppose that was taken in under an Act of Parliament?—Well, I cannot say.

2106. Would the right of pasturage over mountains or commons add to the value of a farm?—Decidedly so.

2107. About game. Is there much preservation of game in the district?—Yes, in some cases, not all.

2108. There is no very great weight of game, I take it?—No.

2109. Where it is not preserved, have the farmers full liberty to kill it?—No.

Chairman—continued.

2110. But practically I suppose they do?—No, I am afraid not.

2111. Is there any complaint about trespass of gamekeepers that you have heard?—No, I cannot say there is in our immediate neighbourhood.

2112. Have game farms any damaging effect on the neighbouring farms?—No, I cannot prove that.

2113. As to the Ground Game Act, do the tenant farmers use that?—No. There is an agreement in some cases that they dare not—similar to the one I have given in.

2114. Of course you are aware that these contracts out of the Act are illegal?—I thought that agreement would be legal.

2115. I do not think so. You cannot contract yourself out of the Act?—I do not know.

2116. What is your opinion about the game laws?—I think they ought to be abolished altogether.

2118. They live on the farms up to middle age?—Up to 25 and 30.

2119. Now, about the price of labour?—The labour has gone up wonderfully.

2120. On account of their being able to get better wages in the other districts?—Yes, in the collieries.

2121. Is it easy to get small plots of land for allotment?—Not in our district.

2122. That is not easy?—No.

2123. Is there any great demand for them?—Not a great demand in our immediate neighbourhood.

2124. Have you anything you would like to say as to the remedy to be applied. I suppose you are thinking that farming does not pay as well as it did in old days?—No, stock has gone down.

2125. Is there any remedy?—I should say fair rent, fixity of tenure, and a land court.

Lord Kenyon.

2126. You say you were appointed by a committee. Can you tell me of how many that committee consists?—Farmers from Ystradfellte, Neath Higher, and Rhigos.

2127. A great many farmers?—Yes.

2128. Do you say it is the majority of the district?—I should say it would be the feeling of the majority.

2129. With regard to the agreement you have put in, are there many applications for farms on that estate?—I cannot say for that estate. I should not think so now.

2130. Are there any farms unlet on that estate?—No, none that I know of, only those taken in and consolidated by the landlord.

2131. A man taking that agreement is aware of the clauses in it. He knows the clauses in it?—Yes, possibly.

2134. You mean he occupies those himself?—He occupies them himself, and all the buildings are dilapidated.

2135. There was a clause relating to the sales of hay, straw, and produce of the farm. Are those clauses enforced, do you know?—I cannot speak to them.

2136. You mentioned your father's farm. I think you said the rent had risen 80 per cent.?—Yes, from 25*l.* to 45*l.*

2137. What would be the acreage of that farm?—It would be about 40 acres rough ground.

2138. How far was that from a large town?—Well, it would be eight miles from Aberdare, and about 12 from Neath.

2139. It did not become more valuable from its propinquity to a town?—No.

2140. Was there any other reason for its becoming more valuable?—Yes, there was an improvement made by my father. The incoming tenant benefited by it, and paid about 20*l.* a year more rent.

2141. Can you tell me why land is going out of cultivation?—I should think there are so many farms consolidated, and the labour is so very high and the stock is so very low that no one but large capitalists can do it.

2142. It would not be that the rent is too high, because if the landlord takes it into his hands he gets no rent?—That is so.

2144. Do you sell milk?—I do personally.

2145. Do you find that has gone down in value?—No.

2146. Do you make cheese in your neighbourhood at all?—Very little. They do not make enough cheese for themselves — any of the farmers I know.

2147. What remedy would you propose for the bad state of things?—I should say fair rent and fixity of tenure, as I have said before.

2148. How fixed, by a land court?—By a land court.

2149. And fixity of tenure?—Yes.

2150. For the tenant?—Yes, for the tenant.

2151. Suppose a case. Supposing a man should be fixed in his holding as long as he can pay his rent. You say that?—Yes.

2152. Supposing he still pays his rent, but farms the land very badly, and the land deteriorates, would you give the landlord any power to turn out that tenant?—Yes, I should, certainly.

2153. Lord Kenyon asked you whether the tenants on this estate which you have been talking of, the Aberpergwm estate, when they took the holdings, were acquainted with the clauses in their agreements; is that the case?—That is a question I cannot answer. It was with great difficulty I obtained that agreement.

2154. Can you tell me whether it is usual to supply a copy of the agreement to the tenant. Does he get an agreement which the landlord signs, and hands to the landlord another copy of the agreement signed by himself?—I canno speak to that point.

2156. Now take this clause in the agreement: "The landlord also reserves all game (including "rabbits) and fish, with the exclusive right to "himself and all persons permitted by him to "hunt, course, shoot, fish, or otherwise sport on "the premises." Is that clause usually explained to the tenant?—Not to my knowledge.

2157. Are you aware of any cases in which the landlord in your district has interfered with the right of the tenant to kill ground game under the Ground Game Act?—No, I cannot name any individual cases, but they take the agreement as the basis.

2158. And you say that you abide by the terms of the agreement?—Yes, in that case especially.

2159. I observe that there are three clauses in this agreement with penal conditions?—That is so.

2162. Do you know any cases in which those clauses have been enforced?—No, I cannot state any.

2163. Is this estate of Aberpergwm in a manor, or is there a manor of Aberpergwm?—Well I do not know. That I cannot say.

2164. This is a mountain agreement, is it not?—Yes.

2165. Neath Higher?—Yes.

2166. What is usually done with the land on the top of the mountain?—Sheep walks, most of it.

2167. And most of the farms are on the slope of the hill?—Yes.

2168. And the farmhouses are situate on the slope, and scattered about the district?—Yes, that is so.

2169. Is it customary for each tenant of the farm to have a right of common on the top, or, at any rate, to exercise such user on the waste land?—Yes.

2170. How is the use of the waste adjusted usually. Is a portion of the waste allotted in respect of each farm, or are the tenants allowed to depasture so many sheep and cattle upon it?—So many sheep and cattle to the same mountain. It is not enclosed.

2172. Do they usually limit the pasturage to a definite piece of the waste on the top of the mountain?—No, I cannot say that they do.

2173. What is the general state of the farm buildings?—Fairly good, except those that are entirely dilapidated.

2177. You do not know anything of the custom of West Glamorganshire?—I know the custom in our district, the custom in the Vale of Neath.

2179. Is that so?—I do not know the customs down in that part of the country, but our own I do know.

2180. Then put aside any written agreement and take the ordinary tenancy from year to year; what do you say is your custom?—We have to pay for the manure so much per head, according to quantity; pay for the the manure that is in the land.

2181. Is there any custom as between incoming and outgoing tenant?—Yes, the incoming tenant has to pay those.

2182. When does the tenancy usually commence?—The 25th of March in our district.

2184. Most of the farms in your district are held simply as yearly tenancies?—Most of them.

2185. Is there any demand for leases?—I do not say there is at the present time. There has been years ago.

2186. When you talk of fixity of tenure, what kind of fixity do you think is just and right for the tenants?—I say that they ought to hold the tenure as long as they can pay for the farm and keep it in perfect order.

2187. In the case of most farms in your district, which are chiefly small farms——?—Yes.

2188. How many labourers are usually employed, first outside labourers, and next, farm servants living on the premises.?—There are very few. They are farmed by the farmers themselves, and the sons, and very often indeed the farmer himself has to work with a farm of 30, 40, or 50 acres. He cannot afford to keep the son nor himself.

2189. He has to work?—I mean at the collieries, or some place in our immediate neighbourhood. They work in the works.

2190. That is to say, it is impossible to make a livelihood out of the farm and pay the rents?—That is so.

2192. When farms are vacant, are they readily taken up?—Well, they are taken. Perhaps we can account for that. We are in the neighbourhood of several collieries and works, and people earn money in the works, and they have four or five sons, and they take a farm up and they actually pay for it from the works.

2193. It is a common thing for a farmer and his wife and several sons to be living in the same farmhouse, the sons going to do outside work?—Yes, and they pay with their wages the rent. I could quote several such cases.

2194. In those cases where farm servants are employed, what wages do they get, I mean a servant engaged by the year and living in the house?—From 25*l.* to 30*l.* or 22*l.* to 24*l.* a year.

2195. As high as that?—Yes.

2197. Are the rents of the cottages high?——No, I should think the workmen's cottages are not.

2198. Are they in pretty good condition?—Yes, fairly good.

2199. Do the landlords in your district, for which you speak, insist upon the clauses with regard to the hedging, ditching, and so forth being strictly enforced?—I cannot say that they do. It is quite possible that it is so, but I cannot give an instance.

2200. Are you not aware that a landlord cannot legally waive the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I was not aware of it.

2201. I will just read one of the highest authorities on agricultural matters, as it would be well for all of you to know it, and that is Mr. Chaplin, the member of Parliament. He says: "If these agreements do exist they are "illegal, and have no force and no power at all. "A tenant who holds a farm having signed those "agreements is able, just as well as any tenant "who has not signed it, to claim all the advantages "of the Act. Clause 55 of the Agricultural Hold-"ings Act I will point out to the honourable "member," to whom he is speaking, "is to this "effect: 'Any contract, agreement, or covenant "'made by a tenant by virtue of which he is "'deprived of his right to claim compensation "'under this Act shall, so far as it deprives him "'of such right, be void both in law and "'equity.'" I will ask you as well for how long back has this system of borrowing money to pay the rents existed. Has it been always or of late years?—It is of late years.

2202. Has the landlord, who has consolidated these farms had no offers to let them?—Oh, dear, yes; no doubt of that. The tenants in one of the cases had notice to leave, every one. The buildings were dilapidated.

2203. They did not consider the rents too high. That is not the reason they were taken from them?—No, not in all cases.

2204. Do the tenants under your system receive compensation for improvements and unexhausted manure under the agreement?—From the landlord, do you mean?

2205. From the landlord or the incoming tenant?—The incoming tenant has to pay for the unexhausted manure.

2206. Is this clause generally enforced. "Also "not to mow any grass land two years in suc- "cession without well manuring between each "mowing"?—I cannot say it is enforced, not to my knowledge.

2207. When landlords erect buildings or repair buildings, do they charge a per-centage as a rule on the repairs?—They do in some cases.

2208. In cases where per-centages are charged, is the tenant also required to haul or carry gratis?—Yes.

2209. No compensation whatever allowed?—No compensation is allowed.

2210. So that if he left in one year he would not recover any compensation?—No.

2211. Is the 13th clause enforced in every particular. I see that the tenant not only has to waive his right under the Ground Game Act, but he also has to act as his landlord's game-keeper, and also as a prosecutor for tres-passing?—So far as I know, it is under that agreement. I understand from the gentleman that gave me that agreement that he took the agreement and kept every clause of it.

2212. Here is another clause: "First. For "under draining, the landlord finding tiles, "and the tenant finding all the labour, during the "last year of the tenancy, the whole cost of the "labour for such draining, during the last year "but one, three-fourths of the cost of the labour, "and so on, diminishing by one-fourth for each "that shall have elapsed from the date of the "work to the period of quitting the farm. "Secondly. For underdraining, the tenant find-"ing tiles and all expenses, the allowance to "extend over eight years, diminishing annually "one-eighth in proportion to the period when the "outlay was made." Do you complain of that? Is the time sufficient, eight years? I find, according to the East Glamorganshire custom, it is 14 years?—No, I do not think it is sufficient in that agreement.

2214. Although the clauses are of such a restrictive character?—Yes.

2215. What inference would you deduce from that fact?—Possibly the tenants are ignorant of the nature of the agreement, I cannot say, and there are so many farms taken in and consolidated by the owner himself.

2216. What is the effect of consolidation?—That the land is going out of cultivation in our district.

2217. Is there no other effect? It shows that there are fewer farms in the market, does it not?—Yes.

2218. And it will make competition keener?—Yes; there were large families living in some of the farms consolidated, seven and eight in the family, when there was not half the population there is now, and they are all in one now, and no buildings whatever.

Mr. Seebohm.

2219. Of course the custom of Glamorganshire is well known in your part of the world?—I do not say it is.

2220. You probably know what the custom of Glamorganshire is?—I do not say that I do.

2221. There is no impression amongst the tenants of the Vale of Neath that they would like to be under the custom of Glamorganshire. You cannot answer that question?—No, I cannot say that I know what it is exactly.

Mr. Grove.

2222. As to cottage accommodation for farm labourers, do you consider, generally speaking, that there is sufficient cottage accommodation?—We have very few farm labourers in our district.

2223. Have you sufficient labourers to do the work properly?—No.

2224. Do you think if you had proper cottage accommodation that it would be likely to supply the necessary amount of labourers on the land permanently, instead of their going off to the iron works and the collieries?—No, I do not think that that would meet the case in our district.

2225. Do you not think it would be one element in doing good?—Surely it would, labour being so very high and stock so low in our district, we cannot afford to keep the farm in proper and good condition.

2226. As to farming accounts; do the farmers generally keep any sort of books or account, as a rule?—Not in our district, as a rule.

2227. No diary?—No diary.

2229. As to railway rates. Farm produce is taken more or less by railways in your district?—To some extent.

2230. Are the railway rates considered high?—Yes.

2231. Do the farmers use team labour and horse labour of their own on purpose to avoid going near the railway?—Yes, no doubt.

2232. Do you think it causes the farmer to keep more horses in stock than he otherwise would have to do?—In some cases it is so.

2233. Then as to the unfenced mountain lands with common rights. Would you prefer that those should be fenced, and then apportioned off to the farmers who have now the right of pasturage. Do you think it would be an improvement?—Well, I should not like to speak on that point.

Sir John Llewelyn.

2234. You mentioned one instance of consolidation of farms. Is it common in your district; are there many such instances of consolidation of farms?—Yes, there are several.

2235. Can you give reasons for it, why consolidation has been made. Is it in consequence of the dilapidated buildings that the proprietors cannot afford to repair those buildings?—That he does not wish to do so, I should say.

2236. Does not he do so because he wishes to keep a larger quantity of land in his own hands, or because he does not want to go into the capital outlay. Probably he wishes to save himself the capital outlay, and he wishes to get a larger amount of land into his own hands. Which of the two is the most important factor?—The buildings are dilapidated, and without any improvement done whatever, in due course the buildings come down, and the tenant is bound to leave, and afterwards the little farm goes to another one, to the highest bidder in the market as a rule.

2237. Do I understand he does not take it into his own hands, but continues to let it after the buildings have gone down?—Yes, in several cases.

2238. Now, as to the custom of incoming and outgoing tenants, I think you said that that had worked very satisfactorily to your mind, between the incoming and outgoing tenant, and the outgoing tenant would get his fair due?—Yes, so far as manure is concerned, I believe it is so.

2239. Do you suggest that there are other unexhausted improvements for which he does not get any compensation?—Oh, yes, several.

2240. Could you name them?—Fencing. The second and third class improvements I do not think he is entitled to, any way.

2241. Under the custom of your neighbourhood?—Under the custom of our neighbourhood, only manure.

2242. You consider that justice is not done by that custom?—No, not exactly.

2243. You spoke of conditions, and you put in just now, an agreement. Are those conditions always enforced?—Not to my knowledge.

2245. You do not consider that those conditions are enforced in every case?—Not to my knowledge.

2246. So far as I can gather from your evidence, what you most complain of is the consolidation of the small farms into large ones?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

2247. Do you know of any grown up young people living with their parents with the hope of some day getting a farm and getting married?—No, I do not know that I do.

2248. Do any in your district go away?—Yes; not to a very great extent, though.

2249. To some parts of England?—They go to America and foreign parts.

Mr. Richard Jones.

2250. What is the custom between incoming and outgoing tenants. Say a crop of wheat is sown on fallow land?—We have very little in that line. We have very little corn grown in our district. Some pay for the manure in the fallow in the farm. I do that myself

2251. How is it assessed?—Rated, you mean.

2252. No, assessed between the incoming and the outgoing tenant?—But very few; they leave in our district with the fallow.

2253. Suppose it was put in with the fallow in the autumn, just before sowing?—They generally take a half of the wheat, the incoming and the outgoing tenant, and one-tenth for the tithe of the crop. That is the custom in Ystradfellte.

Sir John Llewelyn.

2254. You gave an answer which rather surprised me just now, that there was no compensation for fences. You have some dry walls up in your district?—Yes.

2255. Is there no compensation by the incoming tenant for a newly made dry wall?—Not that I know of.

2256. You are in Neath Higher?—Yes, and adjoining Ystradfellte.

2257. One of the witnesses spoke of the compensation for dry walling the sheep farms as not being long enough, but existing 12 or 14 years, and he thought that that was not long enough; he thought the compensation ought to be spread over, and if it had been done any time within 20 years, that there should be a certain amount of compensation. Do you mean there is no compensation made at all, for a new dry wall made, to an outgoing tenant?—Not to my knowledge.

Chairman.

2258. There are some questions put in. Do you know the Duffryn estate?—Yes, but I cannot speak much about it. It is a long distance from me.

2259. Then I will not put those questions to you. There are three other questions from Mr. Vincent; are you aware that the provision against underletting is usual in English agreements?—No.

2260. In the absence of restriction upon the sale of produce and tillage, would it not be possible for dishonest tenants to run the heart out of the land and then leave the farm; in fact, are not these clauses of restriction principally meant to be safeguards against bad tenants?—It could not be run out in one year. You would have ample time to give notice if the farm is deteriorating.

2261. Was it Mr. David Vaughan who ran these farms?—Mr. David Vaughan is the tenant, and Mr. James Vaughan the landlord. They are two brothers.

2262. Is it Mr. Vaughan, of Rheola?—No.

2263. Do you know that Mr. Foster, of Rheola, has spent money in fencing and draining without charging any interest?—It is quite possible; he is a good landlord, no doubt. I admit it.

2264. You cannot, from your practical knowledge, say yes or no?—No, I cannot. There is no doubt he is a good landlord.

2265. In answer to Sir John Llewelyn you said the penal clauses in those agreements were not usually enforced. Do you mean by that that the landlord allows the tenant to break them without enforcing them?—No, decidedly not.

2266. You mean, in fact, the tenant complies with them usually?—Yes, I mean to say on that agreement, the tenant told me himself. On the other hand, I cannot say they are strictly enforced.

Sir John Llewelyn.

2267. They are aimed against bad tenants, and not against good tenants. Is not that it?—No, I think that goes against everybody.

Chairman.

2268. These questions are put in by Mr. Hall Do you know of any land being taken away from a farm, and the rent not reduced in consequence?—Yes, I think I can name a common. That would be the Hirwain Common at Rhigos. You had evidence upon that point yesterday.

2269. What is meant is, have you ever known of any land being taken away, or of any portion of the farm being taken away and put to some other farm, or taken by the landlord himself, and the rent being exactly the same, although several acres have been taken off the farm. That is the meaning of the question, I think?—Oh, yes, taken for building purposes.

2270. And the rent not reduced?—And the rent not reduced, and the tithe and everything paid as before.

Lord Kenyon.

2271. Can you mention any instances?—I cannot at the moment. I will remember them further on.

Chairman.

2272. How do you account for the more frequent changes of tenancies?—Rent being high, labour high, and stock so very low.

2273. Before the Ystradfellte enclosure was made, had the farmers a right to pasture?—Do you mean on the mountain?

2274. Where that enclosure was?—Yes, certainly, on the farms. They had farms from 30 to 40 or 50 acres each.

2275. And before the enclosure was made they had a right to pasture?—Yes.

2276. Have they that right now?—No,

2277. Were the rents reduced when the rights of pasturage were taken away?—Not to my knowledge.

2278. Do you know whether any tenant has left his holding without receiving full or just compensation for his own improvements?—Oh, yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Lewis Llewellyn called and examined.

Chairman.

2279. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

2280. Under whom do you farm?—Under Mr. Morgan Stuart Williams of Aberpergwm.

2281. What is the name of the farm?—Maesmarchog.

2282. You live in the same district as Mr. John Jones, the last witness, but not so high up the mountain?—Not quite.

2283. Is it about the same sort of land as the last witness?—Yes, very much like it.

2284. Mostly grass land?—Grass land.

2285. And any cultivated land?—I have a little.

Chairman—continued.

2286. What is the size of your farm?—72 acres.

2287. What proportion of cultivated land is there on that?—I have 14 acres.

2288. Fourteen acres of ploughed land and the rest grass?—Yes.

2289. Has your family been long on the land there?—I have been there for 18 years.

2290. But you were not born there?—No.

2291. Your family did not have it before you?—No.

2292. You have heard the evidence given by Mr. Jones. He has given his evidence very clearly and succinctly, and I do not propose to ask you all the same questions over again, but I should like to ask you whether you agree generally with the last witness?—Well, I do. We had a meeting and we agreed to the evidence which he has given you to-day.

2293. And that evidence was generally what was agreed upon at the meeting?—It was.

2294. Then can the Commissioners take it that it is not his evidence alone but it is the evidence of, may we say, the majority of the farmers in the district, or a considerable number?—A considerable number of the farmers in the district.

2295. Who made out their opinions and ideas and empowered him to speak for them?—Exactly.

2296. You have come to support him?—Yes.

2297. Is there any particular point in this evidence that you would like to speak to. Is there any special or particular knowledge on your part about occupation, or labour, or labourers' cottages, or fencing, or improvements, or dilapidations, or anything that you have any specific knowledge about?—No; I cannot say that there is anything; only I agree with it so far as Mr. Jones has given it.

2298. As regards the evidence-in-chief, I do not propose to ask you anything more if you will answer those questions?—Certainly.

Professor Rhŷs.

2299. What is your rent?—My rent is 95*l*.

2300. And the acreage is 72?—Yes, 72.

2301. Is it all good land?—50 acres of my land, I may say, is good, but there are 22 acres of very rough ground—a run through a piece of wood on the side of the hill. 50 acres are flat and good ground.

2302. You are a yearly tenant, I think?—Yes, a yearly tenant.

2303. Has your rent been raised in your time?—Yes.

2304. What was it when you took the farm?—I rented it under another landlord, and it was sold, and of course my rent was raised 5*l*. when I took it from the present landlord.

2305. Have you any game preserves in your part?—No, the game does not trouble me. I am living close to a village, and it is not a healthy place for game.

2306. There is a village close by and that relieves you of any trouble as to the game?—That is so, but I have been troubled very much with game in other parts in another farm before I came here.

2307. I should like to know something about the way in which the farmers of your class live in your part of the country. Would you tell me what an average farmer of your position would have for his family as food—say, for breakfast. You have been sometimes in your neighbours' houses: I do not wish you to tell us any secrets, but I should like to have some idea?—So far as our neighbourhood goes, I think they live on pretty good food; they live pretty well.

2308. For instance, what do they have for breakfast?—Tea generally in most places, bread and butter or cheese.

2309. What sort of bread?—Good bread—wheat bread.

2310. Any meat at all?—Yes.

2311. At breakfast?—Oh, yes, in many places.

2312. What would it be?—Bacon generally.

2313. Any butchers' meat?—I cannot say about others, I have a bit sometimes.

2314. I want you to give me a general idea?—I think so far as living goes, the people live pretty well. I do not know about those up on the side of the hill. I do believe that they have to live harder.

2315. Then as to dinner in the middle of the day, about 12 or 1 o'clock; what would be the usual food of the farmer's family then?—We generally find the way to have a bit of meat; bacon mostly.

2316. Sometimes butchers' meat?—Yes, we have a bit sometimes.

2317. And potatoes, of course?—Oh, yes, potatoes. So far as I am concerned, I have plenty of potatoes.

2318. What would be the next meal?—A cup of tea in the afternoon and a bit of bread and butter.

2319. Does that extend to the whole family?—Yes.

2320. And supper?—At supper it might be a bit of bread and cheese and a drop of milk, or a glass of milk or a drop of broth, or something of that sort—a cup of tea for those who are very fond of it again.

Mr. Grove.

2321. You say your farm is 72 acres, and your rent is 95*l*.?—Yes.

2322. And you have 22 acres of rough land out of that?—Yes.

2323. Do you consider your rent is high according to the farms in the district, or do you think it is a fair price?—According to the price at which stock is now, and everything, it is very high.

2324. Did you consider the rent fair when you took the farm?—Well, some years I have done very well.

2325. What do you consider a fair rent for the 22 acres of rough land. How much per acre do you think would be reasonable?—Well, along with the other it is useful, or else by itself the whole land would not be worth 5*l*., but it is useful, of course, with the other good land to turn the stock off in winter, or to save trampling down the other.

2326. You consider the rent is a fair rent for the district. How do other farmers pay in the district—is it something like that?—It is something like that—some lower, and, I believe, some higher.

Mr. Richard Jones.

2327. You took your farm in 1875?—Yes.

2328. When farming was a thriving occupation. That was just before the fall in prices?—I do not follow you.

2329. That was when farming was a thriving occupation—in good times?—Oh, yes.

2330. In what year was the estate sold?—I believe it was sold seven or eight years ago. I am not quite certain.

2331. About the year 1886?—Yes, somewhere about that.

2332. What was the state of prices, do you remember, when it was sold?—Pretty good then.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

2333. How many rooms are there in your farmhouse?—Four downstairs and two upstairs.

2334. Fair sized rooms?—Small rooms, a very tidy house.

2335. Is the roof of the house thatched or slate?—Slate.

2336. Have you done any repairs to the house since you have been in?—Not much, I have done a little to the house.

2337. What kind of repairs?—There was a boarded floor when I went in there. I had an agreement at that time.

2338. Was it an agreement in writing?—Yes, at that time, but it was sold, and that was only for a certain time.

2339. Mr. Williams is your landlord now?—Yes.

2340. He bought it?—Yes.

2341. When he became purchaser did he make a new agreement with you?—He never asked me to sign any agreement.

2342. Then you have signed nothing?—No.

2343. You did sign a written agreement first of all?—That was with another person.

2344. When you first went in in 1875 you had a written agreement?—Yes.

2345. After the transfer of the property your rent was raised?—Yes.

2346. But there has been no written agreement with you?—No.

2347. How many children have you got living on your premises?—Eleven, but they are not all at home now.

2348. Are any of your sons at home now?—I have the two youngest. My sons are down in Pembrokeshire now, driving timber, but they come home in the summer for the harvest.

2349. Do you do anything besides farming?—No.

2350. How many labourers do you employ?—None. I get assistance for a little spell sometimes. I have had to get assistance this Spring.

2351. You have no servants living on your farm?—No.

2352. What extra assistance you require you hire for the occasion?—Yes, as my sons are far off and they could not come home very easy.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

2353. Of what ages are the sons at home?—They are the youngest, at school, eight and eleven.

2354. You said you were near a village?—Yes.

2355. Do you sell milk to the villagers?—Yes. One of the boys at home—the eldest—has to carry the milk in the morning and then go to school.

2356. Do you sell eggs as well?—Yes.

2357. And fowls?—Yes.

2358. Do you find it difficult to pay your rent or not?—Indeed it is difficult now to do it.

2359. Why now?—Because everything is going so low, cattle especially.

2360. You have been in the habit of selling cattle as well?—Yes.

2361. You attribute the difficulty of paying your rent chiefly to the fall of prices in produce?—Yes, exactly.

Mr. Griffiths.

2362. You have just said that you have 11 in family and only two bedrooms. Is that true?—I have one daughter in service, the other two sons are down in Pembrokeshire driving timber, and the rest are at home. I have two daughters at home, one is over 19 and the other is 17.

2363. And two sons?—And then there are four young children again.

2364. How many are they in all on your premises?—Seven.

2365. And only two bedrooms?—Yes, but we have a bedroom downstairs.

2366. Do the children help you to pay the rent at all?—Oh, yes, they do.

2367. Besides working on the farm?—Last summer's rent was paid out of their work, but it is like this now: We had a bad harvest, and lost the hay, so that I was obliged to buy 60*l.* worth of hay. I paid 60*l.* last year for hay. There was my half-year's rent gone, and I had my half-year's rent from my son, who had been driving timber.

2368. Have you to pay the young man 60*l.* back when good times come?—I do not know. I suppose he must wait until I get it.

Lord Kenyon.

2369. Have you started any of your sons in life?—Nothing but the spade and shovel.

2370. Except the education?—A little education, not much.

2371. Still you have raised a family of 11 on your farm?—Yes.

2372. What stock do you put off in the year. You said you raised stock?—Yes, I do.

2373. What do you put out as a rule?—I sell four or five or six cattle.

2374. You find the prices very much diminished of late years?—Yes, but I cannot keep them on the farm. I have to buy meal and things of that sort. I have paid as much as 80*l.* for barley meal in the twelve months.

2375. You do not sell them as calves?—Some I sell as calves.

2376. Have you found the milk selling as profitable as it was?—Yes, it is profitable, only we do not sell beyond a certain quantity; we cannot sell all. There is no demand for it.

2377. Do you make any cheese?—Only a little skim milk cheese.

2378. For yourselves?—Yes, and make a little butter.

2379. You say you have two daughters living at home. Do they go out to service?—They work at home. One is carrying milk, and the other daughter, and the little boy, who goes to school, have to assist to carry to the village about half a mile, and go to school afterwards.

2380. Have you had any temporary abatement in rent?—No, not a penny.

2381. You have paid 95*l.* a year since that time?—Yes.

2382. Have you anything to complain of?—No, not so far as I know.

Professor Rhŷs.

2383. I am not very fast at figures, but I understood you have 72 acres, and out of that you have 22 acres of land which you would not value as worth more than about 5*l.*, and then you have 50 acres rented at 90*l.*?—Yes.

2384. That is practically about 36*s.* an acre?—Yes.

2385. Is that about the average rent for good land in your neighbourhood?—Yes, but out of that 50 acres, so far as that goes, there are several acres out of it gone, because there are buildings and gardens which do not belong to me. 50 is the flat ground altogether, but I daresay four or five acres have gone out under buildings. That was before I took it.

2386. That would make your rate of payment a little higher still?—Yes, of course.

2387. I want to know whether you think that is about the rent usually paid for good land in your district?—Well, it is somewhere about that.

2388. You do not consider it excessive?—I think it is about as high at the other places round about.

2389. Do you consider your good land is more or less of the nature of accommodation land on account of the village close by?—Well, if it was not for that, that it is handy to the village, and we sell some milk, of course it would be a great deal too dear, because it is dry land, rubble stone under it, it is not what you can call feeding land at all but it is healthy, and if it was not for the advantage of the village being near, if it was five or six miles from the village, it would not be worth so much.

2390. Do you know whether your neighbours, five or six miles away from the village, pay at something about the same rate as you do?—I cannot answer that. So far as our valley is concerned there is scarcely none there; there is not a village for six or seven miles

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

2391. Did you understand Lord Kenyon's question. He asked whether you had anything to complain about. We are in doubt as to whether you understood the meaning of the word "complain"?—Well, the complaint I have is that it is very hard to make two ends to meet, and I consider that something ought to be done, either in one way or the other. If we do not get more for our stock, or get the rent down, we must go away and that soon, because our children are working for nothing all the time practically.

Mr. Griffiths.

2392. Do your children attend school as regularly as the labourers' children?—Well, they attend school uncommonly well, but they have many things to do night and morning, so that they have not the fair play as the other children do.

2393. Have you to keep them home sometimes to help you?—Yes, I have to keep them at home sometimes.

Chairman.

2394. There have been some questions handed in, and one question is distinctly of a personal nature. Before I put it I should like you to read it through, and tell me if you have any objection to answer it. It is not a question that I could put without your sanction. (The witness read the question.) If you have the smallest objection to answer it, of course I will not put it?—I will answer it.

2395. Well it is this:—"Could you pay your "rent if your children, who are working away" —I suppose that means away from home—"did "not assist you with money"?—Well, I think possibly I could, but I should feel it much harder, and when I get a sum from them to pay my rent, I find it very convenient, because it would be a hard matter to borrow from anywhere else.

2396. What is the age of sons working on farms in the district without receiving wages. I suppose that means up to what age would they work on the farms without receiving wages?—There are plenty up to 18, 20, or 25, but they do not work regularly on the farm. I do not know many that do, but they work at collieries, or somewhere like that, and do a day at home sometimes. Sometimes when there is no work at the colliery, they work a day at home, and at other times they are kept at home to help their parents haymaking, or something like that, and I do not think they get any more than my own for that.

2397. Can you answer this question, which is another question put by Mr. Hall. What was the amount your previous landlord sold your farm for?—3,400*l.*, but there were a lot of cottages included in that price.

2398. How many cottages?—About 15 or 20 Really I cannot tell you exactly.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

2399. What is the rent of those cottages?—About 8*s.* a month now, I believe.

Chairman.

2400. These are questions put by Mr. Vincent; you have already stated that you have received no abatement of rent?—That is so.

2401. Has nothing been given back from rent?—No.

2402. Have abatements been received in your district?—Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Seebohm.

2403. We have had this point brought before us several times about children living on with their parents in these little farms in the country. Now, it has to a certain extent been stated that it is almost a hardship. Do you think it is a hardship that those children should remain with you and contribute to the family earnings and learn the family trade?—It is rather unpleasant for them to be working hard without any prospect of getting anything for it.

2404. I suppose the son would look to succeed his father in the farm, would he not?—Of course they are willing to assist us because they want to keep us going.

2405. They are members of the family and contribute to the family purse?—Yes.

2406. It is not usual as between one member of a family and another to make it a matter of money as to what they do and what they do not do?—I do not understand the question.

2407. I will put it in another way. As they are contributing to the family purse and living in the family home, it is not necessary to divide the family purse between the parents and the children?—No. The family purse has to be emptied twice a year, and you catch hold of the bottom mostly and empty it out.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

2408. Is the fact that your little farms are in the midst of a district where there are collieries and other employments a gain or a loss to you?—Oh, it is a gain.

2409. A distinct gain?—Yes.

2410. It helps to keep the family together, because members of the family can get other employment and it comes into the family purse?—Yes. I do not say I gain anything so far as I am concerned, but I believe it is a gain in general. I know many that work in the colliery, but my sons do not work in the colliery now.

2411. The probability is that you would find it a harder life in these bad times, with a small farm, if there were not these manufactories and industrial interests around you, into which your sons could go without leaving the family home?—Oh, yes, there are plenty that would have to go to some place of that sort. Some in our district would never be able to pay for them if their sons were working far off.

2412. So that this fact, that the sons remain helping the parents and helping the family purse is rather a privilege of your position than one of the hardships of your position. If you were in a purely agricultural district you would be very much worse off, with a small farm such as yours and without those advantages?—Well, you would be much worse off without it.

Mr. Grove.

2413. The average small farmer could not manage to live on his farm unless he was helped by his wife and children as a rule, could he?—Well, no.

2414. If he had to pay for all the labour necessary could he manage to exist on his farm?—Oh, no, he could not.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Noah Davies called and examined.

Chairman.

624. 2415. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

2416. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Vaughan, of Rheola.

2417. What is the size of your occupation?—About 50 acres.

2418. You live lower down the mountain?—On the side of the River Neath, between the last two witnesses.

2419. What is the name of the farm?—Yniscymer.

2420. Were you born in this place?—No, my wife was born there.

2421. And it has been in the occupation of your wife's family for some years?—For about three generations, I think.

2422. We have 28 gentlemen who have been kind enough to volunteer to give evidence to-day, so that I do not propose to go all through the evidence. You were in the room when Mr. John Jones gave his evidence, I believe?—Yes.

2423. Do you agree with it?—Yes.

2424. There is nothing more that you wish to speak to of which you have any special knowledge?—One thing I feel very much is the disadvantage of farmers' children in comparison with labourers' and colliers' children. My children have to get up about half past five in the morning and work until the school hour, and milk. I had to get them up this morning to help myself to milk, because I could not afford to pay labour.

2425. When does the school hour begin?—Nine o'clock, and they would have to work until the school hour, which puts them at a great disadvantage to get on so well as the colliers' and miners' children, and in the dinner hour they have to come home and do some work while the other children are playing. At night they would have to continue the same, and when there is a holiday given they would have to work, and it is continually work, the same as I have had myself, from the time I was able to do anything at six years of age until now—nothing but a string of hard work all through, and my children are brought up very much the same. They do not get the advantage of education the same as working men's children.

2426. How old are your children?—One is nine and the other is eleven. Even last summer the oldest of my boys had to go on the mowing machine, and the hours of labour are very very long. There is a good deal of talk about eight hours. I have to work fully 16 hours a day; I am a rate collector as well as a farmer, and I have to do the work of the farm, and the work of the collector in the night, because I cannot afford to pay labour.

2428. For 50 acres?—Yes, and some of that 50 acres is considerably rough—worth very little, only as a run.

Lord Kenyon.

2429. Can you remember any time when it was usual for farmers of farms of about 50 acres to employ a labourer?—Oh, yes.

2430. In this district?—Yes; if I could do it with advantage I could improve the farm very much and my own position as well.

2431. How long have you had your farm?—I have lived four years in this farm.

2432. Were you farming before that?—Yes, under the same landlord—a very good landlord.

2433. Another farm?—Yes.

2434. How big was that farm?—100 acres.

2435. Did you employ a labourer there?—Yes.

2436. You gave up the bigger farm and took the smaller?—Yes, there was no reason for my giving up—nothing beyond I married the daughter of this farmer and I took the smaller one in preference.

2437. You took some other business in the way of collecting rates?—Yes.

2438. Do you think that the labourers' cottages in your district are pretty good?—Oh, very good. They are in villages; they are not considered agricultural labourers' cottages; they are in villages let very high—some of them up to 1*l.* a week on my farm.

2439. I suppose the labour is scarce and dear in your district?—Yes.

2440. What would the ordinary rate of labourers' wages be?—From 5*s.* up.

2441. 5*s.* a-day?—Yes, that is when we want them in the harvest time. I have paid as much as 6*s.* 6*d.* last summer for a man who could only do a fair day's work.

2442. Do you ever work piece-work?—Very seldom; they are not trained agricultural labourers. I have always to show them, although I paid 6*s.* 6*d.* and get nothing for myself. I always carry the harvest in myself.

2443. Then farming would be much easier in your district if there was more skilled labour?—Yes.

2444. How do you propose to remedy that?—Fixity of tenure and fair rent.

2445. Fixity of tenure would not bring more labour?—But if we had fair rent and fixity of tenure—not that I complain of my present landlord—but there is a great deal of dissatisfaction, as I have seen before, although if I agreed with my present landlord that would not give me satisfaction. Undoubtedly so long as my present landlord lives it is all right, but I have felt so much from what my father suffered that I do not feel satisfied with anything short of fixity of tenure.

2446. I ask you what is the remedy to the labour question. How are you going to produce more labour?—We must in some way be enabled to pay them the same wages as they get elsewhere.

2447. You want a subvention in some way to pay them?—Yes.

2448. Your rent is 56*l.* At your rate of wages it would not provide you with many labourers?—No, but a considerable amount of it could be considerably improved so as to make it more valuable. It is of very small value now, a great deal of it, but it could be improved. It is close to the road.

Lord Kenyon.

I want to get from you some remedy in regard to the labourer; I follow your view with regard to the fixity of tenure, but I do not see that it has any application to the labourers.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

2449. How many labourers ought you to employ to make the most of your farm. Supposing you were a freeholder and paying no rent, how many labourers would you employ?—Two besides myself.

2450. Yourself and these two men to carry on such farming as the farm is adapted for and the local circumstances admit at a profit?—Yes.

2451. Is it possible, so long as you pay a rent of 56*l.*, to carry it on at a profit?—No, not at present prices.

2452. You mean at present prices of stock, labour, and so forth?—Yes.

2453. Then do I understand you to suggest that there ought to be some means of raising and lowering the rent in accordance with the fluctuations of the price of labour and produce, and so forth?—Possibly that might be.

2454. You talked about fixity of tenure. You have not shown Lord Kenyon, or any of us, how fixity of tenure could help you out of the difficulty you have been mentioning?—Fixity of tenure and fair rent. If the rent was reduced—the rent has advanced lately—but if it was reduced to the same extent as it was it would do. There is a considerable amount of the farm taken away for building, which advances the amount of the rent.

2455. Then so far as the profit of the farm is concerned, fixity of tenure is only an improvement in this way, that it would be worth your while if you had fixity of tenure to expend more money and put more capital into your business?—Yes.

2456. What kind of house have you?—I have an exceptional good house.

2457. How many rooms?—Three rooms downstairs and four upstairs—four bedrooms.

2458. Is this near the village of Glynneath?—Yes.

2459. Do you sell milk to the villagers?—No.

2460. Do you raise stock?—I rear a little stock and I fatten, and make a little butter. I could not pay for a servant to carry the milk about, and my children are too small to do it.

2461. You do not attempt milk selling?—No.

2462. Poultry farming?—Very little.

Mr. Griffiths.

24–39. 2463. What hardships did your father suffer of which you spoke just now?—He lived in the farm just the other side of the mountain, where I was brought up. He lived there 40 years, paying a rent of 80*l.* a year. There were 30 acres of some of the best land he had taken away from the farm, after the Neath and Brecon Railway and some collieries came there, without any readjustment of rent at all. He reclaimed a considerable amount of the mountain land by building dry walls there. The improvements that he made were to the extent of from 400*l.* to 500*l.* He kept those walls in the rough repair, because he thought he was living under a thoroughly good landlord. He was quite friendly and quite satisfied with his landlord. He died and the estate was sold, and his improvement was sold with the estate, and he never had a penny for it, although there were 40 or 50 acres of the land taken away by the railway without having any compensation for it, and his improvements were afterwards taken away.

2464. What is the name of the farm?—Gellibenuchel.

2465. How many acres do you say were taken away and no compensation made to your father?—Between 20 and 30 acres.

2466. What kind of land?—The present railway station is built on it; Crynant Station. I believe there are two collieries on this property.

2467. Did the railway going through cut off any water from the farm?—No, the farm is on the top of the mountain, and this land was in the flat of the valley.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

2468. Did the railway company pay any compensation to your father?—No, never any notice or anything.

2469. Did he demand anything for his interest as tenant from year to year?—No, I do not know that he did, I could not say for certain.

2470. You say that farming might be profitable if fair rents and fixity of tenure were obtained. What proposal have you for assessing fair rents?—To value the present value without the improvements that a tenant has made. It would be unfair, if I improved my farm by 10*l.* a year, to assess it at its present value. I should say that that would be my property, not my landlord's property.

2471. I am afraid you have not caught my meaning. In order to have a rent that you can pay for your farm, how do you propose to obtain it?—To settle a fair rent by reducing it in accordance with the advance of labour and the reduction of the price of produce, such as stock.

2472. Supposing you are an applicant for a farm, and you could not agree with the landlord. In that case how would you have it settled?—Well, it is generally taken in a lump sum, not so much per acre. It would apply exactly in the same manner by the price of the stock or crops, or whatever could be raised on the farm.

2473. You have two children, you say. What do you propose to bring them up to?—They propose going to work in the brick works, because I cannot pay them anything. I should propose that they should go abroad as soon as they are able to look after themselves.

2474. You do not intend bringing them up as farmers?—Not in this country. I should send them abroad to some of my relatives in Australia.

2475. Have you any relatives abroad?—Yes.

2476. Why did they go out?—I cannot answer that.

2477. Was it because they thought their prospects were better?—Very likely. It is a good many years ago and I could not exactly answer the question, but they have done much better there than if they had remained here.

Mr. Grove.

2478. You say your farm consists of 50 acres, and your rent is 56*l.* You also stated there was a certain amount of rough land. What is the acreage of that rough land, about?—I believe the acreage of the good land is 30 acres.

2479. And that leaves 20 of inferior land?—Yes.

2480. Do you consider the rent you pay is about a fair rent as compared with the rents of the farms in the district?—Yes, as compared with the other rents it is.

2481. Do you use the railway at all for taking your produce in and out. Do you convey stock by railway?—No.

2482. Not at all?—No.

Professor Rhŷs.

2483. Are your relatives whom you speak of farming abroad?—Yes.

2484. In what country—in the States?—In Australia. They have a large estate, and a gold mine as well.

2485. You heard the previous witness Mr. Llewellyn?—Yes.

2486. Do you know his farm at all?—Yes.

2487. How far is your farm from his?—About two miles.

2488. You must have noticed that the rate per acre which he paid is very much higher than yours. What would be the explanation, do you think?—I do not see that it is higher.

2489. He paid 95*l.* for 72 acres, and you pay 56*l.* for 50 acres?—Yes; there are 20 acres of inferior land on mine.

2490. He had 22?—Yes.

2491. And his good land came to 36*s.* an acre?—Yes. He is paying for the improvements made by the company who had it before him, very likely. Undoubtedly that is the only cause, and I believe I am under a better landlord than he is, too.

2492. You would not say that his rate of payment was near the average in that district?—No. I believe it is excessive, and more than the average.

Sir John Llewelyn.

2493. Are you in the valley, so as to be liable to the overflow of the river?—Not now. I used to be when I was in Aberclwyd, but I am living up in the top part now.

2494. None of your land is liable to be overflowed by the river?—No.

2495. You told us there are about 20 acres capable of improvement?—Yes.

2496. In what way?—By grubbing, and ploughing, and seeding it down.

2497. Are you contracted out of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No.

2498. Have you made any application to your landlord for improvements upon the place?—No.

2499. You said just now you wished to get fixity of tenure?—Yes.

2500. That was with the object of doing improvements upon your farm?—Yes.

2501. And you can get that assistance from the landlord under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Possibly I might. I am not certain of my present landlord living, or I will not ask for anything, but I have no security of that.

2502. If he laid out the money upon the land, you would then be secured?—Then possibly that might give rise to an action.

2503. You have not taken that course?—No.

2504. It occurs to me you would get the same benefit if he laid out the improvements upon the land. Is about 20 acres capable of improvement?—Yes.

2505. And 30 acres is good land in your opinion?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

2506. What was the date of this transaction in regard to your father which you say was ill-treatment?—It would be about five or six years ago he left there.

2507. As to the taking of the 30 acres of land, how long ago was that?—Really I could not tell you that; when the Neath and Brecon Railway was made I could not tell you.

Lord Kenyon.

2508. And the property sold, was it, at the same time?—No, that was about six years ago that the property was sold.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

2509. The Dulais Valley Railway was made about 1864?—Yes.

2510. That afterwards became the Neath and Brecon Railway?—Yes.

2511. It was in the sixties, at any rate?—Yes, it was in the sixties.

Chairman.

2512. This is a question put by Mr. Vincent. Have you received any abatement of your rent?—No.

2513. Have any tenants received abatements, to your knowledge?—Not to my knowledge in the value at all.

2514. Do you happen to know that Mr. Vaughan's rental is less now than it was in 1887?—I do not know it.

2515. Do you know that some of the land is let tithe free?—Not to my knowledge.

2516. Do you know whether Mr. Vaughan has spent money embanking and fencing, besides ordinary repairs, without charging interest?—I know that he has done some, but I do not know whether he has charged for it or not. It is not in our immediate neighbourhood.

2517. Mr. Vaughan estimates the cost of repairs alone as 12 per cent. of his rental. Do you agree with that estimate. Have you any way of answering that question?—No, not at present. He did so on the farm where I was before, and probably more than that, but on the present farm it is not the case.

2518. You do not agree with that?—No.

2519. Have you ever known a tenant evicted from his estate by Mr. Vaughan?—No.

2520. When did you begin to feel the depression in agriculture?—Six or seven years ago.

2521. These are questions handed in by Mr. Hall. Do you know of any consolidation of farms in your district other than those that were mentioned this morning?—Yes.

2522. Would you name them?—There are eight farms adjoining those eight that Mr. Williams, of Aberpergwm, has got, which were mentioned by Mr. Jones. There is another eight held by a tenant of Blaen-yr-hebog.

2523. Were they all joined together?—They are all joined together now.

Lord Kenyon.

2524. What amount of acreage?—I think about 2,000 acres altogether he has.

2525. There is a consolidation of the whole farm?—Well, that is counting the sheep walk as well, and the eight farms together.

Chairman.

2526. Do you know of any instance of land being taken away from a farmer and the rent not being reduced?—Yes, I do not know of any instance where the rent has been reduced on account of land being taken away. It would be only a small quantity.

2527. You do not know of any large quantity of land being taken away from a farm and the rent not being reduced?—No, only my father's case that I remember. There are small quantities taken in our immediate neighbourhood often for building purposes.

Lord Kenyon.

2528. That would be only a few roods?—Or half an acre, perhaps. That happens daily, or almost weekly, where there is a little building going on. It has happened this week in a farm close by me.

Chairman.

2529. This is a question by Mr. Hall. Do you know of any instance of hardship in tenancies?—I think I gave my father's instance.

2530. This question is handed in by Mr. O. Sheppard. The area you have given of your whole farm is 50 acres and your rent 56*l.* Have you included in this 18 acres of land formerly woodland and the meadows detached from the farm, and also the deduction from your rent of land in the occupation of Mr. Jones?—No, I have given you what it was before. That only happened the other day, the deduction of land which Mr. Jones holds. I gave it as it was held before that. My rent was 56*l.* before the other day.

2531. Is your farm smaller to-day?—Yes, it is smaller to-day than it was up to the 25th March.

2532. What is the size of your holding at the present moment?—I have not the plan, so that I could not say, but this field on the parish map is shown as eight acres, but Mr. Sheppard tells me that it is not eight acres, and I agree with him.

2533. 26 acres were taken off the 50?—No, it is meant that the woodland is added to the farm, but I would not be positive that the acreage is perfectly correct. I believe it is.

2534. Is your farm larger or smaller than it was?—Smaller.

2535. What is the new rent from the 25th March?—50*l.*

2536. 50*l.* instead of 56*l.*?—Yes. I did not take into account the meadow that is detached from the farm in giving the acreage. That is up by the side of the mountain, two miles away.

2537. But it is included in the rent of 56*l.*?—Yes.

2538. What is the acreage of that?—It is called 15 acres, the old measure, but I believe it is nearly 20 acres of Imperial measure.

Lord Kenyon.

2539. Here is a little calculation I have made. To pay two labourers, I make out, you would have to live rent free and receive 100*l.* from someone?—Yes, we could not get the returns by the improvements. I wish to qualify my evidence in this respect as to the piece taken. I have no chance of grazing it, because there is no fence round it, and it is in the middle of other people's property, so that I have only to cut the hay, and at the present rate the hay is not worth cutting; it had not been cut for a great many years before I cut it last year, and that is very little use; only it is amongst better hay, and is of some service.

Professor Rhys.

2540. What do you say would be the absolute value of that meadow to you now, in these years?—Say, 2*s.* an acre, at the outside.

The witness withdrew.

Chairman.

That concludes the Neath Valley witnesses, and now it is wished that we should go on to the Swansea Valley witnesses.

Mr. Richard Rees called and examined (through an interpreter).

Chairman.

2541. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

2542. Where do you live?—Hendre Caradog.

2543. Do you live in the Swansea Valley?—Yes.

2544. About the centre of the valley?—Yes.

2545. And you are prepared to give evidence respecting 7,000 acres in the Swansea Valley?—Yes.

2546. You have been in communication with the other tenant farmers of the district, and not only speak for yourself, but represent the opinion of a large number of tenant farmers for the district?—Yes, I have been elected by the committee to give evidence to-day.

2547. Are tenancies in your district yearly tenancies or leasehold tenancies?—There are leases there and there are yearly tenancies there.

2548. Are the provisions of the leases generally acceptable to the district?—No, they are not, as a rule.

2549. Can you give any instances of any clauses in the lease to which general objection is taken?—If a 21 years' lease is given, and the building is not in a state of repair when the lease is given, a clause is inserted that the premises must be left in a perfect state of repair, and I object to that.

2550. Are there any clauses objected to?—Yes.

2551. Will you state them?—We object to the clause that provides that we cannot sell our improvements, the improvements that we ourselves have made, that the landlord should have the first right. We cannot sell the lease without giving the first chance to the landlord to buy it.

2552. Anything else?—No.

2553. Will you be good enough to state who own the principal estates on the 7,000 acres of which you intend to speak?—Mrs. Gwyn, of Duffryn, Mr. Lloyd, of Cilbebyll, and Mr. Gough, of Ynys Cedwyn.

2554. What is paid to outgoing tenants for tenant right or goodwill?—Something small in respect of crops and manure.

2555. What improvements are made by the landlords?—Only as a rule in buildings.

2556. Do the tenants effect much improvement?—Not to the extent they used to.

2557. If landlords make improvements do they charge any per-centage for doing so?—Yes.

2558. What is the general sum charged?—About 5 per cent.

2559. Is an allowance given to tenants for cartage or hauling?—No, not a halfpenny, and even if they leave in a few years.

2560. Have rents been raised to your knowledge, within the last 30 years?—Yes.

2561. Have you ever known rents to have been raised on the improvements made by tenant farmers?—Yes.

2562. Have any permanent reductions in the neighbourhood been made to your knowledge?—No reductions.

2563. Abatements?—During the last half year.

2564. To what extent?—About 10 per cent.

2565. Are the tenants required to render other services than payment of rent?—Not to the extent they used to; they want a little yet.

ee 24,144.

2566. What kind of extra service is required?—I can mention, as an instance, that I have kept two horses and a cart for a week to work for my landlord in the winter.

2567. How long ago is that?—Less than 20 years ago.

2568. What sort of work was that—drawing coal, or what?—Carting manure and soil.

2569. Have the tenant farmers as a rule to borrow money to pay their rents?—It is a common thing.

2570. Do you know anything about consolidation of farms?—Yes.

2571. Has that led to any hardships?—Not that I know of, not that I can prove.

2572. I will ask you a question or two about cultivation. What is the quality of the land in your district?—Take it altogether it is exceptionally bad land.

Chairman—continued.

2573. Are any farms to your knowledge going out of cultivation?—Yes.

2574. Do I take it from you that going out of cultivation means being put under sheep?—They do not produce so much, and the number of sheep is something similar now in most places to what it used to be; they have not become sheep walks.

2575. Are there any farms to be let in your neighbourhood?—No.

2576. Do you consider the land is improving or deteriorating?—Much worse.

2577. Did you understand the question: the land does not produce as much as it did formerly, owing to the cultivation being inferior?—Yes.

2578. Has there been any land reclaimed by the tenants within late years?—Not during the last years, but it has been the case, and to a great extent.

2579. Who claims the mountain land in your neighbourhood?—The same owners as the owners of the farms.

2580. May I take it from you that the rights of pasturage add to the value of a holding?—They take the two together—the mountain land and the farms.

2581. Is there much game in the district?—Yes, a good deal.

2582. Are rabbits preserved?—Yes, by most of the big landowners.

2583. Are there any complaints against the gamekeepers?—Yes, continually.

2584. What complaints?—Trespass, and there is a straining of the connexion between tenant and landlord.

2585. Have you ever known a farmer ruined by game?—If this is proof, that the owner has sold him up, after having complained all his life about the game.

2586. Can you give any instances of that?—Yes.

2587. Will you name them?—I am willing to give it to the Commissioners in writing.

2588. But you are not empowered to state it in an open room?—No, many a farmer is afraid of saying what is right here.

2589. I understand you to say that they refused to give their names?—They have given me their names, but not to give to the public.

2590. We will reserve that point for the present. Is it your opinion that the game laws should be abolished?—Yes.

2591. Do you agree with the evidence which we have had very fully given us about the farmers and their children working on the farms?—Yes, if they are without pay.

2592. That tenants could not pay children's wages and the landlord's rent as well. Is that your opinion?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

2593. Have you ever known children away from home assist their parents to pay the rent?—Yes.

2594. How much per cent. do you think labour has advanced?—May I ask how long ago you want it?

2595. Say in the last 20 years?—They have not gone up so much during the last 20 years.

2596. The last 50 years?—During the last 50 years they have gone up 75 per cent.

2597. Has the number of labourers decreased?—Yes.

2598. For the reason that farmers cannot afford to pay these high wages?—Yes.

2600. Now about small plots of land for allotments. Are they easy to obtain in your district?—Yes, but for a price.

2601. Is that price considered excessive?—Yes.

2602. What do you calculate that agricultural produce has fallen during the last 20 years—what per-centage do you put upon it?—Comparing everything, about 40 per cent.

2603. About 40 per cent. in the last 20 years?—Yes.

Adjourned for a short time.

Lord Kenyon.

2604. You say you represent a committee of farmers in your district. Will you say how many that committee consists of?—They vary, sometimes more and sometimes less in the committee.

2605. What is it at the present time?—A sub-committee was appointed, and that is the committee that has been doing the work lately.

2606. Would you say that you represent the majority of farmers in your district?—Yes.

2607. What size farm do you rent?—568 acres.

2609. How much of that is sheep walk?—That is more than I can say, because I have never had it measured separately.

2610. The whole farm, including sheep walk is 568 acres?—Yes.

2611. Can you tell me approximately, roughly speaking, how much the pasture and arable land consist of?—They vary from one year to the other.

2612. You cannot give any idea. I want to know how much that is in proportion to the sheep walk, as near as I can get at it?—The arable this year is about eight acres.

2613. And the good pasture?—About 60 acres of hay.

2614. And grazed land?—That is a question I cannot give an idea about.

2615. You have stated that you have sometimes, within the last 20 years, had to do some service for your landlord. Can you tell me what was the service you were doing for your landlord when you were keeping two horses and a cart for a week?—Carrying manure and cinders.

2616. To improve your own holding?—No, to improve the land of the landlord.

2617. Absolutely unconnected with your own holding?—Yes.

2618. Is your house a good one?—Yes, it is considered so in the neighbourhood.

2619. Have you any complaints to make about your buildings?—I have had to pay for some of them myself.

2620. Are you under the East Glamorgan custom or the Agricultural Holdings Act, or any other custom?—My landlord has contracted himself out of the Agricultural Holdings Act. The Act was in operation in 1875. See 24,15

2621. He cannot contract himself out of the Act of 1883?—That is more than we knew until now.

2622. Did you put up the buildings on your own farm with the consent of the landlord, or without?—Sometimes when the landlord came by, I had to ask his consent.

2623. Did he give it?—Yes.

2624. Are you under an agreement?—No, only verbal.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

2625. You say you are only under a verbal agreement. That is a tenancy from year to year, I suppose?—Yes.

2626. Is there any ordinary or customary understanding as to any compensation for the tenant?—For permanent improvements?

2627. No, not necessarily for permanent improvements?—Only what happens between tenant and tenant. We have no other custom.

2628. Do you know what the custom of Glamorgan, as prevailing in the Vale of Glamorgan, is?—According to the book of Daniel Owen.

2629. Does the book of Mr. Daniel Owen correctly represent the relationship in the Swansea Valley?—The custom that we have and the custom that obtains in the Vale of Glamorgan is quite different.

2630. Is there any custom incident to your tenancy from year to year?—In connexion with the landlord?

2631. As between you and the landlord?—To pay the rent is the great custom.

2632. As between you and the incoming tenant?—In connexion with crops and manure.

2633. Will you tell us, supposing you had notice to leave, what would you expect from an incoming tenant with regard to crops?—To be paid for the seed and for the work that had been done in connexion with it.

2634. And as to manure?—Full value for the first year.

2635. Would any compensation be given by the incoming tenant. I will put it in this way: would any compensation or payment be made by the incoming tenant to you in respect of improvements to fences, gates, roads, and so on?—I could not claim anything.

2636. Then the only thing you could claim from an incoming tenant would be in respect of the growing crops and in respect of manure?—That is all I could claim.

2637. Do you know what the custom of Glamorgan is, according to Mr. Daniel Owen's book?—I have read the book.

2638. Do you think that your position would be improved if that custom applied to your holding?—It would be better than what we have now, but it would not be good enough.

2639. You have told us what you think to be your rights under a tenancy from year to year, but have you read the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883?—Yes, but that only lately.

2640. I suppose your evidence is given without reference to that Act really?—I was offered the Act when I wanted to leave three years ago.

2641. According to your notion of the terms of your tenancy from year to year, how much notice is the landlord to give you?—12 months.

2642. But is not that under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I have been led to understand that it is.

2643. Apart from the Agricultural Holdings Act, it would be six months' notice, expiring on the ordinary day of the commencement of the tenancy, would it not?—That is the old custom.

2644. I have not quite gathered from you, Mr. Rees, where Hendre Caradog is in the Swansea Valley. Where is Hendre Caradog. Which is the nearest town?—Neath is the nearest town.

2645. How many miles are you from Neath?—About six.

2646. How far from Clydach?—About five miles, as far as I can say.

2647. Are you somewhere on the Swansea Valley line of railway?—About a mile on the right-hand side.

2648. Then is it the parish of Cilbebyll?—Yes.

2649. Is your farm situated in the valley chiefly?—No, on the bank above.

2650. On the slope of the mountain?—Yes, it goes to the furthest point of the mountain.

2651. Does any part of your 560 acres include the top of the mountain?—A very extensive portion of it.

2652. Is that portion of your holding, which extends to the top of the mountain, properly enclosed?—No.

2653. What is the extent of the holding that is enclosed?—I cannot say.

2654. Is it half of what you have got unenclosed?—Barely.

2655. It is more than a quarter then, I gather?—Yes.

2656. In that case you have more than 100 acres of enclosed land?—Yes, but you must understand that the soil, the land that is enclosed, is quite as bad as the land that is unenclosed.

2657. So that you do not put it under the plough?—Not now to the same extent as we used to.

2658. How many acres do you usually mow for hay?—About 60 in the latter years.

2659. What is the name of your landlord?—Herbert Lloyd, Esquire.

2660. Is Herbert Lloyd the lord of the manor?—No.

2661. Who is the lord of the manor in which this farm is?—Those are things that have been totally abolished in our district for many years, and we never hear of them.

2662. Is there no common ground or public ground of any kind in your neighbourhood?—No, none that the landlord has not claimed.

2663. Which is the nearest village to your farm?—Pontardawe.

2664. How far is Pontardawe from you?—I have not got the milestones, but I can give you an idea.

2665. What is your idea?—Three miles.

2666. What is the kind of farmhouse that you have got?—It is considered very fair in the neighbourhood.

2667. How many rooms have you got?—Four downstairs and four upstairs.

2668. Do you employ any labourers?—Yes.

2669. Are they farm servants living in your house, or do you employ them outside?—In the house.

2670. How many?—One.

2671. What do you pay him?—30*l.*

2672. Does he live in the house?—Yes.

2673. Do any of your children help you in the cultivation of the farm, or, rather, in the carrying on of the farm?—I have only one, and she is too little.

2674. When did you first of all come to this particular farm?—It was there I was bred and born.

2675. Was your father a tenant before you?—Yes.

2676. And your grandfather?—Part of his time.

2677. As far back as your can go, have your ancestors been connected with farming in this neighbourhood?—So far as my memory serves me.

2678. How far can you say roughly?—The oldest that I remember is my grandfather.

2679. Have you heard tell from your grandfather of his father being there?—Yes.

2680. And they have always been about Cilbebyll, so far as you know?—No, they have not.

2681. Will you tell me when your committee first met?—On the 19th April.

2682. How many were present then?—I cannot give the number.

2683. Roughly about how many?—From 40 to 50.

2684. About how many farmers are there in Cilbebyll parish?—I cannot give the number.

2685. Were they nearly all at the meeting?—Not from Cilbebyll.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

2686. From where in your district did the 40 or 50 come?—From the neighbourhood all round.

2687. From Dulais Lower and from Llansamlet?—Yes.

2688. From Blaen-honddan?—Yes.

2689. And Duffryn Clydach?—I cannot say that.

2690. From Dulais?—Yes.

2691. From Dulais Higher and Lower?—Yes.

2692. Taking those districts or parishes, as I understand they are, were the 40 or 50 fairly representative of the farmers?—They knew the circumstances of the farmers of the neighbourhood.

2693. And they appointed a sub-committee? Yes.

2694. You were appointed by the sub-committee to give evidence?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

2695. Did we quite understand you just now. You said tenants were compelled to leave their farms in thorough repair, and they did not receive the farms in repair when they went into them?—That clause is in the lease as a rule.

2696. Were not the tenants to blame for taking the farm in that way?—They have seen that by this time.

2697. Do not tenants often take farms out of repair, and at too high a rent, with the view shortly to apply for a reduction of the rent?—I do not know of a single instance.

2698. Again, you said with regard to the gamekeepers, that they often strained the good relationship which existed between the landlord and the tenant. In which way did you mean that?—The keepers, if we ask them not to trespass, threaten us with the landlord.

2699. Do they keep sheep dogs?—Yes, and a good many of them have been killed.

2700. Are there a good many farmers in your neighbourhood who insure their lives?—They are thinking of living and not of dying.

Mr. Richard Jones.

2701. Is your farm an upland farm, Mr. Rees?—Yes.

2702. You stated to Mr. Brynmor Jones that you varied the amount of arable land. What was the reason that you varied?—Exactly as I see that I can carry out the work of the farm.

2703. Did it depend to any extent upon the price of the produce?—Yes.

2704. Do you raise any wheat?—No, not now.

2705. Used you to do so?—Yes.

2706. When wheat paid was there a reclamation of land going on?—Yes.

2707. Do you use any artificial manures?—Yes.

2708. What sort?—Basic slack for the most part.

2709. Does your landlord, or any other landlord in the neighbourhood encourage field experiments with manure?—No.

2710. Do you carry on any dairywork at your place?—I make butter, but I do not make cheese.

2711. How do you dispose of the butter?—I go along the road and ask anyone I meet if they want butter.

Mr. Seebohm.

2712. You stated that you thought land had deteriorated that it no longer produces as much as it did in the old times. That is so, is it not?—Yes, and I say so again.

2713. Is it possible that that may be partly the result of the smoke and gases from the different works around?—I cannot prove anything of the kind.

2714. Is your own district one in which there are many of these works?—Not near.

2715. But in other parts of the country, where there are works of a deleterious character, would they not spoil the produce of the land?—So far as I can understand from what farmers have told me, yes.

Mr. Grove.

2716. As to cottage accommodation, is there sufficient cottage accommodation on the farms in your opinion?—There are no labourers there; there are only two servant men in two parishes.

2717. Do you make use of the railway at all in taking your produce?—Not to a great extent.

2718. Do you find the railway rates are heavy when you do use the railways?—So far as I can hear they give a better chance to the foreigners.

2719. As to farming accounts and diaries, is anything of that sort kept to your knowledge?—No, I cannot say that they keep them systematically.

2720. Is there any co-operation amongst farmers, to your knowledge, as to the purchase or sale of produce in any way?—Nothing of that kind.

2721. Is there any general advantage taken by the farmers of benefit societies locally?—There used to be in the old times, but they have almost entirely ceased to do so now.

2722. Why has it gone out. If there was a benefit to be received, why do they not try to get the benefit now?—In truth, we have not any money to spare.

Professor Rhŷs.

2723. You have no agreement, but a verbal one at present?—Yes

2724. If you had an agreement in English it would not be of very much use, would it?—I prefer to have it in Welsh.

2725. Do any tenants have their agreements in Welsh, do you know?—Not that I know of.

2726. Would they have them if they requested the landlord, do you think?—I do not think it has been ever tried.

2727. I think you say that you do not know very much about the Agricultural Holdings Act. Is that to be got in Welsh, do you know?—It is only in English that I have seen it.

2728. If it could be had in Welsh, you would probably have read it and studied it, would you not?—I daresay I should have made more of it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

2729. In your opinion could the mountain land be used to any better advantage than it is now?—Yes, I could improve a lot upon it.

2730. There is a large quantity in your district, is there not?—Yes.

2731. Has there been any abatement in the rent locally besides your own farm?—I have not had any.

2732. Generally about that district?—They received a little last season.

2733. That would be an abatement, not a permanent reduction?—Yes, an abatement.

2734. Was any notice given of that?—No one received such a notice to my knowledge.

2735. Do you know of any land that has gone out of cultivation?—Yes.

2736. It is now absolutely vacant?—I mean this, that in cases where they used to keep 18 cows they only keep seven now.

2737. You do not mean that there is any land unlet?—No.

2738. Do you know of any waste land that has been reclaimed?—Yes, in the old times. That is not very lately.

2739. How long ago?—Less than 30 years ago.

2740. If there was a fixity of tenure, do you think that the tenant farmers would reclaim more land than they do now?—I believe that if there was security they would get something from their labours, they would do so.

2741. Has any application been made to any of the landlords, to your knowledge, to do that permanent improvement?—No.

Chairman.

2742. I have two or three questions which have been handed in. First, there is this question from Mr. Vincent. In what way do you suggest that to say any man has been sold up can injure him at any time subsequently?—Because he does not have a further chance in that direction.

2743. Do you know anything personally about the working of the Duffryn estate?—Yes; I have some idea.

2744. These are not questions from the Commissioners, but questions from Mr. Vincent. Do you know that permanent reductions have been made on the Duffryn estate to the extent of 8 per cent.?—It has been given to the new tenants.

2745. Was the last abatement on that estate 10 per cent.?—Yes, on condition that they had paid up all their arrears.

2746. Is not it the fact that on the Duffryn estate interest is seldom charged on money expended or upon improvements?—In some exceptional cases the tenants have to pay on their own improvements.

Professor Rhŷs.

2747. In exceptional cases?—It sometimes happens that the tenant pays on his improvements.

Chairman.

2748. Are there some English farmers on the Duffryn estate?—Yes.

2749. If so, do you think that the Englishmen came to Glamorganshire because the conditions of tenure are better than in England?—Some Englishmen have come to Glamorganshire in this way: they have seen that the acreage is large and that the money is small for it.

2750. Are you aware that families stay many years on the Duffryn estate?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

2751. You say that some Englishmen have taken farms upon the Duffryn estate?—Yes.

2752. To what religious body do they belong?—The Church of England.

2753. Do you know their politics?—I cannot prove that.

Mr. Richard Jones.

2754. How did these Englishmen know that the farms were vacant?—They were in that neighbourhood for many years.

2755. They had not come from England for that purpose?—That was their beginning.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

2756. I understood that those people had come from England in order to farm in Wales. Is that so, because it makes a good deal of difference to the point?—I cannot prove that they did that.

2757. So far as you know the Englishmen in question are people who have been living in the neighbourhood of Neath?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

2758. Can you say that these people were put into the farms because they were churchmen?—I cannot prove that; it happens to be so.

Chairman.

2759. These are questions put by Mr. Hall. Do you know of instances where tenants have been promised compensation for damage by game and have not received anything?—Yes, I do.

2760. Do you know of land being taken from a tenant for game rearing without consent or notice?—I know of part of farms being taken away.

2761. Can you produce any instances?—Yes, my nearest neighbours.

2762. On whose estate?—On the same estate as I am.

Chairman—continued.

2763. You understand these are all Mr. Hall's questions. Do you know of dogs being poisoned?—I know of a good many more that have been poisoned than have not been poisoned.

2764. By whom?—We cannot prove it.

2765. Do you know of horses being buried alive owing to colliery operations, and has any compensation been paid to the tenant for the loss?—They have been paid in this way, that there was a public subscription on their behalf.

Chairman—continued.

Lord Kenyon.

2766. Was there any compensation asked for?—They sent the book of public subscriptions to the master.

2767. There was no compensation asked for first?—No.

2768. They started with the book?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Jenkin Davies called and examined.

Chairman.

2769. Where do you live?—Penygraig.

2770. In the same district as the last witness?—The other side of the river.

2771. How far off is your occupation from the occupation of the last witness?—Between four and five miles.

2772. Are you a tenant farmer?—No, not now.

2773. You have been a tenant farmer?—Yes.

2774. Under what landlord did you live?—Henry Nathaniel Miers.

2775. What is your occupation at present?—Farmer.

2776. You farm your own land?—Yes, the same land, but I bought it.

2777. Yes, you are a freeholder?—Yes.

2778. You have heard the evidence of the last gentleman. Will you tell us whether you agree with it on the whole?—Yes, with much of it; but my circumstances are different.

2779. Do you know anything of instances where rights of common belonging to the public have been disturbed?—Yes, to some degree.

2780. Is it a fact that your father rented a strip of common land for 5*s.* a year, the rent of which is now 4*l.* 1*s.*?—It is a fact that we, the children, pay 4*l.* 1*s.* for land that my father only paid 5*s.* for.

2781. Will you tell us how that came about?—I cannot quite find out the exact date, but my father built a house on a strip of waste land, a kind of quarry that had slipped down, with the consent of the lord of the manor, to whom I paid 5*s.* a year. The Duke of Beaufort was the lord of the manor.

2782. Can you trace this history a little further?—My father had not a lease of it; he failed to get one; he left it to us, but when he died there had been four cottages built upon it.

2783. In addition to the one which was originally built?—Yes, but he divided the original one into two. After my father's death we went to ask for a lease of it—three of us children went. We had a lease for 60 years; we failed to get it for longer; one paid 30*s.*, the other paid 30*s.*, and the third paid a guinea. We had each a lease, three of us, for which we had to pay 7*l.* each. We had it measured, and we had to pay 30*s.* between us. I wanted to sell my house, and they wanted two guineas for the license of assignment. I have the receipts here, if you wish to see them, and the letter offering a license of assignment.

2784. I understand this charge to be a registration charge made by the landlord, so as to know absolutely who his tenants are?—My father had the plot for 5*s.* a year, and he left it to his children, and we applied for a lease, and that is what we had to pay for it before we could get it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

2785. Following the noble Chairman's question I see there is a covenant in the lease—"That the "tenant will not assign or let, or part with the "possession of the premises thereby demised, or "any part thereof, or any part of the term "hereby granted to any person or persons whosoever, without the like consent of the duke, "his heirs or assigns"?—I applied for consent, and the letter that I received in answer to it, has been handed in.

2786. That was from the solicitor of the Duke of Beaufort?—From the agent.

Chairman.

2787. This explains it, I think. The agent writes: "I do not think there will be any "difficulty as to your assigning the lease of "your premises. The Duke of Beaufort signs "the license, which is endorsed on the lease "and counterpart, and his solicitors charge two "guineas for preparing the license." That, I think, explains the charge of two guineas; it is the usual charge, in fact, is it not?—No, I have had an assignment for nothing, and I have paid half a guinea for another.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

2788. Is it not the case that a great many agents do charge some fee for the consent of their clients to an assignment?—I am not aware that it is so.

2789. While we are upon this, may I ask you whether or not there is a covenant in this lease, that they will build a house within a certain time?—I have built a house, worse luck!

2790. We are not doubting your story, so far as you have gone, but we should like to have it explained. This is the clause in the lease: "And "the said lessee doth hereby for himself, his "heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, "covenant with the duke, his heirs and assigns, "that he, the lessee, will, during the said term "pay the rent, and he will pay and discharge"—a lot of taxes—"and he will, within the period "of 12 calendar months from the date of these "presents" (that is the date of the lease), "erect, "build, and finish fit for occupation, with the "best materials and good workmanship, one "substantial messuage and dwelling-house, to-"gether with all other suitable sanitary matters "as by law required, and to the satisfaction of the "surveyor of the duke"?—That has been built.

2791. But do you say there were other buildings on the ground at the time?—That is part.

2792. The lease you have handed in is an ordinary building lease, with the ordinary covenants and clauses in it?—I have never seen anything like that before in any other lease.

2793. The words are the common form; they are in every lease that one has seen, in one form or another?—It is not usual to give a 60 years' lease in the neighbourhood.

2794. Do you say it ought to have been 99?—I wanted it for 99.

2795. This is nothing to do with the ground on which your father built. There is a little map on which I do not find any buildings marked at all?—It is since that lease has been drawn up that the house I have has been built.

2796. What has this lease to do with the complaint you are making with reference to the action of the Duke of Beaufort on the ground on which your father built?—You asked if the common rights had been disturbed.

Chairman.

2797. I asked about the strip of common land. Is that the strip of common land?—Yes, that is part of the common.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

2798. This is a part of the common land?—Yes, it has been.

2799. Do I understand before you got the lease from the duke you had been in the habit of occupying this land for your own purposes?—He used to pay 5*s.* a year.

2800. I understand you to say that this bit of land which forms the property demised by this building lease was part of the land in respect of which your father paid 5*s.* a year rent?—Yes.

2801. Have you never seen any other building lease. Is this the first building lease you have taken?—No.

Chairman.

Is anyone here representing the Duke of Beaufort?

Mr. Glynn Price.—Yes, I represent the Duke of Beaufort. I am his agent.

Chairman.

Will you take a seat here and listen to this evidence?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

2802. Has any charge been made beyond the usual charge made by agents and solicitors to assign?—It is higher than I have ever heard of before.

2803. Is it not usual to charge a guinea for this kind of consent?—I have had two licenses of assignment before, and I paid nothing for the first and half a guinea for the second. I was only answering the question about the disturbance of common rights.

Chairman.

Mr. Price, do you wish to put any question about this. Is it the general practice on the estate to charge two guineas?

Mr. Glynn Price.—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Did you hear the first part of the evidence of this witness?

Mr. Glynn Price.—Yes, I did.

Chairman.

You have no question you would like to send in in writing?

Mr. Glynn Price.—No, I do not think so.

Chairman.

2804. Do the landlords make improvements in your neighbourhood?—So far as I am personally concerned the landlord has done nothing.

2805. If they do, do they charge anything on improvements?—My landlord asked me five per cent. if he built on my land.

2806. Have the rents been raised during the last 30 years, and if so, how much?—They have been raised from 30 to 40 per cent.

2807. In the last 30 years?—I cannot go back 30 years.

2808. Do you know of instances where the rent has been raised on improvements made by the tenant?—Yes.

2809. Can you name any instances?—Yes.

2810. What are they?—There is a farmer living near me, and I asked him if he would consent to give his name.

Chairman—continued.

2811. What is his name?—Rees Morgan, of Heolddu.

2812. What does he say?—He has had a rise once, and another time they took a meadow of six acres away from him.

2813. Did they reduce his rent?—No.

2814. Who is the landlord?—Howell Gwyn Jeffreys, Esq.

2815. Do you know of any temporary abatements of rent?—No, I do not. That farmer had 1*l.* last year.

2816. Do you agree with the statements that farmers have often to borrow money to pay their rents?—I know of farmers who have done that.

2817. Do you agree with what the other witnesses have said that some land in the district is going out of cultivation?—Yes, to a degree.

2818. That farmhouses are falling into ruins?—Yes, some of them have.

2819. Much of it is deteriorating because rents are too dear and labour too high?—Yes, from what I can understand.

2820. Do you complain of the game laws?—Not on my land, but on the land of those people who live near me.

2821. Not in your own instance?—Not in my own instance.

2822. Do you know of any farmers who have bought their own holdings like yourself?—Not in our parish.

2824. What was the reason you bought your land?—I was asking my landlord for a building, and I could not get it. He wanted to make an agreement with me, that if I spent 300*l.* in building he would give me a 21 years' lease and 3 per cent. on the outlay, and at the expiration of the lease that the land should go back to him. I took the agreement. After I had built the buildings, I applied for a lease, and I failed to get it, and when I was trying for the lease the mortgagee jumped in, and they wanted the building from me for nothing. I have the letters from Mr. Kempthorne, who was the agent for the landlord, and the solicitor for the mortgagee, and instead of giving me the 3 per cent. reduction, they asked me for the original rent. I refused to pay it the first half year, and I received letters threatening to distrain on me for my rent. The second half year I offered the rent with this 3 per cent. reduction, and they refused to receive it. I waited the third half year. I offered it then, and they refused it, and threatened me with the bailiffs. I put the matter in the hands of Mr. Bishop, who corresponded with them. Then they wanted to come and meet me and arrange about dividing the houses, and I refused. They offered to sell it to me then, but they would not receive my rent, and they wanted 1,500*l.* for it, and 22*l.* was the rent after the reduction. I was offering them 1,000*l.*; they said they could not do it, and we all parted, and nothing was done that day. They sent another letter to me, asking me to go there, and I went, and we agreed, and I had to pay 1,125*l.* for it.

2825. You agree to all you have heard about the farmers' children. Of course you agree with that?—I know that the children of farmers in my neighbourhood work, and work for nothing according to the evidence, I hear. There are many children working in the works whom I can prove to be helping their parents to pay their rents. There is no servant man being paid by any farmer in the parish—unless it is for the horses which work in the woods or in the collieries.

2826. Is there a sufficiency of labourers?—At present there are sufficient, but there is not enough money to pay them.

2827. In what condition are the labourers' houses in the district?—There are not any labourers in cottages who work on the land in the parish, so far as I know.

2828. It was a complaint in Cowbridge in particular that there was a great scarcity of maid servants in that district?—With regard to the maid servants the case is the same with us. At present I have no maid servant; I and my wife do everything belonging to the farm, but we have had a permanent labourer to do improvements since I bought the farm—to drain the land and to reclaim those parts which were not worth anything when I bought it. I have opened about 3,000 yards of gutter, from one yard to nine feet in depth. I have closed about 1,600 of these gutters.

2830. Do you go in for dairy work?—I make butter, but I do not make cheese, because I cannot sell it. There is no sale for Welsh cheese, and the hands are few for making it. I ought to say that with regard to Mr. Rees Morgan, the sub-agent, he offered me last autumn an agreement something similar to what is usually given to the tenants of Sir John Llewelyn. I refused to sign it, and the agent said if I did not sign it I should receive notice, and I did receive it. He withdrew the notice in two months, and not one of the tenants of Mr. Howell Jeffreys consented to sign the agreement. I have the copy here.

Mr. Griffiths.

2831. You said there was one cottage built by your father. Who built the other three cottages?—My father had to leave his holding once because he refused to accept the rise which they tried to force on him. The rent at that time was 18*l.* with the land tax, and they wanted 40*l.* My father left his holding, and it was then that he built this house on the common land to go to live in it. The two tenants who succeeded my father agreed to pay 40*l.* for it. They could not get within any distance of paying the rent, and both died on the parish—paupers. When these two failed to make the thing pay they sent the offer to my father, who had been working as a collier underground for eight years to take back the farm again. He was not willing to go, but they pressed him. Mr. Stroud, the banker, did it; he did go back in the end, when Mr. Stroud said he would help him well. He was an excellent master as long as he was alive, but he was drowned here on the sea shore. My father accumulated the little capital he had when he was a collier underground.

2832. I suppose you fed the labourer to whom you paid this 12*s.* a week?—Yes, I fed him as well.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

2833. As to the circumstances under which you bought your land, I do not think we have all the facts before us to enable us to pass a judgment on that matter. Did you become tenant under a written agreement to Captain Miers?—Yes, I have it here. It was a written agreement.

2834. What was the rent written in the agreement?—Here it is for you to see. (The witness handed in an agreement.)

2835. Does it give the date?—Everything is there for you to see.

2836–7. I see this is a letter from Captain Miers, of Ynyspenllwch, dated the 21st October 1885. Had you been in possession of the farm before this date?—It was there I was born and bred.

2838. At Penygraig?—Yes.

2839. Was your father then alive, and was he a tenant on the 21st October 1885?—No.

2840. When did your father die?—Eleven years ago.

2841. Where had you been between 1885 and the time that your father died, 1882?—Stopping in the place.

2842. Did you pay then for it?—Yes.

2843. What rent did you pay then?—31*l.*

2845. You began building on the terms of this letter, as I understand it?—But there was a lease promised me immediately after.

2846. I know, but did you begin building before the lease was given?—I never had a lease at all. They refused to give it to me when I asked for it.

2847. Then you began building upon the strength of this letter?—Yes, because there was a lease in promise.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

2848. In doing the buildings which you and your landlord jointly thought of, you expended a great deal more than the 200*l.* mentioned in this letter?—He stipulated that I should build the four different buildings, and he stipulated, too, that I should not expend less than 200*l.*, and I was determined to spend not more than 200*l.*, but when the thing was done I found it was more.

2849. But he says that you are to do certain things "at a cost not exceeding 200*l.*," that is, at a cost less than 200*l.*; but what you say is at a cost of not less than 200*l.*?—Not less than 200*l.* I understood it to be. That was the conversation between us.

2850. Then, in fact, I understand, that when you did commence the buildings, somehow or other you went beyond the margin of 200*l.*?—Yes, but he was asking me for those different buildings, one apart from the other.

2851. I am not suggesting you have done anything wrong. I want to get at the facts?—That does not comprise the haulage, which was outside the agreement altogether.

2852. You refer to this letter as the agreement, and there is not a word about haulage so far as I can see?—There was a conversation between us apart from that letter.

2853. I think you wish the Commissioners to understand that you did expend about 300*l.*?—Yes.

2854. Had you, when you applied for the lease or the proper legal agreement which is mentioned in the letter, finished all the buildings?—Yes, I had finished.

2855. If you had complied with this letter, as I understand it, you were entitled to a lease for 21 years at 22*l.* rent?—Yes.

2856. Now, what was the answer that the solicitor gave you?—It was to Mr. Miers I spoke. Mr. Miers said I should get the lease, but I did not get it, and I paid the rent for about two years

2858. To whom did you pay that rent?—To Mr. Miers, and then about two years afterwards the mortgagees stepped in.

2859. Did you apply to the mortgagees for the lease when they took possession?—Yes.

2860. Why did you not enforce the claim against them?—The lawyer told me that I ought to be thankful that I had fallen into the hands of lenient clergymen of the Church of England, that they could not give me this, that they wanted 31*l.* for it, and I have letters from them here.

2861. Do you mean the mortgagees in possession from Captain Miers demanded the original rent of 31*l.*?—I have the letters under their hands in my possession.

2862. You can tell us the effect of them. We cannot go into all the details of this?—They demanded the original rent, and I refused to pay for the first three half years, and they demanded the same thing each time refusing the reduction, and saying that they would send the bailiffs.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

2863. Why did you not take legal advice, Mr. Davies?—How was I to fight such powerful people as that?

2864. According to your own showing you had become a tenant from year to year, paying 22*l.* a year. You had paid the 22*l.* a year for two years, as I understand?—Yes, I paid them to the landlord; but I had not paid them to the mortgagees, and they refused to take it.

2865. Do you know whether the mortgagees had consented to the lease or not?—The same man acted as the agent for the landlord and the solicitor for the mortgagees, and it is my belief he must have known about it.

2866. Of course it is a very difficult question whether constructive notice of the solicitor under those circumstances would operate, you do not know yourself whether the mortgagees had consented?—No, I could not say. It was the same man who received my rent.

2867. You said something about a clergyman as I understood you. I suppose that is not in his capacity as clergyman?—The two mortgagees were clergymen.

2868. In the long run, to terminate this dispute, you bought it at 1,125*l.*?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

2869. Do you think you are better off as a freeholder than you were as a tenant farmer?—I feel I have bought my liberty, and I can make the improvements I like and expect to get the benefit. I have already spent 200*l.* or 300*l.* on improvements of the land since I bought it, and there are some present here to-day who have seen the improvements.

2870. Do you consider that your farm produces more now than it did formerly?—In my opinion, after a few years have gone it will produce twice as much; it has not had time enough.

2871. You are laying money by to pay interest which is greater than paying rent?—I receive money from other sources than from the land, or I would not have any money at all.

2872. What is the acreage of this holding?—58 acres.

2873. Middling land or bad land?—About half of it is peat, and the rest is pasture.

2874. Who built the other two cottages?—My father built the first, and then that was divided into two, and then he built two houses, and I built the last.

2875. Did your father receive any rent for any of those you built, or for half of the cottage he divided?—For everything except the house I built.

2876. He did receive rent?—Yes.

2877. Although he was only paying the Duke of Beaufort 5*s.*?—Yes. There is some glebe land which I should like to speak about near me. It is one of the nearest farms to me belonging to the Church of Briton Ferry. The tenant does all the repairs; he built a stable within my memory, and after building the stable his rent was raised 4*l.*, and he has to thatch the dwelling-house, and the cowhouse, and the barn—part of it every year. I have a brother who has been living on the land near me who signed an agreement with the master contrary to the custom of the land, and when he went out from his holding he was not allowed to sell any of the crop, if he would not leave all the manure on the farm without being paid for it—some 60 or 70 yards of dung,—and the master refused to buy the crop himself. That was last September.

Chairman.

2878. There are one or two questions handed in by Mr. Hall. Do you produce any tenants agreements. Are any clauses considered oppressive, and what clauses, if any, are considered so?—He is not allowed to sell the crops when he leaves the land, and the landowner refuses to buy the crops when offered to him. There is another agreement here in which the land is let to a brother-in-law of mine, whilst the game is let to other people.

2879. There is no objection to these names being taken down?—No, I am quite willing.

2880. Will you give me the names?—My brother-in-law is Wm. Bowen. He was paying 95*l.* for his land when he went in. He saw he had no prospect of being able to pay for it and he gave notice to quit. After the sale they offered him 20*l.* reduction, and he failed to pay for it then, and he left it there, and he has taken other land. When I saw him last he had not been paid for any improvements he had made or for any of the manure he had left behind him. I cannot say whether he has been since.

2881. On whose estate was that?—It is on that agreement. I believe there are trustees now.

2882. Arthur Gilbertson is the name?—Yes, that is the name of my brother's landlord, and the other agreement is my brother-in-law's.

Mr. Richard Jones.

2883. Could not an outgoing tenant claim any portion of the crop according to the custom of the country?—My brother had contracted himself out of the custom of the country before, and his landlord refused to allow him to sell the crop unless he left the dung to him unpaid for.

Chairman.

2884. That was an instance where the landlord prevailed upon the tenant to contract himself out of the custom of the country. That is a question put in by Mr. Hall?—From all we can understand from that agreement, yes.

2885. This is a question asked by Mr. Vincent. On what estates belonging to what owners do you say that farmhouses are falling in ruin?—On Cefn-eithrin they have been altogether decayed and the land has been put to other land adjoining that of my brother-in-law's.

Chairman—continued.

2886. On what estates, is the question?—On Mr. Grono's estate. The trustees have the names in the agreement.

2887. Are these farmhouses supposed to be inhabited, or they are the surplus houses of several farms consolidated into one?—The two Cefn-eithrin ones have been consolidated, and there are no buildings at all on one of them. The rent of one was 54*l.* and the other 68*l.*, but the one who paid 68*l.* had to quit, and now the two together are being let to other tenants for 75*l.*

Mr. Grove.

2888. I think you said there was no cottage accommodation for farm labourers in the parish?—I do not know of any.

2889. How many farms are there in the parish?—About 18 or 20. A case came to my knowledge last night in which a tenant had spent a lot of money in rebuilding the outhouses, and he has just received notice to quit and he got nothing for the haulage. He had notice to quit or to pay an increased rent.

2890-1. Will you hand in his name?—I will give it on the strength of the message I received last night. I have not got the authority to do so.

Chairman.

I think we had better not have any hearsay evidence.

Mr. Richard Jones.

2892. There is a clause in this agreement and I should like to know if this is usual in agreements in this district: "The tenant shall look "carefully after his sheep and shall prevent the "same from straying or committing a trespass, "and he shall not keep a bull during the said "tenancy"?—I cannot say.

2893. What is the object of inserting this clause?—Because the land adjoins that of the landlord, and because he wants to walk over the land.

Lord Kenyon.

2894. Does the landlord in those cases keep a bull for the use of the tenant?—No.

2895. Does the tenant keep any cows?—Yes.

2896. How does the breeding continue?—He must take the cows elsewhere. I have something else to say. There is a disease of horses about, and it is called the mountains disease. Farmers in our neighbourhood in one year have lost as much as 100*l.* through it, and have received no sympathy whatever from their masters in their infliction, and it is a thing which happens very often. William Bowen, my brother-in-law, lost three horses in September last.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. DAVID HARRIES called and examined (through an interpreter).

Chairman.

2897. You are a tenant farmer?—Yes.

2898. You live in the Swansea Valley?—Yes.

2899. In the same valley as the last two witnesses?—Yes, higher up towards the top.

2900. What is the name of your holding?—Brynllefrith.

2901. You are quite up in the mountains?—Yes, on the top of Llanguicke parish.

2902. How large is your holding?—148 acres.

2903. And you live under whom?—Miers v. Miers.

2904. You speak for the district contained in the upper part of that parish?—Yes.

2905. The tenancies are annual in most places?—Yes.

2906. Do you know of any cases where landlords have introduced into their agreements clauses waiving the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883?—I had the offer of an agreement myself but I refused to sign it.

2907. Do you know of any tenants who have had to pay for goodwill on going into an old tenancy?—Yes, I do.

2908. I will read what you say in your statement and ask you to explain it: "I know of

"one new tenant who had to pay 60*l.* goodwill "to the old tenant upon the value. The conse-"quence was that the farm had to be sold "publicly, or the consequence was that the "tenant had to pay the 60*l.* himself or buy the "farm himself"?—A man came from the Rhondda who wanted a farm, and he made an agreement with the occupying tenant to the effect that he would pay him 60*l.* goodwill and take the stock and the crop at a valuation, and in about three years after that the land was sold by public auction, and the man from the Rhondda who came to live there bought it himself.

2909. The consequence was that the farm was afterwards sold by public auction, and the tenant had either to lose his 60*l.* or buy the farm. What improvements do the landlords make?—Only on the building.

2910. What interest is charged in the rent on such improvements?—From 3 to 5 per cent., and nothing often.

2911. What compensation is made for the cartage?—Haulage free often.

2912. Have rents risen during the last 30 or 40 years?—Yes.

2913. Give any instance of that?—My farm.

Chairman—continued.

2914. Will you state your experience?—20 years ago it was 35*l.*, after that it has been 90*l.* until the year 1886, and it is 70*l.* now.

2915. It went up to 90*l.* at one time?—Yes.

2916. Do you know of a case where a farmer and his three sons worked to reclaim waste land?—I do.

2917. Are you able to state the names?—Yes.

2918. What was the name of the gentleman?—Thomas Griffiths, Pistyll.

2919. Who did he live under?—I cannot tell you the name. I believe it was Cuthbertson from Neath.

2920. Was the rent raised 20*l.* a year?—Yes.

2921. Was the land afterwards sold to another landlord?—Yes.

2922. Was any compensation paid to the tenant for the trouble of reclaiming that waste land?—No.

2923. Do you know of any cases of temporary abatement?—Yes, on Mr. Gough's estate during the last half year 10 per cent. was allowed.

2924. Do you agree that farmers have to borrow money to pay their rents?—Yes.

2925. What sort of land is it in your district?—It is high mountainous land.

2926. Is land going out of cultivation?—Yes.

2927. That is being put under sheep?—Yes, on lands which used to support several families, and in Clydd Fach 50 years ago more corn was raised than is raised in the whole parish now.

2928. Who encloses the land on the mountains?—Men from the neighbourhood, with the consent of the Duke of Beaufort.

2929. Who does that land belong to?—The Duke of Beaufort.

2930. Who pays for the enclosure?—Those who enclose it pay for the enclosure themselves.

2931. Then, they lose the right of running sheep on it?—Yes.

2932. Is game as a rule preserved?—Only on Mr. Gough's estate.

2933. Where it is not preserved, of course, the tenants have liberty to kill it?—Yes.

2934. Is the Ground Game Act of any use in the district?—No.

2935. What do you think of the game laws generally?—They ought to be abolished altogether.

2936. Do you know of any farmers who have bought their own holdings?—Yes.

2937. With borrowed money or with their own money?—Both.

2938. Does the interest generally come to more than the rent?—In some cases.

2939. Then, what made tenants buy their holdings?—For fear that they would be dispossessed of their holdings.

2940. Do you agree to what you have heard about farmers' children being very valuable on the farms?—Yes.

2941. Is labour scarce or plentiful?—Scarce.

2942. Are there any labourers' cottages?—Only the cottages of people who work in the works.

Chairman—continued.

2943. Are small plots of land for allotments or gardens easy to obtain at fair rent?—No it is not easy to have it on a very fair rent.

2944. It can be got at a price?—Yes, at a very high price.

2945. Who are the principal landowners in the district?—Mr. Miers; but Mr. Miers cannot grant leases, the estate is in Chancery.

2946. Have you any remedy to offer?—The big landlords do not wish the small landlords to sell. They are unwilling for the small landlords to sell land to build upon. I have one case especially: a road was going through the land of one landlord to the land of a small freeholder, and this small freeholder was about to sell his land, and one man was going to build upon it, and the agent to the big landlord sent a letter to prevent haulage towards the new building. See 5002–5063.

2947. Who was the big landlord?—Lord Dynevor, and the thing is still unfinished, although people who are now alive can remember the road for 48 years. There is a road going from one road to the other, and they cannot remember when the road was commenced. The right of road has existed there beyond living memory, or for 48 years.

Lord Kenyon.

2948. You say you farm 148 acres?—Yes.

2949. And your rent is now 70*l.*?—Yes.

2950. And you object to your rent being raised to 90*l.*?—It was 90*l.* when I went there.

2951. It was 90*l.* when you took it. You never paid 35*l.*?—No.

2952. It has been reduced since you had it?—It was the tenant before me paid 35*l.*

2953. Since you have held it it has been reduced, not raised?—Yes.

2954. Do you think you paid an extra rent on improvements made by the former tenant?—Yes, I know it; I paid an increased rent on the improvements that were made by the former tenant.

2955. Would not 35*l.* be a very low rent for that sized farm?—It would be something like right compared with what is paid for land in the neighbourhood.

2956. What sort of farm is your farm. How much of this sheep walk or rough land is there?—It is land almost surrounded by mountain.

2957. How much pasture?—54 acres.

2958. Any arable?—About 29 acres.

2959. What is the rest?—Very poor meadow land.

2960. Do you mow it?—Yes.

2961. For hay?—Yes.

2962. You said you refused to sign an agreement?—Yes.

2963. Why?—Because he was refusing to grant the benefit of the Agricultural Holdings Act.

2964. You mean there was a clause in the agreement evading the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes, the Act of 1883.

2965. Were you not aware that that was an illegal clause?—No, because it was from a lawyer that I had it.

2966. Then you spoke about enclosure by men in your neighbourhood. I do not quite understand what you mean by men in the neighbourhood?—Tenants who lived in cottages near.

2967. Had these men a right of sheep walk on the mountain before?—Yes, but they did not keep sheep, although they had the right.

2968. The lord of the manor gave them leave to enclose portions of this mountain?—Yes.

2969. You said you thought that freeholders were better off when they bought their holdings, even with borrowed money, than if they paid a rent?—Yes.

2970. Would you pay a higher rent, or would you think it possible to pay a higher rent, if you had some fixity of tenure?—I should have a better chance; it would be too dear as prices are now.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

2971. I do not quite understand about this common or waste land. Do you know the name of the manor in which the common land that you are referring to is situate?—I live in the manor of Cae Gurwen, but the manor that I was speaking of belongs to the Duke of Beaufort; I do not know the name.

2972. Is it in the same parish?—Yes.

2973. Is it adjoining your farm?—Yes. It adjoins the manor of Cae Gurwen, and as they enclosed the waste land of that manor their sheep came down to our common land of Cae Gurwen, because there is no Enclosure Act.

2974. There is no fence or anything else separating the two commons of the two manors?—No, nothing.

2975. As I understand it, your complaint is, that in consequence of the enclosures made, with the consent of the lord of the manor, the sheep come down upon your waste land. Is that it?—Yes, that is it.

2976. Are these two waste lands or two commons at the top of the mountain?—Yes.

2977. And is your farm on the slope of the same mountain?—It is on the flat ground, but it goes part of the way up the mountain.

2978. And then comes the waste land?—Yes.

2279. Are there other farms round the same mountain, and in the same valley?—Yes.

2980. Before these enclosures on the waste of the other manor took place, had your cattle and sheep been depastured anywhere you liked on the common?—Yes, they kept them within bounds.

2981. You kept them within bounds?—Yes, as well as we could.

2982. Was there any portion of that waste or common supposed to belong to you, as tenant of the farm which you held?—No, only the right to send cattle to it.

2983. Was the right limited or stinted?—No. They tried to enclose the mountain at Cae Gurwen.

2984. Who did that?—The lords of the manor, and they put notices in the papers that they were going to build on certain plots.

2985. What took place then?—The country rose against them and stopped them, and they put it in the hands of a lawyer.

2986. And the common remains unenclosed?—Yes.

2987. You said the Ground Game Act of 1880 was no use?—No.

2988. Do you know what it enacts?—I do not know in particular what it means.

2989. You know that it secures to the tenants the right of shooting, for instance—keeping down the ground game?—Yes.

2990. How is it that the Act is of no use?—There is no game to be had.

2991. Then why do you think that the game laws ought to be abolished?—I do not think it is any good.

2992. You are not speaking from your own experience of it, then?—No.

2993. With regard to the road that Lord Dynevor stopped. Was that the only road to the particular farm?—Yes, there was a parish road on the top side of the farm.

2994. Who was making the road to the farm?—I do not know who it was that did it, but it was by subscription.

2995. Of people living in the neighbourhood?—Yes.

2996. How came it to be stopped?—Because this freeholder was giving his land on lease for building at 1*s.* per perch per annum, or selling it off outright for 21*s.* per perch.

2997. Through whose land was the road being made?—Through the land of Lord Dynevor.

2998. What is the point of his stopping it?—Because Lord Dynevor charged 1*s.* 6*d.* per perch for his land, and the lawyer got 6*l.* 6*s.* for each conveyance, whereas the other lawyer only charged 2*l.* 10*s.* and that the land of the freeholder would all be taken, and his would be left behind.

2999. Had Lord Dynevor consented to the making of the road?—It has been in existence before Lord Dynevor was in existence.

3000. If it had been in existence all that time why was Lord Dynevor able to stop it more than anyone else?—I do not know that he is able to.

3001. Do I understand that the point of the story is that landlords are so powerful in the neigbourhood that they act in defiance of the laws sometimes?—The agent of Lord Dynevor said that he will spend 500*l.* in stopping the road, and the freeholder is afraid to go to law to fight him.

3002. How about the gentlemen who had subscribed for the making of the road?—Well, a good many of those have died by this time.

3003. The subscription towards the making of this road, and the partial making of the road, had taken place a good many years years ago?—Yes, but the freeholder who occupies the farm now repairs the road.

3004. Does he use it now?—The freeholder does use the road himself, and Lord Dynevor does not stop him, but he stops the others from using the road.

3005. Do I understand you to contend, Mr. Harries, that the public have a right of way over that road?—Yes; inasmuch as besides the public taking advantage of it, all the minerals from an adjoining mine were carried over it, without any objection being raised.

3006. How long is it that the first stoppage took place on the part of Lord Dynevor?—About a month ago.

3007. Only a month ago?—The road existed before the memory of man.

Mr. Griffiths.

3008. Are farms generally let on easier terms to farmers who have children to work on the farm?—They do not change the tenants very frequently there.

3009. Have you any farm labourers in your district living in cottages?—No, we have not any who live in cottages. There are labourers living in the house but not in the cottages.

3010. You say farms are often sold in that neighbourhood. What effect does that have upon the adjoining farmers. Do they go on farming?—They farm better.

3011. I mean what effect has it upon the surrounding farmers. Are they not in dread of seeing their land sold as well?—Some of it is ready to be sold now, and they do not make as much of the land as they should.

Mr. Richard Jones.

3012. I should like to know if the farm is amply provided with buildings for the stock?—I had only enough room for nine cows and I had to keep 25 cows, but I have since had buildings. I had spent nearly 10 years before I got them.

3013. The rest were out every winter?—Yes, I had to try and shift as well as I could. I had some hay—a rick of hay in the barn, and I put it all round and thatched it there.

3014. Why did you not put the hay out and thatch it, and put the cattle in?—Because there was no roof on the barn, so that it was the same inside as out, and I have had to put tops on the house I live in before this time, but I have good buildings this time.

3015. Is there not a readiness amongst the landlords to put up buildings for the tenants when they apply for them?—They are slow.

3016. Do they provide them with Dutch barns—hay barns?—Yes.

3017. Are there tanks provided for keeping the liquid manure?—Yes, but I had to apply to the landlord for a drain to take the liquid manure from the tank to the meadow, about 10 acres, and he refused.

3018. With respect to drainage, who drains as a rule?—No drainage has been done. Ever since the company left the farm, there has been no drainage.

3019. What is the company?—It was the colliery company who had the farm; ever since they left there has been no drainage, and the drainage has been closed.

Mr. R. Jones—continued.

3020. Is there any drainage in the neighbourhood?—Very little.

3021. With respect to this mountain land, are the tenants in the immediate neighbourhood allowed to turn any amount of cattle or sheep on this waste land?—As much as they can keep on their land during the winter as a rule.

3022. Is this mountain land in consequence overstocked?—No, not too much. If it was helped by being drained properly and so on, it would be better; sometimes the animals get stuck fast in the bog. One of mine went last year.

3023. In that case, supposing that the tenants were to combine for draining would they be able to get pipes supplied to them by the landlords?—They are not willing to give anything on land which has been already enclosed, and therefore it is not very likely that they would be willing to take in hand the waste land.

Mr. Grove.

3024. Did I understand you to say that you refused to sign the agreement because there were clauses in it to contract you out of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes.

3025. Do you know of any other case where it has been tried to put a clause of the same character in?—All Mr. Miers' tenants signed the contract except two, myself and another man named John Jones.

3026. Does the solicitor, who prepares that, act as agent to the estate?—He was the agent of the Receiver of the Court of Chancery.

Professor Rhŷs.

3027. How long ago is it since you had that barn with the expanse of heaven as its roof?—1882 or 1883.

Sir John Llewelyn.

3028. With regard to the 60*l.* that was paid for the goodwill upon going into the farm, what farm was that?—Coed Fallder.

3029. Not the farm you are in now?—No.

3030. When was that?—It is six, seven, or eight years ago.

3031. Since the passing of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883?—Yes.

3032. Was that amount paid for the goodwill with the knowledge of the landlord?—Yes, he consented to it. He had allowed the tenant to sell it to this newcomer.

3033. Did he consent to any amount being paid for goodwill?—He consented for him to settle the thing as they could agree.

3034. You do not know whether the landlord was aware that a sum of money was being paid for goodwill over and above the improvements upon the farm?—Yes, he knew it.

3035. The landlord knew it?—The agent knew it.

Mr. Griffiths.

3036. Have you any remedies you would recommend?—Yes. First, that the railway company should carry manures, &c. to the farming districts cheaper, and the produce cheaper to the consumers. (2.) Purchase of the freeholds by tenants by State aid. (3.) Local courts, fair rent, fixity of tenure, and fair compensation for improvements made by tenants. (4.) After fixing fair rents, the rents to be governed by value of crops and stock on the same principle as the tithes. That income from every source should pay local taxation.

Mr. Grove.

3037. What manures are you alluding to in the first place. Do you mean street manure, or farmyard manure in bulk?—Artificial manure, and lime.

Mr. Grove—continued.

Mr. Grove.

Because common manure, after a great fight in the Railway Rates Commission, was put into Class A. in four ton lots, that is the very lowest rate they can charge for anything, but kainit is in Class B.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN THOMAS called and examined.

Chairman.

3038. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

3039. Where do you live?—At Clase farm, in the parish of Llangyfelach.

3040. Whereabouts would that be? You do not live in the mountains?—No, I was not fixed upon specially to give evidence for others.

3041. Only for yourself?—Quite so.

3042. The parish is 12 miles long and 8 miles broad?—I think so.

3043. How about the ownership?—There are several owners, Sir John Llewelyn, Sir Hussey Vivian, Mrs. Gwyn, and Sir Robert Morris. I think those are the largest owners.

3044. Are the tenant farmers pretty well to do in your part of the world?—Some are.

3045. Do they go in for permanent improvements?—Yes. There are some very good farmers there.

3046. Have you anything to say about security of tenure or fixity of tenure?—No, I do not go so far as fixity of tenure.

3047. You wish to have security of tenure and compensation?—Yes.

3048. Does the Glamorganshire custom apply to your part of the world?—No.

3049. Have you any agreement or anything you can produce?—My agreement is a very fair one. It could not be a fairer one.

3050. You are a yearly tenant?—Yes, a yearly tenant.

3051. Everybody is very comfortable under the present landlords, but they are afraid of any change if fresh owners came in?—I cannot complain myself; there could not be a better landlord than mine.

3052. How much unenclosed and hill land is there in your district. Is there about 8,000 acres, should you say?—I should think so in the parish.

3053. Could it be used to better advantage, in your opinion?—Some say yes and some say no. I do not know; it is very difficult to say. There are people who are more capable to give evidence upon that than I am. I do not live near a common.

3054. Do you think there is much difficulty owing to difference of language or religion in your district?—Not at all.

Chairman—continued.

3055. What is the rent of your farm?—I have a lease, and part of that lease is 120*l.* a year.

3056. How much an acre should you say, 15*s.* an acre?—Yes, for the whole of the parish, but not for my farm alone. I have some very poor land. The land in our parish varies in quality very much. Some of it is not 2*s.*, 5*s.*, and so on. I do not know of any parish in any other part of the country in which the land varies so much.

3057. Are the smaller farms higher rented than the larger ones, or about the same price?—There are some exceptions in that, even. I know of some dearer and some cheaper.

3058. Is there any custom of the country claimed by tenants in respect of haulage or anything?—Not to my knowledge.

3059. Is arbitration ever resorted to as a means of settling rents?—Very seldom.

3060. Has rent been lowered or raised within the last 50 years?—In some cases it has been raised.

3061. From your own personal knowledge can you tell us anything?—I know of two farms, on each of which about 60 acres were planted with trees, say 25 years ago, but the rent is the same now as before the trees were planted. They are on Sir Hussey Vivian's estate. They are called Brynwilach and Maeseglwys. The tenant is here now, and he can say so. That is the only place I know.

3062. When there was an abatement of rent was notice given of it before?—That I could not say.

3063. Have you any idea about fluctuation in prices. They are about the same as the figures given in before, I suppose?—Do you mean of farm produce?

3064. The depreciation of stock?—I agree with what I have heard here to-day. I think that is about right.

3065. Who pays the tithes, the land tax, and the local rates?—The tenant pays the local rates and tithes.

3066. And as to the Imperial taxes, except the land tax, are they paid by the landlord?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

3067. I think I understand you to say that in the last 20 years the rates have gone up pretty heavily?—Yes, they are doubled.

3068. What are the sizes of the farms in your district?—They vary from 50 to 200 or 250 acres.

3069. Is that the largest in the district?—I think there is one about 300.

3070. And then it goes down to what?—Not much under 50.

3071. Have there been farms consolidated in your district?—Very few.

3072. Is there any sub-letting by tenants?—I do not know of any case.

3073. How are the fences, ditches, and water courses?—Some are good, and some are very bad.

3074. Do you know of any farms which have gone out of cultivation in your parish?—I do.

3075. Do you know of one that has gone out of cultivation so much that no single farmer would like to take it?—Yes.

3076. Which farm is that?—Penlan.

3077. Between 200 and 300 acres?—Yes, it is a perfect waste.

3078. It has been untenanted some years?—Yes.

3079. Who is the owner?—Richard Richards, of Swansea.

3080. What is the reason?—Before he bought it it was in the waste in that way, and I do not think any one would take it now; it is so bad. It would take some thousands to bring it into a fit state.

3081. Was it highly rented?—No. The smoke has done it a good deal of harm.

3082. Has there been any change in the mode of agriculture in your district within the last 30 years?—Yes, less corn grown and more grass laid down.

3083. Has there been any increase or decrease of root crops?—They grow root crops according to the acreage of corn that they grow.

3084. And as there has been some land laid down for permanent pasture, of course the root crop has decreased in consequence?—Yes.

3085. What do you think is the reason of the state of things in farming?—Foreign competition.

3086. What is the usual date of entry in your district?—29th September.

3087. They are yearly tenancies?—Yes.

3088. Is there a demand for leases?—No, I do not think there is a great demand for leases.

3089. Do you know of any cases of hardship in the district?—I know one case lately.

3090. Are you prepared to state the name and the circumstances?—Yes.

3091. Tell us what you know of the name and the circumstances?—I know a tenant.

3092. What is his name?—Mr. Ross.

3093. Whom did he rent under?—Colonel or Captain Lyon.

3094. What happened to him?—He had some land, and he manured it ever since I remember. This land is 500 feet above the level of the sea, and is of excellent quality, but not rich. He had to leave it last September, and the agent let it to another man for double the rent. The outgoing tenant did not get anything.

Chairman—continued.

3095. Nothing for his manure?—No.

3096. He was not under the custom of the country?—We have no custom in our neighbourhood.

3097. The custom does not come in, so far as you know?—No.

3098. Is there any other case?—No.

3099. Are the conditions of the tenancies that the tenants shall keep gates, posts, thatching, and so on in repair?—That is not usual.

3100. Have you any agreements in which there are any clauses which you consider harsh?—I have not. They are going to be produced, I believe.

3101. Have you anything to say about game preserving?—No, nothing at all.

3102. Is there any co-operation or combination amongst the farmers in your districts?—No.

3103. The wife and the children of tenant farmers have to work uncommonly hard?—Yes, that is the case.

3104. They have not the same advantages as other children; they have to work in the morning before they go to school, and so on?—Yes. I heard that evidence, and I agree with every word of it.

3105. Tell us a little about labourers?—Farm labourers are very scarce in our neighbourhood, and very dear.

3106. Do you generally have servants in the house?—Yes, I do.

3107. What do you pay them?—I pay one man 30*l.* a year.

3108. And women servants?—12*l.* and 13*l.* some get.

3109. Do any farmers keep diaries, or accounts, or anything that they can turn to, to know how they stand?—Yes, I daresay some do.

3110. You do not do that yourself?—Yes, I do myself.

3111. Have you any remedies that you suggest for improving the profits on land?—Yes, I have.

3112. Can you tell the Commission?—The rent ought to rise and fall with the price of all farm produce, and the landlord ought to suffer the loss to the same amount as the tenant in case of bad harvest. The local taxation ought to be on the income, and not on the rent of the land. Compensation to the full amount for all improvements made by the tenant in case he should give up the farm. Another thing that I myself very much suffer from is the law of trespass. I consider that the present law of trespass is no good. In populous districts people go over your land with dogs, and you cannot get a summons, because you must prove damage, and it is very difficult to do it. I had two geese last Sunday killed by dogs, and I was obliged to give up keeping sheep in consequence of it. People know that, and they defy you, almost.

Chairman—continued.

3113. They go where they like. Yes. I know Sir John Llewelyn knows it as well as I do. Farmers in our neighbourhood have to put up very much with that. There ought to be a penalty for going over another man's land without consent.

3114. The people walk through the corn ?—Yes, and grass and hay.

3115. And bring dogs ?—Yes; not for the sake of poaching, or anything of that sort, but they go for pleasure.

Sir John Llewelyn.

3116. It is under Sir Robert Morris you hold ?—Yes.

3117. You hold a lease ?—It is only of a part.

3118. Are there many leases about that district ?—No.

3119. Very few ?—Yes.

3120. Would the occupiers take leases if they were offered to them ?—At the present time I do not think they would.

3121. You speak of security of tenure instead of fixity of tenures. I do not follow the distinction in your mind ?—Will you allow me to explain it ?

3122. Perhaps you mean fixity of tenure ?—I do not propose that.

3123. What do you mean by security of tenure. Do you mean more than you get under the Agricultural Holdings Act ?—Yes, I do.

3124. You think that does not go far enough ?—Quite so.

3125. Supposing they had what you call security of tenure, do you think that the occupiers of the land would spend more in permanent improvements than they do now ?—I am certain of it.

3126. In what way, draining ?—Yes, and manuring and fencing.

3127. Do you not think, then, that they get sufficient compensation for unexhausted manure by the present system of an umpire as between the outgoing tenant and the incoming tenant ?—No.

3128. You know the custom at the eastern end of the county, the Vale of Glamorgan ?—Yes, I have some idea.

3129. You are aware that the occupiers in that part of the country are, on the whole, fairly satisfied with it. They think it might go a little further. Would it be useful to the neighbourhood to adopt that system ?—It would be better than what we have. I think if I improve my farm, say 40*l.* to 50*l.* a year, more work which is very easily to be done—

3130. Do you think you would get back your unexhausted value in the land under the custom better than you would by means of a lease ?—I prefer security of tenure to a lease.

3131. Your opinion is that the custom extended to this part of the county would be of service to the tenants ?—It would be of service but I do not think it would be quite sufficient.

3132. Of course you have studied the Act ?—Yes.

3133. You do not think that is sufficient protection ?—No, I do not.

Mr. Grove.

3134. As to game; have you much game upon your holdings ?—No.

3135. You spoke of a tenant who sent in a claim for compensation and could not obtain it. Did he proceed with that claim ?—No.

3136. Why ?—I do not know. I do not think it would be any good to him to do so.

3137. Why ?—We have no custom in the neighbourhood.

3138. Could not he have claimed it under the Agricultural Holdings Act ?—He did not get anything in any case.

3139. Perhaps he thought it was a matter of policy not to pursue it. As to the security of tenure which you have been speaking of, I wish you would explain it a little more fully with regard to the exact lines that are in your mind ?—Compensation to the full amount for all improvements made by the tenant in case he should give up the farm.

3140. And it rests there ?—Yes.

3141. You feel whether it is a long or a short holding, if you could get complete compensation for all the improvements, you would be satisfied with that ?—Yes, I should say it would be better than a lease.

Mr. Seebohm.

3142. Would it not be a great advantage to the farmers in this district if such books as these Board of Trade Returns were saleable at the post offices, instead of your having to send to London, as they affect the farming districts ?—I have no doubt it would.

3143. It seems to me that there is a good deal of ignorance of what is going on, owing first to the language, and secondly to these papers not being easily obtained. Can they be easily seen at your farmers' clubs. Is there any place where farmers could go, in your neighbourhood, and see them ?—No, we have no place in our neighbourhood.

Mr. Griffiths.

3144. Why did this tenant whom you speak of leave his farm. What was the cause of it ?—He had notice to quit.

3145. For what cause ?—I do not know what was the cause.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

3146. Did you not know of the Agricultural Holdings Act yourself until recently ?—Oh, yes, I have known it since it came out.

3147. Why do you think that Mr. Ross did not ask for compensation under that Act ?—I do not know.

3148. Do you agree with what Mr. Seebohm suggested, that there is a good deal of ignorance in this neighbourhood about the Acts of Parliament passed from time to time affecting the farming community?—I think there is.

3149. Do you think that is in any degree due to the difference of language?—No, I do not think that.

3150. There is a good deal of talk in the newspapers. Do not Welsh newspapers as well as English newspapers circulate here?—Well, education has been very backward in this neighbourhood. That is the only reason I can give.

Lord Kenyon.

3151. Did you say you had an agreement as well as a lease for part of your land?—Yes.

3152. You liked your agreement?—Yes, if I drew it out myself it could not be better.

3153. Will you let us have a copy of that agreement?—I did not think of bringing it.

3154. Will you send it to the Secretary?—Yes. I will tell you this. My family has lived there, my grandfather lived in the farm where I am now.

3155. We should like to have a copy of that agreement?—I will bring it to you on Saturday.

3156. Do you say in this district that any difference in religion or politics causes any hardship?—I think not.

Chairman.

3157. Is there anything else you would like to say?—No, nothing else.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William George Davies called and examined (through an interpreter).

Chairman.

3158. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

3159. Where do you live?—At Aber Gelli, in the parish of Langyfelach.

3160. Is that far from where the last witness lived?—About three miles.

3161. How big is your farm?—About 250 acres.

3162. What rent do you pay?—105*l.*

3163. Who is your landlord?—Mr. John Roberts, of this town.

3164. You have handed in rather a voluminous statement. Would you kindly tell us what you particularly wish to speak to?—I am of opinion that the land has gone so much out of cultivation that it is still too dear, even at that rent.

3165. Rents are too high generally in your opinion?—In my own case the rent is too high, because the land has dropped out of cultivation to such an extent.

3166. It is not producing so much as it did in days gone by?—From what I can understand it does not produce even a half or a quarter.

3167. Can you tell us from what reason this sudden stoppage of production arises?—It has been left, and left, and left by others who were in the place before me, until it is not much good. It is in a very poor state.

3168. How long have you been on this holding?—Seven years.

3169. You are not a native of the district?—No.

3170. Have you anything to say about the agreements, anything you would like altered in the agreements?—I should like to get a holding for what it would pay me, and the rates press me very heavily.

3171. You do not complain, as I understand it, of your agreement?—No.

3172. Are you satisfied with the system of tenure, or would you like that altered?—I should like to see what has been read out as the remedy which has been suggested, coming into practice.

3173. The remedies read by the last witness?—Yes.

3174. You entirely agree with the last witness?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

3175. The acreage, you said, was 250 acres. Would you tell me how much of that is grass?—A lot of it is furze and woodland.

3176. How much profitable pasture is there on the common?—All the land that is any good there has been improved by me.

3177. How much is that?—Not half of it.

3178. How much do you mow?—It varies; I sometimes have two fields of clover, and 20 or 30 acres besides.

3179. What system of farming do you pursue. Do you sell milk?—No, I should spill it all on the road, because I have to repair the road myself.

3180. You have more to complain of the state of your farm than anything else?—And the local rates.

3181. What are the local rates?—2*s.* 7*d.* in the £ every half year now.

Chairman.

3182. Have you anything else you would like to tell the Commissioners?—I should like to have a greater security in my tenure than I have. I have already made a lot of improvements there, for which I have no security. The land has been offered for sale several times. I have bid for it myself once, but the price has been too high for me to reach it in these bad times.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. WILLIAM WILLIAMS called and examined (through an interpreter).

Chairman.

3183. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

3184. And you live where?—Maeseglwys.

3185. How many acres is your farm?—I do not know exactly. My agent told me it was 103. I have not measured it, and I have not a plan of it.

3187. Who is your landlord?—Sir Hussey Vivian.

3188. Have you lived long on your farm?—No, about four years.

3189. You are not a native of this part of the country?—Yes, I am within about two or three miles from it.

3190. You are able to speak as to the general conditions of the country round about where you live?—Partly, so far as I know them.

3191. Is there any particular portion of this statement that you would like to speak of?—I wish to speak in particular about the game laws.

3192. Is there much game in your district?—Game is not quite so plentiful as it has been. They do not preserve it to such an extent now; they only breed as many pheasants as are bred without preserving; the rabbits multiply exceedingly, and if I had not killed hundreds myself since I have been there, they would have eaten me up, as true as I am sitting here.

3193. Where do the rabbits come from; from the covers and woods?—Yes, from the covers; the covers all round.

3194. They are not fenced in with wire?—No; I have applied to the agent several times, twice, for a wire, and I could not get it; not a yard.

3195. Are there any hares?—I do not say anything about the hares, only about the rabbits.

3196. There are a great number of rabbits?—There have been, and there would be, if I had not killed them.

3197. You have availed yourself of the Act of Parliament?—Yes.

3198. You have no great reason to complain now about the rabbits?—It takes half my time to keep the rabbits down, and a boy with me. I told the keeper I did not want them. It is for him to keep them down. I never eat one, or any of my family. If I can catch one, I do my best to sell it, because I consider I am entitled to it, as I feed it.

3199. What is your opinion about the game laws?—I believe that they all ought to be abolished.

3200. Can you tell us anything more about the game?—No.

3201. You have no objection to pheasants and partridges?—I have no objection to them as they are now, but what I object to is to have them preserved to 1,500, 2,000, and 3,000 in the covers, when they come out and eat up my corn.

Chairman—continued.

3202. What else would you like to speak to?—I pay 80*l.* a year rent, 20*l.* in rates and taxes, and I have a mile and a half or two miles of road leading up to the house, which is a bad road. In the winter it is both a river and a road; you cannot go over it. I have to leave my horse in the stable in the winter, and go myself to the market to Morriston, and when I want to take something to the mill I have to get the consent of my neighbours to climb over their hedges, in order to take the things to the mill, because this road is so bad.

3203. The road is under water?—Yes, under water entirely.

3204. Have you any other disadvantages on your farm?—No, nothing else.

3205. Do you want to say anything about fixity of tenure?—I have one more thing to mention. I have been working myself and my children and wife like slaves since I have been in that farm, and have got nothing for it.

3206. You have made nothing out of it?—No, I have had to take money out of my pocket to pay the rent and taxes, although I work as hard as that.

3207. You make no profit?—No; lose.

3208. Lose every year?—Yes, since I have been there.

3209. It is a yearly tenancy?—Yes.

3210. Can you suggest any remedies to us. Have you thought out any way in which things could become better for the tenant farmer?—The reduction in the rent and the taxes in the first place. If I had it at a reasonable rate I think I could do. In the next place I should like to have security as long as I went on with my work in the farm properly.

Sir John Llewelyn.

3211. You say it takes you half your time to keep the rabbits down. Would it be better done by the keepers?—He will not do it. I have asked him to do so.

3212. Is there a keeper there now?—Yes, and I have asked for wire netting, and I cannot get it. I have asked twice for it. I wrote to the agent first of all, and I told the keeper, and he told Mr. Lewis, and Mr. Lewis told him to tell me to write to Sir Hussey for it, and I told him, "I am not so foolish as that."

Mr. Grove.

3213. As to the road being under water in the winter time, where does the water come from. Is it the overflow of the river?—From the top of the road. There are some springs at the top of the road.

3214. Could it be put right at anything like a moderate cost?—It would cost about 30*l.* to put the whole of the road in repair.

3215. Who repairs it from the main road down to your farm?—I have heard it is a private road of Sir Hussey Vivian's. Several of the neighbours have told me so.

3216. Is that the only road to the farm?—That is the only one.

Mr. Seebohm.

3217. Would your objection to the game laws be done away with if you were permitted to employ as many guns as you liked, simply for the destruction of rabbits?—Who would shoot in that case?

3218. Any one whom you employed?—No, I should prefer to be without them then, because there are so many trespassers who come by night, and it would startle the sheep—frighten them and kill them to.

Mr. Richard Jones.

3219. I should like to know whether you knew that this road was in this state when you took the farm?—It froze a short time after I went there. It was not frozen when I went there.

3220. You were bred and born within two miles of this place?—But I never used to use this road.

3221. You knew nothing about it?—I did not know much about it. I had never been to that farm before I went to live there.

3222. Have you made any application to the agent or to Sir Hussey Vivian to put this road in repair?—Yes, I have told him about it.

3223. What was the answer?—He told me he could drive his own carriage over it.

3224. When the water was over it?—I did not ask him that.

Mr. Griffiths.

3225. Does your landlord allow you to shoot rabbits?—I do not shoot one.

3226. How do you catch them?—Wiring or ferreting.

3227. Why do you not employ a man to do so?—I have no money to pay him. I catch all I can myself, large and small.

3228. Are other tenants on the same estate allowed to catch the rabbits in the same way as you do?—I never heard this. It is their fault if they do not.

3229. As your farm is in such a bad state, why do you not give it up?—I think it will be better bye-and-bye. I have paid a lot of money for going in, for the crops. I paid very nearly 200*l.*

Chairman.

3230. These questions are put by Mr. Lewis, of Singleton, Swansea. Mr. Lewis is the agent to the estate. You admit that you have killed rabbits and availed yourself of the Act of Parliament?—Yes.

3231. That being so, can you expect the landlord to supply netting?—I asked for the wire netting before I did that, and I could not get it, and I had nothing to do but to kill them, as they were eating me up.

Chairman—continued.

3232. You state that there are a quantity of rabbits. Mr. Lewis puts in the following return of the game killed. On the 26th December 1891 six guns killed one hare; on the 15th October 1891 three guns killed three rabbits and three hares. On the 6th January 1892 eight guns killed four rabbits; and going back to 1891 again, on the 2nd January eight guns killed 12 rabbits and one hare. Do you call this excessive?—They did not kill one of them on the land. It was in the wood, and when they shoot the rabbits get frightened and run into the holes, and they do not see a quarter of them. It is in the night when they come out on to the land and eat what I have got.

3233. The other question put by Mr. Lewis is, are you aware that in no year have 100 rabbits in all been killed on 400 acres of farm land and about 200 acres of woodland?—I have seen from 80 to 100 rabbits in one field since I have been there.

3234. Can you tell us the approximate number of rabbits that you yourself have killed, say in one year?—No, I never kept count.

3235. You could not give us any idea?—I have killed, sometimes, from 20 to 30 in a week but half of them could not be put to any good use, only I wanted to keep them down.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

3236. Do you remember, Mr. Williams, the shooting parties that are mentioned in the paper handed up by Mr. Lewis?—Yes, I remember generally, but I do not remember the exact dates.

3237. Do they come simply for the purpose of shooting the rabbits, or do they come for the purpose of ordinary sport?—Pheasants in particular, they do not care much for the rabbits.

Chairman.

3238. There is another question put in by Mr. Lewis. Are you aware that the road complained of, which is a watercourse in the winter, is an accommodation road, and has to be repaired by you and your two neighbours?—It is a road for many of the tenants of Sir Hussey Vivian, and it is a road to Aber-Gelli as well. We have never heard that it has to be kept in repair by the tenants, nor have we any agreement bearing on the case.

3239. It runs past your holdings, and runs on to a village?—Aber-Gelli is a farm. It is the biggest farm in the parish.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

3240. In which parish is this place?—The parish of Llangyfelach, the road goes out to other roads besides. There is an inlet and an outlet to it.

Mr. Grove.

3241. It is quite understood that is the only road to your farm from the main road?—Yes, and there is an inlet and outlet.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN ROBERTS called and examined (through an interpreter.)

Chairman.

3242. Are you a tenant farmer?—I am a tenant farmer.

3243. Where do you live?—Cwrt-y-Carne, Gorseinon, in the parish of Llandilo Tal-y-Bont.

3244. Under whom do you farm?—M. P. Cameron, Esquire.

3245. How big is your holding?—334 acres, and 21 acres besides of something like common land, over which I have rights of pasturage.

3246. What is the rent?—290*l.*

3247. Have you had the holding long?—No. I took it in 1887.

3248. Were you born in the district. Do you know the district well, or do you come from another part of the country?—Yes, I know it fairly well.

3249. You know the condition of the tenant farmers around you?—Yes, most of them.

3250. What would you particularly like to tell us?—The rent is high, considering the price of stock at present.

3251. And the condition of farming generally?—Yes, and the increase in the price of labour.

3252. Do you consider the rent fair in your district. Is it about the proper rent that is charged in the district?—In some cases it might be fair, but in other cases it has been raised from 1872 to 1875, and they are keeping on the same price, and so far as I know there has been no abatement.

3253. From 1872 to 1875 the rents were generally raised?—Yes, a good many; I do not say every farm.

3254. And those that have been raised have kept up to that condition up to the present time?—So far as I know.

3255. Do you know of any permanent reductions of rent?—I do not know of anyone in our parish.

3256. Do you know of any abatements. Has any money been returned?—Yes.

3257. Has that been general?—No, in some cases.

3258. But you would not say generally?—No, not generally.

3259. Does the land produce as much as it did in the good days?—Well, I cannot say; I think not; I cannot say exactly.

3260. Do you think the land is as well farmed as it was in old days?—In some cases.

3261. But generally speaking, would you say so?—No, because the labour is so scarce, and so dear.

3262. And that has had a bad effect on farming generally?—Yes.

3263. You agree with what the other gentlemen have said about the farm labourers and the farmers' wives and children working very hard?—Yes, I do.

3264. And without that help, perhaps farmers could not get on at all?—They could not.

3265. It is absolutely necessary that the wives and children should work, and work hard?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

3266. Are there many labourers in your district?—Not except servants in the house.

3267. What wages do you give them?—I have 10 of them, and I pay to the 10, 166*l.* 10*s.*

3268. Are they men?—Six men, and four servant girls.

3269. Do they come to you for the year?—They are yearly servants.

3270. They are boarded and lodged?—Boarded and lodged in the house with the family.

3271. And they have their meals separately in the kitchen?—Yes.

3272. What do they do; do they milk?—The girls milk, and some of the younger boys milk.

3273. Have you any difficulty in getting servants to do dairy work?—Very much.

3274. Your experience is very much the same as that of other gentlemen who have preceded you. You find great difficulty in getting dairy servants?—Yes.

3275. They are going out of fashion altogether?—We cannot get one from the neighbourhood; they are going to the works.

3276. Are there any labourers' cottages in the neighbourhood?—Not many. I have some on my farm, but I cannot get anyone in them, I rent them out, but I cannot get labourers on the farm to have them.

3277. Who takes them?—Colliers mostly.

3278. Have you any suggestions for improvement in the condition of the tenant farmer?—The only suggestion I can make, is, that the rent ought to be lower generally; in some cases more than the others.

3279. Have you anything to say about rates?—The rates are very high, and they are going up.

3280. And they press unfairly on the tenant farmer, in your opinion?—Yes, as they are so very high.

3281. Do you see many improvements made by the different landlords?—Buildings.

3282. Are there any dry walls in your district?—Not many.

3283. Are they made generally by the tenant or the landlord?—I think they are made by the tenant, if they are made. I do not know of any.

3284. What sort of farm is yours; is it good land?—Part of it is good land.

3885. How much?—I cannot say exactly. It is all mixed.

3286. Half of it?—Yes, about half of it.

3287. More than half of it?—Yes, more than half of it. Comparing it with the neighbouring land it is good; comparing it with other districts it is not so good; it is middling land, then.

3288. Are you near your market town?—Yes, seven miles from here.

3289. Do you sell milk.—No.

3290.—How do you farm? Do you raise stock?—Raising stock, making butter, and feeding cattle.

3291. Do you sell the butter here?—Yes, sometimes.

3292. Do you get a good price for it?—Not very good.

3293. What do you get for it?—13*d.*

3294. All the year round?—Not all the year round.

3295. It is lower sometimes?—Yes.

3296. And higher sometimes?—Yes, higher in the winter. It is scarce then.

3297. You say the cottages on your farm are inhabited by colliers. Who takes the rents?—I do.

3298. How is it you cannot fill them with your own men?—I cannot get the men.

3299. You prefer to keep them in the house?—No, I have been trying to get men working on the farm to live in them, but they will not stop, they can get more money in the works than on the farm, more than we can afford to give them.

3300. Even although you hold the cottages yourself?—Yes.

3301. I suppose it is a weekly tenancy, or is it monthly?—Weekly. Two of them are unoccupied at present.

3302. Are you troubled with game at all?—No.

3303. Do you consider that religion or politics are the cause of any hardship between landlord and tenant in this district?—So far as I know, I do not know of it in our district.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

3304. I think you had some pasturage in addition to your 334 acres?—There has been a dispute about it, and it is under the tithe so much. It is not worth the trouble to graze it.

3305. Is that common?—It is marsh, the side of the river.

3306. It is an isolated bit?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

3307. How long have you lived in this farm?—I came there in 1887.

3308. Have you compared your labour bill in 1887 with the present labour bill. What is the difference between the total amount you pay them now and what you did when you commenced farming?—It is not much difference in that time. If you go back 35 or 40 years ago, it is much different. I believe I pay more than was paid at the time when my father was farming, 100*l.* more.

3309. That is during the time you have been farming. Does the stock you sell from your farm amount to nearly the same sum of money as at the time you commenced farming?—Oh, no.

3310. What is the difference?—I cannot tell you exactly. The price for beef is lower every winter. It was 9*s.* to 9*s.* 6*d.* per score the last winter.

3311. What is the cause of it?—Foreign competition, and there is another thing against the farmer. There is no demand for the cattle at any time. We want to get rid of them sometimes, and we cannot do it very easily.

3312. Do you mostly sell the fat stock?—Fat mostly.

Mr. Richard Jones.

3313. Has the character of farming altered in your time?—A little, not much.

3314. How long have you been on this farm?—In 1887 I went to it. I was before that in the same parish.

3315. Do you rise much corn?—Yes, a good deal.

3316. Do you rise more than you want for your own use?—No, not enough very often.

3317. You do not consider it profitable to rise corn?—No, not profitable at all.

3318. Do you use lime at all?—Yes, we do, but not to the same extent it used to be.

3319. Do you fallow any?—No.

3320. Did farmers years ago use to fallow in your neighbourhood?—Yes.

3321. Why do they not do so now?—I do not believe it will pay. We cannot afford to keep a field without a crop for one year.

3322. You say you keep four maid servants?—Yes.

3323. How many cows do you milk?—Twenty-five in this year. It is sometimes more and sometimes less.

3324. Have you any sons and daughters?—Yes, but they are too young to do anything on the farm.

3225. Four maid servants seems a large number of maid servants for a farm of your size. Three in our neighbourhood would be considered ample?—We have a large marsh enclosed, and there is so much drains into that that we must keep them open or we cannot pay the rent. We have not too much labour on the farm.

3326. Have you adopted the new system of making butter. Do you use a cream separator?—No, we have a machine to make butter.

3327. What do you mean?—A butter worker to work it up.

3328. Do you use the Scotch hands, a wooden hand, for making up the butter?—No, the butter maker does it all.

3329. Do your dairy maids handle it at all?—No.

3330. Do they use wooden hands?—Yes, to turn it in the butter worker.

3331. What price do you get for that butter in the winter and in the spring?—About 1*s.* 3*d.* and 1*s.* 4*d.* sometimes.

3332. No higher price?—No higher price.

3333. What do you get for it now?—13*d.*, and I believe it will be 1*s.* this winter.

3334. What kind of milking cows do you keep?—Shorthorn most of them, and some Castle Martin.

3335. Do you find the farmers in your neighbourhood are ready as a rule to abandon old practices and adopt new methods of farming, or do they stick to old ways?—The green crop has increased.

5336. And corn crops are not raised to the same extent?—No.

3337. More roots?—Yes.

Mr. R. Jones—continued.

3338. And vetches?—Yes.

3339. So that every course is adopted by the farmers to make farming as profitable as possible?—Yes, but the labour takes everything.

3340. You mentioned about the high rent, and also that the rates were high. What suggestion have you as to having the rent reduced?—I do not know what is the best thing, but I believe as a rule we ought to have the rent lowered generally, some more and some less.

3341. It has been mentioned that a land court would be advisable. What do you say to that?—Yes, I think that would be good. I believe some landlords are very good giving the abatement in bad times, but I know others that have not given any, and we ought to have something to compel them to do it.

3342. You think that under good landlords tenants would not be able to get better terms even if a land court was fixed?—Perhaps a little, not much.

3343. You consider it advisable to have some sort of tribunal to fix rents in order to catch bad landlords?—Yes.

3344. Have you any suggestion to make about the reduction of rates?—Well they are very heavy at present on the farmer.

3345. Who do you consider pays the rates practically speaking, the landlord or the tenant?—From the tenant they are coming directly.

3346. Upon whom do they fall indirectly?—On the tenant at present. The rates are increasing.

3347. Who meets the increased rates?—The tenant.

3348. Do you consider it advisable in that case, that the rates should be divided between the landlord and occupier, the same as it is in Scotland?—I think it would be better.

3349. What would be the consequence?—Less for the farmer to pay.

3350. And less for the landlord?—Well, no, more for the landlord.

3351. Both would be interested in the administration of the rates?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

3352. You stated, I think, that you have 10 yearly servants in your house, boarding there. Do they lodge in the house?—Yes.

3353. In the farmhouse?—Yes.

3354. With regard to those servants, do they eat by themselves at the same table?—Yes.

3355. Apart from your own family?—The next room.

3356. Would the men have better food if they became colliers than you are able to afford?—Well, they are having good food with us, we cannot keep them without.

3357. Would you mind telling me what they have at the servants' table?—Just the same as at the other table.

3358. What would they have for breakfast, for instance?—Tea and bread and cheese for breakfast.

3359. And in the middle of the day?—Meat.

Mr. Richard Jones.

3360. Do they get a meal before the middle of the day?—No.

3361. At what time do they get breakfast?—In winter half past eight and dinner about half past twelve.

3362. In summer?—In summer sometimes earlier, breakfast at 7, and dinner at 12.

3363. They have meat in the middle of the day?—Yes.

3364. Do they have butchers' meat or bacon?—Bacon and salted beef sometimes, in the winter and in the spring.

3365. And in the summer?—Bacon; butchers' meat sometimes.

3366. About how often?—Not very often in the week, but every Sunday.

3367. The bread is all wheat bread?—Yes, wheat bread.

3368. In the afternoon do they have any meal?—Tea and bread and butter at 4 o'clock, as near as we can.

3369. Do the men as well get that?—Yes.

3370. In the evening what do they have?—Sometimes broth, and bread and cheese.

3371. What is the broth,—"cawl"?—Yes

3372. That is a vegetable broth, is it not? Is there meat in it?—Yes. They have rice sometimes, coffee sometimes, and they get tea if they want it.

3373. No meat at supper?—No meat at supper, only if they want it; there are exceptions.

3374. Is that typical of farmers' food in your district?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

3375. Are the rents paid with borrowed money, to your knowledge?—I believe they are in some cases. I believe that is mostly on poor farms.

3376. You have not been obliged to have recourse to any money lender to pay your rent?—Not so far; but if the pressure keeps the same as the last two years, we shall have to go somewhere to look for it.

3377. The question I want to ask is this; whether within your knowledge it is general?—It is general, I believe.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned.

Mr. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.

Chairman.

I think before we begin the proceedings I should like, in the name of my brother Commissioners, to thank the gentlemen present for their generous and cordial welcome this morning.

Captain BATCOCK called and examined.

Chairman.

3378. Where do you live?—I live within about two miles from here, Pit Farm it is called.

3379. Are you a farmer?—Yes, my holding is about 150 acres, for which I pay 131*l.* 10*s.* rent.

3380. Whom are you under?—Miss Talbot.

3381. The land is situate about two miles from here in the Gower Peninsula?—Yes.

3382. Are there any land courts or leet courts held in the district?—There are several leet courts held in the district. There are three in our district, at Oxwich and Penrice and Reynoldston.

3383. What sort of cases do they decide?—Questions of rights of way, watercourse, trespass, and rights of common, and other grievances are dealt with.

3384. Have you anything to say about whether it would be advantageous or not that the land should be in the hands of the tenants themselves, that they should be small freeholders, or are they better off as tenant farmers?—I am not prepared to say whether it would be better if it was in the hands of the tenants themselves, but I believe if we had land courts to settle fair rents, fixed tenure, and free sale, we should be satisfied.

3385. You would be satisfied with that, but you would not go as far as wishing to own the land yourself?—I should not, for my part, because I have no children to come after me.

3386. Do you happen to know anything of the general feeling of the district?—I do know the general feeling of the district. I do not think the general feeling of the tenants would be to purchase the land themselves without State aid. There might be some cases where they would be willing to do it.

Chairman—continued.

3387. You think the general feeling is in favour of land courts?—Yes.

3388. And some more compensation for improvements?—Yes.

3389. Have you the Glamorganshire custom in this part of the country?—There is the Gower custom. I do not know anything of the custom outside Gower.

3390. You have a custom of your own?—Yes.

3391. Do you prefer that to the Agricultural Holdings Act or not?—I know the Agricultural Holdings Act has been a complete failure. We have all had to contract out of that.

3392. They have all contracted out of it, you say?—Yes.

3393. You know that is illegal. It is impossible really to contract yourself out of the Act. Any agreement contracting the two parties out of that Act is illegal, and void and useless?—The only part contracted out of it was 12 months' notice to quit. Other parts of the Agricultural Holdings Act I do not know much about.

3394. Is it your opinion that at the present time tenant farmers are afraid to go in largely for improvements because perhaps, after laying out all they have, the present landlord might die and their holding put up to public sale, and the purchaser thereof reaping the benefit of his outlay?—Yes, that is so.

3395. Is that the general opinion in the country, so far as you know?—Yes.

3396. Have you anything to say about the uninclosed or hill land?—I have not much to say about that. I do not think it would be very much advantage if the hills were inclosed.

3397. Do you say anything about farm management?—I have nothing much to say about that; I do not think it can be improved upon much.

3398. Is there much absentee ownership in the district?—Yes, Miss Talbot and the Earl of Dunraven are absentee landlords.

3399. We have passed Miss Talbot's house as we came along?—She is amongst us three months out of twelve.

3400. You would not call that an absentee landlord?—Not absentee altogether.

3401. Are there any landlords who own property, and have no houses in the district?—The Earl of Dunraven. I believe he is the only one.

3402. As to the terms of tenancy, what is the usual date of entry?—The 25th of March on Miss Talbot's estate.

3403. Is that the general custom of the country or not, or do they come in in September?—Some come in in September.

3404. Are leases general?—No, I do not think there are any.

3405. Is there any demand for them?—No, no demand.

3406. Is compensation generally granted in the district when damage is done to the land by timber cutting?—No, never.

3407. Is there much damage done by timber cutting. I take it not very much?—Not much, but there are some cases sometimes.

3408. That would be rather exceptional than otherwise, would it not?—Yes.

3409. About the agreements; how do the agreements run in this part of the country?—The usual conditions of tenancy—that tenants keep the holding in repair, such as fences, gates, posts, hedges and so on.

3410. Is it strictly enforced or not?—Not strictly enforced, but we are expected to comply with the terms.

3411. Are there any clauses in any agreements which you consider oppressive, or a little hard?—There are one or two clauses.

3412. Will you kindly mention them?—Such as contracting out of the Agricultural Holdings Act.

3413. That cannot be done; that is illegal. You cannot contract yourself out of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Only out of the six months' notice. It used to be six months' notice. Now I understand by the Agricultural Holdings Act, it is 12 months' notice, and we had to contract out of that.

Chairman.

I take it that is absolutely illegal, Mr. Brynmor Jones?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

This is section 55 of the Agricultural Holdings Act: "Any contract, agreement, or covenant "made by the tenant, by virtue of which he is "deprived of his right to claim compensation "under this Act, in respect of any improvement "mentioned in the First Schedule hereto (except "an agreement providing such compensation as "is by this Act permitted to be substituted for "compensation under this Act) shall, so far as "it deprives him of such right, be void at law "and in equity." Section 33 is the one that deals with the notice to quit: "Where a half-year's "notice, expiring with a year of tenancy, is by "law necessary and sufficient for determination "of a tenancy from year to year, in the case of "any such tenancy under a contract of tenancy, "made either before or after the commencement "of this Act, a year's notice so expiring shall "by virtue of this Act be necessary and sufficient for the same, unless the landlord and "tenant of the holding, by writing under their "hands, agree that this section shall not apply, "in which case a half-year's notice shall "continue to be sufficient."

Chairman.

That is right. The Agricultural Holdings Act does not apply to this contract.

3414. How is the rent generally fixed?—A lump sum.

3415. By private treaty?—By private treaty.

3416. You do not believe that the holdings are let to the highest bidder in the district irrespective of whether he is a good farmer or not?—Not generally.

2417. Have you any family connection with your holding. Has the family been on the land for any considerable period?—My wife's family has been on the farm for 60 or 70 years, I suppose.

3418. Who succeeded your wife's grandfather?—My wife's father.

3419. When he died was the rent increased in any way, or was it the same rent?—It was increased. My wife's grandfather, I believe, paid about 95*l.* for more land than I am now paying 131*l.* for. There was land taken from the farm while the rent was increased.

3420. Do I understand you to say that your wife's grandfather paid 95*l.* rent?—Yes.

3421. Have you any papers which have come down to you to prove that?—No papers any more than was understood in the family.

3422. After his death do I understand you to say that the rent went up to 131*l.*?—Yes.

3423. What year was that—how long ago was it?—I cannot say exactly the year. I should think it would be about 1872 or 1873.

3424. About 20 years ago?—Yes.

3425. Has the rent been increased since then, or decreased?—It has not been increased since then.

3426. Has there been any abatement or permanent reduction since that time?—There has been one abatement of 15 per cent. last year and one abatement of 25 per cent. I should think some six or seven years ago.

Chairman—continued.

3427. Twenty years ago of course prices were much better than they are now?—Very nearly double.

3428. I see you have put in a table which we need not go through. But do you say they were double?—Double in some cases.

3429. Do you know of any temporary abatements or permanent reductions besides your own case?—Yes, there are others with other landlords, I believe, which have been more often than we have had abatements, but no permanent reductions to my knowledge.

3430. What sort of abatements have they been?—From 5 to 10 and 15 per cent.

3431. How are the tithes, land tax, and the local rates paid?—By the tenant.

3432. The landlord paying other charges, I suppose?—The landlord pays chief rent, I believe, and income tax.

3433. What is your opinion about the rates during the last quarter of a century. Have they gone up very considerably?—Rates have gone up in some cases 100 per cent.

3434. I will ask you a question about the average size of the farms in the district?—I should think the average size would be perhaps about 50 acres.

3435. Is agriculture depressed in this part of the world?—Yes, I believe we feel agricultural depression as much here as anywhere.

3436. To what do you attribute that, as the general causes?—I suppose foreign competition is one cause of it. I cannot speak of any other.

3437. Have you ever thought the thing out yourself. Have you any remedy of any sort or kind that you could propose, to make things look a little brighter?—The remedies for agricultural depression which I suggest are land courts, fair rents, fixed tenure, and free sale, and absolute right to unexhausted value of tenants' improvements. There are many cases in Gower to-day where the children are paying rents for the buildings and improvements which the parents have made. My sister, for one, is paying rent now for a house which my mother built. That is one case out of many. I think whatever improvements should be made by a tenant should belong to the tenant. Then abolition of Game Laws. We suffer terribly from game in our part, and destruction from rabbits, for which we get no compensation whatever. I have had over three acres of my corn completely destroyed this year. I have been farming ten years, and three acres over and over again have been destroyed every year by rabbits and game, for which we get no compensation. On one field some years ago my father-in-law, just before I came into possession, sowed 33 bushels of barley in the field and he cut nine.

3438. Was that close to the covers?—Close to the covers.

3439. We have very varied evidence on that point. Some gentlemen tell us they are eaten up with rabbits, and the other gentlemen tell us they go out shooting with several guns, and kill one rabbit. Your experience is that it is overweighted with game?—Yes, the game has a very bad effect in many ways.

Chairman—continued.

3440. You do not object so much to the pheasants?—I object as much to the pheasants as any part of the game.

3441. Do you think they do a great deal of damage?—Yes; we always have to sow an extra quantity of seed to make allowance for the pheasants.

3442. Partridges do not do so much injury?—No.

3443. Have you made application for compensation for damage done by game?—Yes, I have made application, and I was told that they could do nothing, as I was allowed to kill the rabbits.

3444. Do you take advantage of the Ground Game Act at all?—Yes; we take advantage of the Ground Game Act, that is, as to rabbits. Hares there are none on my farm, or not many of them about. As to rabbits, we kill all we can on the farm; but we are so close to the preserve that if we clear them this week next week they would be as numerous as ever.

3445. How do you kill them?—In every way; shoot them, trap them, and ferret them.

3446. Have you anything to say about the condition of life of the labourers and their cottages?—Some of the labourers' cottages are bad, and some very good.

3447. Is there any difficulty in getting labour?—Yes, great difficulty.

3448. What do the wages run to?—10*s.* a week for those who live on the farm, and that we board and lodge ourselves, and 15*s.* a week for those on their own findings.

3449. Do the wives and children of the tenant farmers work hard here?—Harder than any.

3450. Is it a disadvantage to them that they cannot attend school regularly?—No; we have every advantage of attending schools if we can find time for it.

3451. Of course the labourers' wages have gone up in your district?—They have gone up these last 50 years 100 per cent.

Lord Kenyon.

3452. You said among your remedies you were in favour of free sales, but I cannot find any clause in your agreement which restricts you in any way?—Not in our agreement.

3453. So that it does not apply to your case?—Not to our agreement.

3454. It is only an expression of opinion on your part generally. It has nothing to do with your individual case?—Not my individual case.

3455. The only restrictive clause you object to is about the six months' notice?—Yes.

3456. You find it a hardship?—I have not experienced it as a hardship.

3457. I suppose on Miss Talbot's estate you feel fairly secure?—Yes, we feel fairly secure.

3458. You mentioned the point of absentee landlords. I take it from that that you like to see your landlord. You like them to live in their homes?—Yes, for my own part.

3459. You said you wished to have the Game Laws abolished?—Yes.

3460. Do you not think the game has some attraction for the landlord, and that it keeps him on his estate?—The game has great attraction for the landlord, I suppose.

3461. You are not able by means of this Ground Game Act to get rid of the rabbits on your farm?—I can get rid of them on my own farm, but it is adjoining the preserves.

3462. Your farm is surrounded by the woods?—Yes.

3463. And they come off the woods on to your farm?—Yes.

3464. You have no wire?—I paid over 40*l.* for wire netting myself, and then I cannot prevent their destroying the crops.

3465. I want to hear some more of your sister's case, which you said was a hard case. You said your sister was paying for improvements done by your mother?—Yes.

3466. Had she built the cottages?—Not the cottages, but the outhouses. There was a dwelling-house on it before. My parents always occupied it before I remember, and they occupied that, together with a small farm of our own. When my elder brother married, as the place belonged to him, my mother and the rest of us removed to this small farm of Mr. Talbot's, then she asked Mr. Talbot's assistance to build a few outhouses and he refused, and she did it herself.

3467. How many acres was this holding?—About 30 acres.

3468. Had it been attached to the house before?—Yes, the house had always been on it.

3469. Had there been buildings, and had they fallen down?—There had been buildings there years ago.

3470. And Mr. Talbot refused to build any house on it?—Yes.

3471. Was Mr. Talbot then in the habit of doing his buildings at all?—He would do several new buildings about where they were required on large farms, but he did not care very much about doing buildings on farms of this sort.

3472. There was nothing of this kind: he did not let it at a low rent on condition that the repairs or buildings were done by the tenant?—No, he did not.

3473. What was the rent in the first instance of this small holding?—The rent was considered fair before.

3474. Do you know what it was?—I cannot say exactly. I should think it would be something like 10*s.* per acre for the 30 acres. That would be about 15*l.*

3475. When it was risen, what did it amount to?—I think it was 2*l.* 10*s.* that it was raised to.

3476. Raised 2*l.* 10*s.* in all?—Yes.

3478. Would you call that a high rent?—It is high enough for that land, considering the poor quality.

3479. What labour do you employ now on your farm?—Four labourers and servants on the farm.

3480. Some living in the house?—All living in the house.

3481. You have no cottages on your farm?—No.

3482. Do you find any scarcity of labour in the district?—Yes; great scarcity.

3483. Do you think the labour is as skilled as it used to be?—For my own part I do not find much difference. Some complain that it is not so good.

3484. Is there any demand for dairymaids in this part of the country?—There is.

3485. Is there any dairying, cheesemaking, or butter-making done in this part of the country?—We do mixed farming, as we call it, a little of everything. There are no farms entirely devoted to dairying.

3486. You only make butter as it suits you?—Yes.

3487. Is there any difficulty in getting dairymaids?—Yes; there is great difficulty.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

3488. I think this agreement which you have put in is the usual form of agreement on Miss Talbot's estate; is it not, so far as you understand?—Yes.

3489. Is this the form of agreement under which you hold?—Yes.

3490. I see it contains this clause: "Roofs, "chimneys, doors, windows, fences, gates, and "bars to be kept in tenantable repair by the "tenant"?—Yes.

3491. Have you in fact kept the roofs and so forth in repair yourself?—Yes.

3492. What was the exact date on which you became tenant of this farm about 10 years ago. Who was in possession before?—My wife's father.

3493. And the grandfather before was also tenant of the same farm?—Yes.

3494. Was the farm at the time you became tenant and signed the agreement in good ordinary tenantable repair?—It was not. It was in a very dilapidated state. Some of the houses and the gates, hedges, and fences were bad.

3495. What sized dwelling-house is it. How many rooms upstairs and how many downstairs?—Plenty of rooms—15 rooms altogether.

3496. Then it was expensive to keep it in repair?—Yes.

3497. You say it was out of repair?—The dwelling-house was not much out of repair, but some of the older outhouses were out of repair. I have had to new thatch them repeatedly.

3498. And the fences?—I have to make new all the fences pretty nearly all over the farm.

3499. And the gates?—I have put 33 new gates since I have been there.

3500. Thirty-three new gates in 10 years?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

3501. Have you paid for the timber yourself?—No, I had the timber given me.

3502. Who gave you the timber?—The landlady or the landlord.

3503. Who did the haulage?—I did.

3504. And put it up?—Yes.

3505. And made the gates?—Yes.

3506. There was no rise in the rent at the time you became tenant from what there was when your father was tenant, was there?—No.

3507. Do you complain of that rent now yourself on the terms of this agreement?—That is my chief grievance—too high a rent.

3508. Your rent is 131*l.* 10*s.*?—Yes.

3509. Then assuming that this clause as to repairing were out, would you still say that the rent was too high?—Yes.

3510. That we may thrash the matter out, tell me what you mean by the rent being too high?—Because I am paying about double the rent of my neighbour.

3511. Which neighbour?—One adjoining and many others.

3512. On the same estate?—Yes.

3513. Can you tell me how much arable land you have of the 150 acres?—Yes; 65 acres ploughed land and 54 acres dry grass, 18 boggy and wet marsh land, 6 wood, and about 7, I consider, of hedges and lanes.

3514. Taking that as a division, on what ground do you say that this is too high a rent; show us how you would arrive at what should be a fair rent between you and the landlady?—What we should call a fair rent would be at the same rent as the greatest part of her land is let at in Gower at the present time.

3515. About how much per acre do you think that is?—Some down as low as 7*s.* 6*d.*, and from 7*s.* 6*d.* to 10*s.* and 12*s.* per acre.

3516. Take the 65 acres of arable land. What kind of land is that in quality?—Not very good—medium I have made it much better than it was.

3517. Supposing you took this upon the terms upon which you have got it, and applied a reasonable amount of capital and worked hard, and did the best that was possible for the farm, would it be possible for the tenant to pay this rent of 131*l.* and make a fair profit on his capital?—I find it difficult to pay it out of the proceeds of the land. If I had not an income of my own coming in, I do not think I should make both ends meet.

3518. Without that you do not think you could pay the 131*l.*?—I expect it would be difficult enough.

3519. You refer to a land court to fix fair rents. Upon what basis do you suggest that the court should fix the rent? Can you give me any idea of that?—The best basis I can suggest to fix the rent is what rent the landlords can make out of the land themselves. They like, most of them, to try their hands at farming, and generally complain that they cannot make much out of it.

3520. Do not think I am putting this question in a hostile manner. It is only to ascertain what is in your mind. Your last answer suggests this, that there should be no rent, but if there should be no rent, why have a court to fix a fair rent?—Is it possible that the landlords cannot make anything out of it? I did not suggest that they did not get anything out of it.

3521. I am supposing you had your land court established, and you and Miss Talbot go before the land court, how is the court to ascertain what is to be the fair rent for your farm?—By the value of the land and the value of the farm produce at the time.

3522. You say that the rent to be fixed by the court ought to be re-adjusted from time to time by the court, having regard to a number of circumstances, including the value of produce for the time being?—I think rents should be governed by the prices of farm produce in the same way as tithes have been governed in later times.

3523. Would you be willing to take the price of wheat and let the rent follow the price of wheat?—I do not think wheat alone, but take the general price of stock crop.

3524. You rather assent to my view, that the court should take all the circumstances into consideration, including, amongst others, the price of different articles produced by the farm?—Yes.

3525. I was struck by this, that you told Lord Carrington that you wished for fixity of tenure?—Yes.

3526. At the same time that there was no demand for leases?—Yes.

3527. How do you reconcile those two things?—There is no demand for them, because we know very well we should not get them.

3528. Then when you answered my Lord, what you meant was that in fact no demands were made for leases, because there was no hope of getting them. Is that it?—Yes.

2529. Do people want leases?—I believe most farmers would prefer security of tenure for a time.

3530. A lease gives you security of tenure for a time, does it not—say a lease for 7, 14, or 21 years?—Yes.

3531. Is not that desired by people?—No. I do not know that it is ever asked for.

3532. Do you think that people have a desire to have leases?—I do not think they have a desire.

3533. Then what is the fixity of tenure that you desire?—The time.

3534. You mean that they should be secured in their holdings for a certain number of years?—Yes.

3535. A lease gives you that?—Yes.

3536. What authority do you propose as determining the length of time for which tenure is to be secured to the tenant?—Well, I am not prepared to say about the time—7, 14, or 21 years.

3537. At the present time, according to our present law, there are two ways in which a man can get fixity of tenure. He can first of all get a lease for as long as the landlord is willing to give it, or, secondly, he can buy his holding. The law permits both those things. Do you suggest any alteration of the law?—I was not aware that the law permitted it.

3538. Certainly, the law permits Miss Talbot to lease if she likes?—It does not compel her to do it.

3539. I asked you whether you believed people wanted leases from Miss Talbot, and you said you believed they did?—I have never heard any say that they wished to have leases.

3540. You define fixity of tenure as the rights that you, the tenant, have on the holding for a number of years. Do I understand you to suggest that a court should also determine that matter?—Yes.

3541. In what way—by giving anyone who is now in possession of the land, the right to demand a lease from Miss Talbot?—I do not know that anyone would require that, unless we had land courts to fix a fair rent as the first thing, and then fixity of tenure.

3542. I am adopting your suggested reform. I am supposing that the court is to fix a fair rent, and to determine whether a lease shall or shall not be granted?—I think the court should determine whether a lease should be granted or not; that is, if the tenant required a lease. I am not prepared to say whether people want leases in general or not.

3543. At any rate, I understand you to suggest that until some legislation takes place, and some new authority is given jurisdiction, it is impossible to adjust relations between landlord and tenant fairly. Is that the point you want to make?—Yes.

3544. I thought you mentioned some cases of hardship. Are there any others that you think of?—There are a few cases of hardship which happened in our district.

3545. Will you give me one or two?—There was one, Butler, a farmer, of Scurlege Castle, a few years ago that came to grief, and one several years ago, named Henry Thomas, Pen Mynydd, who was sold up.

3546. By "sold up," do you mean distrained upon for rent?—I believe so.

3547. Did he owe his rent?—I suppose his rent.

3548. What was the particular circumstance of hardship, then?—He could not pay for the land he held under the landlord.

3549. Do you mean he was a man who was doing the best with the land on which he had been a long time?—I believe he was, because I knew him to be a man who worked very hard.

3550. Although he worked hard, he could not pay his rent, and in the long run he was distrained upon?—Yes.

3551. Is that the kind of hardship you refer to?—Yes.

3552. Have very many instances of those kinds occurred?—Not very many; occasionally.

3553. On whose estate was Mr. Thomas, to whom you refer?—On the late Mr. Talbot's.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

3554. How many hired servants have you got living on your premises?—Four.

3555. They have ample accommodation in your house?—Yes.

3556. Speaking generally of the farms in the district, what is the accommodation for the hired servants?—In some places they have very good accommodation—plenty of separate rooms for the male and female portion to sleep. In other cases, again, the rooms are very scarce, and in some cases there is only a curtain dividing the male and female portion.

3557. Are there many farm labourers living in cottages?—There are a few.

3558. Are the cottages near their work often, or far off?—In some cases they have to walk several miles from the cottages to their work.

3559. What do you mean by "several"?—Three or four.

3560. Is that very common, do you think, here?—Not common; but there are a few cases.

3561. How are the rents of these cottages for the labourers?—I believe they are rather high.

3562. What are they in figures—what is paid for the ordinary labourer's cottage?—I believe they pay about 4*l.* or 5*l.* a year for their cottages.

3563. Do they have to repair their cottages, too, as the farmers do?—I am not prepared to say.

3564. In the case you refer to, is the cottage taken direct from the landlord, or is it taken by the farmer and sublet by the tenant?—In some cases it is let by the landlord, and in other cases let by the farmer.

3565. Have there been many cases of changes of tenancy upon which a claim for compensation has been made in this part of the country?—There have been several.

3566. And have claims for compensation been made?—The outgoing tenant always claims compensation. He claims compensation for unexhausted manure and seeds - seed crops and such like.

3567. But he claims no compensation, according to your custom, for any improvement he has made in the roofs, chimneys, doors, and so forth?—Just so.

3568. When you said you did not feel any fear of personal disturbance, is that because you have any personal assurance to that effect, or is it because of the general character which you attribute to Miss Talbot?—Because of the general character I attribute to her 3569. And the general management of the estate, as I understand?—Yes, I believe Miss Talbot to be a thoroughly good principled landlady, if she has her way, so far as she is concerned.

3570. Does that apply to all the landlords in the locality?—I cannot say much about the others.

3571. You mentioned some case of hardship of a Mr. Butler who was sold out. What became of the farm he lived in afterwards?—It was let to another tenant.

3572. Did he pay the same rent as Mr. Butler did?—I believe he did.

3573. How long did the one who took the farm after him remain there?—He is there at present.

3574. At the same rent?—Yes.

3575. He managed to get a living, and he has made it pay?—Yes.

3576. How do you account for that?—Perhaps being a more competent and persevering man; I cannot say the real truth of the matter.

3577. Then there is another man, H. Thomas, Pen Mynydd. He was sold out?—Yes.

3578. Who took his place?—Another man by the name of Thomas, I believe, succeeded him.

3579. At the same rent?—I believe so.

3580. Is he there still?—No, he is dead.

3581. Does the farm still continue to be let at the same rent?—Yes, I believe it is let now at the same rent.

3582. I think you complain that part of the farms are taken away for planting, and you have no compensation?—There has been part of the land taken away.

3583. You represent the whole parish of Penrice?—Yes, I can speak for the parish.

3584. Do you remember any instance in which any land has been taken in that way, and there has been no compensation?—Yes, there has been some taken from my farm. I believe there is a field taken from an adjoining farm and nothing allowed for the rent to the farmer from whom it was taken. It was put to another farm, and he had to pay rent for it.

3585. Did he ever apply for compensation?—I do not think he did.

3586. You never apply for compensation for any timber cutting, do you?—No.

3587. Twenty years ago your farm was let at 90*l.*?—Yes.

3588. You have put in a table. Have you calculated the difference in the amount that was made out of the farm at that time and the amount that is made at the present time, and compared the two?—No, I have not.

3589. You have given the prices, but have you never carried that out?—No.

3590. You should have carried the table right out, and then we could see how you stand. Do you consider that farming is not so good in the neighbourhood, because you have not the fixity of tenure which you speak of?—I believe people would make more of the land if they had it, because they would have to lay out more on the land, and make it more productive.

3591. You say some of the land has been laid out to grass. By whom has that been done?—By the tenant.

3592. Did the landlord in no way assist by giving seed or manure?—No.

3593. Do you pay any per-centage for any fresh buildings on the farms or for repairs?—There have been no fresh buildings or repairs since I have been tenant, but I believe it was in consequence of new buildings done for my father-in-law that the rent was raised.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

3594. You cannot say what the per-centage charged generally in the parish for buildings is?—About 5 per cent.

3595. You say you do not think the climate in this part is good for poultry farming?—No, I do not think it is.

3596. How do you make that out?—I think it is rather cold.

3597. Do you know that poultry farming in the present day is a very beneficial occupation; do landlords provide proper houses for keeping them?—No.

3598. As I was coming along the road I saw a very fine flock of geese. I thought surely in this neighbourhood you were paying some attention to it. Have you insured your buildings at all?—No.

3599. Your crops?—No.

3600. Nor your lives?—No, we do not get life assurance.

3601. You complain that you have not sufficient room for your servants. Have you ever applied to have more room?—I have ample room for all my servants—too much room, if anything.

3602. I thought you mentioned just now that servants had only a curtain dividing the male and female portion in some cases?—That is only in some cases; it is not general.

3603. Have any left this neighbourhood to go elsewhere?—A great many have left. That is the reason of the scarcity of labour, because they migrate to works and such places where they get higher wages.

Mr. Richard Jones.

3604. You said that you had not many cases of permanent reductions. Is that so?—Not one, to my knowledge.

3605. In cases where abatements have been made, have notices been sent previously to the tenants?—There were notices sent a few days before we had the 25 per cent. reduction, about six or seven years ago. There was no notice given of the last abatement of 15 per cent. which we had last year.

3606. What is the consequence of this?—I do not know that the consequence is very great. Perhaps some might have had to sell at a loss so as to make the rent.

3607. Where otherwise they would not have sold their stock or their produce?—Yes.

3608. They sold them under a disadvantage, in order to bring the full rent?—I am not aware that that has been the case.

3609. Such a thing, you think, may have occurred?—It may have occurred.

3610. I see you have given a table of 20 years ago, and also the prices at the present time. You put horses at 20*l.* 20 years ago, and at the present time 15*l.*?—Yes.

3611. What horses do you say fetch 15*l.* at the present time—draught horses?—Draught horses—farm horses for general farm work.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

3612. Do you consider 15*l.* an average price?—Yes.

3613. What is the character of your horses; have you shire horses here?—There are not the best horses kept in Gower.

3614. Why do you not go in for the best quality of horses, because it seems to me that the country is very well adapted for it?—I think it is a mistake we do not.

3615. There should be more enterprise and spirit on your part as farmers?—I think our landlords ought to keep the best pedigree stock for the convenience and benefit of the tenants.

3616. Where are the entire horses that travel this part of the country obtained from?—Carmarthenshire and Breconshire.

3617. Do the landlords purchase or hire entire horses for the benefit of the tenants?—No.

3618. No one?—No.

3619. What about drainage. Who carries out the drainage on the farm?—It all has to be done by the tenant here.

3620. Do the landlords in any cases supply pipes?—I am not aware that they do. I have never heard that they do.

3621. Not in any case?—Not in any case.

3622. Is there much drainage done in the neighbourhood?—Not a great deal. I have done a little of it myself. I have drained six or seven acres at a cost of about 40*l.* to 50*l.*

3623. Is it land here that should be drained thoroughly in order to render the soil profitable?—There are some lands that might be improved greatly by draining.

3624. Supposing that you were to leave your farm, can you recover compensation either from the landlord or from the incoming tenant for the money you have laid out in draining, or according to the custom of the country?—No, I believe not; neither by the custom of the country, nor under the Agricultural Holdings Act.

3625. I understand that the landlords supply timber in the rough for you to make gates?—Yes.

3626. You have to saw them?—Yes.

3627. Haul them?—Yes.

3628. And put them up?—Yes.

3629. You recover no compensation in case you leave?—No; none whatever.

3630. Have you a copy of your agreement?—I have not a copy of my agreement with me.

3631. Is it usual for tenants to be supplied with copies of the agreements?—It is not usual. I do not know that it is ever done. They never ask for them, to my knowledge.

3632. They never apply for a copy of the agreement. Have you perfect freedom to cultivate the soil in the way which you consider most profitable?—Oh, perfect freedom in that.

3633. Are you allowed to sell any hay?—We are allowed free sale on Miss Talbot's estate; there is no restriction whatever.

3634. Do you consider that a benefit?—Yes

3635. Has the character of the farming anged a good deal during the last 20 years?—

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

I do not know that it has changed very much during the last 20 years. It has changed a great deal during the last 40 years. More roots are grown, and less corn and less fallow. They find now that a crop of roots pays better than a bare fallow.

3636. You have no need to go back 40 years. The rising of corn was fairly profitable 20 years ago. Have you made any application for trespass for game?—No, no more than destruction trespass—in the destruction of rabbits. Do you mean, have I made any application?

3637. Yes?—No.

3638. Have you suffered much from the ravages of game?—Oh, yes. I have suffered a great deal from it.

3639. You have never made an application?—No more than calling the agent's attention to the destruction by the rabbits and game.

3640. Do you go in for dairying here?—A little. We go in for almost everything; we call it mixed farming.

3641. Is the land suitable for dairy purposes?—I believe the land is suitable enough, but we do not go in for dairy purposes much more than for our own consumption, because we are so far from market.

3642. That is your chief reason for not going in for dairying, because you have not a market near to dispose of the dairy produce?—Yes.

3643. Where do you dispose of your corn, and where do you sell your stock?—Swansea.

3644. Fourteen miles?—Yes.

3645. You consider it a disadvantage, that you are living so far from a good market town?—Yes, a great disadvantage.

3646. Do you consider your labourers as skilful now as they used to be?—I have very skilful labourers at present. I cannot complain of my own.

3647. Do you have to treat them better now than you used to about 20 year ago?—Oh, much better.

3648. Shorter hours?—Yes, shorter hours and better food.

3649. Do you have any difficulty with the beer question in this neighbourhood?—Not much difficulty. We give them beer when they require it on certain occasions.

3650. Do they require it pretty often?—Not very often, unless such as at harvest time, seed time, shearing, or when some special job is going on.

3651. You consider that that is a heavier item in your expenditure now than it was formerly?—It is a heavier expenditure.

Mr. Seebohm.

3652. Do you know the country all round here well?—Pretty well.

3653. Oxwich?—Yes.

3654. And Knelston, Llanddewi, and Penrice?—Yes.

3655. Under what manor are you now living?—I do not know the name of the manor; Miss Talbot is the lady of the manor.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

3656. Are there many of the old copyholders left—many people who have copyhold holdings now?—There are a few.

3657. Are they chiefly farmers?—Yes.

3658. How many acres of land would a copyholder hold?—Indeed, I am not prepared to say.

3659. Many acres?—Not very many.

3660. Five, up to 10 and 20?—Something like that.

3661. These copyholders have permanence of tenure, have they not?—Yes.

3662. They pay rents—quit-rents?—Chief rents—a small trifle.

3663. And something on the death of the copyholder; do they pay a heriot, or something of that sort, on the death of the copyholder for the renewal of the copyhold?—I believe they do.

3664. I think you have not stated whether in many cases on this estate farms have been held for many generations by the same family?—In some cases farms they have.

3665. Do you think that those families held originally by copyhold; have you ever heard the old people saying that the original families who lived in the farm used to hold that farm by copyhold?—I could not say.

3666. Is there any tradition that they once had leases for lives, or anything of that kind, or were they always tenants from year to year?—I am not prepared to say, indeed.

3667. Do you think there would be anyone in this neighbourhood—any family—who had been on the land for a long time who would be able to tell us whether there was any tradition of there once having been permanence of tenure, either by leases for lives, or something of that sort?—I have no doubt there are some who could give information on that point.

3668. Do you know the parish of Llanddewi?—Yes.

3669. Do you consider most of the people living in Gower are English people; you call it "English Gower"; it is not supposed to be so Welsh as other parts of Wales?—No, it is generally termed Fleming.

3670. Are there more Welsh people in Llanddewi than the other parishes?—I believe they are much about the same.

3671. How do you account for such a name as Llanddewi; that is a Welsh name?—Yes, there are many Welsh names in Gower.

3672. Have you ever heard by tradition from your ancestors when the Flemings came; how many hundred years ago?—No; I could not give any account of that. I have heard some old traditions, but whether there is any truth in them or not, I could not say.

3673. What traditions have you; what can you tell us about the traditions of your ancestors?—The old tradition is that it was in war time that the Flemings landed at a port or small bay called Port Eynon, at the south of the Peninsula; that they landed and remained there, and that they came from Flanders.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

3674. Yes, they were supposed to; but you have no tradition of how long that was ago?—No, I could not say.

3675. You spoke of fixity of tenure. Supposing you had the three things you mentioned. fixity of tenure, land courts, and free sale. By "free sale" you meant free sale of your holding to anyone you wanted to sell it to, did you?—Well, free sale of farm produce. I do not know whether people would be disposed to sell the farm or not; that I cannot say.

3676. That does not enter into your mind. You have got these three notions about land courts, and fixity of tenure, and free sale, from the Irish experience, have you not. Those are the three things?—I believe it is the only way for us to get fair rents.

3677. You mean by the land court?—Yes.

3678. The fixity of tenure and the free sale are the other two things that the Irish went in for?—Yes.

3679. I want to know whether you understood what free sale really means. Free sale in Ireland means sale of the tenancy; when you went out and another man came in you would be able to sell your tenancy to him for whatever he would give. That is not what you mean by "free sale"; what you meant was the sale of the produce?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

3680. Is there much uninclosed land in this district?—Not a great deal that I should approve of having inclosed.

3681. You think it would be no improvement if it were to be fenced and apportioned amongst those who claimed the right of using it?—I do not think it would be any advantage.

3682. Do you know the conditions of Fairwood Moor—the acreage and general conditions?—I have no idea as to the acreage; I should think it would be some hundreds of acres.

3683. Do you know the conditions upon which it is used?—The condition of the land?

3684. Not the condition of the land—the condition of the pasturage—the rights?—I do not know anything about that.

3685. Cefn-Bryn?—I believe Cefn-Bryn is a free common for anyone to turn to.

3686. Without stint?—Yes.

3687. And in your opinion it would be no advantage to have portions of that fenced and divided amongst those who claim the right of pasturage?—I do not think it would.

3688. When you enter into an agreement with a landlord are you supplied with a copy of that agreement as a rule in the district?—No.

3689. Why?—We never ask for it. I suppose we could have it if we required it.

3690. Is it not tendered to you by the agent as being a reasonable thing for you to take away a copy of the document you have signed, so that you can refer to the conditions at any time?—I should think it was a reasonable thing.

3691. Then it is an unreasonable thing for you not to have asked for it, I should think?—Yes.

3692. Now upon the question of game. Does it strain the conditions between landlord and tenant and agents that there is the damage which you speak of as being done by game in certain cases?—Yes, it certainly does. It must cause unpleasantness and bad feeling.

3693. Not to any serious extent, does it?—We have to do like the American says—grin and bear it.

3694. There is an under-current of unpleasant feeling?—Yes.

3695. Do the wives and children of the farmers in this district help in the labour of the farm?—Yes.

3696. Could the farmers make the farms pay unless they have the help of their families?—In many cases they could not.

3697. Do you think if you had more cottage accommodation for the labourers that it would be likely to settle the men a little more on the land, and to prevent their migrating away to the colliery districts, and so on?—It certainly would; if they had more accommodation they would never leave.

3698. You consider the cottage accommodation not quite sufficient for the district, speaking of it generally?—It is not.

3699. As to fixity of tenure. Would that lead to improved farming if you have fixity of tenure?—Yes, I believe so.

3700. In what way?—People would lay out more of their capital on the land and make it more productive.

3701. And attend to the fences and ditches?—Yes; the fences and ditches and watercourses would be better looked after than they are at present.

3702. When you go in for improvements in the district is it usual to apply to the landlords of the district for their consent to such improvements?—No, it is not usual.

3703. Why is it not usual? Is there a little diffidence on the part of the tenants to approach the agents for these consents?—I believe there is.

3704. Are you well acquainted with the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act yourself?—No, I am not.

3705. Have you any farmers' club in the district?—No farmers' club.

3706. No organisation of any kind amongst the farmers?—No co-operation—no organisation whatever as respects farming, in buying, selling, analysing, or anything of that sort.

3707. In a change of tenancy, do you consider, according to the custom you have been speaking of, that the outgoing tenant is properly compensated for the improvements he has made, and that he is leaving behind him?—Often he is not.

3708. You think that by that arrangement, that even now he leaves money behind him, when there is a change of tenancy?—Yes.

Mr. Grove—continued.

3709. Do you take advantage of benefit societies at all in this district?—Farmers and labourers avail themselves greatly of benefit societies.

3710. Do you use the railway at all somewhere within this district for the removal of produce or conveyance of stock?—Very little. One of the disadvantages that we suffer from here is the want of railway accommodation; the railway does not come within seven or eight miles of me, I suppose.

Mr. Seebohm.

3711. How do you measure your land here; I suppose by the acre?—Yes.

3712. Have you any customary acre of the country different from the statute acre?—I believe our acre is the statutory acre.

3713. The one that was used by your ancestors?—I believe it has been changed some years ago.

3714. You do not know what length the rod was that they used in measuring the land before the statute acre came in?—No, I do not.

Professor Rhŷs.

3715. Do you farm much the same as they did years ago—say 40 or 50 years ago?—Our farming has changed considerably since then: more root crops and less fallowing; more pasture and less corn.

3716. I understood you to say that you did not go in very much for poultry about here, and that one of the reasons was that the climate was cold. Is that right?—Yes.

3717. What sort of climate is it here in winter. Do you have much frost?—Sometimes we have a good deal of frost, other winters pass with very little.

3718. Do you ever have snow?—Scarcely there is ever a winter without snow.

3719. How long does a fall of snow stay, as a rule, when it comes?—Sometimes a week, or nine days, or a fortnight.

3720. Would you say that it was exactly a cold climate, or rather that it was windy and wet?—Windy and wet.

3721. With regard to drainage; there has not been very much done, I think you say. Do you have any difficulty with regard to getting water for the use of your farms?—I have no difficulty. I have water very close by.

3722. Is that generally the case in Gower?—There are some cases in which they suffer considerably from want of water. They have to fetch it from a long way.

3723. How many servants have you living in the house?—Four.

3724. All women, or some of them men?—All men.

3725. They have their food at a separate table?—Yes.

3726. You are obliged to feed them much better than they were fed many years ago?—Yes.

3727. I am not inventing this question for you particularly; for I have asked it before: what do the servants, as a rule, have for their meals—say for their breakfast?—Tea or coffee, bread and butter, and cheese.

3728. Wheat bread?—Yes. No barley bread has been eaten for many years now.

3729. Meat or bacon at breakfast?—Sometimes.

3730. The next meal would be dinner in the the middle of the day?—Yes.

3731. What would that consist of?—Potatoes, vegetables, and meat.

3732. What meat?—Bacon, and sometimes fresh meat—butchers' meat.

3733. What is the next meal?—Tea in the afternoon.

3734. And after that supper?—Yes, supper, coffee generally—mostly coffee, I believe, for supper.

3735. What would they eat with it?—Bread and cheese.

3736. Would you regularly give them beer at any of those meals; do they rqeuire beer?—No.

3737. That is a sort of thing for the holidays?—For special occasions.

3738. When especial energy is required of them, or when?—Yes, that is it.

3739. There is no regular outlay to supply the labourers with beer?—No.

3740. This is typical of most of the farms around?—I believe there are some farmers who have beer continually.

3741. You have no cottages for your labourers on the farm?—There are no labourers' cottages on my farm.

3742. Ought you to have cottages on your farm; would it answer better?—I believe it would answer better.

3743. I want to know, with regard to those cottages for labourers working on your farm, whether it would answer best that they should be let direct by the landlord to the labourer or by the farmer?—I could not say.

3744. What do you think?—No doubt the labourer would prefer to have them let by the landlord.

3745. The landlord is so good?—Yes.

3746. They are more afraid of the farmer?—I think if they and the farmer should fall out, the farmer might take an advantage; but I do not know.

Sir John Llewelyn.

3747. Are there any freeholders about?—A few in Gower.

3748. Not many?—Not very many, but a few small ones.

3749. With respect to the security which you desire to have; did you ever ask for a lease?—I never did.

3750. You think you are safer as you are?—I feel safe enough as I am.

3751. Now, about the custom of the country. What do you get, supposing you go out. You would get then your compensation from an incoming tenant?—I should get compensation from an incoming tenant, for what I left behind.

3752. Under the custom of the country?—Yes.

3753. And under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I do not know much about the Agricultural Holdings Act.

3754. You contracted yourself out of a portion of that Act?—Out of a portion of that Act—the six months' instead of 12 months' notice.

3755. You object to that?—Yes.

3756. You think that is onerous and restrictive?—It is restrictive.

3757. Are there many changes in tenancies on the estate?—Not generally; there are occasionally.

3758. It does not very often happen that that clause would be required?—Not very often.

3759. I should like to know a little more as to what you think would be better, supposing there was such a thing as fixity of tenure, to be obtained from the land court. In what way would you be better off?—As regards fixity of tenure, I have not very much to say. It is unfair rent or unequal rents that are our particular grievance.

3760. Unequal rents?—Yes, unequal rents. We feel rather aggrieved that several of us should pay double the rent that others do, for the same quality of land.

3761. That is what you principally complain of?—Yes.

3762. And of your own being too high?—Yes.

Chairman.

3763. You have been very good natured, and I am rather reluctant to ask you any more questions, but perhaps you would not mind my asking you one question. You are a representative of a class which is happily very numerous around this district. Your family has been a long time on the land, or your wife's family has been. No doubt they have a great affection for the old house, and the land and so on, and family traditions, and they would be sorry to leave it?—Yes, my Lord, they would be sorry to leave it.

3764. I had some difficulty in following the objection to asking for leases. You told us there was no great demand for leases. We can let that go by; but still you told us that you wished for a land court. Now is it for this reason: would you like to see a land court established that you could refer to, if you thought your rent was higher than it ought to be, and the landlord thought it was a fair rent. Is that what you mean?—Yes.

3765. A sort of court that you could refer to of practical men who would decide, and whose decision would be final and legal, as to what rent you were to pay?—Yes.

3766. As for fixity of tenure, I suppose you mean that so long as you paid that rent and farmed in a husbandlike manner, you should be secured in your holding, and able to live on that holding so long as you carried on the conditions imposed upon you by that court. Is that the sort of thing?—Yes.

3767. And besides that, you would wish the court to adjudicate on any losses from game or losses from timber felling that you might be subjected to and that the landlord might decline to pay. You would refer those sort of questions to the land court as well?—Yes, my Lord.

3768. Then you would wish to have a sort of Glamorganshire custom established by law, so that when you went out of your holding in case of death, or in case of going away to another part of the country, you would like to be perfectly certain that not only by the custom of the country, but by law, you would be entitled to any outlay that you might have made on the farm, such as dry walls, or draining, or manuring with lime, or any other improvements on the farm?—Yes, my Lord; I laid out over 200*l.* when I took the farm, and if I were to leave to-morrow I do not think I should get compensation.

3769. How much would you get out of that 200*l.*?—I do not expect I should get any.

3770. Not according to the Glamorganshire custom?—No.

3771. We have been told that the Glamorganshire custom is much preferable to the Agricultural Holdings Act?—But it does not come as far as here.

3772. The Glamorganshire custom does not extend so far as this?—No.

Mr. Griffiths.

3773. Some of the labourers in your neighbourhood keep cows, do they not?—I do not know of any labourers who keep cows. There are many with small holdings; but they cannot live on the holdings themselves; they are obliged to go out and labour as well.

3774. Would it not be advantageous to the labourer to have a cow or two?—I dare say it would.

3775. Would it not bind him more to the land?—I dare say it would.

3776. And the children would be taught a little more of farming?—Yes.

3777. Do the children of the labourers generally take to farming operations?—They take to farming operations, those that have an opportunity.

Mr. Richard Jones.

3778. You say that you have contracted yourself out of the Agricultural Holdings Act with respect to the notice to quit only. Now, supposing that a tenant has drained his farm, and has left, is he aware that if he gave notice to his landlord he could put in a claim for draining according to the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I was not aware that he could.

3779. I take it for granted that the Act is very little known in this neighbourhood?—The Act is very little known here. The farmers do not go in very much for understanding laws and things. They have not much time for that. They have to devote all their time to hard work and agricultural labour.

Chairman.

3780. I have some questions to ask you which have been handed in according to our custom. The first two questions are handed in by Mr. Penrice. The first is about rates, and it is this: Is it not the fact that the only rates that are higher are road rate, for which we get very much better roads, and the county rate, which is nearly double since the county council has had the management. Has not the road rate been raised about 25 per cent.? Are you able to answer that?—The road rate I should think has been raised about 500 per cent. in Oxwich parish. 40 years ago the road rate was 6*l.*; now it is about 40*l.*—from 36*l.* to 40*l.* Someone says, behind me, that it is 50*l.* About 40 years ago it was 6*l.*

3781. You have stated that the rates have risen 100 per cent.; since when?—Since the last 40 years, I should think.

3782. Can you tell us what they were 20 years ago, and how much they amount to now?—I am not able to answer that question. I was not farming then. I was out of the country.

3783. There are some questions which are put by Mr. Nicholl, the agent to Miss Talbot. What number of tenants do you consider you represent? Do you speak for yourself, or do you speak for others?—I speak for myself. There are several of the other tenants here ready to speak for themselves.

3784. Is it not the fact that Miss Talbot has promised to have your farm re-valued?—Yes.

3785. Do you not think if your farm was vacant that it could be re-let at the same or a higher rent?—I have no doubt it could be let at the same rent.

3786. Is there much game except immediately around Penrice?—I believe they are not so numerous in other parts as they are about Penrice.

3787. Have you ever asked to be allowed wire netting?—I never asked for it, but my father-in-law asked for it.

3788. Are not the rents of the cottages and gardens from 5*s.* to 3*l.* or 4*l.* at most, usually 2*l.* or 2*l.* 10*s.*?—There might be some chance ones let at that rent.

3789. Are not the rents of the cottages which are sub-let by farmers higher than those let direct by Miss Talbot?—I am not prepared to answer that.

3790. Now, Mr. Vincent wishes to ask you a question or two. Is not a tenancy from year to year on Miss Talbot's estate reckoned to be equal to a tenancy for life?—I do not know that it is; I know that it was not the case always.

3791. Have you got a good house and buildings?—Our house is in an ordinary state of repair, but some of the outbuildings are almost ready to fall down. There are stays built against them to keep them from falling.

3792. Can you say whether successive members of the same families have held many farms on the estates of Miss Talbot and Mr. Penrice for generations?—There are some cases where they have.

3793. That is the form of agreement under which you hold [exhibiting document]?—Yes.

3794. Does it not show that section 33 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, is the only one excepted?—That is so.

3795. What is your rent per acre. Can you tell us that?—On an average per acre about a little over 17*s*.

3796. Are not Miss Talbot's farms notoriously low as compared with those of other owners?—A great many of them are, and some of them are equal to any.

3797. In your opinion would not Miss Talbot be a gainer if the whole estate were re-valued, or at all events not a loser?—She would be a gainer.

3798. Have you not expressed this opinion recently to Mr. Nicholl?—Yes, my Lord.

3799. In fact, is not your complaint of inequalities of rents rather than of excessive rents?—It is both excessive and unequal.

3800. The last question is put in by Mr. T. D. Lewis, of Singleton, Swansea. You stated that no landlord in the neighbourhood kept an entire horse for the use of tenant farmers?—I did not say no one did.

3801. Is it not true that Sir Hussey Vivian kept an entire Clydesdale horse for the use of this district, and also pedigree shorthorn bulls of the best kind?—I am not able to answer that.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN TUCKER called and examined.

Chairman.

3802. You are a tenant farmer?—Yes.

3803. Who is your landlord?—Miss Talbot.

3804. Do you live anywhere near the last witness?—About two miles from him.

3805. What is the size of your holding?—146 acres.

3806. What rent do you pay for that?—90*l*.

3807. Is it chiefly mixed farming?—It is a mixed farm, but I have about 25 acres of cliff land. It is Horton, in the parish of Penrice.

3808. What is cliff land?—Common land, very short grass, and covered with gorse pretty well.

3809. A sort of sheep run?—Yes, adjoining the seashore.

3810. I believe you want to give us a little information about occupation, section 3. We have been told that the usual date of entry on Miss Talbot's estate is the 25th of March?—Yes.

3811. Upon other estates they come in generally in September?—I believe so.

3812. Which do you consider the best?—To come in in September.

3813. Why?—Because in case of a man having to leave his farm at the end of the year in March with a six months' notice he has little or no time to prepare for going out, because he has the dead half year before him, while if he goes out in September he has the best time to prepare for going out. With 12 months' notice I would just as soon one as the other, but with six months' notice it is better to go out in September.

3814. With regard to leases, there is no demand for them?—They have not been asked for in the past, and I do not think there would be a demand at present without considerable re-adjustment of rent. I believe people would take leases now with a considerable decrease in rent. At the present time and for many years we have been suffering from a great state of depression, and to all appearance we have not come to the worst. I do not think any man paying a high rent would take a lease without a re-adjustment of rents.

3815. He would not pledge himself to pay the present rents?—No, I do not think he would. I would not, at any rate.

3816. Do you think this is a fair agreement of Miss Talbot's on the whole?—Yes. I have a copy of my own agreement.

3817. Is there anything you find hard in it?—No, there is nothing in it that we object to at all. We should prefer her keeping up the repairs, that is the only objection I have to it. Especially in times gone by, most of the farm buildings had thatched roofs, and it was a very great expense to keep them up, but lately Mr. Talbot re-roofed many of his buildings, with the assistance of his tenants. The tenants were expected to do all the labour and the mason and joiners' work; he would give simply slate and timber and the tenant did the haulage. Of course, now the expense of keeping up the repairs of the roofs will not be so great. We have made one good outlay, and that will perhaps last a lifetime.

3818. When was that?—That was within the last 10 years. There are many now not done at all. Wheat is so expensive a crop to grow now, or rather it is not a paying crop to grow, and we must grow wheat to find reeds for thatching the roofs. It is expensive when you have to buy reeds to thatch the roofs.

3819. There is no restriction about selling anything on the farm?—None at all. We have perfect freedom on Miss Talbot's estate to grow what we like and sell what we like.

3820. Practically speaking, there are not many cases of hardship in your district, certainly not under your landlady. What do you mean by the question of hardship. You have a good agreement and you have free sale?—Yes, there is nothing in that that I can call hardship.

3821. Is there any other sort of hardship? Is there anything you do not think quite fair?—No, I do not know that there is.

3822. Nothing about game, for instance?—Well, I am not very much troubled with game myself, only a little. The objection I have got to it is chiefly owing to partridges, for this reason. I am living not very far from the estate—about a mile off—and I am troubled a good deal on part of my farm with the partridges, and of course I am not allowed to kill and neither does the landlady or landlord ever come near to kill them. I can remember that on my farm in the last 40 years there has never been a landlord fire a shot on it to my knowledge.

3823. Still, the game is preserved?—The game is preserved, and I think that is unfair.

3824. You do not complain of the partridges, but you complain that no one shoots them?—They are most destructive to the root crops. They are destructive to the turnips; they scoop out little holes in the turnips, and the water accumulates, and that destroys them.

3825. Are there many partridges on your estate?—In a dry summer there are very many there.

3826. How many should you say?—About three years ago I was passing through one of my fields of five acres, and I rose about 70 partridges. That may give you some idea. I have never made complaint to the landlord, but I have often spoken to the keeper.

3827. You do not very much object to the partridges, if the landlords came and shot them?—That is my objection, but I think the game laws should be somewhat altered; I think the farmers should have an equal right with the landlord to the game. I do not say an absolute right, but an equal right.

3828. You do not know any farmer in the district who would object to the landlord coming over, and having a good day's shooting?—No, in fact, I think the farmer would take a pride in preserving the game.

3829. Is there any damage done in the timber cutting, or hauling, or leaving it on the ground?—Not in my case; there might be a little on the land in the wood.

3830. As to the usual conditions of tenancy, you object to them, and you think the landlord ought to keep the holding in repair?—Yes.

3831. As to the gates; are timbers given?—No, not in general on Miss Talbot's estate.

Chairman—continued.

I have been tenant 14 years, and I have never had a gate given me.

3832. How much does it cost in this part of the country?—From 8*s.* to 10*s.*; fit for hanging, 10*s.*

3833. Posts and all?—No, apart from posts; hinges and gate.

3834. You have a copy of your agreement?—Yes.

3835. Have you anything to say about your rent?—No, my rent is 90*l.* for 146 acres.

3836. What do you think of that, as compared with the rent about the country?—It is rather high.

3837. Very high, or rather high?—I may say it is very high for the present time. My argument is this, that when I took my farm I did not consider it high, but when you consider the prices now and then, I think there is great reason to complain. If you take all farm produce, they are worth fully one-third less now than 15 years ago. My contention is that any farm that could make 300*l.* 15 years ago cannot make more than 200*l.* to-day. That can be clearly proved.

3838. You think your rent should be reduced 33 per cent?—Yes, I think it should be reduced according to the market prices of things—according to a sliding scale. All farms that have come into the market on Miss Talbot's estate since 25 years ago, I may say, have been risen—the rents have been risen.

3839. Do you mean if a farm was vacant now, she would get more money than 25 years ago?—No, I mean this: going back 25 years ago, and up to about six years ago, all farms that came into the market were very considerably risen.

3840. Up to six years ago?—Yes. Since then I do not know of one which has been risen, or to any extent, simply because I suppose farming was paying then. Fifteen years ago, I took my farm in 1878, and it was risen to me then 10*l.* a year.

3841. It was risen 10*l.* a year then?—Yes.

3842. Did you hear the last witness, Captain Batcock, speak about land courts. Do you agree with him?—I do. I agree with land courts, but we must have properly representative courts; I should not believe in a one-sided court. If both sides were properly represented, I should agree. I do think there should be a third person as a rule between landlord and tenant.

3843. Whose decision should be final?—Yes. It is only human nature; the landlord tries to get as much as he can, and the tenant wants to get it as low as he can, and I think there should be a court where we could take any grievance upon either side.

3844. Instead of being settled as it is now by arbitration?—Yes.

3845. Would you be willing that the farm should be gone over every seven years, or five years, to see it had not gone back in any way, and that the farm was cultivated in a husband-like way?—Yes, I think there would be no objection to that.

3846. You have every wish to deal perfectly fairly and honestly with the landlord?—I have no wish to intrude on the landlord's right whatever.

3847. And as long as the tenant cultivated his farm properly, and behaved in a proper manner, he should not be disturbed in his holding?—Quite so.

3848. You have been on your land 14 years?—Yes, but I have been on the same farm all my life. I am the fourth generation on my own farm.

3849. Your family has been on the land many years?—My father, grandfather, and great grandfather have been there.

Sir John Llewelyn.

3850. This is a matter which is rather interesting as a matter of natural history. I did not know that the partridges would peck the turnips in that way. Do not the wood pigeons do mischief in the same way?—Yes, they do, undoubtedly. I think the wood pigeons, however, take more of the leaves than the root.

3851. You consider that the partridges, when they are not shot and not followed in that way, have done harm to your turnip crops?—I do.

3852. Are you troubled with rabbits as well?—A little. I can keep them down; but they do come on to me from the preserves.

3853. In respect of the rates; do you complain of the increase of the rates, and of there being more than they used to be, say, 20 years ago?—Yes, there is an increase in the rates.

3854. In which rates?—Chiefly the road rate and the school board rate.

3855. And the county rate?—Yes. The chief reason why we feel the rise in road rates of because formerly each parish had to maintain their own roads, and in the lower part of the district we had not such an expensive road as on the main road to Swansea. Then ours would be 6*d.* instead of 2*s.* Now it has become the district rate on the common fund, we feel part of their burthen, and their burthen is lightened.

3856. What is the extent of that increase?—I should think it has doubled.

3857. What are the figures?—A 6*d.* rate used to be paid for the parish of Penrice, now it is 15*d.*; that is more than double.

3858. And the school board rate?—We have no school board in Penrice.

3859. The county rate?—There is a county rate.

3860. That would be embodied in the poor rate?—Yes.

3861. Have you a lease?—No, I have not.

3862. It has gone on for four generations without one?—Yes.

3863. Do you think the custom between the outgoing tenant and the incoming tenant could be improved upon materially?—I do not know that it could.

3864. Have you read the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883?—I have read it, but I am not very familiar with it.

3865. It gives you considerable security, more than was enjoyed before?—Yes, I think we can claim for permanent pasture under the Land Holdings Act.

3866. Have you any cottages for labourers upon your farm?—Yes, I have one cottage rented with my farm.

3867. Is that cottage occupied by an agricultural labourer?—By my own man.

3868. A permanent man?—Yes, he has been with me now about 21 years.

Professor Rhŷs.

3869. I wish to ask you a question which I asked the previous witness; you have a labourer in the cottage?—Yes.

3870. Do you let the cottage to him or does the landlord?—I let it.

3871. Which do you consider is the better plan?—If the cottage is built for the use of the farm, I think the farmer should have the right to let it, but if not of course the landlord ought. Mine is rented with the farm, so that I rent it to the labourer for a trifle more than I give for it, because I have to keep it in repair. It has a thatched roof, and I get 10*s.* a year more for doing that.

3872. If he ceased to be your labourer he would have to quit the cottage?—Yes; if I had to dismiss him I should have to dismiss him out of the cottage as well.

3873. Have you other labourers?—Yes, I have two servant girls and two boys.

3874. You heard what the other witness said about the food of the servants?—Yes.

3875. Is that about the average?—About the general custom.

3876. I take it you agree generally to the replies made to the questions which I put as to uninclosed land. Would you prefer that lands were inclosed and apportioned amongst those farmers now claiming rights of pasturage, or allow them to remain uninclosed?—That is a question which I can hardly answer. I am living so far away from the commons.

3877. Then you speak of the game. You think there ought to be an alteration in the Game Laws, and that there should be equal rights between landlord and tenant?—Yes.

3878. Could you define what you mean by equal rights. If that were proposed, how could you prevent friction between the two parties. Can you define in your own mind a manner by which equal rights could be exercised without causing an unpleasant feeling?—I can hardly answer that question, I am sure.

Mr. Grove—continued.

3879. That would be for legislation to find out, if they intended to go on that line?—Yes, it would.

3880. As to your land and the rent; you say you have 146 acres, and you pay 90*l.*?—Yes.

3881. That is an average of 12*s.* 4*d.* an acre?—Yes.

3882. What is the quality of that land?—As I said before, there are 25 acres of cliff and burrow land, and then I have about 18 more of moorland, which is very poor land.

3883. And what arable?—And the other would be mixed—not much pasture—mixed farm. We are very badly off for pasture land on my farm; we are on the limestone, and it is very dry. Part of it is very poor.

3884. So that you do not consider the quality of your land equal to the general run of the land held by the last witness?—Some parts of it are pretty good, and others very bad; but there is one thing which I suffer very much from on my farm, and that is the want of water. I have scarcely any water on the farm, and during this last drought for about a month I had to drive my stock from 6 to 8 miles every day to water. Taking the whole stock into consideration, and the different times I had to go, I had to travel from 6 to 8 miles every day.

3885. You said you were fairly acquainted with the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, I said I am not very familiar with it.

3886. Have you a copy of it?—No, I have not.

3887. Have you a copy of the Ground Game Act?—No, I have not.

3888. Can you explain why, after Parliament has taken the trouble to pass these Acts on purpose to do good to the farmers, that the farmers do not trouble themselves to get copies of the Acts?—One reason is this: In nearly all the Acts the clauses that benefit the farmers are permissive and not compulsory, and we are asked to contract out of them.

Chairman.

3889. We cannot point that out too strongly that it is quite illegal to contract yourself out of an Act of Parliament. It cannot be done?—We were not asked would we do it, but the paper was sent to us to sign it without asking whether we were agreeable or not to six months' notice.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

3890. That may be so, but do you know about the three classes of improvements; for instance, that in the schedule there are three classes of improvements?—Yes.

3891. The first-class consists of improvements to which the consent of the landlord is required?—Yes; a written agreement.

3892. The second class contains improvements in respect of which mere notice to the landlord is required, and whether he consents or not, he must give compensation; that is drainage; and the third class is a series of improvements to which the consent of the landlord is not required, and as to which no notice is required, and as to which schedule there can be no contracting out of the Act.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

3893. In fact section 55 says: "Any contract, agreement, or covenant made by a tenant, by virtue of which he is deprived of his right to claim compensation under this Act in respect of any improvement mentioned in the first schedule hereto (except an agreement providing such compensation as is by this Act permitted to be substituted for compensation under this Act) shall, so far as it deprives him of such right, be void both at law and in equity."

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

3893*a*. I may say it is a very simply drawn Act. It is not like some Acts of Parliament which are full of technical expressions?—I have no doubt if we were leaving our farms we should study the Act.

Mr. Grove.

3894. You do not use the railway much?—Only from Killay to Swansea.

3895. Do you consider the rates over that portion of the line excessive?—They are nearly double the last two months.

3896. What do you send?—Chiefly barley.

3897. There is a book published by the Board of Trade for a shilling, which gives a little summary of these Acts of Parliament; they are condensed into this little book, and you will find it all there. Do you know whether it is known by farmers in the district at all?—What is it called?

3898. Is it called the railway rates book?—I do not know that it is known at all.

Mr. Seebohm.

3899. You stated the interesting fact that yours was the fourth generation on your farm?—Yes.

3900. Do you know whether your great grandfather came to the farm from the district or from abroad?—He came from abroad; he came from Somersetshire.

3901. So that you do not know much from his descendants about when the Flemings came, or anything of that kind?—Well, history says (I have seen an account of it) that they came to Gower in 1644.

3902. Then your great grandfather represented one of the last Somersetshire invasions?—I cannot say.

Mr. Seebohm.

3903. The last witness said there were some copyholders left, and that they held from 5 up to 10 and 20 acres?—I do not know of any copyholders my side of the country. There may be in some other parts.

Mr. Grove.

3904. The last witness said he did not get a copy of his agreement from the agent. You seem to have had a copy?—Yes, I did.

3905. How did you get it?—I asked for it and they did not object.

Mr. Richard Jones.

3906. With respect to the gates and posts, you say, if I understood you aright, that you had to buy the timber to make the gates?—Yes.

3907. And saw them?—Yes.

3908. What about the posts?—I have had posts from the estate, but not on more than one or two occasions.

3909. You have had to buy the posts as well?—We are on the sea coast, and sometimes we get posts from wrecks at sea.

3910. You depend upon Providence?—We have to buy them in case of shipwrecks even.

3911. To what extent is machinery used among the farmers in the neighbourhood here?—It is pretty largely used now.

3912. Do you use any mowing machines?—Altogether.

3913. And reaping machines?—It is entirely done by them.

3914. I suppose you cut chaff and pulp by water power?—Horse gear.

3915. Do you use any artificial manures?—Yes, great quantities of it.

3916. You have to send to Swansea for it?—We get it shipped into the various bays here—Port Eynon and Oxwich Bay. Some get it down from Swansea by the traction engine.

3917. Do you use lime?—No.

3918. Why?—We have not used it now for the last 15 years or more, I think, for the simple reason that labour is so scarce that we cannot find labour to do it. We are troubled very much in Gower for the want of labour; nearly all the young men take off into the towns.

3919. Can you get women servants?—No; there is a difficulty in getting women servants.

3920. What wages do they generally get here?—It depends upon the age. When a girl grows up quite a woman, and able to do anything, she would get from 8*l.* to 10*l.*, and perhaps some would be a little above that.

3921. Is this want of water a general thing in the neighbourhood here?—In the neighbourhood where I live it is general.

3922. Is there any artificial means of conducting water from one place to another?—Well, there are no strong springs in the neighbourhood, so I believe we should have water brought to us.

3923. Where do you take your cattle to water?—To a pond about half a mile from the field where they would be grazing.

3924. Does this occur often?—When there is a month of dry weather we have to take them there.

3925. You have not taken any means of having that water conducted down to your house?—No.

3926. Would you have to cross another farm to get the water down in that way?—Yes.

3927. Do you as tenants ever try to combine?—No.

3928. Supposing you combined, and you made an application to your landlady, Miss Talbot, do you think she would agree to it, and help you?—Yes, I think she would.

3929. The reason you do not get it is that you do not combine to go and apply for it?—Yes, I think the landlords should certainly assist the farmers in providing water to that extent.

3930. Do you not think you should apply to them to do it?—We have applied to them to do it.

3931. And they have refused?—Well, they have offered to do it in part.

3932. Do you know of any application being made for compensation for unexhausted improvements when a tenant went out of a farm?—To the landlord?

3933. Either to the landlord or to the incoming tenant?—It is generally settled by valuation. When a tenant leaves a farm of course there is a valuer appointed on each side, and he claims compensation for unexhausted manures and seeds in the land and any tillage that may be done, nothing more.

3934. I suppose a valuer is appointed by the incoming and the outgoing tenant?—Yes, generally.

3935. And if they fail to agree, they appoint an umpire?—Yes.

3936. In general are cases decided by an umpire?—Yes, providing the first two cannot agree.

3937. Supposing that they fail to agree in the appointment of an umpire?—Well, perhaps it must go further then. I have not known a case go further than that.

Mr. Griffiths.

3938. You have still some arable land on your farm, have you not?—Yes.

3939. And you are acquainted with the arable land in this neighbourhood?—Yes.

3940. What quantity of oats per acre can you grow in this neighbourhood?—I dare say with a good crop and a good season 36 to 40 bushels per acre.

3941. Why I ask you the question is this: I have the report for the county of Glamorganshire before me, by Mr. Doyle, and he gives the average quantity of oats in this neighbourhood as 87 bushels per acre. That frightens me?—I should like him to go and farm the land in Gower.

3942. He has received the information from you in this neighbourhood?—Never. When is that?

3943. In 1877.—To take the average, I do not think Gower would produce half of it.

3944. The average given in 1879 is 63 bushels?—1879, was that very wet season, and the crops were extremely light then. Would that be the county of Glamorganshire or Gower?

3945. Gower.—It must be wrong.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

3946. Do you know whether any holdings have been consolidated, that is to say, any farms that were formerly held separate being now together?—There are a few cases on Miss Talbot's estate—just a few. I think there may be some on some other estates too, but not to any large extent.

3947. Is such consolidation objected to?—Well, I do not know that it is.

3948. I think you mentioned in regard to the artificial manure that one way of getting it down here is by discharging at Port Eynon?—Yes.

3949. Does anyone charge you any dues for discharging there?—No.

3950. It is within the limits of the port of Swansea, I suppose?—Yes.

3951. But no dues charged?—No.

3952. Is there any quay?—There is a little jetty to run into Port Eynon.

3953. Is that in Oxwich Bay or the next bay?—The next bay.

3954. You said people will not take leases without a re-adjustment of rent. Do you mean this, that supposing you were offered a lease for 21 years at your present rent you would not take it?—I would not.

3955. But you might be inclined to take the lease if there were means for periodical valuation of the rents so as to make it meet the change of circumstances?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

3956. You complain rather of the clause about the repairs to roofs, chimneys, doors, and so on?—Yes.

3957. Would you pay a higher rent to be relieved of the burthen of that clause?—No, I do not think I should.

3958. You would rather keep the clause in?—Well, I think we pay quite enough for rent.

3959. I want to inform myself as to which you think to be the best. In my own part of the country the landlord does all the repairs?—I think that is right.

3960. If the tenants did the repairs I should lower the rents; which do you think is the best?—I consider as a rule that some of the higher rents on Miss Talbot's are quite as high as the neighbouring estates that do keep the repairs.

3961. I am not referring to Miss Talbot's estate. I asked your opinion of which is best—to pay higher rent and have the repairs done for you, or to pay a lower rent and do the repairs yourself?—It would all depend upon the amount of rent you would put on for repairs.

3962. You would rather have the repairs done for you in any case?—Yes.

3963. And a fair rent adjusted?—Yes.

3964. Is this in your mind, that there is no compensation given to you for these repairs and improvements?—There is no compensation given for our improvements.

3965. You referred to a land court and you said you thought it would be a good thing. Have you known any cases of re-valuation of land by a man agreed to in this neighbourhood?—No, I do not.

3966. Has it ever been applied for?—I believe there is a case on hand now. The last witness is about to have his re-valued.

3967. Would not that answer the purpose of a land court to have it re-valued?—Yes, I believe it would, provided there was a valuer agreed upon on both sides.

3968. You mean one agreed to by both?—No, I think it would be better to have two. It is natural that if a man is employed by the landlord and paid by the landlord he would try to please the landlord as well as he could.

3969. On the other hand, would not the tenant be rather inclined to put a low rent on his holding and the landlord a high rent on the holding, and then it would come to the same thing?—Yes, I dare say it would.

3970. Has your rent been raised to your knowledge?—It was risen to me 10*l.* a year in 1878.

3971. Before that it was 80*l.* a year?—Yes.

3972. And had been at that rate as far back as you can remember?—Yes, as far back as I can remember. I believe there are one or two small portions added to it during my time which would bring it up to that, but what it was when my father took it I am not prepared to say; I do not know; but my father paid 80*l.* a year for years before he died.

3973. There was some land added to it?—Not when I took it—not a foot.

3974. You still think it is too dear?—Yes.

3975. It does not sound a high rent?—It does not; but you come and see the quality of the land and I think you would say differently.

3976. Is there much demand for farms about here?—Small farms there may be; there has been in the past, but I think from the present state of things there will not be any demand much longer. I think unless something comes to the rescue of the farmers there will be any amount of farms to let in a very short time.

3977. I see there is a considerable abatement in 1886 of 25 per cent. Why was that?—That was for that bad season.

3978. Do you think 1886 was a worse season than many years have been?—So far as I am concerned it was very dry.

3979. I suppose this country burns very much?—Yes.

3980. You are on the line?—Yes, it is a very thin soil.

3981. That is why you wish for water?—Yes, I do.

3982. Cannot you come to any arrangement with Miss Talbot about the water. Have you made any arrangement?—I have made application to bring water to the village. I live in a village, and the whole village suffers for the want of water as well as I do.

3983. I should advise you to come to some arrangement. Miss Talbot seems such an excellent landlady?—We have nothing to say against Miss Talbot. She is a good landlady.

Mr. Grove.

3984. How many inhabitants are there in that village?—About 120, more or less; I could not be certain.

3985. Is there any water fairly near to you?—There is a spring below the village close by the seashore, but not a running spring. There is a pump fixed there which supplies the village with drinking water.

3986. Would it be expensive and would there be physical conditions which would allow you to bring a copious supply of water into the village?—Yes, I think there would.

Mr. Seebohm.

3987. The gentleman examined last said he remembered in old times that there was a different acre used from the present statute acre?—Yes, there is what is called the old acre. I do not know what it is, but it is something larger.

3988. Will you try and find out and give it to me. I want to know the length of the rod?—I will try and find out.

Chairman.

3989. There are some questions handed in which I shall ask you to be good enough to answer, if you can. This question is handed in by Mr. Nicholl: Does not Miss Talbot pay the salary of teachers, keep the school in repair and generally provide for education in Penrice, Oxwich, and Port Eynon parishes?—Yes, she does.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

3990. Are these schools which you refer to the only schools in these parishes?—Yes.

3991. Are they public elementary schools?—Yes.

3992. Are they inspected?—Yes.

3993. And is any grant made by the Government in respect of them?—Yes, there is a Government grant to both.

3994. Who manages the school?—There is a school board. Although they are private schools, there is a school board.

3995. Who appoints the teachers?—The board. Miss Talbot's two agents are on the board and three farmers.

3996. That is a properly constituted and elected school board under the School Board Act of 1870?—Yes, I believe it is; but we scarcely ever meet.

3997. Who is your clerk?—I believe it is Mr. Nicholl.

3998. Is he appointed clerk under the Act?—He is appointed by the board and under the Act, so far as I know.

3999. There are no minutes made?—We have not met except once these last two years, I think.

4000. Is any religious instruction given in these schools?—No, I do not think there is —nothing objectionable.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

4001. That is not my question; is any religious instruction given in these schools?—I am not aware of any. We never meet, therefore I do not know.

4002. If you are a member of the school board why do you not see that the meetings are held?—Well, it is in the hands of Miss Talbot. She pays the money and meets all payments that are required, and therefore we, as a board, are satisfied with it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

4003. How often is this board elected?—Every three years.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

4004. I think you have been only elected once?—Yes, it is re-elected every three years.

Lord Kenyon.

4005. Are you relieved of all school board rate?—Yes.

4006. By Miss Talbot's generosity?—Yes, we are.

4007. Therefore you seem to be content with her management, and you leave things as they are?—Yes, that is just how it is.

Chairman.

4008. This is another question from Mr. Nicholl: Did not a meeting of tenants decide that in your case no reduction of rent was necessary? Did you ever hear of that?—This is the first time I have ever heard of it, and I should think the first time that ever Mr. Nicholl heard of it, too.

4009. Do you think it would encourage Miss Talbot to expend money on the estate if her rents are to be fixed by a land court?—No, possibly it would not.

4010. Did Miss Talbot promise to pay half the cost of bringing water if the farmers paid the other?—Yes, she did, but it was a plan we did not approve of; that was the reason.

Mr. Grove.

4011. Why did you not approve of it?—I asked the agent if Miss Talbot would kindly give us a plot of land in the village and scoop it out so as to make a pond in the village, and instead of that he suggested a covered tank, and I disapproved of that, and he thought the cost might be 25*l.*, and we were to bear a half of it, and I did not approve of the plan.

4012. You could not agree about the mode of carrying it out?—No, and I do not think it would answer either.

Adjourned for a short time.

Chairman.

4013. The Commissioners are very anxious to get evidence with regard to labourers, and I am told there is a gentleman in this room who is a labourer, and who is prepared to give evidence as to the condition of the labourers. If that is so, we shall be glad to take him after we have examined the next witness.

4014. I believe you wish to say something more?—There is just one statement I wish to make regarding a question put to me by Mr. Nicholl, respecting the water. I may say the matter came up betwixt us and Miss Talbot only a few weeks ago. We have a plan in consideration at present which we propose to bring before Miss Talbot in the future. We did not approve the last plan, and we have another scheme in hand which we wish to bring before her. Can I put a question to Mr. Nicholl, or can I put it in writing to you.

4015. I do not think we can allow you to ask Mr. Nicholl any questions.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Mr. Nicholl says to me that he has no objection to answer.

Chairman.

I am afraid we cannot have any questions asked in that way.

The Witness: It was as to how it was discussed at the tenant's meeting that my rent was low enough. I will defy him to prove that.

Chairman.

I think you gave us that answer before, because you said this was the first you heard of it, and you went on to say that you believed it was the first Mr. Nicholl had heard of it.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Nicholl: My Lord, I think I am accused practically by asking the question of telling a lie. It is not the first I have heard of it, and I was bonâ fide told so.

(The shorthand writer read the evidence of Mr. Tucker upon this point.)

Chairman.

Now, let me make this perfectly clear, Mr. Nicholl. This statement has been made by this witness, and you can either go into the chair and be asked a question about it, or you can send us in a statement in writing to-morrow, as other statements have been sent in where landlords or their agents do not agree with the evidence.

Mr. Nicholl: I will go into the chair now.

Mr. L. D. NICHOLL called and examined.

Chairman.

4016. Now, you have heard the shorthand writer read that question and answer from the evidence of the last witness. Do you wish to state of your own knowledge that such a meeting took place?—I wish to state that I was informed that such a meeting of tenants took place, and that such a conclusion was arrived at by them at that meeting. The answer I wish to make is an answer to the statement which Mr. Tucker has made, that I never heard of the thing before, —a suggestion that I invented this question for some malicious reason. I wish to say that I believe it to be the case, and that I asked it in a perfectly bonâ fide manner.

4017. You were not present at the meeting yourself?—I was not present at the meeting myself.

4018. Have you any objection to state the name of the person who told you?—I have not the authority of the person. I do not think he would object to my mentioning his name in writing to the Commissioners. I shall be perfectly prepared to state it in writing.

4019. We can take no confidential communications in any case. You have not the consent of the person?—I have not.

4020. Can you get it?—I have no doubt I can get it.

4021. And you will then send it in to the Secretary?—I will.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

4022. It was only upon the authority of the other person who might consent to your giving us his name that you permitted the question to be put in?—Certainly.

4023. Did you before you sent in the question imagine that it might be challenged?—My understanding of the case was that Mr. Tucker was present at the meeting at which this suggestion that his rent was not necessarily to be lowered was made. I may in explanation tell you that I believe certain of the tenants approached Miss Talbot with the view of obtaining a reduction as opposed to an abatement. Miss Talbot at the time asked them did they mean a re-valuation or in what way did they intend her to understand it. They, I think, then told her that they could only speak for themselves. Afterwards I understood (whether it is so or not I dare say Mr. Tucker will be able to say) a meeting was held of these particular tenants in which they discussed which tenants were proper persons to obtain a reduction, and that they decided that this gentleman was not one.

4024. Was there any report of that. Was it a public meeting?—I think not.

4025. A private meeting?—I do not know how far it was public. I do not suppose that they invited reporters to attend, for instance.

4026. But your question referred to a meeting of the tenants. My question is, was that a public or a private meeting?—I do not know how far it was public or private. I was not present myself.

4027. You were not invited to be present?—No, I was not.

4028. One of the tenants present at the meeting communicated with you?—I am not at liberty to say in what position the person who informed me was.

4029. You do not go so far as to say that the information upon which you based your opinion was received from some person who was present at the meeting?—That I cannot give you any information upon.

4030. Do I understand you submitted that question upon information supplied by a person who was not present at the meeting?—I do not think I can quite give you any indication without the consent of the person.

4031. Why not?—Because I think I might be in some way telling, or at all events allowing it to be clearly understood, who the person was.

4032. My question is perfectly general. Before you submitted that question suggesting that something had taken place at that meeting had you received your information from one who purported to have been present at the meeting or not?—I asked the question bonâ fide, and believed it to be the case. I cannot tell you who the person was without his consent.

4033. Was it gossip or from some person?—It was told me definitely as information, and I understood it was told me bonâ fide.

4034. You say you believed it. Did you take any pains to discover whether the person who communicated that information to you was trustworthy or not?—I believed him to be trustworthy.

4035. Your belief may take place upon very inadequate grounds. Did you do anything to test the credibility of this person?—From what I know of the farm I thought the statement was an extremely probable one.

4036. That shows you were biassed, does it not. If that is the state of mind in which you approached the question, does not that suggest to you that you were biassed. I am talking to you now as a witness coming in good faith. However, how long have you been agent?—About three months; the 2nd February or the 1st February I came down.

4037. Have you had any special training for taking this position?—Yes, I have.

4038. Where?—I was at the Royal Agricultural College, Cirencester, two years. I went through the usual course and I obtained my diploma, besides various certificates of proficiency. I was also articled for two years to a land agent in this country of considerable experience.

Mr. Grove.

4039. Did you gather from your informant that it was a meeting held by farmers distinctly to discuss that question or would you suppose it was just an accidental meeting of three or four farmers together who incidentally mentioned the matter?—My understanding was that it was a distinct meeting of the persons who had formed this deputation possibly with the people who had also so to speak sent the deputation.

Mr. Tucker: My Lord, may I make a statement upon that?

Chairman.

I do not think we need go into this matter any further now.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. DAVID WILLIAMS called and examined.

Chairman.

4040. Are you a tenant farmer?—A farm labourer.

4041. We are very anxious to get some definite evidence about the condition of the labourers. Up to now we have not been able to get it, so that we are very glad to have your evidence, and we hope you will tell us all you know. You are a labourer?—Yes.

4042. Where do you live?—Burry Green in the parish of Llangenydd.

4043. How far is that from here?—About 2 miles.

4044. How long have you been there?—Nine years.

4045. Where did you live before that?—In the parish of Cheriton; about 4 miles from here.

4046. You were born and bred in the district?—Yes.

4047. You have many friends in the district?—Yes, I hope so.

Chairman—continued.

4048. You know the position of the agricultural labourer pretty well?—Yes, I think so.

4049. Do you live in a cottage of your own or a farmhouse?—In a cottage attached to the farm.

4050. In what capacity are you there—a stock man or a cowman?—Well, I am everything.

4051. Everything on the farm?—Yes.

4052. You can milk a cow?—No, it is not a common thing in Gower for a man to milk.

4053. You can plough, thatch, and make hedges—Yes.

4054. Can you drain?—Yes, anything on the farm.

4055. What are your wages per week?—The wages differ.

4056. What do you receive now?—From 9*s.* to 10*s.* is the regular run of the wages at Gower. I have never told any man what I get myself.

4057. You have an objection to say?—Yes, I have an objection.

Chairman—continued.

4058. You would rather not say?—Yes, I would.

4059. You have no objection to tell the general wage?—From 9*s.* to 10*s.* for men on the employers' finding and 15*s.* labourers on their own finding.

4060. What is the general rent of a cottage?—They differ very much. Some run up to 5*l.* and 7*l.* and some down to 2*l.*

4061. What is it generally; 1*s* 6*d.* or 1*s.* a week?—You would not get much of a cottage for 1*s.* a week.

4062. Not with a bit of ground?—No, I know some cottagers that have been paying 6*l.* for them when there would not be a garden to it as big as this room.

4063. What sort of repair would that cottage be in; pretty good repair?—Nothing to boast of; plenty of room for improvement.

4064. What is the general state of the cottages about the district, should you say?—Some are in very good repair and others very bad. I lived in a cottage myself for about two years before I went to the place where I am now that many of our farmers or our employers in the district would not like to put their animals in to lie down in in the winter.

4065. Are you a married man?—Yes, I am married and have five children.

4066. How old are they?—My daughter is living at the present time in a house that I lived in before I went to this. There was one room upstairs and one down and I separated the room into two downstairs myself, at my own expense. I was intending to separate the upstairs, but I left the house at the time and my daughter went there, and it has never been done since.

4067. Had the whole family to sleep in one room?—Yes, the whole family to sleep in one room. I had three children home with me and my wife, and I had two young women out in service, and if they had come home at night to stop, or, as it does happen in families, they might be bad and have to come home, we were all in the same room. We had different beds, but all in the same room.

4068. Different beds?—Well, two or three in a bed. We could not get a bed for every one.

4069. Three in a bed sometimes?—Yes, sometimes.

4070. How large was this room?—It might be 16 feet wide by 32 feet in length.

4071. 32 feet in length?—Yes, something like that. That is as near as I can say.

4072. Just think. Was it as long as this room?—No, it was not.

4073. This room is not over 30 feet long?—I might be making a mistake.

4074. What sort of a room would that be as compared with this room?—It would not be more than 20 feet in length.

4075. How far is that?—Something about from the square there behind and round by this post to the window.

Chairman—continued.

4076. That would be about 12 ft. by 14 ft.?—Well, I think it would be something more than that if you come to measure it—something like 20 ft. [The witness afterwards measured the room and found it to be 12 ft. by 16 ft.]

4077. Was the roof water-tight?—No, it was not water-tight nor wind-tight.

4078. On a wet night the water poured in and came sometimes on the bed?—I have seen the snow lying on the bed when I have got up in the morning.

4079. And very cold in winter?—Yes.

4080. Did the windows shut?—There was neither window nor door fit to be called a window or door, nor is there at the present time.

4081. There are openings into the room?—Yes, some window panes and some pieces of board.

4082. In what condition was the floor?—Very bad.

4083. Was it safe. It would carry people?—Yes, an earthen floor.

4084. Not upstairs?—The floor upstairs was very good considering what the cottage was.

4085. Was it an earthen floor down below?—An earthen floor.

4086. No bricks and no boards?—No.

4087. What sort of fire-place?—A small fire-place.

4088. Any stoves to the fire-place?—No.

4089. An open fire-place?—Yes, I put in the grate myself when I went in.

4090. There was no grate when you went there yourself?—No.

4091. The doors shut badly and let the air in?—Yes.

4092. Was there a garden to the cottage?—Yes, a very good garden in size. I do not know any better or larger one in the neighbourhood.

4093. Was it a quarter of an acre?—It was more than a quarter of an acre.

4094. What rent did you say you paid for it?—2*l.* that was. I do not know such a cheap house in the neighbourhood around if it was in tenantable repair, but it is not.

4095. 2*l.* with the garden—the garden was included?—Yes.

4096. You say your daughter is living there now?—Yes, she is now.

4097. Now, how far is that from here?—About a mile.

4098. Do you think the condition of the agricultural labourer has improved or not in the last 20 years? Are they better off or not?—They are better off at the present day than they were 20 years ago.

4099. What price did you give for a loaf of bread in old days? What is the highest you ever paid?—I remember the wheat 28*s.* to 29*s.* a bushel; we call three bushels a sack and to-day it is 15*s.*

4100. Can you calculate what that is a quarter?—I could not.

Chairman—continued.

4101. What did wheat fetch a quarter in those days?—I do not understand about your quarter.

4102. How do you calculate it in this part of the country?—We should get 10 score weight of wheat for 15*s.* at the present day.

4103. 10 score?—Yes. [Mr. Tucker: It would be 5*s.* a bushel at 67 lbs. weight.] Yes, that would be it.

Lord Kenyon.

All these weights and measures vary.

Chairman.

4104. Is there much demand for agricultural labour in your district?—Yes, there is.

4106. Do you, as a representative of the labouring population, consider it a hardship that the cottages are let to the farmers and not direct to the labourers from the landlord?—I do. For instance, take my own case I have been in the custom for the last 30 or 34 years during which I have had a family myself generally of living in the house under the farmer and of getting so much wages, and my own rent free, but at the present day I have so much wages and I pay for my house. I could have my house if I left my work, but I have been placed in positions when if I would leave my work I would have to leave my house, and perhaps not anywhere to put my foot into.

4107. The house goes with the work?—The house goes with the work. When they are let by the farmer—by the sub-landlord—they do; and I think that our own worthy landlords and our worthy landladies, round about us, should let the poor labouring men, who have to labour from Sunday morning to Saturday night and earn their bread by the sweat of their brow, have a cottage at 1*s.* a week, and have a tidy ground, instead of being thrown out of it if they are thrown out of their job which is the case, I am sorry to say, at the present day.

4108. Is it possible to get a garden allotment at a fair rent in the neighbourhood?—We should have to apply to the owners of the land in the district—to the landlords.

4109. Are they generally willing to grant allotments?—I think that they should build cottages, it would be to their advantage to build cottages because when there are no labourers in the district we see land that they have been cultivating where men have worked upon it and crops have been raised out of it, and for the want of labouring men it has gone to a perfect wilderness at the present day. There is some that I have worked on with the plough and the scythe and now it is a disgrace to the landlord to look at it. It is neither tillage nor herbage.

4110 Is there any great demand for allotment in this neighbourhood?—I hardly understand you about allotment.

4111. That is a small portion of land varying from one-tenth of an acre to half an acre let direct from the landlord to the labouring men?—Yes.

4112. Are there any of those about here?—So much of that is generally with it; what we should call a tidy cottage.

4113. That would be a garden?—Yes.

4114. That is the best of all?—Well it is very good for the labouring man. There are some who have small holdings of two or three acres. Some have it, but so far as I am concerned myself I daresay that there are many labouring men who would like to have such holdings and I would wish myself that there were more labouring men present to-day to give their voices as well as myself. I would not like to be here for myself to represent the whole neighbourhood, and I hope some brother or other in our company will stand up and assist me to represent the labourers of West Glamorganshire.

Chairman.

You have given your evidence very plainly and straightforwardly.

Lord Kenyon.

4115. Who are you working for now?—Mrs. Gordon, Burry Green.

4116. Is she a tenant farmer?—Yes.

4117. Do you hold your cottage direct from her?—I hold it direct from Mrs. Gordon, and a very good landlord I have at present, but I may not always be in the same circumstances as I am now.

4118. I am anxious to hear what you say about that; I think it is a very interesting question. Now as to the cottage you held before you said there was only one bedroom in that?—That is all.

4119. How many have you at present?—I have two.

4120. Is that sufficient?—Yes, for my family, as it is at the present day, because my family has gone from me.

4121. Do you know of any cases of men in a cottage taking in lodgers?—No, I do not think there are any in the village that I am in, taking lodgers.

4122. You say you think that the landlord should build more cottages and let them to the labourers at a rent say of 2*l.* or so?—From 2*l.* to 3*l.*, 1*s.* a week, or something like that.

4123. It costs 150*l.* to build a cottage. The landlord would expect some sort of return for his money?—Yes.

4124. And 2*l.* would hardly be a fair per centage on 150*l.* Do you think that labouring men would be prepared to give a little more rent?—I know of cottages built by contract for 50*l.* with four rooms and a back kitchen. As for rent I think 1*s.* a week for a labouring man is as much as he can afford. Take, for instance, the run of wages of a man who is working on his own finding; he is getting 15*s.* a week. I have had a house full of children myself and raised a heavy family. Some I have buried and the rest I have living, but if a man was getting 15*s.* a week and he had four children and his wife to maintain he would be carrying out 5*s.* for himself through the week, he would have but 2*s.* for his children, and 2*s.* for his wife, and where is his coal to come from, his shoes and stockings, as we all know are wanted round about us. How is a poor man going to divide his money to maintain them, if he is not paid more than that?

4125. You have a garden?—Yes.

4126. Between a quarter and a half an acre?—About a quarter of an acre.

4127. Do you find you are able to sell any of the produce of that garden?—Well, I do sell some trifling things sometimes.

4128. Does that help you with your rent?—It does.

4129. And you are able to feed your family a bit out of the produce of the garden?—Yes.

4130. And that helps you?—Yes, that helps a bit.

4131. You are strongly in favour of a good garden?—Yes, I am.

4132. Do any of the labourers in this part of the world keep a cow?—Some do, but not in general.

4133. Do they find that a help?—Oh, yes, they do, because when there is a cow there is milk and butter and things to maintain the family.

4134. Are there cow clubs? Supposing a lot of labourers joined together and put in so much money so that if they lose their cow they will get so much to replace it, and so insure their cow?—No, there is nothing of that sort. The only club in our village for the labouring men is a benefit society, and I think most labouring men have a benefit society, and I think some have two. As I heard one of the witnesses giving evidence at the beginning of the meeting say how the rates had so considerably raised and it was the road rates that had raised, they do not hear anything of the poor rates, and I think if you come round to West Glamorganshire you will find every labouring man has a benefit society, so that should anything happen to the man he is turning back to live on his own earnings instead of coming on his employers, and that keeps the poor rate down and keeps the unions empty.

4135. Have you far to go to your work?—Not more than five minutes walk.

4136. Supposing you were a single man, would you rather live on your own finding or in the farm house?—A man in his own finding at the present day is far better off than a man in his employer's finding, because everything is so cheap, and the employer has the benefit of that man.

4137. Are there any instances in this country of labourers going in for poultry farming at all?—No, not as a rule.

4138. Do not the labourers' wives have any poultry?—Yes, we keep some.

4139. You make money out of eggs?—Generally. When it comes into the garden season we do away with them or shut them up, or else they will eat us out in two or three days.

4140. You ought to get your landlord to make you a little poultry place. I think he would do that. Do they keep bees in this part of the world?—Yes, they do.

4141. They might pay?—I have not been accustomed to keep them myself, so that what they pay I do not know.

4142. Are there any cottage garden shows about here?—Yes, they commenced two years ago.

4143. Do they give a prize for the best managed cottage garden?—Yes.

4144. And prizes for the best vegetables, and so on?—Yes.

4145. That is good, is it not?—Yes.

4146. It helps you to compete with each other?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

4147. What time do you go to work in the morning?—Six o'clock.

4148. When do you knock off for breakfast?—About a quarter past 7.

4149. How long do you get for that?—We have no particular time, but generally about half-an-hour, I think.

4150. When do you knock off work altogether?—6 o'clock in the evening.

4151. How long are you allowed for dinner?—Men that are working the teams generally have an hour and a half, and other men, as labourers on the farm knocking about, about an hour.

4152. Does that go on all the year round?—Those are the hours throughout the year as a rule. Wherever I was it was so.

4153. In harvest time?—We are not particular about the hours then, neither the employer nor the labourer, because if we work a little later at night perhaps we should be a little later in the morning. We give and take for the harvest work.

4154. Is there extra pay for the harvest work?—Yes, some.

4155. Is there any beer or tea given?—Yes.

4156. You have not any particular complaint to make of extra time at harvest?—So far as the farmer and the labourer are concerned together they have no fault to find at all. The only thing, I think, that can be done for an improvement to the labourer, is to get better accommodation for him, and I hope that if my worthy employers see trade mending to what it is at the present day, that they will think of the labourers, and if they get a start I hope they will give us a start along with them, but I think at present we must be very well satisfied one with another.

4157. You said you are now in a cottage on Mrs. Gordon's farm?—Yes.

4158. The cottage where you lived before your daughter is now?—Yes.

4159. On whose estate is the cottage at which your daughter is?—Miss Talbot's.

4160. I suppose Mrs. Gordon is rated to the poor in respect of your cottage as well as her own house?—I do not pay rates. I pay rent, but no rates.

4161. Do you find it difficult to get proper food at a reasonable price?—No, not at the present time.

4162. Can you buy milk easily?—No, we never do buy milk.

4163. Where do you get your milk from?—Well, milk is not made much use of in the labourer's house, but if we feel inclined for a little milk we send one of our children to our employer to ask for a drop, and we get it if we want it like that.

4164. Do you get butchers' meat every day?—No, not every day.

4165. When do you get butchers' meat?—We generally have butchers' meat on Sunday, and perhaps on the Monday, but not after that through the week, but we have plenty of potatoes and bacon for dinner, and that is what the labourer in Gower has been brought up on.

4166. And butter?—Yes.

4167. And tea?—Yes, tea. I think rather too much tea at the present time. I think if there was something else better than tea, the labourer would feel better, sometimes.

Mr. Griffiths.

4168. Do you think that it is because they cannot get proper cottages that the labourers are inclined to go into the towns?—In many instances—I do not say upon the whole—but many if they had cottages would be in Gower now. I know now of two families living in the same house, and there are three children.

4169. How many rooms have they?—They have only four rooms in the house.

4170. Has your daughter any family in the old house where you lived?—She has three children. As you asked me, the house is the property of Miss Talbot, but my daughter is under a sub-landlord, and I think that Miss Talbot's agent, as he is present to-day, has been looking at the house, and he was going to see the sub-landlord, and if the sub-landlord would not do anything, he would try and do something to it, and I hope he will, as soon as possible.

4171. When you take a cottage from the farmer, what are the terms, weekly or yearly?—It differs. Perhaps you will go to one farmer, if he has a cottage on his farm, and he would allow you that cottage and so much wages. Perhaps you will go to another, and you would have your full wages, and pay so much for your house. Well, if you were paying for your house, you would have to get six months' notice to turn out of the house, but if you were working for the house along with the wages, if I was off to-night, I would be liable to be turned out of my house. I know for instance, that I worked under a farmer about 16 years ago on a farm, and I left him on the Saturday night, and my wife went to him to settle on the Monday, and he asked her how long we were going to stop in the house. There was a new house within a stone's throw, but it was hardly ready to go into it, and we could not go into it for a month, and he stopped 8*s.* for the month. I do not think that is right; as we hear to-day that when families have been in a house for a long time, which I had not been, but I had been going to change the house, it is so much the worse when people get settled down, and the family feel very fond of the old walls round the house keeping them in for shelter; but if a man was working for so much wages and his house rent, if that man was to die, which every man will, perhaps his employer would want another labourer, and his wife and family would have to seek shelter elsewhere; but if the house was held direct from the landlord, so long as the widow could pay the rent she would be sure of the house, and I think that is another reason why he should have it direct from the landlord.

4172. If he has a cottage on the same terms, and he has to go and work elsewhere, he would not have an objection to the farmer holding it?—No.

Mr. Richard Jones.

4173. Are there any labourers in the neighbourhood here who live by piece-work, and who are getting their living by draining or thatching?—There are some few; that is, I know of two or three, I think.

4174. Only two or three?—I do not know of any more here. There might be some, perhaps, a couple of miles off, that I am not so much acquainted with.

4175. Are those more skilled than the labourers who work on farms as a rule?—I do not think so much. As a rule they are knocking about; they do not like to work every day; and when they have piece work they can go and come when they like.

4176. They are not paid so well as the regular labourers employed on the farm?—It is according as they take the job. Some men are better judges thus than others.

4177. Take an instance. Supposing a farmer wanted a labourer on shearing day, could he find one?—No, he could not in the district which I come from.

4178. That proves there is a scarcity of labourers in the district?—Yes, there is a scarcity as a rule.

4179. You say you have about one-fourth of an acre of land attached to your cottage?—Something like that.

4180. Where do you find manure for that garden?—I keep a pig.

Mr. R. Jones—continued.

4181. You get sufficient manure from one pig to manure a quarter of an acre?—Well, I must buy some artificial manure if it is not enough, without I can get my kind master or mistress, whichever I have, to give me some.

4182. Which would you prefer, about quarter of an acre attached to a cottage or sufficient to keep a cow?—If we could have a cow it would be better. I do not think there is any labouring man in Gower who would refuse to have a cow if he could get her, but to get her is the job.

4183. You think he would if he got assistance. Do you think there would be a demand for cottages and land attached to them sufficient to have a cow?—Yes, because I do not think any man would refuse to have something which was a benefit to him.

4184. How far have you to walk from your farm to your cottage?—I can walk it in five minutes.

4185. Are cottages as a rule as convenient as that?—No, I know some that are four miles from the work.

4186. How do they manage when they go for their dinner?—They take it with them, and breakfast too in some places. I have known men to be travelling six miles a day. That would be three in the morning and three home.

4187. And that is owing to a scarcity of cottages?—That is owing to a scarcity of cottages or else they would have to lose wet days or be wet through before they got to their work in the morning.

Mr. Seebohm.

4188. You were speaking about the cottages having gardens round them. Do you not think a labouring man in the country with his cottage and his garden is in a position that is better and pleasanter in many ways than a man living in a crowded street in a town?—He does not handle so much money in the country as he does in a town.

4189. Supposing he has a little less is not there a good deal to make up for it?—I do not know indeed, sir. I have lived myself in the town and country, but it does not matter much where a man lives if he has plenty to live upon.

4190. If you had plenty of cottages and good gardens round them would the best men stay instead of the best men going?—Well, I believe the best men would stay.

4191. That would be a benefit both to the landlord and the tenant farmer as well as to the labourer?—Yes.

4192. There is another point about milk. Is it not very injurious to children not to have plenty of good milk?—Milk is a very nourishing thing to children.

4193 Is it dear?—I do not think as a rule you would be able to get much milk in Gower. Our farms rise a lot of cattle and they give it to them.

4194. Is there anything in the Education Act or in connection with the schools which makes people instead of getting interested in the land want to be clerks or anything of that sort?—Indeed I do not know about that.

Mr. Grove.

4195. You speak about the desirability of having more cottages built. Lord Kenyon has pointed out to you that if you were to pay say 3*l.* rent, and a cottage cost 150*l.*, that would not be sufficient interest to induce the landlord to put the cottage up?—I think there should be a cottage, and a good cottage built for very nearly half the money.

4196. Suppose that the interest on the cottage was not sufficient to induce the landlord to put it up. I suppose you would consider that the extra labour on the land would be permanently improving the land and that the landlord would get some interest as it were back by the permanent improvement on his holding?—Yes, I believe they would, because if the farmer at the present day has not got labourers to work his farm, it will not pay to leave it idle.

4197. You said just now that you thought it would be preferable that the labourer should live on his own finding to his living in the farmer's house?—I think on the whole a man would be better off owing to meat and everything being so cheap at the present time, and the employer has the profit of that man because he is eating the meat of his employer when they are serving it and taking it to market and selling it to other people.

4198. Would he fare better at the farmer's house than in his own?—Very much the same I think. I do not think there would be much difference.

Sir John Llewelyn.

4199. Do many of the young men of the labouring population go away to the collieries and towns?—Well, they have been going, but I do not think they have been going lately, because in the mining district some years ago the wages got to a very high extent, and many of the young men in our neighbourhood went off to get more money than they were getting here, but at the present time colliers are not getting much more than we, taking one time with another.

4200. Did you find that boys in Gower were ready to go away into other districts in better times?—Yes, I think they were.

4201. You said you did not wish to state your wages. I wish to know whether the agricultural labourers' wages are paid in cash or are any paid in kind and in perquisites?—In cash. I do not know of any that are not paid in cash.

4202. With respect to the cottages, they are sadly in want of repair; does not the sanitary inspector condemn them if there are no windows and no doors?—I do not know that the sanitary inspector would go near them or not. I could not say anything one way or the other.

4203. Did you say that the cottage in which you had been living had neither windows nor doors?—The window frames are there, and the windows, and some boards, and some paper. It is a disgrace to use it.

4204. It is inhabited at the present time?—Yes, by my daughter.

4205. Is her husband an agricultural labourer?—Yes.

Chairman.

4206. Do I understand you to say that although the cottages are in a very bad state of repair—— ?—Some of them.

Chairman—continued.

4207. Yet the labourers who have lived in a cottage for some time have an affection for that cottage, and would rather not leave it?—Yes.

4208. That is a very general feeling amongst the labouring population?—Yes.

4209. There is a question handed in by Mr. Nicholl: do not the farmers complain that in the south of Gower, those who live in cottages will not work for them?—I never knew it myself—not in this part. The farmers are here, and I would like them to answer for themselves.

4210. That does not come within your knowledge?—No.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Beynon called and examined.

Chairman.

4211. Are you a tenant farmer?—I am.

4212 Where do you live?—At Burry Green.

4213. Where is that?—About two miles from here lower down.

4214. Whom do you live under?—Under the Earl of Dunraven.

4215. Have you lived on the estate for some considerable time?—Yes, I have been on it for a good while. I have farmed this farm on my own account about 12 years.

4216. How long have you lived in the neighbourhood?—I was born on it.

4217. Was your family connected with it for some time?—Yes, my grandfather came to it. I cannot tell how long ago.

4218. You have been there three generations?—Yes.

4219. You know the district pretty well?—Yes.

4220. What is the size of your farm?—Not quite 100 acres.

4221. What rent do you pay?—55*l.*

4222. Is it a mixed farm?—It is all arable.

4223. I believe you wish to give evidence on "Ownership," No. 2?—Yes; I think it was that, that I was put down for.

4224. Are there many absentee landowners in the district?—I have never seen my landlord myself but once in my life.

4225. He does not come down here much?—I saw him in the United States then.

4226. Has Lord Dunraven got a large estate in this district?—Yes, pretty well.

4227. Three or four thousand acres?—I cannot tell you how much he has in the neighbourhood of Gowerton, which comes into Gower, I suppose.

4228. Do you hold your land under a yearly agreement or a lease?—I have no agreement.

4229. No agreement whatever?—No agreement.

4230. What happened when you came into the holding?—I took the farm at 55*l.* a year.

4231. What are you supposed to do for this farm. Do you keep in tenantable repair the buildings and house?—The Earl of Dunraven put it in repair for me.

Chairman—continued.

4232. It is in fairly good repair?—Very good repair.

4233. Are you supposed to keep it in that repair?—No, I think he will do that for me.

4234. You have no covenant at all that you know of?—Yes, there is a covenant, but I did not sign it.

4235. You have no signed agreement?—I have none.

4236. Then you have full power of cropping?—Yes, I have.

4237. You can crop it as you like, and sell anything you like off the farm?—Yes.

4238. There is no hardship so far as you are concerned?—So far as I am concerned, I am very pleased with my landlord.

4239. You are perfectly satisfied with your landlord?—Yes, and I believe he has an excellent agent, and one in whom I have every confidence I am sure. I may say in doing the repairs I did the haulage.

4240. You did that of your own free will. Had you any objection to do that?—No, I agreed to do that.

Sir John Llewelyn.

4241. Are there any commons in your immediate neighbourhood?—Yes.

4242. Is there any right of pasture attached to the farm to go over the common?—Yes.

4243. Do you exercise that right?—Yes.

4244. Is there any arrangement by which the tenants are restricted as to the number of sheep or cattle that turn out on those commons?—No, they put as many as they like on this common I speak of; they come from everywhere and anywhere.

4245. Is it overstocked?—It is very much overstocked at times.

4246. Have there been complaints?—I believe there have been complaints at times, but it is no use making any.

4247. Do you know what the answer usually advanced is to the complaints?—No, I do not. They complain, but I do not know whether they complain to the lord of the manor or not; I am not sure.

4248. You have not advanced any complaint yourself?—Well, I complained as to having stock coming there, and they damaged my fences very much. The right to the manor is no good to me; I would rather not have it.

4249. Because of the trespass?—Yes.

4250. You have, in virtue of your holding, a right to turn out upon some adjacent common?—I have.

4251. But you do not exercise that because of the over-stocking of that common?—The common is divided into two manors. One part of the common belongs to the Earl of Dunraven and the other to Miss Talbot.

4252. It is not of the Manor of Gower, the ordinary manorial rights belonging to the Duke of Beaufort?—Not that I am aware of. It used to be enclosed formerly. Now it is open.

4253. Do you exercise any right over the unenclosed portions of Gower which run right up to the mountain?—I think they do in some cases. There is a place called Harding's Down, where people who have a right can graze, but others cannot graze there.

4254. You have not had any trouble with regard to your occupation?—No, but I held a small farm a short time ago with which I had trouble. It was in my wife's hands when we married. That was about 12 years ago. It belonged to Messrs. Conway in Monmouthshire, I considered I lost 100*l.* by that farm, owing to the gentlemen having to sell it, and I had to turn out. I was really ordered to turn out in a month, and I considered I lost 100*l.* by it.

4255. Was that a farm in this neighbourhood?—That was a farm near by where I am at present.

4256. It belonged to another owner?—Yes.

4257. Have you any other grievance connected with the tenure?—No. I have no particular grievance.

4258. Do you employ any agricultural labourers?—I do.

4259. Do the labourers live in cottages upon your holding?—No, the labourer that I employ now lives in a cottage belonging to someone else. There is a labourer living in a cottage upon the farm, but he has a few acres of land attached to that cottage.

4260. Have you any power over that cottage?—Yes, I rent it.

4261. Then you have an opportunity of putting your own labourers into that cottage?—Yes, I have. He was in this cottage, and he had five acres of land which were sublet to him before I took it. He asked me to let him remain there, and of course I did; as long as the landlord did not object to it I was very willing for him to have it.

4262. Your holding is arable land?—All arable. I have some other land which I rent from Mrs. Wood, which is grass land, but I cannot speak much about that. I have not had it much more than six months.

Sir J. Llewelyn—continued.

Mr. Grove.

4263. Was it in consequence of the death of Mr. Conway that you had to leave that holding? No, it was in consequence of him becoming bankrupt.

4264. You mean the tinplate manufacturer of Pennewydd near Newport?—Yes.

4265. Why did they ask you to turn out in a month?—The man who bought it came to me and told me he had bought it subject to my turning out within a month. I told him I would see him in Hong Kong before I would do it, and I did not do it.

4266. You said, I think it is usual to have an agreement from the landlord. The tenants got an agreement, but you had not got one?—Yes; there was one produced to me and I did not sign it.

4267. So that you are going on, on the verbal understanding that you have explained?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

4268. You say you have a right to turn out on the common?—I have.

4269. But you do not exercise it?—I do exercise it, but other people exercise it as well as I do.

4270. Is it in consequence overstocked?—Yes, very much overstocked at times.

4271. When you took the place of course this right of yours over the common was taken into consideration in estimating the rent?—Well, I should think so.

4272. Do you consider that this right to turn out on the common has been a paying concern for you?—No, I do not consider it paying at all under the present way of carrying it out, and there is a lot of stock coming—half hungry animals which tear down my fences.

4273. Are you allowed to turn out what you like there, or are you limited according to the size of the farm?—I should like to see the Earl of Dunraven and Miss Talbot really enclose that common and make it better than it is at present.

4274. And allot it to the different tenants?—Well, I should think so.

4275. You think in that case it might be more profitably used?—Yes, there is better land outside the common than I have—some parts of it.

4276. You said your farm was arable?—Yes.

4277. Would it not be suitable for laying down permanent grass?—It is hilly country and it burns up very much in dry times. I did lay down some, but I found it did not pay.

4278. What crops do you rise?—Wheat crops, barley and turnips. I have been a loser on the farm, and I believe if I had all the money that I have laid out there I should be better off to-day than when I took it. It may seem a cheap farm.

4279. It is a dry soil and shallow?—Yes.

4280. And in dry weather it burns up?—Yes.

4281. How are you off for water?—We have a stream of water running within a quarter of a mile or perhaps less of my farm, and some of it joins the river.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

4282. I do not quite understand about the relations of the Earl of Dunraven and Miss Talbot in regard to this common. Is it the unenclosed waste or common of two manors?—It is a common called Ryers Down and is divided into two manors, the manor of Knelstone and the manor of Burry.

4283. Do you know where the waste of the one manor begins and the other ends?—Yes.

4284. Is there a boundary stone?—Yes, there is a boundary.

4285. What kind?—Partly stone and partly stream, and there is a bit of a ditch the other part. The boundary is pretty clearly defined.

4286. Do you attend the courts held of the manor?—I do not attend them. I have been at the court at which Miss Talbot's steward is present.

4287. What is his name?—Mr. Essery.

4288. Who is the steward of Lord Dunraven?—I do not know. I have not been to it. I think it is Mr. Randall.

Lord Kenyon.

4289. Has the Earl of Dunraven any house on this property?—Seat do you mean?

4290. Yes?—He has not.

Chairman.

4291. There are two questions with which I have to trouble you. One is from Mr. Vincent. Have you received abatements of 15 per cent. from 1885 to the present time?—No. We have received an abatement of 10 per cent.

4292. Mr. Vincent says his instructions are that tenants formerly did the haulage, but of late they have not done the haulage. Is that correct to your knowledge?—I did the haulage in my farm. There have been repairs done at Knelstone on that estate—who did the haulage there I do not know.

Professor Rhŷs.

4293. Have you any grievance with regard to the game laws?—None whatever.

4294. There is no game preserving?—None whatever. We have the game.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Powell called and examined.

Chairman.

4295. Where do you live?—Pitton, Rhossily.

4296. Where is that?—Down in the far west. It would be about five miles from here.

4297. What parish?—Rhossily.

4298. Who do you farm under?—Miss Talbot.

4299. How big is your farm?—At present small, about 10 acres.

4300. A small holding?—Yes.

4301. Is there a house on it?—Not on the farm. The house is a cottage built and leased by my father, and the land was attached to it afterwards.

4302. You have a house, and you have a small holding attached to that house. What do you pay for the 10 acres?—10*s.* a year for the cottage. 8 acres I pay 6*l.* 17*s.* 4*d.* for, and I have two acres that I pay 10*s.* for, 5*s.* an acre.

4303. What does the whole of the rent come to, do you know?—Somewhere between 10*l.* and 11*l.*

4304. Have you been long in that occupation?—Yes, all my lifetime.

4305. Were you born in the district?—Yes, I was born in the place, and lived all my time there.

4306. And your family have been connected with the place?—Yes.

4307. Can you make this small holding pay?—I have not had much experience. I had a larger holding, and about two years ago my wife died, and I made up my mind to give up part, and I applied to Miss Talbot. I asked her would she take up part of my farm. The part I held had been made up of additions made to it at different times, and this part I have now was the original part. I asked her would she kindly, owing to my wife's death, take up the part I wished to surrender, and she allowed me to do so, and let me retain the bit I wanted. In reference to making it pay, I do not think I could.

4308. Have you a few cows on it?—One cow, a horse, and half a dozen sheep.

4309. Is there any arable land on it?—Yes.

4310. What do you grow on that?—Potatoes and barley.

4311. Just change and change about?—Yes, change and change about. There are two acres of grass, and an acre and a half of meadow, and three acres of barley and potatoes.

4312. You shut up a portion of the grass for hay, and graze the rest?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

4313. Have you anything to complain of?—No, not in general.

4314. Have you any specific complaint?—I would say this, that the rent of the farm I hold a part of was raised about 40 years ago, and we find it difficult now to make both ends meet, because of the reduction of prices. The man who holds the larger part of the farm complains sadly.

4315. Do you think your own 10 acres is rented too high?—Well, I am paying more rent than my neighbours are, considerably more per acre.

4316. Small holdings seem to be as a rule rather higher than the big ones?—What I have to complain of is that not only is the rent higher, but the rates we suffer sadly from. Owing to paying a higher rental we are rated higher. I feel it would not matter to me if Miss Talbot gave my next door neighbour a farm for nothing, only let me have mine according to the proper value, according to the value of the land.

4317. Have you ever applied for a reduction?—Yes, we applied collectively some time ago.

4319. I should doubt that?—I feel it is much easier to put off the question when we go individually to our landlord than it would be when we went collectively. There we had presented the voice of a considerable number of the tenants, but if we went one and one it would be more easy to kill us. If we went a large number we believe we should stand a better chance of having our application heard, and probably granted.

4320. Another witness gave evidence this morning that if there was a re-valuation of Miss Talbot's estate probably the rents would be raised, so that I should advise you to go individually to Miss Talbot?—Well, I should expect they would be raised. I look at it in this light. If a landlord has an estate, and he goes in for a re-valuation, the probability is he would give some gentleman a two years' job, and remunerate him well for doing it. I cannot conceive but that it might be possible that that gentleman who is paid by his employer, may be influenced in one direction or another, and that he would on the whole, at least, make the rent equal to what it was before, or perhaps a little higher.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

4321. Do you think if a land court were to generally re-value, there would be a raising of rents?—No, I do not think there would be. At the present rate of farming commodities I do not think any man would raise the rents.

4322. When was this collective representation of which you talk, made?—I should say within six months.

4323. Within the last six months?—Yes.

4324. How many of you made the representation?—Perhaps we should be 20.

4325. From this district?—Yes. On Miss Talbot's estate all the farms, or nearly all, that have gone free within these last 40 years I may say, until this last five or six years, have been risen when they went free. They were never risen to a tenant, but when the father or mother died, or the son or son-in-law entered on the farm, as a general rule they were risen.

4326. To whom was this representation made? Was it made personally or in writing?—I think it was made in both ways. There was a petition circulated amongst those whose farms have been risen, and we signed that petition, and there was a deputation that waited on Miss Talbot and presented this petition. I think two of the gentlemen who have given evidence here to-day were presenting that petition.

4327. Do I understand you are trying to make a living out of these 10 acres?—The experiment is too short. I do not conceive I shall, but I could not say. I will try to do the best I can with it.

4328. What was the name of the farm you had before your wife died and Miss Talbot was good enough to allow you to give up part of?—It was composed of different parts: High Fields and Knox's Fields. Altogether it was 121 acres.

4329. How long were you farming that?—10 or 12 years, and my father before me.

4330. What rent did you pay?—58*l.*

4331. What rent did your father pay?—The same.

4332. It was not raised in your case?—No.

4333. Have you any complaint to make with regard to your treatment during the time you were in the larger holding?—No, nothing at all. I was treated very well.

4334. Have you anything to say with regard to game?—I have no complaint to make, but I might make a statement in reference to the game. The game in our neighbourhood is not very much. We have been able to kill the rabbits whichever way we chose. We are not allowed to kill hares, I believe, nor birds, but Mr. Helm, a gentleman who comes down in the season, has the right of shooting over Rhossily parish, and parts of Llangenydd and parts of Llanmadoc and parts of Llanddewy, and he comes round and kills the birds, and he gives the tenants on whose farms he shoots the birds, a shilling for every bird he kills, so that really and truly speaking the tenants on those farms have the game. He kills them, and he gives them a shilling a head.

4335. Does he come round with the consent of the landlady or of the landlord?—I believe so. I believe he has the right from Miss Talbot.

4336. Have you any complaint to make about it?—No.

4337. That arrangement is advantageous to you?—Yes, it is, but I believe it would be better if every farmer were his own gamekeeper, and if the game laws were abolished. In the present circumstances the farmers find it difficult enough to pay their rents, and if the farmers had the game they would be able to let it, and two or three collectively would be able to let it in the season and get some return for it.

4338. Do you not think that the farmers do a bit of preserving here, with a view of getting the shilling?—Well, they do a little, but they would do it under other circumstances perhaps better.

4339. From that I understand you do not find that the mere shooting over the farms is of great consequence?—It is very uncertain. The birds apparently may be here to-day, and tomorrow on another man's holding, and I might lose my shilling.

4340. A shilling is paid to the man on whose land the bird is shot?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

4341. Do you make butter?—Yes, a little.

4342. Where do you dispose of it?—We sell it in our own neighbourhood.

4343. When a farmer has a good deal of butter, where does he take it as a rule?—In very many instances if the butter is of a good quality he can dispose of it in his own neighbourhood. If he can afford to keep it and can take it to Swansea, he can sell it.

4344. There is no railway to Swansea?—No, but there are omnibus services two or three times a week.

4345. Do the farmers keep dog carts?—Some do.

Mr. R. Jones—continued.

4346. Of course they have to pay a license for them?—I think not, not for the produce of the farm.

4347. Supposing they take passengers up?—They could not do that. That does not belong to us.

4348. Is it a grievance that is felt in the neighbourhood here?—I do not complain of it.

4349. Do you know of your neighbours complaining?—No, I have not heard about it, nothing particular at any rate.

Mr. Seebohm.

4350. Is your farm near the sea on Rhossily Bay?—About a mile from the sea.

4351. Is there anything like a fishery anywhere about where you are?—About two miles from there, crabs and mussels.

4352. Is there any reason why this peninsula of Gower which is surrounded by the sea should have no fisheries?—It is too exposed. There are no sheltered bays.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Holland called and examined.

Chairman.

4353. Where do you live?—At Cwmifi in the parish of Llanmadoc, about three miles and a half to the west of this place.

4354. You are well acquainted with the district?—Yes.

4355. You have lived here all your life?—Yes.

4356. And your father before you?—Yes, and my great-grandfather.

4357. You are a tenant farmer?—I am a small freeholder, leaseholder, and a tenant farmer.

4358. Whom do you hold land under besides your own land?—Miss Talbot, and the executors of the late Mrs. Seymour, and Mr. Augustus Holland.

4359. Then you own a considerable piece of land?—Close on 300 acres altogether.

4360. It is close together?—It all joins.

4361. What is it?—A mixed farm: the greater proportion is pasture land.

4362. What sort of price do you pay for the land which you take of other people?—I rent 69 acres of Mr. Seymour, for which I pay 80*l.* a year. There are no buildings on it.

4363. Is it pretty good land?—Yes; it is very wet land; about 60 acres is marsh land. There is a considerable amount of surface water there.

4364. What do you grow on that?—Nothing but grass pasture. It is very shallow, and clayey subsoil.

4365. I believe you wish to tell us a little about co-operation and combination. Is there any such thing as co-operation amongst the tenant farmers or landlords in this district that you know of?—No.

4366. You have only come to give us general information?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

4367. In your district have you many freeholders?—Yes, several small freeholders of about 10 or 12 acres of land, or something like that.

4368. Is there any difficulty in getting those small parcels of land now? If anyone wished to buy 10 or 12 acres of land now, could they get it?—There would be difficulty in getting it. It belongs to small owners, and it is cut up very much.

4369. Does that answer pretty well?—It is very inconvenient, because there is a considerable amount of unnecessary fencing required.

4370. And, perhaps difficulty of getting from one holding to another?—That would not be so much, but the trespass is considerable, owing to the land being mixed up so much.

4371. And cattle straying?—Yes.

4372. What is the kind of fencing that is general?—Quick thorn, banked and quicked. On the marsh land which I hold there are ditches.

4373. Did you purchase the land yourself or inherit it?—I inherited it.

4374. When it was bought was it expensive?—Yes. I do not remember the amount.

4375. Perhaps the interest on the money would be more than the rent would fetch?—The rent is fairly high at the present time, and I think it is one of the highest rated parishes in this district.

4376. Can you give us any idea about the present condition of freeholders as compared with tenant farmers in any way?—No, I cannot.

Sir John Llewelyn.

4377. Do you think the farmers in your district insure their stock or implements?—Not as a general rule.

4378. Is it done in any cases that you know of?—Yes, in special cases, a favourite animal, or something of that sort. I have done so myself.

4379. Do the agricultural labourers of your district avail themselves of benefit societies?—Yes, they do to a man.

4380. Do I understand you were prepared to speak to co-operation and combination, or are you prepared to speak generally?—Yes, generally. I should merely like to bear out the remarks of the other witnesses, that the rent should be fixed on a sliding scale.

4381. You think that a sliding scale would be a fair way of adjusting things?—Yes, it would meet the present state of things.

4382. Do you think that the sliding scale ought to be subjected often to a revision?—Yes, I think so.

4383. Annually?—Oh, dear no, every five or six years.

4384. On what would you have it?—The whole of the agricultural produce; take it generally.

4385. What do you say with regard to what has been spoken of also as being greater security for any outlay that is made by the tenant?—I have never felt any difficulty from that.

4386. The custom of the country prevails?—Yes, I have an agreement.

4387. You are satisfied with the custom of the country?—Yes; we are not allowed to sell produce off the farm unless there is something brought back in the way of artificial manures. Therefore I think it is satisfactory.

4388. With regard to fixity of tenure. Are leases easily obtainable in that part of Gower with which you are acquainted?—I should not care for a lease. Although I have one it is terminable at 7, 14, or 21 years.

4389. Are there many leaseholds besides yourself?—None, in the parish of Llanmadoc.

4390. Not any others?—Not now. It was a parish where most of the tenants were small leasehold tenants on the three-life system.

4391. Experienced people will not take leases in the face of a falling market. That is it, I suppose?—That is so. Most of the old leases have fallen in now, and I do not think there is any wish to have a lease renewed at the present rents.

4392. Were you aware that there was a demand for leases in better times, before times got so bad?—I made an application to the late agent for the estate of Mrs. Seymour, and he was prepared to give me a lease which I am glad to say was not completed. I much prefer to have a yearly tenancy, but not subject to six months' notice.

4393. Have there been any reductions of rent?—Yes, on one or two occasions, a small amount given back.

4394. A permanent reduction?—No, abatement. A petition was presented last year to the agent signed by all the tenants, he had to forward it to the landlord, who lives near Nottingham I think, and I am pleased to say that at the next audit there is an abatement looming in the distance, but what amount I do not know.

4395. Do you hear nothing about the abatement until the rent day?—I have had an intimation that there is to be an abatement.

4396. Was there none at the last audit?—On Miss Talbot's; I hold under her, and I had the same as the others; that was 15 per cent.

4397. Had you notice of that?—No, but I was one of the deputation who waited on Miss Talbot.

4398. Were you then informed that it would be so?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

4399. At whose option is the lease terminable in seven years?—Both parties, I think.

4400. Have you any labourers' cottages on your land?—Yes, on land in the village.

4401. Do you have any to let on your own land?—Yes, I have two.

4402. You let them yourself?—Yes.

4403. To men who work on your own farm?—No, independent persons. It being a village there is plenty of accommodation. In fact there are cottages gone to ruin, the inhabitants having gone away to towns. I do not think, for the benefit of labourers, it would be advisable to build in our parish.

4404. There are plenty to be had in the village?—Yes.

4405. Have they good gardens?—Oh, yes, fair.

Mr. Grove.

4406. Have you any unenclosed land near to you?—Yes. I hold 56 acres of marsh land that the tide goes over, which I rent of Miss Talbot. It is unenclosed.

4407. There is no mountain land near you?—Yes, Llanmadoc Mountain.

4408. Is there a common right of pasturage over that mountain?—Yes.

4409. Do you think it would be better to fence that in and apportion it?—No, it would not pay for the expense.

4410. In the case of an abatement of rent, I presume as a tenant you would like to have notice of the abatement of the rent?—Well, we should know what money to take when we go to the audit.

Mr. Seebohm.

4411. You said there were formerly small holders with leases for three lives. Were they copyholders?—No.

4412. They held little farms?—Yes.

4413. Were they held in one lump, or had they a lot of pieces scattered about?—They were scattered about.

4414. So that one person would hold a lot of little pieces?—Yes.

4415. Was there a common of pasture over the whole when the crop was removed?—It was divided into small fields. There was a fence between. Several owners would have several fields, not together but intermixed with other landlords' property.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

4416. You think they never had been copyholders?—No, I think not.

Mr. Richard Jones.

4417. You say you are prepared to support the statements of the former witness, Captain Batcock?—I do not bind myself to anything with regard to the sliding scale.

4418. In the table which Captain Batcock set out he said horses only fetched 15*l.*?—He must have meant colts I should think. There is evidently a mistake.

4419. It struck me as a ridiculous price?—Yes, I have raised and sold horses at over 40*l.* There are inferior horses about here which probably would not fetch more.

4421. What class of horses do you keep?—Crossed shires, re-crossed, and cobs.

4422. I thought if you only commanded about 15*l.* for your horses there must have been something lacking in your style of farming here?—It would be no doubt an advantage if Miss Talbot had a good pedigree horse in the district, or any other landlord who was of a speculative turn of mind. He would be amply refunded for the outlay.

4423. None of the landlords do so?—Yes. Sir Hussey Vivian did some years ago, but the farmers I think did not like the animal and they did not patronise it, and he and Mr. Penrice, have pedigree bulls which their tenants have the advantage of, and I do not think they complain in that way.

4424. You say you pay 80*l.* for 69 acres of marsh land?—Marsh, and eight acres of arable land.

4425. You pay 80*l.* for that quantity of land?—Yes.

4426. Is this marsh land drained?—It is not drained with pipes, only with open ditches.

4427. I do not understand you very well. There are ditches dug for the sake of fencing?—Sunken fencing.

4428. Is it possible to drain it?—Well, it is impossible to drain it, unless at great expense, because it is below the level of the sea.

4429. What sort of herbage is it?—Fair, the greater portion.

4430. You always graze it; you do not mow it?—It would not pay to plough it, because it is so clayey. We mow twenty-four or five acres.

4431. You heard a former witness say there was no complaint about the carriage tax paid in the neighbourhood?—Yes, I should complain certainly of it.

4432. Would you like to see that tax modified in some way?—Yes.

4433. Do you think farmers should be exempted from paying the tax?—I think they should be, because scarcely a farmer goes to market except on business. He has his market commodities, and therefore it means business.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

4434. You feel it a hardship in a locality like this?—Yes, I do.

4435. As to the sliding scale, you think rents should be fixed according to the price of stock and produce?—Yes.

4436. And that there should be an annual revision of the rent?—No, I think not annual. I think every five or six years.

4437. Do you think it practicable?—I merely make the suggestion. I would not say anything of the practicability of it.

4438. Do you think the farmers in this neighbourhood would take the trouble to keep accounts so correctly as to satisfy the landlord or the agent that he had commanded a certain price for his stock and his produce?—No, I do not suppose they would generally.

4439. In that case your scheme would not be practicable?—Well, we should have the market prices in the papers to refer to. That would be sufficient I should think, the market quotations from the different places.

4440. Do you think the quotations are sufficiently trustworthy?—Not in all cases.

4441. Which should you prefer your rent to be fixed by valuers who are acquainted with the nature of the soil, and also with the general state of the market, say for a period of five years, or to take it by a sliding scale? Which do you think the most workable?—I should think it would be a person acquainted with the soil who would be best likely to know the value of it. I think it is impossible for a person merely walking over a field to know what land he has under his feet.

4442. Say that that condition is fulfilled; which do you think is the most workable?—There may be inconvenience in both. I should not like to say.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

4443. Supposing disputes arise under the sliding scale, what authority would you call in?—Most farmers have an account book I should think.

4444. Supposing the dispute becomes incapable of settlement as between landlord and tenant, or agent and tenant, what should you propose to do then?—Perhaps a land court might be of advantage in that case.

4445. In what manor is the land of which you are a freeholder situate?—Llanmadoc. I hold land in two or three manors, the manor of Burry and of Llanmadoc.

4446. Are courts held in connexion with these manors regularly?—Yes, in the manor of Burry.

4447. Who is the steward?—Miss Talbot's agent at the time being.

4448. Is Miss Talbot the lady of the manor?—Yes, that would be with respect to the property I hold under her.

4449. Who is the lord of the manor of Llanmadoc?—Charles Aubrey.

Lord Kenyon.

4450. Are the grasses of this meadow land of which you have spoken very nutritive?—No, they are not.

4451. I understand they are below the level of the sea. I suppose they are banked out from the sea?—Yes, they are. The tide cannot get over them.

4452. In some cases the grass receives salt from the embankment?—Yes, but the soil is accumulated against the embankment, so that it is higher than the land inside.

4453. It would look better this year than it usually does?—Yes, it does.

4454. Are there any half-bred horses bred in this neighbourhood?—Yes.

4455. Is that successful?—Yes, I think so.

4456. Does any entire horse travel about there?—Yes, we have some very good horses in the district at the present time amongst the tenant farmers.

4457. What price would that average?—It is a matter of speculation.

4458. You do not take them to Swansea Show?—No.

4459. About an entire cart horse, have you had farmers' clubs?—Yes, and shows here.

4460. You have not had the farmers sharing and forming a society to get a horse?—No.

4461. You should hire a horse for a large sum for the season, and divide it amongst you, and I have no doubt the landlords about would help you?—I have no doubt they would help us.

4462. Perhaps there are not many horses about the neighbourhood now?—Yes, I think there are three or four, but I think the general idea is to go in for the cheapest, and not the best.

Mr. Seebohm.

4463. In which manor were the leases for three lives?—The manor of Llanmadoc.

4464. Why did they let their leases run out?—By death, I think.

4465. Were they renewable?—No, I think not.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. FRANCIS BEVAN called and examined.

Chairman.

4466. Where do you live?—Oxwich Castle Farm.

4467. Whereabouts is that?—South from here about three miles, or rather more.

4468. Between the park and the sea?—Yes, on Oxwich point.

4469. What is the acreage of your farm?—About 300 acres.

4470. I believe you farm under Miss Talbot?—Yes.

4471. Have you been long on the estate?—I was born on the farm where I am living now.

4472. And your father before you?—Yes, I have been tenant now under Miss Talbot for the last three years. My father farmed it up to that time.

4473. And you took the farm on?—Yes, I took the farm on.

4474. Was his father there before him?—Yes, and his father before him.

4475. You know the customs of the country and the people of the country, and you are well qualified to speak about Miss Talbot's estate?—Well, I know pretty well about Miss Talbot's rule.

4476. Can you tell us anything about the condition of farmers on the estate. How many acres does the estate consist of in the first place?—Miss Talbot's estate in Gower?

4477. Yes?—I could not tell you definitely.

4478. Is it 10,000 acres?—Rather more I should think. About 14,000 acres I should think the Gower estate is.

4479. What is the general opinion about the rents on the estate, so far as you know?—Well, so far as I know by hearsay some complain; there are a few complaints that they are too dear, and some are satisfied; I believe the principal part are pretty well satisfied when the times are going well, but just at the present I believe every one feels that the rent is too high.

Chairman—continued.

4480. If it is not an impertinent question to ask you, do you think your own rent is high as compared with that of other people's?—At the present time it is quite high enough under the present circumstances of trade.

4482. For about 300 acres?—Yes. About 150 acres of that is cliff and woods, and—well I cannot do anything with it on the Oxwich Point.

4483. Is it any accommodation for the sheep?—Yes, it is in the summer, from June to about November.

4484. That is all the use it is?—Yes, that is all.

4485. Have there been any abatements in the estate or reductions of rent?—Yes, there has been an abatement of 25 per cent. given back to all the farmers about seven years ago, under Mr. Talbot, and now Miss Talbot last year gave us back 15 per cent.

4486. Those are the only two abatements you have had?—Yes; but I believe so far as I can remember, there was an abatement made about the year 1880 or 1882. There was a great loss of sheep at that time, and those that lost the sheep had so much given back. I think there was something of that, but I am not positive on the point.

4487. Can you tell us anything about repairs on the estate?—Yes.

4488. What has been the custom?—The custom of the repairs is for the tenant to do the repairs, and the conditions that my father was under were, that if he would keep a good roof, if the walls went down, Mr. Talbot would do the walls, but if the roof went down the tenant was to do the walls, and he would give the roof.

4489. Was the estate in this condition, that as to some part of it or some portions of it the repairs were done by the landlord, but on other portions of it the repairs were done by the tenants. Did you ever hear anything of that in Mr. Talbot's early days?—No, I think every tenant had to do the repairs. That was the rule. That was at the letting, when the farm was let, but there were many cases where the landlord assisted the tenants in repairing at the same time.

4490. The haulage was done by the tenant?—Yes.

4491. Was there any other service required by the landlord from the tenant besides haulage?—Yes, building the walls. My father built the walls on his out-building a stable and cattle shed, and Mr. Talbot gave all the timber and tiles, and he did the haulage and building the walls.

4492. Would there have been any compensation for that if your father had chosen to go out of the farm?—I cannot say that.

4493. Would it be considered unfair if he had not had compensation?—I should have considered it unfair if he had not, but still I do not think there was ever any agreement made on that point.

4494. Were considerable sums in 1890 and 1892 expended on the estate?—Yes, a great deal. I believe since Miss Talbot has had the estate she has spent a great deal of money on it.

4495. Do you agree with this, that the practice is to make no charge for the renewal of buildings, but when erecting new buildings to charge the tenants 5 per cent. on the outlay?—I do not know about that, but in cases I believe, so far as I can find out, that would be according to circumstances.

4496. There is no invariable rule?—No, there is not a hard and fast rule laid down.

4497. Are you troubled with game on your farm?—Yes, I expect I have as much game as anyone outside the preserves.

4498. Does it play much havoc with the crops?—Yes, sometimes.

4499. What do you think plays most havoc. Are the rabbits most annoying?—Yes, they are, but I have a perfect right to kill rabbits whenever I like, and if I do not keep them down I suppose it is my own fault.

4500. With the assistance of one man according to the Act you can keep them down, and you think you can do it successfully?—We try our best, but they do gain occasionally.

4501. Do you think it is a hardship that these rabbits should be on the place?—I would sooner be without them, certainly.

4502. Do you mind the pheasants much?—They do a little damage certainly, but when I took the farm I was led to understand that I was to preserve the pheasants, and I cannot complain of that.

Chairman—continued.

4503. Do you find the partridges eat the turnips?—Yes, they do eat the turnips.

4504. Can you tell us anything about the number of bankruptcies upon the estate, or have any number of people failed?—I never knew but one farmer bankrupt in Gower; there may be two, but I never knew anything of any beyond one.

Lord Kenyon

4505. Do you think the difference of religion or politics makes any difference between landlord and tenant in this district?—Not the slightest under Miss Talbot.

4506. She treats them all alike?—Yes, all alike.

4507. Is that the case with other landlords in Gower?—I believe so. I never heard of anything.

4508. Do you think that it is the bad times which have caused the general complaints in the way of rents?—I believe so.

4509. That is the chief cause?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

4510. You keep a large farm. Do you employ any labourers?—Yes.

4511. How many?—I generally employ three, I have two now.

4512. What wages do you give them?—I give two youngsters, one 7*s.* per week, and the other 6*s.* 6*d.*, and their food, Sundays and all. They are young men.

4513. You have no labourers living in cottages?—No. I employed a labourer up to within the last week; 15*s.* a week I gave him and his keep.

4514. Have you no cottage?—No, I have not.

4515. Would it be an advantage to the farm to have cottages on the farm?—I think it would be.

Mr. Richard Jones.

4516. What do you think is the cause of the depression?—Foreign competition in a great measure.

4517. Have you been affected by the seasons at all?—Not until this last spring.

4518. How have you been off for fodder this last April, and also a year last April?—I think fodder was very well until this last spring.

4519. There was a good deal of fodder bought this last spring?—Yes.

4520. And not much the spring before?—No, not in our neighbourhood.

4521. What kind of harvest did you get last harvest?—A fairly good one.

4522. Was the summer a cold one in this neighbourhood?—Yes, generally it was cold—not very favourable.

4523. Do you think the seasons, taking them as a rule, have been so good of late years as they were say 20 or 30 years ago?—No, I do not think they have been, to take them as a whole.

4524. Do you think that has affected the productiveness of the soil?—No.

4525. Do you think that you are as able to grow as good crops now as in former seasons?

Mr. R. Jones—continued.

—Yes, I think we can. I do not think that affected the productiveness of the soil.

4526. Do you think it would affect the herbage?—The herbage may not be so good as it was—not to any great extent.

4527. Still you do not think the stock thrive so well on grass land as they did?—Not this last year. Last summer was a very wet summer until the harvest time.

4528. It kept them alive I suppose?—Yes, it did keep them alive.

Mr. Grove.

4529. Do you think the tenant farmers in this district are acquainted with the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No. I do not think so in general.

4530. Or the Ground Game Act?—No, I do not think they know a great deal about that. We do not study that much down here.

4531. Do you think it desirable that the game laws should be abolished?—There is no doubt it would be an advantage to the farmers, but I believe that every farmer should be his own gamekeeper, and there should be an understanding between the tenant and the landlord—that they should agree together whether they like to keep the game or not.

4532. Is there any co-operation amongst farmers for the sale or purchase of their produce in any way?—No, not down in this district.

4533. Do you think it would be desirable?—Well, it was tried, but it did not seem to take in this district.

4534. Do the tenant farmers take advantage of life assurance societies or benefit societies?—They do of benefit societies but not to any large extent of life assurance. However, I believe, so far as I can see, that that is gaining ground in this district just now.

4535. Can you suggest any remedies for the present depression, or to improve things in any way?—I really do not know; that is rather a difficult question to touch upon.

Sir John Llewelyn.

4536. Have you any trouble about water?—Yes, in dry times, for the stock.

4537. Have you made any arrangement about supplying water?—No.

4538. Can you do anything?—No, I do not think I can do anything better. I have plenty on the bottom, but none on the top in the dry time. I have plenty of water by my own door for domestic purposes, but not for the stock. That is a very great boon.

Chairman.

4539. This is a question put by Mr. Vincent. Have you heard the late Mr. Talbot say that freeholders had requested him to buy up their land, and to take them on as tenants?—Yes, I heard him say so at a farmers' meeting some years ago in this room, that the small landowners used to go to him and ask him to buy up their land; that they could do better with it under him as tenants than keep the land themselves.

Mr. Grove.

4540. Did he say whether it was under any exceptional circumstances?—No, those are just the words he used.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Morgan Hopkins called and examined.

Chairman.

4541. Do you live at Swansea?—I do.

4542. Are you secretary of the Swansea and District Butchers' and Cattle Dealers' Association?—Yes, I am.

4543. What do you wish to give evidence about?—I am here to represent the cattle dealers of Swansea who are the principal buyers of stock in this district, and I am here to give their views upon the cause of this agricultural depression from which the farmers are suffering at the present time.

4544. Just state your views shortly?—The principal cause is attributed to the great importation of foreign meat that has taken place within the last 15 years. I dwell more particularly upon the importation of dressed meat, that is to say, the imported foreign carcases of mutton and beef slaughtered in foreign countries and brought here dead.

4545. You mean New Zealand mutton?—No, the River Plate mutton. That trade has practically sprung up during the last 15 years. 15 years ago it was practically nil; there was hardly a carcase brought; to-day it is one of the most important traffics as carried on in Liverpool and London. I also wish to dwell upon the importation of foreign beef slaughtered in St. Louis and Chicago and sent across in a frozen condition. That has increased enormously these last 15 years, and it is the opinion of the whole of our trade dealers and butchers that that has been the cause of the depression in agriculture in this country. I have here before me an authority that is published through the courtesy of the London publishers of the "Cattle Salesman Gazette" of the export of meat during the last four months up until the end of April from the River Plate and New Zealand.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

4546. Do these statistics apply to the whole of Wales or England alone?—They apply only to Liverpool. This is the quantity of mutton imported into Liverpool during the last four months ending April. There were imported into Liverpool from New Zealand from the month of January to April 11,027 carcases of mutton. There were imported from the River Plate into

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

Liverpool in the same period 394,888 carcases of mutton. That makes a total of 405,915. It is our opinion that such a trade showing such an enormous increase is bound to have a very deteriorating effect on agriculture in this country. That is only alluding to Liverpool. I have no figures dealing with that particular question with reference to London.

Lord Kenyon.

4547. Or to Swansea?—We do not import foreign meat into Swansea.

Sir John Llewelyn.

4548. They do to Cardiff?—We have imported a few loads of live cattle into Cardiff, but unfortunately it is not a very profitable trade, because of the steamers not being able to obtain an outward cargo.

Chairman.

4549. After this meat comes in is it sold by your association as New Zealand mutton or sold as English mutton. Is there any intimation given to the public as to this imported mutton being different from English mutton?—It is generally sold by the frozen meat people, such as Eastman and Hammonds and the British and Colonial Supply Association. It is very seldom handled by British meat salesmen. Those are big organisations, and they have a large number of shops all over England and Wales.

4550. Is there any way to tell it by the foot being cut off, for instance?—Anyone in the trade can observe it at a glance, because of its frozen condition. In respect to the River Plate mutton it is very inferior as compared to New Zealand mutton, and you can distinguish it in that respect, but to the casual observer you would notice it by being clammy and moist.

4551. Is there any particular marking upon it—there is no merchandise mark upon it?—There is no mark at all, but there is such a Bill being introduced.

4552. Yes, that is before the House of Lords now, I believe?—Yes. May I dwell upon the importation of beef into Liverpool last week? There were landed into London, Liverpool, Glasgow, and Southampton last week, 19,580. There were imported into the four towns mentioned, 7,267 live cattle, principally from Canada and the United States. The beef entirely comes from the United States; live cattle generally from Canada.

4553. Those are the causes of the agricultural depression to a great extent, so far as your association think?—Yes.

4554. Have you any remedy to suggest?—Yes.

4555. Kindly state what remedy you suggest?—We suggest putting a tariff upon dressed beef and dressed carcases of mutton.

4556. What tariff do you propose to put on?—We are not in a position to state that, but an equitable tariff so as to put the foreign producer on a par with the English farmer.

Chairman—continued.

4557. Have you any other remedy to suggest?—I do not know whether we could suggest any other remedy.

4558, Can you give evidence as regards the condition of land in Gower, the want of railway facilities, and utilisation of common land?—We simply make a general observation as to the condition of farming in Gower, as compared with the eastern part of the county. We do not think they use the latest improvements for developing their soil to the fullest extent. I think it would be well if Gower farmers could have an opportunity of visiting the farm of Mr. Rees Thomas, at Boverton Place, the gentleman who gave evidence before you at Cowbridge, and there they would have an opportunity of judging what may be looked upon as a model of good farming. He is one of our best farmers.

4559. You think he is a pattern farmer in the district?—I believe he is; in fact, I believe Lord Wimborne did make him a present of 100*l.* for his good farming.

4560. Is that all you wish to say?—Yes, upon that. Might I speak as to the railway facilities?

4561. Certainly.—We contend that farmers in this district, especially those at Rhossily, in the southern part of the peninsula, are put to a great disadvantage for want of railway facilities in bringing the produce to the best market, and getting manure and limes, and other things required for the farms from Swansea and the district.

Sir John Llewelyn.

4562. Who is to make the railway?—I would suggest that the landlord interested should give every facility to the present railway company, that is to say, the London and North-Western Railway Company, who have a line touching a point here at Llanmorlais, and we think the landlords interested in the land should give every facility for that purpose.

Lord Kenyon.

4563. Would the railway be made if the landlords gave their land for the purpose?—I believe it would. I think the London and North-Western Railway Company have a sketch in their office at the present time for such a line, with a station at Reynoldstone, and they intend to bring it right round the coast, and bring it on to their Swansea branch at the Mumbles.

Sir John Llewelyn.

4564. You said there were 7,267 live cattle imported last week into these four towns you named?—Yes.

4565. That has just been resumed because, I think, it was stopped sometime ago by the Board of Agriculture, on account of disease in Canada?—No, the Board of Agriculture has prohibited the transportation of the cattle into the interior of the country, but it has not prohibited the importation of live cattle. They are slaughtered at the place at which they are landed, that is to say, they have stopped the transportation of the cattle from the place of embarkation, but I think it is only a temporary embargo.

4566. During the existence of the disease in Canada?—Yes, in Canada.

4567. Did I understand you that this frozen meat is sold principally by Eastmans, Hammonds, and the Frozen Meat Company?—Yes, the British and Colonial Company.

4568. In their shops in various towns about the country?—Yes.

4569. Do you know whether any of this meat is sold in other butchers' shops besides as English meat?—I do not think it is.

4570. You are sure it is not?—I feel sure it is not, and speaking for Swansea I am certain it is not, but I may say I think a great quantity of it is used in public institutions like restaurants and coffee taverns, because of its cheapness, and it is probably palmed off to their customers as English meat because of the cheapness.

Mr. Grove.

4571. If a railway was made in this district do you think the farmers would use it in consequence of the high rates?—I think the present rates would be prohibitive.

4572. Do you know the present rates from Killay to Swansea?—No, I can give the cattle rates from different points.

4573. Do you know whether those cattle rates are strictly in accordance with the law on the subject, that is, the various Acts which have been passed recently?—The cattle rates have been increased since the revision of rates, and we have been agitating with the different companies for a reduction.

Mr. Grove—continued.

4574. Have they been increased beyond the statutory powers which the railway companies can charge?—I am not in a position to say.

Mr. Griffiths.

4575. You are aware that many farmers have been ruined by the importation of live stock into this country?—I am aware that many farmers from Scotland are making fortunes by buying Canadian store cattle and feeding them, that is previous to this law coming into operation. The law has only been in operation the last six weeks.

Lord Kenyon.

4576. The inference is obvious, they had better import them into Gower?—I think that inference would be obvious. I ought to explain that I propose or we suggest putting a tariff upon dressed meat for the simple reason that you can produce 10,000 sheep upon your ranches at the River Plate and you can import them into England, but they give no employment in this country to labour to slaughter and they contribute nothing to the maintenance of the taxation of the Government in this country.

4577. Do you suggest that the tariff would not raise the price of meat in this country?—It would only raise the price to a degree, but I contend that at the increased rate of wages which the British workman obtains now he can well afford to pay for it. I say the British workman does buy and pays a good price for the meat, and it is not the British workman who are the big buyers at the frozen meat shops.

Chairman.

4578. Who are the chief consumers of the frozen meat, hotels?—Yes, those and similar institutions.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Philip Tanner called and examined.

Chairman.

4579. Where do you live?—Llangenneth.

4580. How far off is that?—Four miles.

4581. In which direction?—Westward.

4582. Are you a tenant farmer?—No, a farm labourer.

4583. Have you lived there all your life?—Yes.

4584. And your father before you?—Yes, but not in the same house where I live now.

4585. You know the district and you are well qualified to give an opinion about this part of the country?—Yes.

4586. Are you married?—Yes.

4587. Have you a family?—No.

4588. How long have you lived in the house that you now occupy?—Seven years.

4589. You are working on a farm?—Yes.

4590. Perhaps it might not be agreeable to you to tell us your wages, but I daresay you can tell us the wages in the district?—The wages I get are 9*s.* in the winter and 10*s.* in the summer.

4591. Who do you work under?—Mr. Beynon, of Sluxton.

4592. Do you get anything besides?—No.

4593. Do you get a cottage rent free?—No.

Chairman—continued.

4594. What do you pay for your cottage?—The cottage I live in is free; it is the property of my wife and daughter.

4595. Your wife owns the house?—Yes.

4596. You pay no rent for the cottage?—No.

4597. Is the cottage in fair repair?—Yes, fair repair.

4598. With a good garden?—Yes, about a quarter of an acre.

4599. Do you mean to tell us that that is the average wage of the district, 9*s.* in the winter and 10*s.* in the summer?—Yes, I believe that is about it.

Lord Kenyon.

4600. Not on your own finding?—No.

4601. If you had not a house of your own you would have to pay for the cottage to live in?—Yes.

4602. What is the average rent of a cottage in this neighbourhood?—They run from 2*l.* to 3*l.* and 4*l.*

4603. I do not understand you. Do you live in a house on the farm?—No.

4604. You live in your own house, but you are fed by the farmer for whom you work?—Yes.

4605. You take your meals at the farm where you work?—Yes.

4606. You go home at night?—I go home at night.

4607. You are fed and get 9*s.* a week wages for your work?—Yes.

4608. Then at harvest time what do you get?—An extra 1*s.* a week then.

4609. Is that all the harvest money you get?—Yes.

4610. What hours do you work during harvest time?—From 7 o'clock in the morning to 7 or 8 o'clock in the evenings.

4611. Then there is half an hour for breakfast, I suppose?—Yes, and an hour for dinner.

4612. Any tea time?—No.

4613. Dinner is at 12, I suppose?—12 to 1.

4614. And you work from 1 to 8 o'clock?—Yes, 7 or 8 o'clock.

4615. Without stopping at all?—No, we have our tea about 5 o'clock.

4616. I thought you said you did not have tea. Do they not give you a lump sum for the harvest?—No.

4617. Do they not give you 5*l.* or something of that sort extra for the harvest?—No, not 5*l.* or 5*d.*

4618. You have to get it in for the farmer for 1*s.* a week more?—Yes.

4619. Is it possible to get small pieces of land for small holdings in this neighbourhood?—I cannot say whether it is possible or not. Those who have the most land covet the most.

4620. Are there no small holdings in the village in which you live?—There are a couple there—not many, one or two.

4621. How many people live in the village?—I could not tell you exactly.

4622. 150 or 300, or 70, or what?—About 100 I should think would be the total in the village.

4623. That would be wives and children and everybody?—Yes.

4624. And there are only two small holdings amongst the whole lot?—There may be more, but I could not call them to mind for the moment.

4625. But it is not a usual thing?—No.

4626. Do you think there would be any desire amongst the men to get small pieces of land like many commons in parts of England from one-tenth of an acre to an acre of land according to what a man could cultivate himself at the same rent at which the farmer pays for it?—Yes, I think there would be.

4627. You think that would be desirable?—Yes.

4628. But it is not the custom of the country?—It is not the custom of the country here.

4629. You never heard of it as being the custom of the country?—No.

4630. Have you always been a farm labourer?—Yes, for the last 12 years.

4631. Do you think the conditions of the farm labourer are better now than they were 12 years ago when you began to work?—I do not think there is a great deal of difference in them.

4632. Do you think a man is better off living on his own finding or feeding at the farm?—I believe he is quite as well off feeding at the farm as on his own finding.

4633. It depends a great deal on how the farmer does for you?—Yes.

4634. Have you any complaints to make?—Not particularly. I should like it better if there were more pieces of land to be had, instead of being taken away from persons.

4635. You would like some allotment?—Yes.

4636. What sort of allotment; would you like grass, or would you like some tillage?—I should like both.

4637. You would like a small piece of land attached to your holding, would you?—Yes.

4638. You are prepared to pay rent for a piece of ground for your holding?—Yes, I should like to get a small farm if I could.

4639. Why do you not apply for one?—Well, we had one four years ago but it was taken from us.

4640. How was that. Did you fail to pay the rent?—No, the land was taken up and put to the agent.

Chairman.

See 4716–5064.

4641. Just explain that. How do you mean "put to the agent"?—The agent of the landlord who the land belonged to. The landlord took it up and attached it to the agent's farm.

Lord Kenyon.

4642. How much land had you?—About 20 acres.

4643. You say that the agent wanted it and took it?—Yes.

4644. Who was your landlord?—Thomas Penrice, Esq.

4645. Mr. Penrice's agent took your land?—Yes; Mr. Penrice gave notice for the land and he put it to the agent after he took it from us.

4646. Did you apply for any more land?—No.

4647. Was this taken away from the holding that you are living on now?—Yes; but the house we lived in did not belong to the land—the land and some out-houses.

4648. You had always paid your rent?—Yes, we squared with the rent and it was taken up.

4649. To what cause do you attribute that?—I do not know any other cause than that the agent coveted the land.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

4650. What tenure is this property of your wife's? Is it an ordinary little freehold?—Yes, a cottage and garden.

4651. Was it your father's before you?—No, her husband's.

4652. Her former husband's?—Yes.

4653. What was the name of the former husband?—William Nicholas.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

4654. Had he been there for some time ?—Yes, about 30 years, I think.

4655. At the time you married this lady were these 20 acres attached to the cottage ?—Yes.

4656. How long had they been attached to the cottage ?—I believe he had had them about 20 years.

4657. Was the notice to quit that you received only a six months' notice ?—A twelve months' notice.

4658. Before the notice to quit did they give you any explanation as to why they wanted the land ?—No.

4659. Is there any possibility of getting other land adjoining your cottage ?—I do not know that there is.

4660. Have you tried ?—No.

4661. Is the land adjoining your cottage suitable for farming purposes ?—Yes.

4662. But it belongs to some one else ?—Yes, to different landlords.

4663. As I understand it, you complain that after being in possession by your wife and her preceding husband of these 20 acres annexed as it were to the cottage for so many years it was taken away ?—Yes.

4664. Was any compensation paid ? Had any improvements been done to the land ?—A little about the fencing.

4665. How long did you yourself farm after you married ?—About two years.

4666. Did you make any claim for compensation when you were turned out thus ?—No, I had nothing at all.

4667. Do you complain that no compensation was made ?—I complain that I had no wages for my work.

4668. You made a living out of the 20 acres then ?—Yes.

4669. You were not going as you are now and working for 9*s.* or 10*s.* a week ?—No.

4670. You tried to make a living out of the 20 acres ?—Yes.

4671. Do you complain that no compensation was made for any improvement you did to that land. Was it hard that you should be turned out without compensation. Is that your point ?—Yes.

4672. Or do you say it was simply hard to be turned out at all ?—Hard to be turned out at all, because the man who had the land did not want it.

4673. Do you mean that this was an unnecessary thing for the agent to do to want the 20 acres ?—Yes.

4674. Did he take it to farm himself ?—Yes.

4675. Was the agent's house near ?—The agent lived in Swansea.

4676. What did he want with it ?—He carries on his farm now entirely with his servants.

4677. The agent of Mr. Penrice has a farm, and he wanted to add these 20 acres to his farm ?—Yes.

4678. How many acres besides these 20 acres did he farm ?—Somewhere about 80.

4679. When he took the 20 it made up about 100 ?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

4680. Did you tell him it would be hard for him to take it, and he had better try to get some somewhere else ?—I did not tell him he had better try elsewhere, but I told him it was hard to take the bread out of any one's mouth.

4681. What did he say to that ?—He only laughed.

4682. Had you had any quarrel with him ?—No.

4683. Nothing ?—No, nothing at all.

4684. Did you speak to Mr. Penrice about it ?—Yes.

4685. What did he say ?—He said the land was to be taken up, and he made no answer other than that.

4686. Did he make any complaint of your farm ?—No.

4687. Were you in arrear with your rent ?—No, it was up square. Nicholas was one year in arrears, and when we squared up the rent they gave us notice and turned us to the road.

4688. Nicholas was the husband of your present wife ?—Yes.

4689. He was in arrear ?—Yes, one year's rent.

4690. Do you think that the agent was actuated by ill feeling at your marrying this lady ?—I cannot say.

4691. You were one year in arrear ?—Yes.

4692. Had you paid up the arrears ?—Yes.

4693. When you paid up the arrears you received a notice to quit ?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

4694. Was there any game ?—No.

4695. Rabbits ?—No.

4696. They never made any complaints that you were killing the game ?—No, there was nothing of the kind there.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

4697. You did not tell him what Mr. Penrice said when you saw him, I suppose ?—He said the land was to be taken up.

4698. Was that all he said ?—That is all.

4699. No reason given at all ?—He did not give any more reason than that.

Lord Kenyon.

4700. Did you go up and see him at his house ?—Yes.

4701. That is all he said ?—Yes.

4702. He did not say he was sorry ?—No, he did not.

Chairman.

4703. Were you able to make a comfortable living out of those 20 acres ?—Yes.

4704. And you could support yourself and your wife by having the freehold ?—Yes.

4705. And the 20 acres of land ?—Yes.

4706. So that it was a great loss to you when this land was suddenly taken away ?—Yes, it was, certainly.

4707. You think you would have been in a much better condition now had you gone on with the land than you are at the present time?—Oh, yes, much better.

4708. In a much better condition of life than you are at this moment?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

4709. What was the average rent of cottages in the neighbourhood?—From 2*l.* to 3*l.* or 4*l.*

4710. Would that be about the rent of your house if it was let?—No; our house is rated at 6*l.*

4711. Would the general value be about 2*l.* or 3*l.*?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

4712. How many rooms has your cottage?—Four.

4713. Two rooms above, and two below?—Yes.

4714. And it is rated at 6*l.*?—Yes.

4715. Would that be the average rate of cottages about there?—I could not say as to that. See 4768.

The witness withdrew.

Chairman.

Is Mr. Penrice's agent in the room?

Mr. John Arthur Jenkins: Yes; I am Mr. Penrice's agent.

Mr. JOHN JENKINS called and examined.

Chairman.

4716. You are, I believe, agent to Mr. Penrice?—I am.

4717. How long have you been agent?—Eighteen months. I succeeded my father on his death.

4718. Do you know the last witness?—Yes.

4719. Did this occurrence happen in your father's time or your time?—My father's time.

4720. You are well acquainted with the facts?—I am.

4721. And you are able to speak to what occurred?—Certainly.

4722. You know Mr. Tanner?—Yes.

4723. And you know he lived in a freehold house?—He lived in the house, which is a public-house, and belonged to a man named Nicholas.

4724. Who died?—Yes.

4725. And Mr. Tanner afterwards married the widow?—Mr. Tanner was the farm servant living with Mr. Nicholas; he never was our tenant at all.

4726. Mr. Nicholas was the tenant?—Yes.

4727. Then he died and Mr. Tanner married Mrs. Nicholas and Mrs. Nicholas went on with the holding?—No.

4728. What happened, then?—Mr. Nicholas, I understood, made a will leaving his property to his widow and daughter, equally between them and in such a way that the money had to be invested and therefore they could not carry on the farm and the trustees gave up the farm. I am not certain now whether the trustees gave notice or whether Mr. Penrice gave them notice, but it was distinctly an arrangement between Mr. Penrice and the trustees; he knew very well that they could not carry on the farm as the money had to be invested, and that is why notice to quit was given.

4729. What property was there besides the freehold house?—Stock and crop of the farm.

4730. Was that all the money there was?—That was all.

Chairman—continued.

4731. What was this 20 acres. Was it arable land?—Chiefly arable.

4732. There was a crop on it?—Yes.

4733. Then the money had to be divided between the widow and the daughter?—Yes, or rather the daughter was not of age, and it had to be invested until she became of age.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

4734. Not the other half according to your statement?—There was really to be no division.

Chairman.

4735. All the money Mr. Nicholas left behind him was represented by the crop. Is that so?—I believe so. He owned the public-house as well or had an interest in it.

4736. Then the money had to be invested, or what money there was. The public-house remained the property of the widow. The public-house is not sold?—No.

4737. But the remainder of the property represented by the crop had to be sold and the proceeds of half the property had to be invested for the girl?—The whole proceeds: for this reason, I think, because the will left the property in such a way that the survivor of the two was to receive the whole.

4738. Therefore half the property had to be invested?—I suppose so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

4739. There was no reason to sell the growing crops. The growing crops were attached to the freehold?—Oh, no, not at all.

4740. Then they were not growing?—It was subject to the tenancy from year to year.

Chairman.

4741. All there was to be sold was half the crop?—I say the whole crop.

Chairman—continued.

4742. The trustees, according to your belief, said that they could not go on with these 20 acres because they sold the crop?—Well, there was no money; they could not invest their money in farming operations.

4743. Had the implements and everything to be sold? Do you remember that?—Everything was sold.

4744. Everything was sold on the farm?—Yes.

4745. The whole stock in trade was sold?—Yes.

4746. Then you say that the trustees gave notice to quit?—I would not be certain on that point. Either the trustees gave notice or Mr. Penrice gave them notice. I would not be certain for the moment.

4747. Anyhow notice was given and no notice was taken of the application of Mr. Tanner to be continued as tenant?—He never was tenant.

4748. To be taken on as tenant?—No.

4749. No notice was taken of his application, and that application was refused as he says?—I believe so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

4750. Nicholas when he died was tenant from year to year, was he not?—Yes.

4751. Then his widow became, as personal representative—it does not much matter if it was not dealt with by the will—a tenant from year to year in his place?—He left trustees under his will.

4752. Did he deal with the tenancy from year to year in the will. According to the evidence you have given he died intestate with regard to the tenancy from year to year?—No, he divided his stock and crop equally between his wife and daughter for their lives.

4753. Are you not thinking simply there was a residuary bequest of all his personal estate to his wife and daughter as joint tenants?—No, it was not as joint tenants, I believe, I could not for the moment remember; I have seen the will, but I do not remember it exactly.

4754. What was done about the tenancy from year to year which was an existing interest in the land. Was it dealt with by the will or not. This is why I ask: if he died intestate and Mrs. Nicholas became tenant from year to year, it may be when this man married her he became a kind of tenant by entirety as her husband. This is 12 years ago and before the Married Women's Property Act came into operation therefore?—It is about three or four years ago this happened.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

4755. Then I misunderstood you. I understood he had been 7 years where he is now working for 9*s.* or 10*s.* a week as a farm labourer. I believe one of your relatives was a trustee under the will?—Yes, my uncle.

4756. Were the trustees angry about Mr. Tanner marrying the widow? Did that give them any annoyance?—That I could not say.

4757. Your explanation, so far as it goes, is rather one which supplements the facts as told by Mr. Tanner. How does it diminish the hardship?—The farm had been given up, and we did not feel inclined to let it to a man who had no money to carry it on.

4758. Mrs. Nicholas was in the public-house, I suppose she still retained the license, did she not?—Yes.

4759. And has it now?—Yes, a public-house in the country is a very small thing.

4760. Still it is not as if it was a large holding; it is only 22 acres. What was the value of the crops growing on the 20 acres, do you think? What did it fetch at the sale?—A couple of hundred pounds, perhaps.

4761. Including implements and the whole of everything?—Yes.

4762. Was the furniture in the house sold?—No.

4763. You did not see that Mr. Tanner was in a position to pay and carry on his rent?—Quite so.

4764. And yet his wife had to receive 100*l.*?—I do not know that the estate was worth 200*l.* There were certain debts which had to be paid. The trustees did not think that they had better carry it on, and the best thing they could do was to give it up.

Mr. Griffiths.

4765. Did Mrs. Nicholas pay money up to you?—Out of the proceeds of the sale.

4766. How much money was left after the sale?—That I could not say.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

4767. You are now in possession of it?—Yes, I am.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. PHILIP TANNER recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

See 4715.

4768. Have you anything to say in answer to that?—Yes.

4769. What is it?—Before the sale was made, at the time the trustee and the agent were meddling about the will, they went to the lawyer in Swansea, Mr. Smith, of Cambrian Place, and went through the will. Mr. Jenkins said to Mr. Smith, "There is not the least doubt

Chairman—continued.

"but that the thing must be sold and the "money invested." "Well," said Mr. Smith, the "will is not after that fashion." Then I asked Mr. Smith whether it would not be the same thing for me to take the things off by valuation and pay them the money, and let the farm go on as it was? "Yes," said Mr. Smith, "you can do that and they cannot refuse." Then Mr.

Chairman—continued.

Jenkins turned round to Mr. Smith and said, "That won't do, that is not the thing," and besides that he said to me, "You have not the money to do it." I said, "That is no business "of yours, if I have not the money in my "pocket I can get it if I can have the land." I said, "I can have the money, and I am either "prepared to take the things at a valuation or "give security for half the stock and crop, or "the whole if required." Nothing would do but they must have the land up, and when the day of the sale came there was half a year's rent due, that was all, that was 10*l.*, besides the chief rent, and that run somewhere about 13*l.* or 14*l.*

4770. Then the money was paid?—The money was paid.

Chairman—continued.

4771. Did the trustees give notice to quit, or did you receive notice to quit?—We received notice.

4772. You are positive the trustees did not give notice to quit?—We received notice from the agent. What the trustees did besides I cannot say.

4773. You have no knowledge of what the trustees did?—No; I was prepared to take the land then, and I am prepared to take the land now, if I have a chance.

Sir John Llewelyn.

4774. Was that Mr. Robinson Smith that you spoke of?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Coghlan called and examined.

Chairman.

4775. Are you a tenant farmer?—No. I wish to give evidence rather in respect to cottages, and the difficulties of getting land on which to build cottages, and the land tax charged upon cottages, and the necessity of labourers having small parcels of land on which to keep a cow and winter sheep, and so forth.

4776. What is your profession?—I am a blacksmith, and I live in this village of Reynoldstone.

4777. Have you lived here any considerable time?—26 years.

4778. And your father before you?—Yes. He was here for some years before me.

4779. You are well qualified to speak about the want of small holdings in the district?—Yes.

4780. Now tell us what you have to say?—In the first place, it has been very difficult for many years—almost impossible—to get any plot of land upon which to build a house at any price, and when it was obtained it was obtained at a great disadvantage and at a very exorbitant price, at the rate of 8*l.* an acre sometimes; a 60 years' lease and three lives, or else 99 years, under which everything went. I believe there are greater facilities for obtaining land now for building houses than there have been in times past. Then, again, within my knowledge, there are many labourers, several at least, within a mile of this place, who for many years have had small parcels of land on which to keep a cow and winter a few sheep, and their fathers have had it before them, and they are greatly attached to the land, and I do not think anything would induce those men to leave their place and go to towns, although they have only had 14*s.* a week until the last year or two, and are now receiving 15*s.* a week. They are in a better social position than any of the other labourers in Gower, those who have a few acres near a common. It is important to notice, perhaps, that the common is of very little use to anyone unless they have some land besides.

Chairman—continued.

4781. Is that the big common we came over?—It is the big common, Cefn Bryn. It is a free common, open to everybody, and it is practically useless unless people have some small portion of land besides upon which to keep a cow and winter the sheep. They cannot keep the things on the mountain in the winter. Therefore I am of opinion that it would be of very great importance, or very advantageous to labourers generally, cottagers, if they had a small parcel of ground upon which to keep their stock in the winter. The difficulty has been of obtaining any such parcel of ground. Within my knowledge there has not been a single instance during the last 20 or 25 years in this parish in which any cottager has been able to obtain a small piece of ground of any kind, of this sort, at least. When a field became free or a tenant died, it was invariably attached to someone who had plenty before, and people have failed to get any advantage of the kind; the labourers and cottagers have failed, at any rate. Then again, they suffer considerably from charges upon house property. In Gower the rates are very high. The rates in this parish are on the average about 3*s.* 6*d.* in the £ in the year, with the addition of land tax. There is a very great deal of dissatisfaction connected with the land tax. It is a great grievance so far as cottagers are concerned. In some years past, some 15 or 16 years ago, or previous to that, it was charged simply upon the land, an assessment on land only. Since that period it has been made upon the rateable value of the whole parish, and consequently nearly half the land tax is paid by householders, and in some cases paid by householders who pay house duty as well. The cottagers think it very hard to have such a charge put upon them. For one instance, there is a man in this parish who had six or seven acres of meadow land. A quarter of an acre, or a rood and a half, was taken out of the corner of one of the meadows, upon which a person built four cottages. Those four cottages pay more land tax for that one rood and a half than the six acres and a half pay, and the cottagers feel it a great hardship to be charged land tax in that way, and think it is important that some change should be made in reference to the manner of assessment of the land tax.

4782. You think there is very considerable difficulty in this part of the country in getting small parcels of land for agricultural labourers ?—It is all but impossible.

4783. There is no custom, as there is in some parts of England, where a man can get half an acre of land at the same price that the farmers pay for it ?—No, they can do nothing of the kind here.

4784. Are the men aware that an Allotment Act was passed ?—Yes, I believe they are, but the Allotment Act perhaps would hardly meet the case, inasmuch as an acre of land would not be sufficient to keep a cow, nor even to winter a few sheep.

4785. You would want how much ?—From three to four acres.

4786. Have they discussed that amongst themselves ?—Yes; it has been talked about by the cottagers and labourers generally.

4787. Do they consider it is useless, because there are no compulsory clauses—no clauses making it compulsory for landowners to grant these parcels of land if there is a demand for them ?—They do in one respect; but the area is not large enough—an acre of land is not sufficient. They would hardly try for it, because it would not answer the purpose.

4788. It would come under the Small Holdings Act ?—Yes, I think it would.

4789. And that would be satisfactory if there were compulsory clauses introduced ?—Yes.

4790. They would like to see compulsory clauses introduced into these Acts of Parliament, making it possible for them to get it where there was a difficulty of getting it on the part of the landlord ?—Yes, because, for instance, a person who has a few acres or two or three acres of meadow land, a labourer can continue his labour and not lose his time at all. If it was an acre of land he would have to till it to make anything out of it, and the carriage of goods to market would take away all the profit, and with the loss of time it would not compensate him. But when they have a few acres of meadow land, the labourer after his day's work is over can attend to it, and do what is wanted, and in such cases the labourer and his family spend the time upon the land and make the most of it, and those cottagers who have such parcels of land are the best off of any in the country.

4791. Do you think there is any desire in this part of the country for anything in the nature of a parish or district council, which might have powers of compulsorily obtaining land for small allotments, and then letting the elected body, parish or district council, make its own arrangements ?—It would depend who was on that council. If the farmers were placed on that council they would not allow the labourers a great deal.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

4792. Your idea is that each labourer should be able to impose a compulsory Act of Parliament himself for his own little bit ?—Yes, because if one field is free a farmer applies for it if it is anywhere near his land directly, or even if it is some distance off, and invariably gets it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

4793. You say there have been some small holdings about here to which the people are much attached ?—Yes.

4794. If they fall in they are generally absorbed in the larger farms ?—Yes, whenever they fall in they are mostly absorbed in the larger farms, and I believe that would account in a great measure for the depopulation of the country districts, inasmuch as it is necessary that the labourers themselves should have an interest in the land itself.

4795. Have these small holdings usually a cottage attached to them ?—Almost always.

Lord Kenyon.

4796. At what sum are they rented, as a rule ?—They are not dear, as a rule.

Sir John Llewelyn.

4797. Do you consider they are diminishing in number ?—Yes, they are, during the last 20 or 30 years.

Mr. Seebohm.

4798. You are under a Rural Sanitary Authority here ?—Yes.

4799. Have you applied to that Authority under the Small Holdings Act ?—No, we have not.

4800. Do you not think it would be wise to do so, and to set the machinery in motion under that Act ?—Not unless it was compulsory to give the labourer a larger portion than an acre.

4801. Under the Allotments Act you cannot go higher than an acre, but under the Small Holdings Act you can go up to 10 acres. I believe the County Council in the long run is the body who can decide it, which would not be strictly a local body; it would be a wider body than the parish, therefore you would be much more likely to get justice from such a body ?—A council in the district of Gower would be almost entirely composed of farmers.

4802. The County Council would take a wider view ?—I should think that would be so.

4803. Any one or more county electors may petition the council of their county. They could send in a petition to the County Council and then they would consider whether they should put the Small Holdings Act into force or not, and that Act gives them power to acquire land, and to sell it to you and others on certain agreed terms anything from one up to 50 acres. It appears to me it is exactly what you want. But I must point out this. The Act does not give power to them to take the land compulsorily. It has to be done by arrangement with the landowners. Do you not think if the County Council were to go to the landowners, the landowners would think it reasonable, and very likely they would grant this land, which would be given out to you in certain portions as you require?—But we were not aware of such an Act.

Mr. Seebohm.

4804. The great difficulty in most places in bringing this Act into operation is the difficulty of finding land suitable for the purpose; but here it seems to me, from your showing, we have a distinction, and a distinction to your advantage from almost any other case which has come under my knowledge. Here you have a common, and if you get land near that common, you would have all the advantages that could be got from the Small Holdings Act?—Yes, of course.

4805. In a district, where all the land is arable, it is an extremely difficult thing to make the Small Holdings Act work; but in your district I think you should have less difficulty than anywhere else?—I think it would be the easiest thing in the world.

Professor Rhŷs.

4806. From whom would you expect the opposition, if any—from the landlords or from the farmers?—From the farmers, I think.

Sir John Llewelyn.

It has been before the County Council, and they refused to put the Act into operation.

Chairman.

4807. This is a question put by Mr. Nicholl. Do you not think that the landlords are willing to grant a few acres of land to a workman? Is it not the farmers who object most strongly?—Yes, I believe it is. I should not be surprised at that at all, but at the same time, when there is a field or two free, the farmers, or those who have land, get it when a small holding goes free. The occupier leaves or dies out; it is attached to some large farm, although there may be at the same time several labourers or otherwise looking for it or applying for it. The landlords are in a certain sense to blame after all.

Mr. Richard Jones.

4808. In that case, what becomes of the cottages?—If there is a cottage attached?

4809. Yes?—Sometimes it is taken away, and the cottage is left standing and attached to the farm. If something could be done in reference to the land tax, or if some suggestion could be made, that would be the best.

Sir John Llewelyn.

4810. Is that not a matter for the Assessment Committee?—The Land Tax Commissioners would have to deal with it, I think.

The witness withdrew.

Chairman.

This completes the number of witnesses whose names have been sent in to us. Is there anyone else anxious to give evidence on any specific or particular point? If so we will hear him.

Chairman—continued.

[No one responded.] Gentlemen, we are much obliged to you for the trouble you have taken in coming here and giving us the information which you have.

Adjourned.

FIFTH DAY.

The Guildhall, Swansea, Glamorganshire, Saturday, 27th May 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

LORD KENYON.
SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
MR. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
PROFESSOR RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
MR. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
MR. EDWIN GROVE.
MR. RICHARD JONES.
MR. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

MR. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.

Chairman.

This being the fifth sitting of the Commission in the county of Glamorgan, I am desired by my colleagues to express our thanks for the way in which we have been met in the county, and for the practical and straightforward evidence that has been offered to us. We are especially pleased at the way in which the evidence was prepared yesterday. It was brought before us in a very business-like manner, and the witnesses confined themselves to one particular portion of the heads of inquiry, and that saved us the necessity of repetition, and examining the witnesses on all the heads of inquiry, and, therefore, going over a good deal of ground that need not be traversed, and which would cause us naturally to lose a certain amount of time. We wish to point out our appreciation of the way in which the evidence was prepared and gone through yesterday, and to express our opinion that if it could be managed for us in the future in that way it would be a considerable advantage to the public as well as great convenience to ourselves. To-day, before we begin the proceedings, I wish to say that I have had handed in, a statement to the Chairman of the Royal Commission of Land in Wales and Monmouthshire, signed by Mr. George Thomas, of Ely Farm, and many other tenants on Lord Windsor's estate, testifying to their satisfactory treatment both by Lord Windsor as their landlord and by Mr. Robert Forrest as his agent.

(The letter was then read by the Chairman.)

MR. ROBERT FORREST called and examined.

Chairman.

4811. I believe you are agent to Lord Windsor?—Yes.

4812. How long have you been agent?—Since 1874.

4813. You are well acquainted with agencies?—I have been bred a practical farmer and land agent and valuer.

See 1164–1411, 26,328–26,363.

4814. You know Mr. Thomas Evans, of Penhefyd, Saint Fagans, who occupies 133 acres of land from Lord Windsor, under a verbal agreement?—Yes.

4815. Have you read his evidence as reported in the "South Wales Daily News," of Thursday, May 25th?—I have.

4816. Do you agree with it?—I do not.

4817. Will you point out to the Commission on what points you disagree?—I would like to say first, that I was from home, attending to my ordinary business in Shropshire, when I received a telegram from Mr. Vincent to say that allegations were made against Lord Windsor and myself. I immediately got my clerks together at my office to give me details, which I will read presently. I have not been to St. Fagans for over a week. I had to leave next day for an arbitration which is taking place in London, and I was wired to by Lord Windsor to see him on the subject of this Commission. I was attending the arbitration yesterday, but by the kindness of the arbitrator, Mr. B. F. Williams, Q.C., I obtained leave to come here to-day. I am sorry I could not attend on Thursday, but I assure you I have come at the earliest possible moment. I do not want to take up more of your time than necessary, but as my character has been somewhat impugned, as to my knowledge of things in general, I may say that I am at present the high sheriff of this county; that I have been a justice of the peace since 1879; that I have been chairman of the Cardiff Rural Sanitary Authority and Llandaff Highway Board, for many years. I only retired this year from the chairmanship of the Cardiff

Chairman—continued.

Rural Sanitary Authority and other boards because as justice of the peace I sat there, and I am not now qualified, being the high sheriff. I am a director of the Barry Railway Company, and of the Metropolitan, Birmingham, and South Wales Bank. I am Board of Trade valuer, and I am the district representative of the Board of Agriculture. I am the chief agent for Lord Windsor, and I manage 50,000 acres of land, about half in Wales, and half in England, extending from Flintshire on the north to Glamorganshire, and to Warwickshire and Shropshire.

4818. You do not give all your time to Lord Windsor?—I do not; I advise other estates as well.

4819. You are agent for 50,000 acres of land?—Yes, of course the greater portion being Lord Windsor's.

4820. What is the acreage of Lord Windsor's estates?—18,000 acres in Glamorganshire. I had a letter from the Secretary, I omitted to say, that a copy of the print of the evidence would be sent me; it has not reached me, and therefore that is the reason why I refer to the newspaper.

Chairman.

Is Mr. Thomas Evans in the room?

Mr. F. W. Evans: My Lord, he has written to me to say he cannot possibly attend to-day, and asks me if I would be present to watch the proceedings.

Chairman.

As Mr. Thomas Evans' representative you have no objection to our taking the evidence as it comes from the "South Wales Daily News"?

Mr. F. W. Evans: No.

Chairman.

If there is a dispute we can refer to the shorthand notes.

Witness.

I have had a transcript of evidence supplied by Mr. Vincent, but as it only reached me last night, and as I had to put most of my evidence together in the train, I have not even had time to look at his report. I wish to mention, amongst my other duties, that I have been a member of the county council since its establishment. I was opposed by a gentleman at Llandaff and beat him by a considerable majority at the first election, and I was returned unopposed at the second election. I think that is all I need say of a personal character. Now I hand in a letter from Lord Windsor.

Chairman.

4821. His lordship would like that read?—Yes.

(A letter addressed by Lord Windsor to the Commission was then read, to the effect that he took "the sole and entire responsibility in all "action emanating from his estate office.")

4822. You wish to make a statement?—Yes. With regard to the complaints in question I have made a few short notes, but I am prepared to go further into detail afterwards, if it is wished. In September 1887, I agreed to purchase the lease of Tynewydd Farm from Mr. Evans, as I wished to throw portion of the land into the park. I agreed to give him 300*l.* for the lease, and to let him Penhefyd Farm, without repayment to the estate the amount I had paid to the outgoing tenant, which was 150*l.*; he also had possession of the house in the month of August instead of in the following May as would be customary. He was most anxious to get possession of the house and buildings which adjoin Tynewydd, and also to let him 30a. 0r. 30p. of the Tynewydd land. Penhefyd Farm contains 103a. 1r. 15p., so that the whole acreage so agreed to be let amounted to 133a. 2r. 5p. The rent was to be 180*l.* for the first five years, and was to commence from the 2nd February 1888 (this was at the rate of about 1*l.* 7*s.* per acre). After the expiration of five years the rent was to be increased to 1*l.* 10*s.* per acre. The agreement was made in my office at St. Fagans in the presence of Mr. Roper, who was chief clerk in the St. Fagans office at that time. It was a verbal agreement—verbal agreements are the custom on the Windsor estate, and in this part of Glamorganshire. The letting was on the usual terms, namely, that the tenancy was to be a yearly one, that the tenant was to pay the tithe and land tax, and that the landlord reserved the game and right of shooting. Mr. Evans properly understood the terms. I offered him no inducements whatever to enter into the above terms; he appeared very anxious to become a tenant of Lord Windsor's, and seemed to consider the terms advantageous to himself. Nothing whatever was said as to the construction of "waterfalls" or ponds on any part of the taking. Mr. Evans paid the rent without making any of the claims he subsequently did; up to the 2nd February 1891, he was sometimes in arrear, and always grumbling. It is untrue that eight acres of pasture land agreed to be let to Mr. Evans were subsequently fenced off and thrown into Lord Windsor's park, and Mr. Evans never made any complaint on the subject, or suggested that such a thing had been done until 1892, in fact his present area is a few perches in excess of the total quantity he agreed to take, namely, 133a. 2r. 5p. —and I made the note at the time on a sheet of foolscap. It is untrue that Mr. Evans has been called upon to pay any taxes by me; he pays the land tax, and it is the custom on the estate for the tenants to pay it. It is untrue that any promise was made that the tenancy should be for life; not a word was said about it; the tenancy was to be a yearly one; all the farm tenancies on the estate are the same. My appointment with Lord Windsor, of course, allows me to deal with yearly tenancies. I can sign a yearly agreement, but I could not promise anything beyond a year. Game is preserved on the estate, but the tenants have a liberal supply of game at every shooting, and rabbits when they ask the keeper. In 1889, 7*l.* was paid to Mr. Evans for compensation for damage done by game. Mr. Evans expressed himself as quite satisfied with the amount. I know nothing of 26*l.*, or any sum, said to have been paid by Mr. Evans, to a purchaser of standing crops, in respect of damage done by game. In or about November 1892, Mr. Evans made a claim for compensation for damage alleged to be done to a field of swedes by rabbits; the amount of the claim was afterwards stated to be 39*l.* 18*s.* I got an independent valuer, Mr. Francis Wride, of Llanishen, to value the damage. He valued the damage at 12*l.*, but thought it was caused by sheep which had got over a hedge and into the field from some adjoining land, through a young plantation. I placed the matter in the hands of Mr. E. B. Reece, of Cardiff. After he said he would have nothing to do with me, I placed the matter in the hands of my solicitor, which was the only course I could adopt. He informs me that he wrote to Mr. Evans' adviser (Mr. F. W. Evans) on the 6th March last, stating that I was quite willing to make reasonable compensation for the damage, as the fence, through which the sheep had got into the field, was in hand. The copy correspondence which I produce contains a copy of this letter, as well as of all the other letters that have passed between Mr. Evans or his adviser, on the one hand, and myself and Mr. Reece, on the other. Mr. Reece informs me that he only received an acknowledgment of his letter of the 6th March on the 10th April last, for which please see correspondence, and that he has not seen Mr. Evans or his adviser since. The right of shooting over Mr. Evans' farm is exercised, by Lord Windsor and his friends, only a few times during the season, and practically no damage whatever is done by the keepers, or anyone else, to the crops or fences. It is untrue that any tenant has been turned out of his holding for carrying a gun to kill hares and rabbits. It is untrue that any tenants have had notice to quit for interfering with game. It is untrue that any tenant on the estate has ever been "sold up" by the landlord. It is untrue that Nonconformists are at a disadvantage in applying for and keeping holdings on the estate—a very large proportion of the tenants are Nonconformists. I never asked a tenant for his vote on political grounds in my life, except as standing for the county council, and in my own division I should ask naturally for their votes. I was referring more particularly to parliamentary or other elections. It is untrue that anyone on the estate was ever turned out of any cottage or holding for being a

Witness—continued.

Nonconformist; no such case was ever known, and I know nothing of them. Lord Windsor is conversant with all matters relating to his estate, and has given Mr. Evans' case his personal attention. Mr. Evans was informed that this was so by Mr. Reece, as shown in the copy correspondence. I may say his lordship knows absolutely all that goes on on his property. As to Mr. Evans' strictures on myself, I am quite content to allow the truth of them to be judged by those who know me, especially by the other tenants on the estate. I am here to say I have never had a quarrel with any tenant on any of the properties I have ever managed, except Mr. Evans. I have known and lived in the district since 1868. I have been agent to Lord Windsor since 1874, I have never allowed personal feeling to influence me in any way in dealing with the property. I know nothing whatever of Mr. Evans' views socially or politically. I never discussed politics or social matters with him. I was not aware that he opposed my candidature for the county council. I may say I did hear he was grumbling and thought of standing himself, but it only reached my ears as talk, as many other things do reach my ears. I have had no vindictive feelings against him. I never spoke against his father in any way, nor to the best of my recollection did I ever speak to him. It is untrue that Mr. Evans ever threatened me in my presence or hearing, but I have been informed and believe, and I have lots of evidence of the fact (in fact it is a matter of common knowledge), that when I have not been present he has made use of very violent and abusive language against Lord Windsor and myself, and that he has threatened to shoot me over and over again.

4823. That is a very serious remark. Is there anyone here who will substantiate that?— The policeman at St. Fagans, and there is a gentleman in the room, one of my clerks, a Mr. Kempthorne, who lodged with Mr. Evans. See 26,358

4824. Is there any gentleman in the room who has heard that remark made by Mr. Thomas Evans?—Mr. Brace has, I believe. See 19

[Mr. J. C. Brace: I did.]

Mr. Evans of recent years seems to have completely lost control of himself under certain conditions, and is so quarrelsome and abusive that he has become a very undesirable tenant on any estate, and it is that and his putting me to defiance, and the representations made, that has led Lord Windsor to say that he would not have his agent disobeyed, and he would be ordered off his estate, and he should receive notice. One day last week Mr. Evans met my clerk, Mr. Roberts, on his way to the office, and asked him whether the notice to quit was to hold good, because he had had his evidence prepared, and intended giving evidence before the Commission unless he had satisfaction.

Chairman.

4825. Is Mr. Roberts here?—He is not here, unfortunately, but at St. Fagans. He can appear. I will wire for him, and he will be here before you rise. He showed Mr. Roberts a letter he had received from his adviser, Mr. F. W. Evans, stating that he had prepared his evidence, and asking him to come and read it. Of course the inference is obvious. That is my statement in general. I have prepared a statement going into all the various items in detail, and I can put them before you if you wish. I am prepared to answer any questions. I should like to say what I think. I am sorry if I am out of order in not having everything prepared, but I have not had time. Here is the whole of the correspondence, which I will hand in. I think I have embraced the whole matter in my statement.

4826. Is there any particular portion of that correspondence that is material to your case?—I have brought everything I have got. It is documentary evidence, and it simply bears out my case.

4827. Unless there is anything particular you wish to bring forward, I think it would be hardly necessary to read it all now?—I do not ask it. I want to save you as much trouble as I can. There is one serious allegation made against Lord Windsor which I might refer to, as it is in my mind; and that is that he had raised his rents, within the last year or two, 100 per cent. I think that was the figure given.

4828. This is it: That he knew many of Lord Windsor's tenants have been raised, some of them, 100 per cent. last year?—The answer to that is this. That no farm rents have been raised at all of late years. The statement, I believe, that must refer to is this: A farmer living within a mile of the borough of Cardiff, Mr. Christopher Williams, gave up farming. It is about a 400 acres farm. The racecourse is upon it, and you pass it by Ely Station; I daresay some of the Commissioners know the position. The farm was cut up into five or six lots, and let as accommodation land. I had the greatest difficulty in keeping people out of the office who wanted to take the land. It is let in various plots from 5*l.* to 1*l.* an acre, the average being about 2*l.* an acre for accommodation land in various lots. In no instances are the tenants raised, except a few round the neighbourhood where the farms come in to hand. We never give notice. It is not the practice except in these very exceptional cases. We should not have turned Mr. Williams out. He gave us notice, and then when the farm came into our hands it was cut up and let. And this case is the only increase of late. On the contrary, as you can see from the question of Mr. Vincent, we show a decrease. I am not prepared with any statement upon that, but I wish emphatically to contradict the statement that any rent has been raised upon any sitting tenant; it was only because the farmer was giving up, and it was then put into accommodation land.

4829. During your agency has there been no general raising or individual raising of sitting tenants?—Never of a sitting tenant except that we raised Mr. Geo. Thomas by his own request. We spent 1,000*l.* upon a small holding. He is a valuer and does other business, and he said if you will do it I will give you some increase of rent, and he fixed it himself at 12*l.* There are some little dairy farms close to the town of Cardiff the same, but not when the tenant was sitting, only when a new tenant came into the property.

4830. Mr. Thomas Evans mentioned that one tenant on the estate you manage was turned out for carrying a gun?—Absolutely untrue.

4831. I asked him "Have you any objection "to give his name," and he said, "None at all, "with his consent. I will get his consent for "certain; he will only be proud of it." I will ask Mr. Thomas Evans, have you obtained the name?

Mr. F. W. Evans: No, Mr. Evans was waiting until the Secretary had communicated, as he promised, the requirements of the Commission. There were one or two matters the Commissioners required, and he will communicate with them afterwards. I have only seen Mr. Evans on one occasion since the sitting at Pontypridd.

Chairman.

Have you got those requirements which you state he wanted?

Mr. F. W. Evans: The Secretary promised to communicate to Mr. Thomas Evans those requests which the Commission had made of him.

Chairman.

I made this request. It has nothing to do with the Secretary. I asked him "Have you any "objection to give his name." He said, "None "at all, with his consent. I will get his consent "for certain; he will only be too proud of it." Have you that gentleman's name?

Mr. F. W. Evans: No, I have not. There is also another matter to mention.

Chairman.

I only asked you that question.

Witness.

If you want me to go through these in detail, I will do so, it is simply a denial of the facts, and I shall be glad to answer any question.

Chairman.

4832. I will ask you. Mr. Thomas Evans says many tenants have been sold up on the estate and gone away penniless. How many changes on this estate have there been?—There have been a few changes on this farm Penhefyd. There was a widow lady, Mrs. Phillips, who had to leave. She was not able to carry it on, being short of capital, and she left. Then we had as tenant Llewellyn Lewis. He, unfortunately, got in without capital and without my knowledge. He gave me a reference to a gentleman in Cardiff, a solicitor, who thought he would be able to carry on the farm, but I found that he came there with borrowed money, although I did not find it out until afterwards. I took him, as his father and his brother were old tenants on the estate, and he had come from a district where he had lost all his money. He left. Then Mr. Lewis left Llanmaes after his uncle died. I cannot recollect any others. There was a man died at a little farm at Radyr; he died in the place, I think, and the brother of Mr. Lewis died and the family gave up farming. That was a change, but not on account of financial matters. But in absolutely no case have we ever sold up any tenant.

Lord Kenyon.

4833. Mr. Thomas Evans stated that he had a 20 years' lease, and from his evidence we rather inferred that he gave up that lease to Lord Windsor?—We bought the lease, and paid for it by paying him 300*l.* and giving him an ingoing into the other land at 150*l.* In 1886, I think it was, when this tenant Lewis had to leave, another tenant adjoining died, a man named Williams, of Llwynrheos. This land lies to the back of the village and the castle. The castle is in the village. It was then decided to make a park, and then these two farms were carved by degrees into a park. In 1887 it was a very dry year, and a fine year, and there was a great deal of distress in the district owing to the stoppage of the works at Pentyrch, and I employed large numbers of labourers—iron labourers thrown out of work—and this park was made. The glebe land bulged into part of the park. It was then apparent it would be an advantage to the park to have this glebe land. Mr. Evans and I met, and it was arranged; we bought the glebe, and the remainder of the glebe which was vacant and Penhefyd we put together. That is how the thing came about. We purchased the glebe, of course, from the rector by a rentcharge of 120*l.* a year as the amount of Mr. Evans' rent, and Lord Windsor is the patron, and he with the Bishop had given consent to the lease.

4834. 120*l.* was the full rent in perpetuity?—Yes, and there was the usual legal business.

4835. You mentioned 150*l.* Was that what Mr. Evans would have had to pay to the representatives?—If he had gone in straight. There was a bigger bill than that, but that would be apportioned on the tillage land and that under the custom of the country; and now when Mr. Evans leaves he will receive his custom of the country. All improvements he has made he will be able to recover.

4836. Altogether you gave him an equivalent of 450*l.*?—Yes. He will receive his 1,000*l.*, alleged outlay, or 10,000*l.* if it is due, on his leaving the farm.

4837. Altogether you paid for the surrender of that lease an equivalent of 450*l.*?—Yes.

4839. You say he made some complaints about water. I have in my notes that he said he lost access to the water, and a promise was made for a pond to be constructed, and no pond was constructed and no access to water allowed. That came out of an alteration of a fence he complained of. He produced a map and stated that the fence was to be drawn at a certain place which allowed access to this water. He then complained afterwards that eight acres more were taken away from him which prevented his access to that water?—Nothing of the kind, my Lord. We laid down a lot of the park to grass. It was in plough. Some of the land was very foul; some of the very Penhefyd land taken into the park was very dirty, and we had to properly clean it ourselves, and we made seven little plantations in the park; we had many lines upon the plan; there were sketches as we were going on. That park cost in labour 1,000*l.* to 2,000*l.*, and over 2,000*l.* to fence, and it was a very Godsend to the people for the time being.

4840. You do not think he had any grievance about the water?—He never represented it to me until recently. We never intended the pool to be in his land.

4841. You always intended that to be in the park?—Certainly.

4842. Is that particular part of his farm in want of water?—I do not think so. I may say we made him an excellent little place to cool his milk, which cost us 50*l.* to 100*l.*, to sink it into the cold spring water, that was made before I think.

4843. He stated that the game had largely increased since your appointment as agent in 1874. Is that the case?—There was practically no game in 1874. Lord Windsor was a minor. When he came of age in August 1878, he desired some game on the estate and we kept it, but it is not an exorbitant quantity at all, and it has not increased since the time he took the farm.

4844. Have any tenants on the estate ever applied for compensation for damage done by game?—I do not know; sometimes there has been a little damage by rabbits when they get too numerous. I do not remember any compensation except to Mr. Evans.

4845. Have you ever refused a reasonable claim?—Never, certainly not. We keep a good many foxes. I think we have five or six litters there this year.

4846. Then Mr. Evans stated that you made some verbal statement to him, that a yearly tenancy on Lord Windsor's estate was equivalent to a tenancy for life?—I never said anything of the sort, but I have no doubt a man understands that when he behaves himself. I have never served a notice.

4847. Had he been a tenant for 30 years on the glebe?—I believe his father was. I do not know, though.

4848. You say occasionally in some cases rents have been raised on a new tenancy?—Yes.

4849. Can you say whether these rents have been raised on previous tenants' own improvements?—Certainly not. It is owing to the value of the land in proximity to Cardiff, and the amount of it, I believe, is only 67*l.* on the estate, whereas in other cases there have been 700*l.* odd reductions.

4850. We have heard a great deal in our inquiry very often that the tenants pay their rent with borrowed money. Have you any knowledge of that?—I am afraid Mr. Evans has, in many cases, because he has no capital. I am told so.

4851. Would you think that is generally the case?—It is not generally the case in our estate. I cannot answer for others, not on the properties I am connected with, there may be instances I do not know.

4852. Can you explain to us, at all, what that borrowed money is. Is it money borrowed from bankers or money lenders?—I cannot say. I have no experience. As a banker I know something about what goes on behind the scenes.

4853. I did not know you were a banker?—I know in this way; there is no secret. I am a director of a bank. I know that in the summer the crops are all in the ground, at heavy expenditure often, and if a man has a large crop it amounts to a lot of money, and if he is a little short for his rent he goes and overdraws with the bank naturally against the security of his crops being harvested after a time. That is a very common thing; but that is not what I call borrowing money.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

4854. You have clearly answered from your standpoint the allegations which were made by Mr. Evans as to your conduct, but I want to see how far you and Mr. Evans agree about the facts. Is it the fact that, so far as you are aware, that when in 1880, I think the year was, he agreed in return for the lease —— ?—No, that is not the date. In 1888 he became the tenant.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

4855. I am going back. A lease of Tynewydd was put in, purporting to be granted by the Lord Bishop and rector?—That is so.

4856. Mr. Evans told us, and I think the terms of the lease were in agreement with that that he expressly covenanted to expend 300*l.* upon the buildings on the farm?—I believe he did. I do not remember the amount, but I believe he did covenant to do something.

4857. Then, so far as you are aware, he may have expended, as he says he did, 300*l.* on the buildings in Tynewydd?—I did not know, but I do not question it. There were certainly alterations made to the farm buildings of the glebe land.

4858. He told us, I think, he spent 300*l.*?—I have no notion of the amount, but there were certainly additions, rather alterations. I do not know whether they were alterations exactly, but the buildings were in very poor condition indeed.

4859. We are agreed about this; that you paid 300*l.* to him for the surrender of that lease?—Yes.

4860. Thereupon he became tenant from year to year of Penhefyd Farm?—Yes.

4861. He has now received notice to quit?—Yes.

4862. I am right in saying that the net result is, that he has given up the 20 years' lease on which he expended the 300*l.*, received 300*l.* from you, and has practically lost all his interest for what is to him no value?—I do not understand your question quite.

4863. What was the consideration for this transaction?—The payment of money. I bought his improvements and he gave up his farm. He was paying 2*l.* an acre for that land, and he has a farm at a much cheaper rate, and he did not pay the ingoing. I paid him for the lease, whatever it was, everything included in the lease.

4864. What he suggests, as a result of the interviews, was, that he was to be repaid the 300*l.* he had spent upon Tynewydd buildings?—That is not so. There is no condition as to whether it was buildings or improvements on land, or anything else. It was a lump sum for a lump sum. The whole of his interest in the farm.

4865. Was the surrender endorsed on the lease?—Yes.

4866. Why has he received notice to quit?—Purely because of his character, his abusive character, and his repudiating all engagements; on these grounds entirely. We do not interfere with our tenants; we never interfere with them; we allow them to sell hay and corn, and those things, and bring back manure.

4867. Does it not strike you as rather hard to turn him away from his holding, because of intemperate language?—It is not only intemperate language. He is repudiating his engagements, and repudiating me. He would not pay his rent until I put him into the solicitors' hands. I do not want to use hard names about him.

Mr. Griffiths.

4868. Are the tenants on Lord Windsor's estate under the Glamorganshire custom?—Yes.

4869. I think you said just now that rent was raised when the new coming tenant came in?—Only in a few cases in which it amounts, I think, to 67*l.* But I am not prepared to go into the Windsor estate affairs to-day. Later on I shall be glad to do so. My recollection is that there are only a few cases, where the farms are adjoining Cardiff and have been turned into dairy farms. Cardiff has doubled itself even in my time. It has now a population of 150,000. I do not hesitate to say if a farm was vacant to-morrow we should get double the rent for it.

4870. Are the leases always explained to the tenants?—There are no leases.

4871. The agreements?—There are no agreements. It is the custom of the country. Our tenants all speak English, I may explain. We have three estates, one at St. Fagans, one at Penarth, and one at Merthyr, Aberdare, and Caerphilly. Those who live in the hills are mostly Welshmen, those round St. Fagans and Cardiff speak English. They all understand English perfectly.

Mr. Richard Jones.

4872. Mr. Evans, in his statement, said he could not call to mind one case of reduction on the Windsor estate, is that true?—Certainly not.

4873. You can furnish the Commission with several instances?—Certainly. As I say, I am not prepared to answer general questions. I came here with reference to the specific charges, but later on I shall furnish the Commission with an absolute statement of anything they want, and answer any question, but, as a fact, I believe the amount of the reductions of recent years has been 730*l.* or 735*l.* There has been no reduction this last year or two that I can remember. We have given a per-centage back, 10 per cent., several times.

4874. Did Mr. Evans put in a claim for damage done by rabbits to a crop of swedes?—Yes, the particulars are all in the correspondence.

4875. What is the amount that he claimed?—I would like to speak from my notes. I think it is 39*l.* 18*s.* I sent down a valuer. I declined to have anything to do with a man who repudiated my word. My word is generally accepted in the county of Glamorgan, I am glad to say. I put it in the hands of Mr. Wride, who valued it, it appears, at 12*l.* This was done by the solicitor. He wrote to Mr. F. W. Evans. He said he was quite prepared to let it go to arbitration or settle it when he left the tenancy. On the 10th of April Mr. Reece informs me that he only received an acknowledgment of his letter, that is offering it to be settled by arbitration, and nothing more has been done with it.

4876. According to the report in the "Western Mail," I see he says the agent allowed him 7*l.* for damages amounting to upwards of 50*l.* Was that another case?—That was in some previous years, and I did not settle it myself. It was done by the head clerk in the office at the time, and he expressed himself quite satisfied with the arrangement. The statement is quite exaggerated.

Chairman.

That was 1889?

Mr. Richard Jones.

4877. In what year was this latter case?—The claim was last year, 1892.

4878. Did you make any reflection on the memory of Mr. Evans' late father?—Most emphatically no. I only know the old man by seeing him about the place. I never spoke to him to my recollection, and I have no recollection of saying a word to any one about him.

4879. What could have been the meaning of this reference to personal chastisement?—No more than the other statements in that paper.

Mr. Seebohm.

4880. You stated that the habit on the estate was to let farms by verbal agreement, a year to year tenancy, under the excellent custom of Glamorgan. Might I ask you what is the chief reason why you adopt the principle of verbal agreements. Is it the ignorance of law on the part of these little tenants, or what is the real reason why there is nothing in writing?—I think I might better answer that by a remark that has been made over and over again at our rent audit dinner, and other gatherings, by a late tenant on the estate who is now dead. He was a man very well known in South Wales, the Rev. D. W. Williams, of Fairfield. He farmed about 33 acres and had a house, and he knew all our tenants. He was an exceptionally shrewd man of business. He used to say over and over again: "Next to being my "own landlord I prefer to be Lord Windsor's "tenant." No one will take a lease from us. They are much better off under the custom of the country, where they get all the repairs done for nothing. I tried to get the leases taken up when I came here. I suggested leases, and no one would look at them. We should be glad if they would take them.

4881. I do not refer to leases but agreements?—Yes, agreements.

4882. It seems to me that we may divide this into two transactions; there is the transaction between Lord Windsor and the rector with regard to the enlargement of the park; that is a transaction practically between the two landlords, I do not mean it offensively, over the head of the tenant?—Yes, certainly.

4883. That transaction has to be carried out, and the tenant, as I understand, has to surrender his lease in order to complete the transaction. You paid him 300*l.* for his consideration, and the surrender of the lease was endorsed upon his lease?—We arranged with the tenant before we arranged with the landlord. We should not have done so unless we had arranged with the tenant.

4884. When that was completed and the new arrangement had to be come to as regards the tenant and the new holding, everything was verbal?—Yes.

4885. That being so, in order to get rid of any necessary suggestion of animus, would it not be obvious that a tenant, making the agreement verbally, would, in fact, have only his recollection of the transaction to recall what were really the terms upon which he took the new farm?—The terms are very well known in the neighbourhood. They know how they hold. It has been so long it amounts to a custom, and it is very well known.

4886. When it comes to the little dispute about the eight acres, is it not possible that he, not having a plan himself but simply trusting to his recollection of what he saw on the plan which had many lines upon it, may have even unintentionally on his part taken one line in his mind instead of another?—I do not think so.

4887. You think it was clearly explained to him?—There were no definite lines settled at the time whatever.

4888. I am referring to the line which included, or did not include, the pond?—The line never included the pond.

4889. Is it not possible that amongst the many lines which he saw on the plan he may have gone away with the idea that he was to retain that pond?—I cannot say. I do not think it is possible he could have made a mistake.

4890. Or with regard to the other points?—There were points of fences running from here to there, and these were joined up.

4891. You think there was no reasonable ground for a misunderstanding?—Not in my opinion; and he has more land now, a few perches, than we agreed to give him. It is a good many years ago. I do not recollect, but no doubt I told the clerk to scale it at the time, and he now turns out to have a few perches more than it was agreed to give him.

4892. Still in a point like the access to water, it would be an important thing to him, if he was a wide awake man, to know whether he had that pond or not?—I say emphatically that the pond was never intended, the line is not near the pond, it is a good distance back.

4895. The formation of a park taken out of tenancies is, to say the least of it, a delicate transaction?—I explained that one tenant died and the other left. The ground was vacant.

4896. Here is the case of another farm wanted to complete the boundaries of the park?—It would have improved it, certainly, but I did not press upon him to give it up. I may explain definitely we made all arrangements to do without this land.

4897. I am not insinuating in the least that there was any injustice at all, but I am merely trying to bring out the fact that here is a case on Lord Windsor's estate in which a rather delicate transaction, which might very easily have given rise to a feeling of uncomfortableness on the part of the tenants, was carried out without anything more than a verbal agreement, both as regards the length of the tenancy, which I do not think amounts to very much after your explanation, and also the exact boundaries of the new farm which were to be taken?—Well, it would have been against all precedent on the estate to have done anything else. I have no difficulties with any tenants about these matters, that never arises, and I should have been glad if it had been on paper, very glad indeed.

Mr. Grove.

4898. Mr. Evans stated, I see by my notes, that he had spent 1,000*l.* in the last six years, or thereabouts, in improvement Would that be correct?—I do not think so.

4899. You think not?—I think not.

4900. Then, in taking off this land for the park, did you take any spring. Was there not a spring included in that, and in the place of the spring or well which you took away, you promised that a pool should be constructed, and he should have access to that?—I have not taken away, to the best of my knowledge, any water there was before. There was a pool at the lower end of the land, which I simply intended to pitch. It has not been done, but I have not altered the water, so far as I know. If the spring has been done it is unknown to me, and it has never been represented to me that he wanted water there. If it had it would have been done of course. I intended to do it for the general appearance of the neighbourhood round the park.

4901. Would it have been any benefit to him?—It would have been on the same spot as the hole is now.

4902. Do you consider the water accommodation on his farm of a fair average?—I think so.

4903. You spoke of reductions of rent, 735*l.*?—I speak without data at the present moment.

4904. Do you mean that as permanent reductions or abatement?—Permanent reductions.

4905. Quite distinct from ordinary abatement?—Entirely.

4906. When you make an abatement, do you give any previous notice to the tenant that you intend to make such an abatement?—We generally give it to them as a present without any notice whatever. Our rents are all exceedingly low in the county. It is purely sympathy felt by Lord Windsor for his tenants in bad times.

4907. You said you had to put it into the hands of the solicitors?—Yes, there is the correspondence.

4908. Was that in consequence of the dispute?—No; he then raised his disputes. I had been asking for the rent and could not get it. I do not collect the rents myself. My deputies do it and sign the letters. At any rate, my recollection of it is this, that always of late he had been grumbling when rent day became due, and on one or two occasions the rent has been paid by the auctioneers. I see Gottwaltz and Bowring paid the rent for him. I understand he has a bill of sale on his property at the present time. At any rate Mr. Reece told me he had quite recently, and he used to say he would not pay, and when he met my clerks on the road he would say, "I shall not do this, that, and the other," and when he repudiated me, I simply handed him over to the solicitors, it was on that ground entirely.

4909. So it was part of his general way of dealing with the rent, which meant delay?—Yes. Then this letter came from him on the 15th of July, when the rent ought to have been paid, of course, I cannot give the exact figures of that, but that is the general effect of it.

4910. There was no special dispute at the time?—I never heard of a dispute until this letter in July.

4911. One question about Lord Windsor's letter. It was stated that the tenants were afraid to hold a political meeting, and Lord Windsor answers that by saying that at the time of the general election the use of the schoolroom was granted for Mr. Arthur Williams. I think you will see that there is a great distinction between granting it at the time of a general election and granting it at an ordinary time. My question is this: if the tenant farmers wanted to hold a political meeting at St. Fagans, would the use of the schoolroom be granted to them?—Most certainly; it has never been asked for and it has never been refused, and I should not think of refusing it.

4912. Has it been asked for?—Never.

4913. Possibly it has not been asked for because they know it would be refused?—No, no one thinks that. I may mention this with regard to my Nonconformist friends, they have a chapel, and they have absolute freedom. They asked for a little addition to their land to build a little vestry a short time ago, and I gave it to them at once. I mentioned it to his lordship, and he said certainly, and I do not think they have paid a shilling to this day for it. We have had building on the estate at Penarth, and we give ground to any sect or body whatever.

Professor Rhŷs.

4914. I wish to bring you back to the water: the pond spoken of is called Pwll Arthur?—Yes.

4915. Is that not inside the land enclosed with the park?—Yes.

4916. Would that be accessible to the tenant?—No, and never was intended to be.

4917. As a matter of fact did he ever make use of it?—He used it when he had the whole of the glebe land. It was in the centre of the glebe land.

4918. Now it is not accessible to him?—No.

4919. What he represented to us, I think, was that another pool was to be dug for him in a corner of the land that you were going to give him instead?—There is water there, I understand. I do not know whether it is there all the year round, and that is the little pool I refer to. To make it more tidy I intended to pitch it. The estate men do not carry out your orders sometimes, and it has never been done, but it would have been in the same place as the pool is now.

4920. It would have been the overflow of the other pool?—No, I believe it is a spring, not the overflow of the other one.

4921. It is a distinct pool from the other one?—Yes, I intended to make it a little pitched pond. It does not interfere with the existing water that I know of. If it had been represented to me that it was necessary it would have been done. Of course I have sub-agents on the estate to carry out the work.

4922. With regard to your tenants, you mentioned three estates. Are the hill tenants under the custom of Glamorgan?—Yes.

4923. About how many tenant farmers have you on the St. Fagans estate?—About 25.

4924. Do you know whether you have many Nonconformists amongst those tenants?—I believe so.

4925. Can you give any idea what proportion?—I should think the majority. I am churchwarden. I do not see them come to church. I cannot give a better answer. I do not know where they go.

Sir John Llewelyn.

4926. One question with regard to this pond, because it was one of the great complaints by Mr. Thomas Evans; it seemed to rankle in his mind a great deal about the line the fence took. He produced a plan of his own, which was apparently not a tracing from the parish map, which showed that according to his contention it did not follow the line originally agreed upon?—I deny that.

4927. That line, under any circumstances, did take in the pond?—It was always intended to.

4928. What was the date of that arrangement. When did you put up the fence. In what year?—It was done continuously with the drawing of the fences in the park.

4929. About 1888?—About 1888, I should think, or 1887.

4930. Was any protest then raised as to this line?—I never heard any.

4931. When did you hear the protest?—When he put in this statement.

4932. Is that the first you heard of it?—I believe so. I may have heard it from some of the clerks.

4933. The protest was not made at the time of putting up the fence?—It was never made to me at any rate.

4934. Going on with the question of the valuation, he told us that the valuation for mischief done by game was done by the professional valuers; for two acres wholly destroyed they put down 18*l.* 18*s.*, and for six acres partially destroyed 21*l.* That is what he stated. I understand in the paper you put in you say you had a professional valuation also made?—I believe this claim was sent to Lord Windsor. I do not think it was sent to me. I have a great deal to do. I do not pledge myself to remember.

4935. You told us there had been such a thing?—Yes, I was saying I do not know whether it was sent to me or to Lord Windsor.

4936. That corresponds with the evidence I have on my notes?—It was sent to Mr. Reece who had been negotiating the matter, as he repudiated me entirely.

4937. Upon your valuation some compensation was made?—Oh, no, it is not settled.

4938. He told us he had received some compensation?—That was in former years, 7*l.* There was no valuation. Mr. Roper and he met and settled the matter themselves.

4939. He said that was 1889?—I daresay it may have been then.

4940. That is not in reference to this claim?—No, we offered to settle the latter claim right away if he wished to.

4941. Did I follow your story correctly, that the professional valuer you employed reported that some of this mischief which had been done had been done by sheep?—It was so, and the keeper told me so. There were some mountain sheep adjoining, and they got over the fence and nibbled it. I do not think there was practically any damage from rabbits, because there was a wire fence round. The sheep did get in. The keeper said, that the sheep got in. I said, "Why did not you turn them out. Why did "you allow them to remain in all night?"

4942. Now another statement. He gave an instance of a Nonconformist tenant having been turned out of his house last week?—I cannot make out what he is referring to. I have not been there for more than a week myself.

4943. He said that that man had been there for 50 years?—Will anyone give me the name?

4944. No name has been supplied to you, and you do not know the instance to which he refers?—No, I cannot recall it. No man has ever been turned out because of his political opinions. I would not do such a thing. I do not think Lord Windsor would thank me for it, and I do not think I should be long at St. Fagans if I did.

Chairman.

4945. There is one question going a little bit further than Sir John's questions about the 39*l.* 18*s.* claim, for damage done by rabbits, sent in on the 18th of January 1893. The valuation was by Mr. John Lewis, of Brigam Farm, near Cowbridge, licensed valuer, and Mr. E. D. Lewis, of St. Mary Hill Court, farmer. The witness went on to say, "This was sent in to Lord "Windsor, and 3½ months have elapsed since "Lord Windsor was furnished with particulars, "and not one penny of compensation has been "paid to me." I think you have told us that that was not sent in to you, but was sent into his lordship direct?—Yes.

4946. Would that come in under the Glamorganshire custom. Would that be settled when you settled up. Does game come in?—

Chairman—continued.

No. It ought to have been settled up, and we offered to settle it, but there was no reply from the other side. I referred to that in my statement.

4947. Let us know what happened after the claim was sent in to his lordship?—It was in or about November 1892.

4948. No?—It might not have come until then.

4949. January 18th, 1893, was the date of the valuation?—Yes, but the claim was made before, I believe. There was a letter in the correspondence showing that a claim had been made.

4950. But I believe the actual figures were sent in?—Yes, but there was a claim made before, and I think the letter from Mr. F. W. Evans says. "If you wish a valuer's opinion upon it, I will have it done."

4951. Then the valuer's claim was sent in on January 18th, 1893, and it is now May 25th, 1893, and then he says: "although 3½ months "have elapsed since Lord Windsor was furnished "with particulars, not one penny of compensa- "tion has been paid to me"?—Here is a letter of December 23rd, 1892, from Mr. Fred W. Evans to Mr. E. Bernard Reece: "I have called upon "you, by Mr. Evans' request, to know if any "decision was come to as to the valuation of "damage done his crops by ground game. He "met Mr. Wride on the farm about five weeks "since. I was commissioned to say that if you "desire Mr. Evans to make a specific claim he "would call in Mr. Lewis, of Brigam, and Mr. "Lewis, of St. Mary Hill Court, tenants respec- "tively of Lords Wimborne and Dunraven. I "think Mr. Evans would gratefully accept any "reasonable sum, though, having seen the "damage, I think it considerable. I believe it "is Mr. Forrest's desire that this matter should "be settled through you, otherwise I would "advise Mr. Evans to see Mr. Forrest about it "in the usual course." Mr. Fred W. Evans had some interviews with Mr. Reece. There is another letter, dated the 8th February 1893, from Mr. Fred W. Evans to Mr. E. B. Reece: "Not having heard further from you in respect "to compensation for damage done his field of "swedes by trespass of rabbits preserved by "Lord Windsor, Mr. Evans requests me to "enclose you his claim for 39*l.* 18*s.* in respect "thereto. He wishes me to tell you that this is "only the damage done on one field, and one "year's crop; further, that the sum does not "represent his full loss, inasmuch as the valuers "restrict their calculation to 10*l.* the full acre," I do not know what that means, "whilst on "another field, unmolested by the vermin, the "yield has exceeded 26 tons an acre, and "realised 20*l.*, nearly." If I read this correspondence it will explain the matter. The next letter is February the 8th, from Mr. Thomas Evans, "per F. E.," to Lord Windsor:

"My Lord, I respectfully claim the sum of "39*l.* 18*s.* compensation for damage done, by "your preserved rabbits, on the Garn field, "comprising 8a. 3r. 23p., set with swedes. A "valuation made by Mr. John Lewis, Brigam "Farm, Cowbridge (licensed valuer), and Mr. "E. D. Lewis, St. Mary Hill's Court, both "men of high repute, on January 18th last, "based upon a maximum value of 10*l.* per acre, "fixes the loss I have sustained at the amount "claimed." Then there is another letter from Mr. Bernard Reece to Mr. F. W. Evans, of the 9th February 1893: "I am in receipt of your "letter of yesterday's date, enclosing a claim for "39*l.* 18*s.* against Lord Windsor for alleged "damage to crops by game, which shall receive "my attention." Then on February the 10th, R. Forrest to F. W. Evans: "In reply to yours "of the 8th, I really have nothing to add to my "former letter." Then E. Bernard Reece to F. W. Evans, 6th March 1893, "re Thomas "Evans, Penhefyd. With respect to Mr. Evans' "claim for 39*l.* 18*s.* for damage done to his field "of swedes, will you be kind enough to let me "know if the swedes are still in the field, for "if so, I would suggest that Mr. Evans' valuer "and Mr. Wride should meet and go over the "field together. Mr. Wride inspected the field "on the 24th of November last, and Mr. "Evans' valuer inspected on the 18th January. "Probably the further damage may have been "caused between these two dates, and that the "damage was done by sheep which got into the "field over the hedge from some adjoining land, "and Mr. Forrest is quite willing to make "reasonable compensation for it, as the hedge "in question was in hand. Please let me hear "from you." Then the 10th April 1893, F. W. Evans to E. Bernard Reece: "Your letter "in re Thomas Evans, Penhefyd's claim, reached "here after I had left home on what proved to "be an unexpectedly prolonged journey. Doubt- "less, however, Mr. Evans has seen you ere this."

4952. This claim is still under arbitration at the present time?—It is still unsettled. We offered to settle it, and they did not accept the offer.

4953. And that does not come under the Glamorganshire custom. Does game come under the custom?—I have never had any difficulty with game before, and I really cannot say.

4954. You could not give an answer to that?—I could not give an answer; at any rate, it is better than the custom. We are perfectly willing to refer anything of that matter to any arbitrator.

Mr. Grove.

4955. Is there still another claim for damage by game pending beyond the one you are alluding to?—I know nothing of it. There is a suggestion in one of these letters, but I do not know anything of it.

Mr. Grove—continued.

4956. My note is this: "and a further claim of 85*l.* is still pending"?—I never heard anything of it.

The witness withdrew.

Chairman.

As there is a gentleman in the room representing Mr. Thomas Evans, is there any question that he wishes to put?

Mr. F. W. Evans: I would rather that Mr. Thomas Evans should himself see the evidence given by Mr. Forrest, and tender any reply he desires to your lordship.

Chairman.

You have no questions that you wish to put in?

Mr. F. W. Evans: None I am authorised to put.

Chairman.

And no names that you have been furnished with by Mr. Thomas Evans giving the particulars of those incidents he mentioned?

Mr. F. W. Evans: I have written to him, but he has not supplied them to me yet. They will come in due course.

Chairman.

There are no instances that you wish to put to Mr. Forrest in writing?

Mr. F. W. Evans: No.

Mr. John Cadogan Brace called and examined.

Chairman.

4957. What is your occupation?—I am clerk to Mr. Forrest on the Windsor estate.

4958. How long have you been in the estate office?—About five years.

4959. You heard what Mr. Forrest said that he had been told that Mr. Evans had openly said that he intended to shoot him, or words to that effect?—Yes, I did.

4960. Are you able to corroborate that statement?—Yes, I have heard Mr. Evans say so.

4961. When?—During the time he was in, perhaps, a semi-intoxicated condition; never otherwise.

4962. Where? — Between Cardiff and St. Fagans in a railway carriage, between the St. Fagans Station and the "Plymouth Arms" at St. Fagans, that is on the way into the village, and in the "Plymouth Arms" itself.

4963. On three distinct occasions you have heard Mr. Evans make this statement?—I believe more, but I could not tell you the dates.

4964. Have you any approximate dates. When was it. Was it three years ago or two years ago?—I do not think he has made the remark, not in my hearing, further back than the last six or eight months.

4965. Within the last two months?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

4966. Were there any special disputes on at that time?—I think not.

4967. That was before he had notice to leave?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

4968. What gave rise to this conversation?—I do not know. I believe it is an habitual thing when Mr. Evans gets into the state I describe that he uses abusive language with regard to Lord Windsor, Mr. Forrest, and the rector. He says Mr. Forrest has robbed the estate of a very large sum of money.

4969. Has he said it in your hearing?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

4970. Did you, on hearing this threat, go and lay any information before any justice?—No, I did not, because I did not think it was worth while with a man in that condition.

4971. You did not think it was serious?—Not the seriousness of it, but I thought that it was a vindictive way of speaking when a man was annoyed.

4972. Did you think Mr. Forrest was in any danger?—Well, it is very hard to say, I think, whether a man who makes those sort of threats would carry them out.

4973. You did not think it worth while to go and protect Mr. Forrest?—No, I did not.

Lord Kenyon.

4974. You informed Mr. Forrest recently; you did not inform him at the time?—No, I did not think it worth while.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Edward Knox called and examined.

Chairman.

4975. I believe you are the chief agent on the Margam estate?—I am.

4976. How long have you been there?—Three years next Wednesday.

4977. Have you had practical experience in agencies?—I was articled to a very large land agent in England for 3¼ years, and then I was given a sub-agency on Lord Wimborne's property in Glamorganshire and Breconshire. Then I had the offer of an agency in Yorkshire, where I was six years and a little over, and I have been three years down here. That is my experience.

4978. Who were you under in England?—I was agent for Mr. Wyndham.

4979. Where were you articled?—I was articled to Mr. Paterson, Lord Wimborne's agent at Canford, in Dorsetshire.

4980. You consider you have a practical knowledge of agriculture?—Yes, but I only intend to give evidence to-day on a particular instance. Mr. Vincent said I should attend and refute certain statements by Mr. Williams, of Cardiff, which were not reported in the paper, in reference to the Margam estate.

4981. You do not give any landlord's evidence, as it is called, at present?—No, my Lord. See 1547, 26,862.

4982. What you wish to speak to is the evidence of Mr. John Williams, contractor and corn dealer, and a retired tenant farmer, of 1, Glossop Terrace, Cardiff, who gave evidence at Pontypridd?—Yes.

4983. What do you wish to say on his evidence?—I was told by Mr. Vincent that he said that the tenants on the Margam estate suffered very much from the game. Of course, I do not know what truth there is in what Mr. Williams stated, because his evidence is not very fully reported, but I should only like to say that during the three years I have been agent, I have only had two complaints about the game on the Margam estate; one complaint was very nearly three years ago, and I valued the damage done with the tenant, and he was paid about 20*l*. I think that was the amount we agreed to give. The other case was two years ago, and the amount of damage came to about 30*l*. During the whole of last year I had no complaint whatever, with the exception of one man, who wrote complaining before. He said we were trapping the rabbits, and he said he would like to have the rabbits on his farm. I may say that when Miss Talbot came into the property she determined that it would be better to kill all the rabbits down; consequently, the keepers have had orders ever since to shoot and trap every rabbit on the estate, because it was impossible to keep the banks up, and the fences all consist of banks. There are a lot of rabbits, and it is Miss Talbot's wish that there should not be a single rabbit on the place.

4984. Do the keepers carry out Miss Talbot's wishes?—Certainly, my Lord, if they did not they would not be there.

Chairman—continued.

4985. I will read you one of the cases mentioned in the paper. He said: "I "will give you an instance. There is Mr. "Powell; I have not had authority to give you "this information, but I will say it for the "sake of the present farmers. There is so much "game there, that if you put a piece of mangold "you were obliged to put wire all over it, and "you could not see a mangold on the field but "what had been partly eaten up by the hares, "and yet the farmer would not touch them on "any account, because he knows that he would "insult his landlord. That was in Mr. Talbot's "time. Now Miss Talbot is managing it, and "then Mr. Knox came." Then he goes on to say something about the corner of a field. Do you know anything of the case of Mr. Powell?—I should like to hand in a letter received from Mr. Powell.

"Gilestone Manor, Cowbridge,
26th May 1893.

Dear Mr. Knox,

I am surprised and annoyed to find that it was stated, before the Land Commission, that I left Eglwysnunydd owing to the game. Such a statement was not correct.

Yours faithfully,
W. S. Powell."

4986. You say Miss Talbot has given orders that the rabbits should be killed?—Yes.

4987. And from your own information and knowledge you are of opinion that that order is carried out?—I know it is, anyhow, I propose to give evidence when you come down to Glamorgan again. I was going to give evidence in London, but I was told it would be better to give evidence where the tenants could hear more easily than in London, so that I propose to give evidence when you come down again, if that would suit the Commissioners.

4988. We have had no evidence at all from the landlords of any sort or description; it has been all tenant farmers' evidence the whole of the way through?—I only got the syllabus about 10 days before last Tuesday. There are a great many questions in the syllabus that require a great deal of research about the court leets and copyholds, and you can imagine on an estate like this there is a good deal of business to be done as well, so that I could not devote the whole of the 10 days to this work. I have prepared many notes, and it is out of no disrespect to the Commission that I have not tendered myself before, because Miss Talbot was most anxious that I should give my evidence at the earliest possible moment. Those were her instructions to me.

4989. There is nothing more you wish to say?—Nothing more.

4990. Can you answer any question about the Gower estate?—I have nothing to do with the Gower estate.

Chairman—continued.

4991. Then you are not able to answer this question: "Did the Gower agent on your estate, "shortly after the late Mr. Talbot's death, issue "to the tenants a circular with regard to rabbit "shooting?"—I have nothing to do with the Gower estate.

4992 Of course you cannot produce a copy of that?—No.

4993. You can give no answer as to its effects, or why it was withdrawn?—No, I cannot.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

4994. Do you mean to say that you did not receive a circular or see it in the public press?—I read the circular in "Truth." That is the only thing I had whatever to do with it. It was in the month of May, and I was not appointed until the first of June. I had nothing to do with Miss Talbot until the first of June. I think it was in May, I will not be certain, but the only thing I knew about it was that it appeared in "Truth," and I was agent for an estate in Yorkshire for two or three months at the same time as I was agent for the Margam estate, so that of course I took very little interest in, and I was not concerned with what went on in Gower.

4995. You had nothing to do with the withdrawal of the circular?—Nothing whatever; it was not issued by me.

Chairman.

I am informed that there are two agents for the Gower estate, and one of those agents is in the room at the present time, the gentleman who gave evidence yesterday at Gower, and he says the circular was issued before his acceptance of office and therefore he can give no information about it.

Mr. Grove.

4996-7. In the shorthand notes which have been read to you, it speaks about the damage by hares. You say rabbits are being destroyed; does the same thing apply to hares?—I would say, with regard to hares, that if the tenant wants any netting it is supplied to him at once, and posts also, to put up, so as to protect his crops if they are in any danger whatever. But they evidently cannot be in much danger, because, as I say, I have no claim and no letters whatever complaining about the game damage.

4998. Are tenants in any way afraid, do you suppose, to make those claims?—I do not think so. We are on very good terms with our tenants.

4999. Mr. Powell has written a letter to say that he did not leave because of the game question. Will you tell us why he left the farm?—I should not like to say why he left the farm, because I believe it was entirely a personal matter. He is a gentleman of some property at Cardiff, and he has also some minerals in the Avon Valley. He has not authorised me to say so, but I believe there was something to do with the unhealthiness of the house. He is a man of some means.

Mr. Seebohm.

5000. With regard to the hares, you have not in any way attempted to contract yourself out of the Ground Game Act?—Not in any way whatver.

5001. Have they full power to shoot?—Full power.

Re-examined, 24,744, 25,946, &c.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Lewis Bishop called and examined.

Chairman.

5002. Are you agent to Lord Dynevor?—I am.

5003. How long have you been his Lordship's agent?—Since 1881. I succeeded my father.

5004. You have had a practical education as an agent?—I assisted my father since the year 1860.

5005. You are quite qualified to speak as a practical man?—My own opinion, if I may be allowed to be my own trumpeter, is that I am.

5006. You want to speak about the statement of David Harries, who said, "Landlords were so "powerful in the neighbourhood that they were "often able to act in defiance of the laws. A "certain road constructed by public subscriptions "was, about a month ago, arbitrarily closed by "Lord Dynevor, and the freeholders were afraid "to go to him in the matter. The road had

"been made long before Lord Dynevor was "born." Have you anything to tell the Commissioners on that?—That road has never been closed to this day. It is open at this present moment, and the road which is referred to leads to the Cwmamman church, and up to that point any persons going for church purposes have a perfect right to go, but beyond that it goes over Lord Dynevor's private property, and the private way leads to a farm owned by one Beavan, of Twynboli, the father-in-law of David Harries, who gave that evidence. It was by permission that Mr. Beavan obtained that right, and, as I am instructed, by permission he has always used it. There is no desire on his lordship's part to curtail Mr. Beavan or any of his family from the use of that road, but his lordship has a strong objection to Mr. Beavan

cutting up his farm into small plots and letting everybody he chooses to build on a few perches of land use this road for other purposes than what was originally intended.

5007. This is a freehold farm?—It is.

5008. And the only access to it is up this road, which you say is an accommodation road?—Quite so, as used now.

5009. Is there no other way to this farm?—There was another way, but it was very awkward to cross the brook to it, and this way was permitted in lieu. The land over which this right of way goes has been held by the vicar of Cwmamman for the time being for generations. We have no direct evidence for or against, and perhaps I have no right to give my own opinion; if I am asked for it, I am prepared to give it.

5010. Do I understand you to say that this bad road over the brook was a public road?—No, it was private.

5011. The only road by which he could get to his farm was by this bad road over the brook?—Yes.

5012. Could anyone use it?—It only led to Mr. Beavan's farm.

5013. Through whose property did this go?—Through Hendrefawr Farm, belonging to Mr. Harries.

5014. That road was given up. I understand that he had another way to his farm?—We do not know anything about giving up; he ceased to use it.

5015. And another road was given which goes over Lord Dynevor's land?—He ceased to use the old road, and we allowed him, we say, to go over this new road; it was a neighbourly act, we say.

5016. That being so, the owner of this farm, to improve his estate, sold some small portions of it for building plots?—I understand so.

5017. You have stated that there has been an application; at any rate he wishes to do so?—I believe so.

5018. But he is prevented from doing so by that road being closed by Lord Dynevor, who says, "You can go to your farm by that road, but you "have no right to make a public thoroughfare "of it, to be used by persons who buy small plots "of land from you"?—That is so.

5019. Then he entirely cuts off the value of this gentleman's property?—That is not our fault, I am afraid.

5020. I do not say it is anyone's fault. Practically speaking this gentleman can only get to his farm by a balloon?—No, I do not know that he has forfeited the old way. We have nothing to do with the old road.

5021. The old road still remains?—Yes.

5022. I think you told me that was an accommodation road?—No, I did not say that.

5023. I misunderstood you. There is a right of way that way?—I have always understood that that was the proper road, from Hendrefawr.

5024. Have you ever heard of any objection to that road being used by the public?—Not by Mr. Beavan.

5025. That is a public road?—No, not a public road It would be solely used by Mr. Beavan, of Twynboli—this small freeholder—it only leads to this farm from the highway.

5026. He is cutting up his estate now?—Yes.

5027. And yet no one except himself can get there. Is that what you mean?—Through the new right of way.

5028. Through the old road?—No, I think there is another way. He could use it for any purpose.

5029. Then there is a road to that freehold plot of land?—Yes, the old way.

5030. Over the brook?—The old way.

5031. The old way anyone can use?—Yes; we know nothing about that.

5032. That is a public road, to your knowledge, is it?—I think it has been so used, but I do not know if you will find a defined road now.

5033. He has lost his right of way over the public way by the lapse of time. Is that so?—I really do not know whether that is so, my Lord.

5034. It comes to this, that the only way he can get to his land is over your road?—I do not say that at all.

5035. You have no map or plan of the estate you could put in to show the position of this freeholder?—Yes, I have. I am sorry I did not bring it down. I was up at Llandrindrod, and came away without my papers.

5036. I take it that you, as Lord Dynevor's agent, and the tenant agree to this fact, that although the road is not closed to the tenant, it is closed to any person except the tenant?—Yes, to other than agricultural purposes.

5037. Lord Dynevor does not allow this road to be used for any but agricultural purposes, and it is not to be used by any person except the freeholder who owns that small part?—Yes, and his family. Of course, if he has a legal right he can get it, but we say no. I may say, my Lord, that Lord Dynevor would be one of the last persons to do anything against a neighbour if he thought that the neighbour really had a right.

5038. He thinks he has no right to get to his farm. Therefore, he says, "You shall not get there"?—Yes, for building purposes Mr. Beavan is employing Mr. Strick, solicitor of this town, and he and I are in correspondence about the matter at this moment.

5039. So far you and the tenant agree that Lord Dynevor has enclosed the road?—Not closed it.

5040. To everyone but the freeholder of that farm; and that road is to be used by the freeholder for agricultural purposes?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

5041. Do I understand you that this matter is now sub judice?—Yes, I have Mr. Strick's letters, and my own and Mr. Beavan's, if the Commissioners would like to see them.

5042. I would much rather not?—You can if you wish to.

Mr. Grove.

5043. You speak of the two roads, the old and the new road?—Yes.

5044. How long has this new road been used?—I could not give you the date, really, but I had something to do with it some years ago; I should put it down somewhere about the year 1854, roughly; but do not take it from me exactly.

5045. You mean the new road we speak of has been used for 40 years practically?—Yes, I should think so.

5046. Has there been any acknowledgment paid?—None.

5047. And no agreement entered into when the road was used?—None that I know of. In fact, it was done without our knowledge. We knew nothing of it until comparatively lately.

5048. If this new road were not used the persons who buy plots of freehold on this farm would be greatly inconvenienced by having to go round the old road?—Yes, they would, unless they made a better way over the brook.

5049. You say they have used it for 40 years?—Mr. Beavan has, so far as I am advised. I do not like to bind myself.

Mr. Seebohm.

5050. Is it contended that there is a right of way to the church, and there always has been a right of way to the church?—Not in the same way that it is now. It was when the bridge was built and there was a new road made up to the church, and there the road which we call the public road ceases; and from that terminus to Mr. Beavan's farm, which lies here, it goes through a piece of unenclosed field of Lord Dynevor's, and an unenclosed piece of ground, and it is that way which is in dispute. You go by a very narrow corner of Lord Dynevor's own buildings, within a foot of it.

Mr. Griffiths.

5051. Has this road been occasionally closed once a year or so?—Not that I know of. We would keep it open for Mr. Beavan again as long as ever he likes. He is a very good neighbour.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

5052. You said you were a practical agent, but you are a solicitor as well?—Oh, dear, yes; I hope there is no objection to that, is there?

5053. When you told Lord Carrington that you had practical experience, it might, possibly, have been a little misleading; I do not mean you did it intentionally for a moment?—That is a matter of opinion, what "practical" is.

5054. You have not followed some of the Cowbridge evidence evidently?—No, but I have followed the plough since I was 10 years old, in the way that I have been in the field, and seen as much of it as most people.

5055. I understand you to say that this matter is actually forming the subject matter of a correspondence between you and a solicitor at Swansea?—Quite so.

5056. I do not think it right to ask any details which might prejudice your client, so that I am not going to do that, but I think Mr. Harries made one statement that you have not adverted to, and as to which I might well ask a question. He said a gate had been put up across the road. Is that so?—Not to my knowledge.

5057. My recollection is that he referred to the placing of a gate on this road where there had been no gate previously?—If so, the only explanation I can give is this, that some little time ago the vicar of Cwmamman, who is his lordship's tenant, asked for a couple of gates and we supplied them, as we do to most of the tenants, and whether he put one on the corner or not I do not know.

5058. The road comes from an admitted highway?—From an admitted highway to the church.

5059. Was the road made up from the admitted highway past the church and up to Mr. Beavan's holding by public subscription?—No, only to the church. There is no road from the church at all, merely a cart track.

5060. The dispute is about the cart track?—Yes, it does not concern us how often he goes to the church.

5061. The point, I understand you to say, is that a gate had been placed at a certain point?—Not with Lord Dynevor's consent, anyhow, nor with his knowledge or mine.

Chairman.

5062. I have nothing else to ask you unless you wish to say anything else?—I am prepared to answer any questions.

5063. There is nothing more you wish to state yourself?—Not with respect to this matter. With regard to the estate, you may, if you think proper, ask me any questions. You said landlords had not tendered any evidence. I am here to answer any question the Commissioners might think proper to put to me, without notes, of course.

Re-examined, 38,370.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Penrice called and examined.

Chairman.

5064. I believe you live at Kilvrough?—Yes.

5065. On what particular evidence do you wish to explain anything?—On the statement made by Philip Tanner yesterday. I have only seen the report of it in to-day's newspaper, but I suppose it is correct.

5066. Which paper do you take?—"The Western Mail." "A farm labourer's alleged hard-

Chairman—continued.

" ships. Philip Tanner, farm labourer, Llangennith,
" gave evidence of the hardships which he said he " had suffered. It appeared witness married the " widow of a man named Nicholas, who kept an
" inn and occupied 20 acres of land on Mr.
" Penrice's estate. Nicholas willed his property in " trust for his widow and daughter, and after
" Tanner married the widow the stock and imple" ments were sold. Tanner and his wife received " notice, and were turned out, the land being " added to a farm occupied by the agent of the " Kilvrough estate. Tanner said he suffered great " loss through being evicted. He appealed to Mr.
" Penrice, who simply replied that the land was " to be taken up. No complaint was made as to
" his way of farming." It is on that statement. What I wish to explain is that I never had anything to do with Mr. Tanner. He never was my tenant at all. The circumstances were these: at the death of Nicholas I tried to ascertain what the position of the widow would be, so as to see whether she would be likely to make a good tenant or not, and I understood that the family were deeply in debt, that there was great doubt whether the poor widow would be able to carry on at all, or whether she was solvent, so, under the circumstances, although I was prepared to lose some of the rent, I did not think it was kind to the widow or good policy on my own part to continue her as a tenant, because she would probably have got deeper and deeper into debt, and I should have had at the end, after losing perhaps two or three years' rent, to do what I might do at the beginning. I therefore at once gave her notice to quit, because I was not satisfied with her position, and I thought that the land, which was not very cheap, would be rather against her than for her benefit. Some time after that, before the expiration of the notice so far as I can remember, the widow, a woman of the age of 50, married a young man of the age of 25. I did not think that that improved the position of affairs at all, because, as the only property left to the widow was the public-house, it struck me that it was very possible that the young man did not marry the widow merely for the sake of a wife, but that he had some view to her property, and that he might be one of the best customers of the house, which would not improve his financial position. That being the case, when he applied to me and wanted me to take him as tenant, I told him he never had been my tenant, and I did not wish for it, and that was the end of it.

5067. He paid his rent up to the time he received notice?—The rent was paid eventually, when the stock and crops were sold.

5068. And then the land was added to the agent's farm?—The land was intermixed very much with the farm held by the agent, and I put it to him. It was rather against his wish, because he said it was too dear. Since then, I have understood that this man Tanner is a steady sober man, and he is a farm labourer, and the widow keeps on the public-house, so that I have nothing to say against one or the other of them.

5069. He is a respectable man?—I believe so, quite, but I had to judge at the time, of course, as to whether the tenant would be a sound tenant as a widow. I have no objection to widows as tenants. Two of the best farms I have in Gower are held by widows, and are very well managed, but then they are women with capital, and with very industrious hard-working sons.

5070. Did you hear Mr. Tanner's statement?—No, I was not there.

5071. I will read it to you. He was called, and he said, " Before the sale was made at the " time the trustee and the agent were meddling
" about the will"—there was a will?—Yes. Nicholas had made a will.

5072. By which he left the property to be divided between his wife and his daughter. That is what we were told?—Yes.

5073. " They went to the lawyer in Swansea,
" Mr. Smith, of Cambrian Place, and went " through the will, Mr. Jenkins said to
" Mr. Smith, 'There is not the least doubt
" 'but that the thing must be sold and the " 'money inves ed.' 'Well,' said Mr. Smith, the " 'will is not after that fashion.' Then I asked
" Mr. Smith whether it would not be the same " thing for me to take the things off by valua" tion and pay them the money, and let the " farm go on as it was. 'Yes,' said Mr. Smith,
" 'if you can do that, they cannot refuse.
" Then Mr. Jenkins turned round to Mr.
" Smith and said, 'That will not do, that is " not the thing,' and besides that he said to me,
" 'You have not the money to do it.' I said.
" 'That is no business of yours, if I have not " 'the money in my pocket, I can get it if I " 'can have the land.' I said, 'I can have the " 'money, and I am either prepared to take the " 'things at a valuation or give security for " 'half the stock and crop, or the whole it
" 'required.' Nothing would do, but they must " have the land up, and when the day of the " sale came there was half a year's rent due—
" that was the lot—that was 10*l.*—besides the " chief rent, and that ran somewhere about 13*l.*
" or 14*l.* (Q.) Then the money was paid?—
" (A.) The money was paid. (Q.) Did the " trustee give notice to quit, or did you receive
" notice to quit?—(A.) We received notice.
" (Q.) You are positive the trustees did not give
" notice to quit?—(A.) We received notice
" from the agent. What the trustees did
" besides I cannot say. (Q.) You have no
" knowledge of what the trustees did?—
" (A.) No, I was prepared to take the land then,
" and I am prepared to take the land now if I " have the chance. (Sir John Llewelyn.) Was " that Mr. Robinson Smith that you spoke of?
" —(A.) Yes." Is that correct?—I believe that is quite correct. The only question for me was whether the people were in a position to keep the farm and pay for it, and I thought they were not, on account of the debt that there was upon it, the man having originally borrowed money to buy his public-house.

Chairman—continued.

5074. Was the notice given before the half year's rent was paid or afterwards?—That I cannot remember.

Lord Kenyon.

5075. In your opinion there was no case of hardship?—I do not think there was. I thought I was rather doing the widow a good turn. I did not want to have to do with a bankrupt tenant against me. I should have had to take harsh proceedings. It is very unpleasant, and I always avoid it if I possibly can.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

5076. The real complaint of Tanner was this, that he having married a woman with this little property, situate where it was, if he did not get these 20 acres he would not be able to farm, whereas he could have gone on, as he thought, farming these 20 acres whilst his wife was carrying on the business of the public-house, and made a fair thing out of life. Then he complains that because you would not let him these 20 acres, and they could not get any land near this public-house except these 20 acres, he has been obliged to become a farm labourer at 10*s.* a week. Was that brought to your knowledge?—No. The way in which I looked at it was that they would be left no stock, or crop, or money to carry on the business, and I was rather afraid that this young man, having "married the public-house," would come to grief.

5077. That I understood to be the burthen of his complaint, that this was the only 20 acres of land which could be conveniently farmed with the public-house?—I daresay it was the nearest land to the public-house.

5078. That did not appear to be brought to your knowledge?—No, I considered it a burthen.

5079. He was called first as a farm labourer, and that came out; he gave the taking away of this land as the reason why he had become a farm labourer?—He was nothing but a farm labourer before. He was never in such good circumstances, probably, as he is now.

Mr. Griffiths.

5080. You simply did not approve of the match?—I thought it imprudent on both sides.

5081. Do you not think a young man of 25 or 26, or whatever his age is, would be a comfort to a woman of 50?—I cannot say anything about that.

5082. With regard to earning wages?—No doubt he could do more hard work than a man of 50 or 60. As long as the man is steady, I cannot see but what her chances were improved, but I was afraid it would go the other way, and the probabilities seemed to me to point out so.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

5083. Do not you think you did rather an injustice to this widow in turning her off these premises?—I thought I was doing her a benefit, because I thought she would be sure to lose money by it, and I should have to take proceedings. You know how unpleasant that is as against a widow.

Mr. Grove.

5084. When you added this land to the agent's farm, did you increase the rent of that farm proportionately to the addition of this land?—I charged the same rent as before. I do not mean that the rent remained the same as before, but the 20*l.* a year was added to the rent, being the same rent that Nicholas paid.

Professor Rhŷs.

5085. You thought that the land so rented to Mr. Nicholas was highly rented at the time?—The fact was that I had offered it to the agent before, because there were some farm buildings connected with it which were getting out of repair, and I was dissatisfied with the way in which Nicholas went on. That was some time before his death, and the agent then refused it, and he said it was too dear.

5086. It appeared from what you said that you had nothing against Tanner at the time?—Nothing whatever, only I thought it was an imprudent match, and I did not think it would turn out well.

5087. I rather agree with you about that sort of match; but since then, Tanner has been in better circumstances on the whole than he was then?—Yes, I think so.

5088. You know of nothing against him?—No.

5089. Would you be disposed to entertain his request to have the holding at any future time?—Since it has been added to the other farm, with which it is very much intermixed, I do not think it would be right to go back again.

5090. Did you deal with the trustees in the matter?—Not at all, so far as I remember.

5091. With regard to the public-house?—The public-house does not belong to me.

5092. We were told, I think, that the rateable value was 6*l.* a year?—I do not know what it is rated at, at all.

5093. It is a small place?—Yes; there is a large public-house adjoining, which is in fact an inn where a great many people come down in the summer, but this is only a little old-fashioned common house.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. HENRY ALFRED CHAPMAN called and examined.

Chairman.

5094. You are the mayor of Swansea?—Yes.

5095. Your worship wishes to make a statement with regard to evidence that you propose to give in the interest of the neighbourhood, in relation to the foreshore?—Yes.

5096. Would you kindly tell the Commissioners what you desire to say?—It is desired to give evidence, which I believe will come within the province of this Commission, which we think is of considerable importance, with regard to the interference with the rights of the public upon our foreshore.

5097. By whom; by any body or individual?—By an individual—affecting, as I believe it does, the rights of the lord of the manor—the lord of the seigniory of Gower.

5098. Who is the person whose encroachments are complained of?—We presume it is the Duke of Beaufort, through his agent.

5099. You wish to give evidence of that in London?—Yes, I understand the Commission will not sit here, or it will be adjourned. I have not understood what arrangements could be made for receiving evidence on the point. As I understand the Commissioners desire to rise before 2 o'clock, I must say the examination upon it will take a much longer time than you will have to spare, if you desire to rise at that time.

5100. If it will be convenient to your worship and the town council, we will propose to take any strictly technical evidence of that sort in London. It is somewhat of a legal and technical nature, which could be very fairly taken in London when convenient?—I should be very glad to suit the convenience of the Commission in this matter. There is another point upon which we desire to give evidence, and that is with regard to the rights upon some common land at Plas-Marl. I think it is right you should know the two particular points. There may be a third. One is in regard to encroachment of the foreshore, and the other with regard to common land. I understand there are several commoners who have rights over there, and I believe tipping is going on, and occasionally enclosures, which are not, as we understand, legally made upon that land.

Sir John Llewelyn.

5101. I think you may take it that the technical questions might be discussed in London, but I think it will necessitate our coming back here upon the other questions?—The question of Plas-Marl, I quite believe, would, but with regard to the foreshore, I think that might be decided by calling two or three witnesses at the outside, so far as the claim of the corporation and the burgesses of Swansea are concerned. There was an action which took place in 1848. The law then went against us. We think it may be the province of this Commission to direct legislation, and we sincerely hope that if that law is still existent, it may be altered and improved upon very much.

Chairman.

5102. Mr. Mayor, I take it that this is a matter of considerable public interest, with regard to the foreshore and encroachments and so on?—Yes.

5103. We will advise the Duke of Beaufort, or his representative, that this question is going to be brought forward, and ask him to make it convenient that his agent, or some representative of his, should attend at the same time?—Yes. I should not like it to go forth that we are at all springing any charge upon them, or anything of that sort. In fact I am not quite sure whether any notice has been given to the Duke or to his agents, and that is one reason why we ask to have it at another time, so that we might give them this notice.

Chairman.

We will communicate with the Duke and his agents.

Sir John Llewelyn.

5104. Is it your opinion that the question of the rights of the lord of the seigniory as to foreshore might be fairly dealt with in London?—I think so.

5105. And that does not apply to your contention as to manorial rights in the interior?—If the manorial rights in the interior affect Plas-Marl, that would necessitate the evidence of individuals who would be more conveniently examined in the country.

Sir John Llewelyn.

That is my opinion too.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. ROBERT DICKSON BURNIE, M.P., called and examined.

Chairman.

5106. You are member of Parliament for Swansea?—Yes. I am glad the mayor has appeared to-day to notify the desire of the corporation to raise this question. I was anxious that the Land Commissioners should not sit in Swansea without their attention being drawn to questions which at any rate interest the public of Swansea very much, such as foreshore rights, the claims to the bed of the river, and in many other ways in which it is thought that our commercial interests are retarded. Inasmuch as you are good enough to say you will hear evidence in London, I think that is sufficient for us to-day. I was prepared to give general evidence, but I shall be prepared in London to give evidence on all the questions.

Chairman—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

5107. Are you of opinion that full justice would be done by our taking that question in London, so far as the foreshore is concerned?—Yes, certainly, I think so far as the foreshore is concerned, as it is more technical, but with reference to Plas-Marl that would no doubt lead to the calling of other evidence, and probably could not be so well taken in London. However I shall be glad to co-operate in any way.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

5108. That affects the Duke of Beaufort as well?—Yes; he is lord of the manor.

Chairman.

I may say that a question has been sent in, "Ought we not to have notice of the nature of the evidence?" We are anxious to oblige, but as we do not know what the evidence is, we cannot give notice of the nature of it. We will give notice of the evidence, and as it is in open court, any gentleman can attend and give his evidence as well. But we cannot pledge ourselves to give notice of the nature of evidence which we have not as yet received. See 6298.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. DAVID WILLIAMS called and examined.

Chairman.

5109. Where do you live?—At Clynyfyd Farm, in the parish of Llandilo talybont.

5110. How far is that from this place?—Eight miles.

5111. In which direction?—A north-westerly direction.

5112. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

5113. Whom do you rent under?—Sir Marteine Lloyd.

5114. What is the extent of your farm?—160 acres.

5115. For which you pay how much?—90*l.* a year.

5116. Now, Mr. Williams, you want to speak as to the rent of tenant farmers?—Yes.

5117. What would you like to say about that?—It is too high.

5118. Do you consider your own rent too high?—Yes, especially the estate I live on.

5119. As a practical man, do you consider the land on your estate is rented higher than on neighbouring estates?—Certainly.

5120. The same class of land is let cheaper?—The land in our district varies a great deal.

5121. Some good and some bad?—Yes.

5122. You think the rent is too high on the whole?—The complaint is generally that it is too high.

5123. Is it let at so much an acre, or at a lump sum?—At a lump sum.

5124. So much for the whole holding?—Yes.

5125. Have you anything to say about the rates?—Yes, we feel generally the rates are too high.

5126. Have you any practical remedy for that?—We consider that the whole income of the district ought to be rated to the local rates, and we farmers generally complain against the sanitary rate about the villages, and we at the same time receive no benefit at all. We are perhaps charged 6*d.* in the pound to the benefit of the local village for the drainage and water supply. The farmers would just as soon be without it.

Chairman—continued.

5127. In what sort of condition are your farm buildings? Are they in a good state of repair?—Not very good; very insufficient.

5128. Is yours a mixed farm, grass and arable?—My land is arable.

5129. All arable?—About 70 acres, and 90 acres woods and heath land.

5130. Do you put sheep on the heath land?—There are sheep runs over it.

5131. You depend principally upon arable produce?—Yes.

5132. Have you anything to say about farm produce?—Yes.

5133. What can you tell us about that?—The farm produce is reduced the last few years from 40 to 50 per cent., and we at the same time are obliged to meet the same calls.

5134. Is this an outlying estate of your landlord's. Does he live there?—No, he lives in Pembrokeshire.

5135. Who is the agent there?—Mr. Davies.

5136. He does not live there?—No, he lives somewhere near Llandilo.

5137. What size is the whole estate belonging to the landlord?—I cannot speak of it, except in our parish; it is 500 or 600 acres.

5138. Not more?—Not belonging to the same landlord.

5139. It is an outlying estate of Sir Marteine Lloyd's, I understand?—Yes.

5140. The landlord has about 500 or 600 acres of land?—Yes, more or less, as near as I can tell, in our parish.

5141. And the farm buildings are not in a very good state of repair?—They are insufficient.

5142. Have you any game on the property?—Not of any value.

5143. There is no trouble with game or rabbits?—No.

5144. Have you had any abatement of rent?—We had 7½ per cent. abatement the last two half years.

5145. Anything permanent?—No.

5146. Is there anything permanent in the district that you know of?—No.

5147. No permanent reduction?—No; some give 5 per cent., some give 10 per cent.

5148. That is an abatement?—Only as an abatement.

Sir John Llewelyn.

5149. You do not get proper benefit from the sanitary rates. You are outside the area?—Yes.

5150. Is it in Pontardulais that they get the benefit?—Yes.

5151. Have you spoken to the guardian of the parish?—I have spoken to him, but it is of no avail.

5152. There is a power of creating a special division for rating purposes, and it is a hardship that those who live outside and have no benefit should have to pay the rates. You mean that?—Yes.

5153. You can remedy that if you speak to the guardian of the parish about it. Are the repairs of the farm in good order?—Insufficient.

5154. But in good order so far as they go?—Some are in good order in my case, but wholly insufficient.

5155. You have plenty of water there, no doubt?—Yes.

5156. Do you think that the rent of 90*l.* for 160 acres, of which part is rough, bad land, is too high?—Well, that 90 acres I "swoop" off is not worth 10*l.* on the whole.

5157. You think that the rents in that part of the country are higher than they are elsewhere in the neighbourhood?—Yes, in the case of our estate.

5158. Mr. Davies, Ffrwd Vale, is an experienced agent and an agent for a very large area, is he not?—Yes.

5159. Have they been raised at all in your time?—They have raised 40 per cent. in the year 1874.

5160. In the year 1874?—Yes, in the year 1874 they were raised 40 per cent.

5161. Have they been reduced since then?—No; and in my special case I should say it is raised 50 per cent.

5162. And not reduced since?—No.

5163. But you have had temporary abatements?—We have had 7½ per cent. the last two half years.

5164. Did you get notice of that before the day?—No.

5165. Do you know of any people in the neighbourhood who have been compelled to borrow money to pay the rents?—Well, I daresay there are some.

5166. Of your own knowledge, you are not aware that it is a common practice in your neighbourhood?—Some of them borrow money from each other to meet the rents, as rents do not come on the same dates; they help each other.

5167. Is that more common now than it used to be?—Yes, I think it is so.

Professor Rhŷs.

5168. You complain of the insufficiency of your building accommodation?—Yes.

5169. Would you mind specifying by how much it falls short?—We are obliged to crowd the cattle too much, to keep them indoors, and that is apt to create disease.

5170. How much more would you want?—We ought to have about 20 per cent. more room; or even 40 per cent. in some cases.

5171. Have you ever asked for increased accommodation of that sort?—Dear me, yes; dozens of times.

5172. What does your agent say?—He can only give a promise sometimes, and turn a deaf ear to me.

5173. Are you near a railway?—About two miles off, not adjoining.

5174. Do you make use of the railway for your produce, to carry goods to and fro?—We used to bring special manures, such as manure bags and lime.

5175. Do you find the railway rates reasonable?—No; they charged me last March about 3*s.* a ton for removing a truck of manure three miles.

5176. Would you be able to keep fewer horses if the railway rates were more reasonable?—No, that does not affect us much as regards horses.

5177. With regard to buildings, when they are put up, are you expected to repair them, or do anything in that way?—Yes, in repairing the roofs, and so on, and keeping the doors in repair.

5178. And the gates?—No, the gates are all my own.

5179. Are you under any custom. Have you been in the same farm all your life?—No.

5180. When you leave a farm of that sort on which you have made repairs and put up gates, what happens. Do you have any compensation?—No; if we leave the farm we must take everything with us or leave them behind.

5181. Have you any agreement?—Yes, there is a sort of agreement between us. It is not of much matter.

5182. Is it a written agreement?—Yes, signed on both sides.

5183. Have you a copy of it?—Yes, at home.

5184. You have a copy of your agreement?—Yes.

5185. And you knew what it was like when you took it?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

5186. As to this charge on the railway for manure; what sort of manure was it. Was it the ordinary stable or farmyard manure?—No, super.

5187. Then it would be in a special class?—Yes.

5188. What quantity was it?—Three tons.

5189. Not four tons?—No.

5190. As to the charge for lime. What do they charge for that?—I cannot say exactly what they charge now for bringing down the lime under the new tariff.

5191. Is it more or less than it used to be?—It is more.

5192. Are you acquainted with this book, which you can get for 1s., published by the Board of Trade, and which gives you all the rates that the railway company can charge you?—I have not seen it, perhaps I may acquire it.

Mr. Seebohm.

5193. You spoke of tenants borrowing from one another to pay the rents. Do you mean that they borrow cash from one another or give their names or sureties?—Well, they borrow as much as they can from one another, to meet the rents.

5194. In cash?—Oh, yes, in cash.

5195. In money?—Yes.

5196. Not by way of giving their names as sureties to one another?—No.

5197. Have you anything to complain of from the noxious vapours and deleterious gases that come from any works in your neighbourhood?—No, it does not affect us.

Mr. Richard Jones.

5198. You say you know of farmers who borrow money to pay the rent. How do farmers pay their general debts?—Well, if they could not meet them they must fall back on the capital, by selling something off at a ruinous price.

5199. I do not know whether you are in a position to answer this question; but do the farmers pay the rate collector when he calls?—Some pay at the first call; others perhaps at the last moment.

5200. Do you know of any cases where rate collectors distrained on farms for rates in arrear?—No, I cannot say I do.

5201. Are they able to pay the grocer and the draper?—Some must pay, or else they would not get it.

5202. Do they ever have to appear in the county court?—I do not hear much of the farmers in our district appearing there.

5203. What is the character of the farming in your neighbourhood?—There is a great deal of different quality in our neighbourhood.

5204. Do you adopt the four course system?—I cannot say exactly what system you call it. We break up and lay for a white crop first, and then green crop, and then white crop, and clover. It might be four course.

5205. Are you allowed, according to your agreement, to take two white straw crops in succession?—No.

5206. You are not by your agreement?—No.

5207. Then you do not get freedom of cropping?—No, not so far as the letter of the agreement goes, but it is infringed very often.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

5208. Is there any penal clause in the agreement. Supposing you infringe it, have you to pay a certain amount?—Well, that case has not been brought up, or else they would have to pay.

5209. But it is in the agreement?—Yes, it is in the agreement not to follow two white crops.

5210. You are not allowed to sell hay off the farm?—No.

5211. Supposing you sold hay, and you applied to the landlord for permission to use a part of that money to put artificial manure on the farm, do you think it would be granted to you?—Well, I cannot say what would be his answer, I have not tried him.

5212. Do you think it would answer a farmer's purpose?—It would answer.

5213. Has it never occurred to you to make an application of that kind?—In my case the hay is rather scarce often, and I could not afford to sell it.

5214. In some cases perhaps it would be better for you to sell your stock than to sell your hay?—Yes, it would be last season, whatever.

5215. Were you obliged to buy hay last season?—Yes.

5216. What amount?—In my case I bought about five tons at the end of April.

5218. What is the reason of the shortness of the hay?—The shortness of the crop, I suppose, the season before.

5219. It follows, of course, that you are affected by the seasons to a great extent?—Quite so.

5220. What has been the character of the seasons during the last years. Have they been as favourable for farming?—Rather dry, not favourable as they were formerly, and the prospect of this season follows.

5221. You say that the buildings were in a bad state?—Quite so 5222. Are you provided with corn sheds?—No, not in my case; there are Dutch barns in some cases.

5223. On your estate?—Not on the Sir Marteine estate.

5224. Have you ever applied for them?—No, I have not, as I know what would be the answer. They would refuse.

5225. Do you not think that a corn shed would answer your purpose?—Yes, a great deal; it would save labour and straw.

5226. Yet you have never applied for it?—No. I know very well that I should not be successful.

5227. You have never applied, because you thought you would not get it?—No; I have applied for many things but could not get them.

5228. Have you got such things as tanks to hold your liquid manure?—No.

5229. Supposing you were to leave your place now, do you think there would be any applicants for it?—Well, I cannot say about that. It would not be to their profit, whatever.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

5230. If the farm does not pay, why do you not leave?—There is a reason in that. Suppose I am going to sell myself up now; the stock is so low perhaps I should lose a few hundred pounds.

5231. You would be leaving the farm, of course, under a disadvantage?—Yes, so far.

5232. That is the reason you hold on for another year?—Yes.

5233. You are living in hope?—In the hope that some year the prices will improve, and then I will sell out.

5234. Is that the case with a great many farmers in your district?—Quite so.

Mr. Griffiths.

5235. How long have you been on this farm?—Nineteen years.

5236. What time of year did you come into the farm?—Michaelmas.

5237. Did you have to take to any crops when you came in?—Only the manure and seeds.

5238. No hay or straw?—No.

5239. What family have you?—I have four children.

5240. Wife and four children?—Yes.

5241. Do you keep any servants?—Yes.

5242. How many?—A servant girl, a servant man, and occasionally a labourer.

5243. What wages do you pay your men?—12*s.* a week, everything found.

5245. When you commenced 20 years ago, did you pay so much then?—No, not quite so much.

5246. What did you pay then?—About 20 per cent. less.

5247. Do you find female servants scarce?—Oh, yes, you can hardly get any. The manufacturers in the district take all the girls, and even the boys too.

5248. Do you keep any cows?—Yes.

5249. How many?—10 milking cows.

5250. Does this girl milk the 10 cows?—No, my daughter.

5251. You have a daughter grown up?—Yes.

5252. You give her wages, I suppose?—No, I cannot afford to.

5253. You dress her well when she goes into the town, do you not?—Well, not very well, middling.

5254. And you put the money in your pocket?—I have to pay her way.

5255. You said just now you are not allowed to sell your hay?—Quite so.

5256. You have no cottages on your farm, have you?—No; there is a small one there, and a collier lives in it, but it is more expense to keep that up.

5257. Is it a thatched cottage?—Yes.

5258. You find it difficult to get straw to thatch it?—Straw and labour eat up all the rent.

5259. That is rather a bad state of things. Do you think we can mend this matter. What do you recommend us to do?—Security of tenure, and some practical board to fix fair rents.

5260. Do you think you would fare better if you were sure you would leave your children after you in that farm, that you could farm better than you do now?—Yes, I could.

5261. When you went to the place who fixed the rent? Did you bargain for it, or your valuer?—No, the time was so prosperous with farming when I took the farm that it was not much out of the way then.

5262. You say the labour is getting more expensive, and the stock is so low that you cannot pay the sum you paid then?—No.

5263. And you want a court?—Yes, to redress the rent; to have a fair rent according to what it is worth; that is all we want.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

5264. Where does the agent for this estate live?—Ffrwd Vale, near Llandilo.

5265. How far is that from you?—Perhaps 18 miles, more or less.

5266. Do you think it is a disadvantage or not for the agent to be at that distance?—I cannot say. It is not much advantage whatever to live so far off from him. I do not find it so.

5267. In your agreement which you have mentioned, is the operation of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, attempted to be avoided?—No, they have not given us notice to contract out of it.

5268. There is no mention of the Act in the agreement?—No, the agreement was drawn out in 1874.

5269. What is the custom of the country as to compensation?—Take away all your things as far as they can.

5270. Supposing you left to-morrow, would you have any claim to compensation for anything?—No, nothing at all.

5271. The custom of Glamorganshire does not extend there?—Well, there is no recognised custom in our district.

5272. Are there many labourers' cottages in this parish?—No.

5273. What is the nearest village?—Pontardulais.

5274. That is something more than a village, is it not, now?—Well, we call it a village still.

5275. Pontardulais is your nearest place?—Yes.

5276. Are there many cottages for labourers in your parish?—Not farm labourers. They are all going to the works.

Lord Kenyon.

5277. You say you have 10 cows. How much cow-tying have you, how much building have you for the cows?—Room for tying 24 cows all round, we have store cattle in there as well.

5278. How many cattle have you all round?—We keep 30 to 32 all round, milk and store cattle.

27 May 1893.] Mr. D. Williams. [Continued.

5279. You spoke of security of tenure. Do you mean that what you want is, that if your landlord cannot turn you out, that you are free to go when you please?—Yes.

5280. I mean you must have security both ways, must you not?—When I have been turned out, I ought to be compensated.

5281. I advise you to get a copy of the Agricultural Holdings Act, as you say you are under no custom?—I will.

Mr. Grove.

5282. This agent you speak of manages a good many other estates besides yours?—I hear so.

5283. For instance, how long is it since he was on your farm?—The last seven years, when the estate came to the hands of Sir Marteine.

5284. You have not seen him on the estate for seven years?—Oh, yes, he has been about there once or twice but to no good.

Mr. Richard Jones.

5285. You say you keep about 32 cattle?—Yes.

5286. What number of horses do you keep?—Four.

5287. Four draught horses?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

5288. How many colts?—A colt now and then.

5289. What number of sheep do you keep?—About 250.

5290. What class are your cattle—Herefords or shorthorns?—A cross between shorthorn and general breed. You know what a general breed is—I mean no breed at all—crossed with a shorthorn.

5291. What kind of sheep do you keep?—Mountain.

Mr. Griffiths.

5292. Did you ever complain that you had to buy so much hay last year?—No, I have not seen him since.

5293. Have you heard of any landlords in the neighbourhood allowing their tenants for the hay that they purchased?—No, they allow nothing.

5294. I have heard they are allowed something in the immediate neighbourhood?—Not in ours.

Lord Kenyon.

5295. Have you any sheep walk attached to your farm besides the 90 acres of rough?—Yes.

5296. On the mountain?—Yes, on the mountain.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Rees called and examined.

Chairman.

5297. Where do you live?—Garth Farm, Llansamlet.

5298. Whereabouts is that?—About five miles away.

5299. How long have you been living there?—I went there in 1864; that is 29 years.

5300. Were you bred and born in the district?—I am a Carmarthenshire man.

5301. Whom do you rent under?—Mrs. Wood, of Stouthall now; Colonel Wood was alive when I took it first of all.

5302. Does she live on the estate?—No, my Lord.

5303. This is an outlying property of which you speak?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

5304. Colonel Wood used to live at that time down close to Reynoldstone, where we were yesterday?—Yes.

5305. Mrs. Wood does not live on the property now?—No.

5306. How big is your farm?—Over 300 acres altogether.

5307. Is it a mountain farm?—There is a lot of what we call meadow ground—wet flat ground.

5308. What is the rest of it?—Gravelly ground.

5309. Is there much grass on it, or is it arable?—Very poor in grass, only what we sow in seed. The plough must be put to it every two or three years, or something will grow like fern or furze all the time, unless you keep searing it.

5310. What rent do you pay for the farm?—When we took it first it was 250*l.* a year. Since then they have taken a lot of ground for building purposes, and the railway took over 11 acres out of it. They took nearly 31 acres out of the farm as near as I could guess.

5311. What is the present acreage of your farm. How big is it now, at the present moment?—I have not the acreage in my mind. It is sure to be over 300 acres still.

5312. What rent do you pay for it at the present time?—It is 224*l.* a year, after deducting for the building and railway and so on.

5313. Do you complain of the rent?—Yes, many times I have. I have sent to Mrs. Wood to get the rent lowered.

5314. With any result?—Nothing whatever, yet.

5315. Have you had any reduction?—I made a complaint after 1879 and had 20*l.* I lost nearly 300*l.* on sheep, and since that I had 10*l.* one half year, and that makes 30*l.* for all the time I have been there.

5316. Are rents high there?—The rents have gone down 50 per cent. in our neighbourhood.

5317. Your rent has not been put down?—No.

5318. You feel it difficult to get on there?—I do not know how to meet the end of the year.

5319. Are the rates and taxes very heavy?—Yes. I have a demand for 25*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.* now coming due. They made the rate on the 1st April; the school rate is about 1*s.* in the pound, and that comes to 10*l.* a year for many years. That was never thought of when I took that farm.

5320. That has come on you since?—Yes.

5321. Are there any conditions round your farm that are bad for cultivation, from copper smoke, or anything of that sort?—Yes; the copper smoke is very bad in my neighbourhood now, on my farm especially.

5322. What effect has that on the growing crops?—The grass dies away in patches. There is nothing now growing on it scarcely.

5323. Is there any prevailing wind in your direction which brings up the copper smoke?—Yes, it is within a mile and a half, as the bird flies, to the works at Llansamlet.

5324. What wind brings it up to you?—The south-west wind.

5325. And that is the prevailing wind; it blows very continuously sometimes?—Yes. It is from the south, the Welsh wind, but when it comes up from the south-west, that is the time it catches me.

5326. Do you suffer at all from water supply?—Yes, very badly.

5327. In what way?—Well, the water that runs down is no good for our purposes.

5328. How is that?—The tin-works——

5329. Is it a little river?—Yes, and before we had this drop of rain some days we did not have water at all.

5330. No water at all. From this day fortnight until Monday morning there was not a drop of water.

5331. Where did you send the stock?—There is a little well behind the farmhouse about 300 yards, but most of them went down to the river after all.

5332. You say the water in the river is very much polluted and unfit for the stock to drink?—It has been for the last 10 years. I cannot breed colts at all.

5333. Is there no sanitary authority?—Yes; but I never complained of anything at all. I have told my agent many times about it, and I told him it was for him to look after it, and I would not go and spend money to go to law about it.

Mr. Griffiths.

5334. How long have the tin-works injured the farm; ever since you went there?—No, there was only one there then, that was the Ynispenllwch, but there is another close within 300 yards from the farmhouse now.

5335. The water is not now nearly so good as it was when you first went there?—Oh, dear, no.

5336. Do you keep any servants?—Yes.

5337. How many?—Four men and one girl, and about half a dozen more in the harvest time.

5338. Can you tell us now how much more you pay in the total than you paid in the first year you went to the place?—20*l.* a year I used to pay for my head man at that time. Now I pay 30*l.* a year.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

5339. And the rest?—And the rest get 10*l.* or 18*l.*, according to size.

5340. What used they to be?—About 12*l.*

5341. What about the girls?—The girls about 12*l.*, and at that time they were only getting 8*l.* That is a difference. And another thing again, I have to buy machinery to do most of my work, reaping, threshing, and steam and everything on the farm. It has cost me hundreds of pounds to put those things up.

Mr. Richard Jones.

5342. Have you also to treat your servants better than you used to?—Yes, they are better than I was brought up myself, by far.

5343. Do they work as long hours now as they used to do?—No, not nearly.

5344. Or so much?—Not nearly so much.

5345. Nor so skilful?—Not all of them. It is only by chance you get a skilful one on the farm now.

5346. In what way have you to treat them better. Do you give them better food?—Yes, and not so many hours.

5347. Do you have to supply them with beer, except at harvest time?—Yes, sometimes, when they are bound to have it. I do not like to give them too much beer. If they get too much then they will not work at all.

5348. Do you find the beer question a difficulty with the men?—Yes, because it is in this way. If they get a pint they want two, and if they get two they want three, and then they are done up. A drop of beer in its right place is all very well, but once you give them a pint there is no end to them.

Mr. Seebohm.

5349. Are there many cases in which farms are injured by the deleterious gases?—Yes.

5350. It is quite general?—Yes; if you take the down or upper bank they are.

5351. And there are few of the streams as pure as they ought to be?—You cannot find any stream pure in our district now.

Mr. Grove.

5352. What are the works which cause the damage. Are they tin-plate works generally?—Yes.

5353. The acid from the tin-plate works spoils the water?—Yes.

5354. Have you heard of the members of the county council being round there lately and inspecting them with a view to preventing it?—Not that I am aware of, but they have been round in Carmarthenshire, although not in our district.

5355. Have there been many new works erected the last few years?—Only one since I took the farm, close by the farmhouse.

5356. Do you know anything about the works themselves?—No, I never got a penny out of them, I am working on the farm all the year round, but all the farmers round my neighbourhood get some sort of living by doing something in the works.

5357. So that you do not know whether the masters try to prevent the acid going into the river by settling tanks and so on?—No doubt they could if they tried, without much cost.

Sir John Llewelyn.

5358. You have a lease?—No.

5359. You can go out, then, when you choose?—Yes.

5360. Would fixity of tenure be of any service to you there?—Not at all, I think.

5361. At all events you have the remedy in your own hands. If you find the smoke and water causes too much pollution you can go?—Yes.

5362. You prefer stopping. Perhaps you have an affection for the old place, having been there so long?—You are quite right, Sir John.

5363. Are things getting worse instead of better?—Yes.

5364. I am afraid there is no remedy for it. You are in the middle of the difficulty. You cannot stop the smoke, and you cannot prevent the water being polluted there?—I was told that they could stop the water by a little expense. I have been talking to Mr. Prior, a tin-plate manufacturer, and he told me they could stop it.

5365. I would strongly advise you to write a letter to that effect to the sanitary committee of the county council?—Thank you.

The witness withdrew.

Chairman.

I believe, Mr. Forrest, your clerk has now arrived.

Mr. Forrest: Yes.

Chairman.

What is the statement you wish him to speak to?

Mr. Forrest: He will make a statement that Mr. Evans met him on the way to the office, and he asked him whether it was true that he was going to be turned out of the farm, and whether the notice was to hold good, or something like that, and the effect of it was, my Lord, that he said that if he was not to be turned out he would not offer evidence at Pontypridd.

Mr. Harry Clement Roberts called and examined.

Chairman.

5366. You are a clerk on the Windsor estate?—Yes.

5367. How long have you been a clerk there?—14 years.

5368. You know Mr. Evans very well?—Yes.

5369. Did you see Mr. Evans last week?—Yes.

5370. Did you have any conversation with him?—Yes.

5371. What did he tell you?—He met me as I was going to the office through the fields off the main road, and he wanted to know whether the notice he had received to quit was to hold good.

5372. Anything more?—Of course, he wanted satisfaction, he said, and he showed me papers he had received in regard to the Commission, and said he intended to give evidence, but wanted satisfaction before doing so. He said that his evidence was already prepared.

5373. He wanted satisfaction before going to give evidence at Pontypridd?—Yes.

5374. What did he mean by that?—I inferred he meant that if he had only had the notice withdrawn he would not have given evidence, or have given very different evidence to what he did.

5375. If the notice had been withdrawn he would have had no grievance?—Well, he says he has a grievance in other cases, I think, but I do not know that he would have thought that would be quite sufficient for him.

5376. Are you quite certain that you heard distinctly what he said, as you are very deaf?—Yes.

5377. Absolutely certain?—Yes.

5378. Did Mr. Evans show you any correspondence from Mr. F. W. Evans?—Yes, he did. I read a letter from him.

5379. To what effect?—Saying he had prepared Evans' evidence, and asking him to come and read it through, and also asking him if he knew of any other farmer who could give evidence.

5380. Then the evidence he prepared was the evidence of his grievances?—I suppose so.

5381. That is all you know of the matter?—Yes, so far as that matter is concerned.

5382. Did he use any violent language as regards you or Lord Windsor, or Mr. Forest?—Not at that time, and he has not done so to me.

5383. He never has?—Probably he would not, owing to my position with Mr. Forrest; he knows I am Mr. Forrest's confidential clerk, and he would not probably do it.

5384. You have not heard any threats?—I have heard bad language, and heard him say he has not been treated properly, several times.

5385. He has never used threatening language to your knowledge, either as regards Lord Windsor or Mr. Forrest?—Not to my face, but I have been told he has.

Chairman.

Before we adjourn, I am desired by my brother Commissioners to thank the mayor and corporation for their courtesy in placing this room at our disposal, and for the arrangements which have been made for our comfort.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned.

SIXTH DAY.

6, Old Palace Yard, Westminster, Friday, 7th July 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

LORD KENYON.
SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
Mr. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.
Mr. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.

Mr. JOHN MORGAN RANDALL called and examined.

Chairman.

5386. I believe you are assistant to your brother in the management of Lord Dunraven's estates?—Yes, my brother is the chief agent and I assist him.

5387. Can you tell us what the acreage is?—About 24,000 acres.

5388. Does the property lay all together?—No, very much scattered.

5389. May I ask what has been your experience?—I have been 15 years assisting my brother.

5390. Had you any previous experience of land agency before that, or did you learn everything under your brother?—I learned everything there. My previous experience was connected with the mining part.

5391. Is there any portion of the estate situate in manors?—Yes, a great portion.

5392. What are Lord Dunraven's manors?—The manors of Coity Anglia, Coity Wallia, Newcastle and Cefn Cribbwr, and Penlline.

5393. I shall not ask you anything more about the manors; the members of the Commission who are acquainted with the details will go into that. Are there many fines and charges on the estate?—Do you mean in connexion with the manors?

5394. Yes, in connexion with the manors?—I do not know that I quite follow you in that.

5395. Have you had any recent enclosures?—None.

5396. Have you any squatters' cottages?—No, practically none, I should say.

5397. I suppose we may take it from you that language, politics, and religion make no difference at all in the choice or treatment of tenants?—None whatever.

5398. As to the term of tenancy, what is the date of entry?—25th of March.

5399. Have you much trouble in tenants changing their occupation?—None at all.

5400. What sort of agreements have you?—Unfortunately I have omitted to bring one with me, but I will send one.

Chairman—continued.

5401. How do you fix your rents?—Generally on the basis of a valuation settled between the farmer and my brother.

5402. This is a question you need not answer unless you wish to. Have you many arrears on the estate?—There are some.

5403. Not to any very great extent?—Not to any great extent.

5404. What size are your farms?—Generally about 150 acres, except, of course, the mountain farms, and they are large tracks of sheep run.

5405. How much do they run to?—They will run to 1,000 acres—600 to 1,000 acres—they vary considerably.

5406. Do you allow sub-letting?—No.

5407. Or sub-division?—No.

5408. How are you off for labour?—Well, in the Vale of Glamorgan I think labour is scarcer now than it has been. Many labourers have gone to the works district, where labour is paid for better.

5409. With regard to improvements, are there any improvements made by the landlord? Yes; all the improvements have been made by the landlord; during the last 40 years a sum of 100,000*l.* has been spent in repairs and improvements.

5410. On these 24,000 acres?—On these 24,000 acres. I may say that the agricultural rental of the estate is 10,000*l.* a year, so that the return for this expenditure of 100,000*l.* is exactly one per cent. That is not taking into consideration the value of the land, or the original value of the farm buildings and farm houses. I may say also that every year 25 per cent. of the agricultural rental is spent in repairs. Lord Dunraven has had possession of the estate for the last 21 years, and during that period he has spent 58,000*l.* (this is part of the same period of 40 years), so that represents an average expenditure of 2,750*l.* per annum on repairs, which is really 27½ per cent. and not 25.

5411. Is there any portion of the Agriculture Holdings Act that you contract out of?—

Clause 33, as to the six months' notice instead of a 12 months' notice, and the tenants generally appear to prefer that. The only complaint we have had was from a tenant, that he objected to the year's notice, he wanted to give up.

5412. Now about game. There is a good deal of game round Dunraven, is there not?—Yes; there is game (pheasants and partridges) preserved in the immediate neighbourhood of Dunraven, and at a place called Coity, which is a little distant; hares are very scarce.

5413. No hares?—Scarcely any. They are quite a rare animal. The tenants kill the rabbits. On the Gower estate the tenants have the game entirely.

5414. Have you any peasant proprietors?—No.

5415. Have they all been bought up?—There were some small freeholders, but I do not think many exist now.

5416. Have you any small squires, farmers who have bought their own property and live there?—There are farmers who have bought land as an investment.

5417. And do they generally live on the farm after they have bought, or do they let it?—Sometimes one and sometimes the other.

5418. Do you complain of the migration of labourers?—There is some complaint.

5419. Do you complain of depression?—Yes.

5420. Have you any remedies—have you any ideas you can give us?—I do not know that there is any remedy except lessening the rates on the land, I think that is the only thing. Of course we cannot suggest protection.

5421. You cannot suggest that?—No, I would not suggest that.

Lord Kenyon.

5422. Have you any difficulty in letting farms?—None at all.

5423. You have plenty of applications?—We have plenty of applications.

5424. Do you have more applications for small or large farms?—I do not think it makes any difference at all. There is generally some one who succeeds to the farm naturally, I might almost say—a nephew, son, or son-in-law.

5425. You would give a preference to such an applicant?—Always.

5426. Have you many small holdings on this estate?—Yes, a quantity.

5427. What size?—20, 40, or 50 acres.

5428. And some small holdings of three or four acres?—Yes, very few; there are cases of small homesteads and a few fields attached of three or four acres.

5429. In the case of a cottager has he usually a good garden or piece of land?—Cottagers have generally gardens. We have very few cottages—they are generally let with the farms.

5430. That is the practice on the estate?—Yes.

5431. What is your opinion as to that practice?—I think it is better that the farmer should have it. He has his own labourer then living in the cottage.

5432. You do not think he is apt to treat the labourer in a harsh way?—Oh, no; if he has a good labourer he is only too glad to keep him.

5433. We heard a great deal about the custom of the country. Have you any experience of the custom of Glamorganshire on your property?—Yes. I should prefer a professional valuer to give you the custom of the country. He will give it to you much better than I should.

5434. In your experience, do the tenants like to avail themselves of that custom?—Always; it is the only thing we hear of; we never go further than the custom of the country.

5435. They do not care about the Act?—Not at all.

5436. In some cases we heard that they wished for an improvement to that custom of the country in respect of, I think it was, laying down pasture; that they had no compensation for that?—I cannot tell you that.

5437. I suppose there is no such thing as tenant-right existing on the estate?—Not at all.

5438. What you say simply is, that probably a preference would be given to a son or relation?—Exactly so.

5439. Have you any applications for compensation for destruction by game?—Yes.

5440. And they are usually considered?—Always. The only game we have is the game preserved, and that is pheasants which are bred.

5441. I suppose you would have a valuation on both sides?—Yes, it is generally agreed upon. They come and say that such and such crops have been injured, and some one goes to look at it, and it is generally agreed upon between one of the agents and the tenant.

5442. Do you think the preserving of game causes dissension between landlord and tenant, or the other way?—None at all.

5443. I mean to say there is no doubt, I suppose, that the preservation of game brings the landlord on the estate sometimes?—Certainly.

5444. We examined one of your tenants, Mr. Beynon, and, I think, he complained that he had not seen Lord Dunraven for some time. I suppose he lives a long way off?—Oh, yes, a very long way. He lives down in the Gower district.

5445. You have only a few outlying farms there, I suppose?—That is all.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

5446. Are you the steward of these several manors of Lord Dunraven?—My brother is the steward.

5447. Can you give us any information with regard to these manors, the holdings and so forth?—I think I can.

5448. Take the first manors that you mentioned. What courts are held as incident to that manor?—Leet courts are held, but the courts are held very occasionally now.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

5449. At no time certain?—At no time certain. There is no business to be done at the court except the management of commons, and that is in the hands of a committee appointed at a leet court. In the manor of Coity Wallia they have had lands purchased by a railway company and lands purchased by the county for an asylum, and the commoners have dealt with the purchase money of that.

5450. What are the offices held in connection with the manor? I am dealing with the first manor, Coity Anglia?—Steward, bailiff, haywards, and constables.

5451. Is there any copyhold?—Yes.

5452. In connection with that manor of Coity Anglia?—Yes, in connection with all the manors.

See 24,530. 5453. Can you tell me what are the fines and charges in connection with the copyhold property in Coity Anglia?—In Coity Anglia the fine on admission upon alienation is 2½ per cent. on the purchase money, and the same in New Castle and Cefn Cribbwr. In Coity Wallia the fine is only 6*d.*, irrespective of the purchase. There is no fine on descent, it is simply on alienation.

5454. Does that apply to all the four manors?—No, it does not to Penlline.

5455. What are the fines and charges there?—There are none. There is a heriot on the death of a copyhold tenant. I think that is the only thing except chief rents. They are very small chief rents.

5456. Any customary freeholds?—No.

5457. Has the waste been enclosed on each one of these manors?—No. There are large commons connected with Coity Anglia and Coity Wallia. I do not think there is any waste connected with Newcastle and Cefn Cribbwr now, or it is very small if there is any.

5458. And Penlline?—Penlline was enclosed some years ago.

5459. I think we were told it was in 1860?—Yes; I cannot speak to that.

5460. Do you know whether, when Penlline was enclosed in 1860, there were two plots of land set apart for the labouring poor?—I cannot say. I believe allotment gardens were set out, and I fancy they are practically uncultivated, but I cannot give you that from my own knowledge. That is what I have heard.

5461. Do you know whether the land so set apart was suitable or unsuitable for garden purpcses?—I do not know.

5462. Is it now let for pasture?—I do not know.

5463. Reverting for a moment to the manor of Coity Anglia, is it the fact that the custom of Borough English exists in that manor?—Yes; that is the custom of the youngest son inheriting.

5464. Does the same custom apply to land in Newcastle and Cefn Cribbwr?—Yes, and Coity Wallia, it is the same.

5465. Are the documents in connexion with these manors preserved for any length of time?—I think we have them for very many years back.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

5466. About how many years?—I cannot say.

5467. Who has the documents?—They are kept in the office at Bridgend.

5468. In your office?—Yes, in our office at Bridgend. Of course, on admission a tenant is given a copy of the Court Roll. Lord Dunraven owns the greater part of Coity Anglia himself.

5469. Are you quite certain that the custom as to descent is the same in Coity Wallia as in Coity Anglia?—Yes, I think so.

5470. Is it not the custom of gavelkind?—I think only in Penlline. I think the others are all the custom of Borough English.

5471. I think Lord Dunraven rents the game on St. Bride's Major, does he not, from the Duchy of Lancaster?—Yes, at present; his lease expires on the 29th September.

5472. What is the extent of the Duchy property, roughly speaking?—I really cannot say; about 2,000 acres in the parish of St. Bride's. They have a large common in the parish of Llangeinor.

5473. I was referring to the property at St. Bride's?—I should say it was about 1,500 to 2,000 acres.

5474. Does that extend down to the sea shore?—Yes.

5475. Have any complaints reached you with regard to any charges made by the Duchy in reference to quarrying or any other use?—No, there is no quarrying, except for what is done to get stone for the repairs of the roads. There is a quarry at Sutton which is rarely worked.

5476. Is the land in Gower possessed by the Earl of Dunraven situate in a manor of which he is landlord?—There is a manor in Knelston; Lord Dunraven holds the whole of it, I think, with the exception of the glebe.

5477. Have you anything to say in reference to that manor?—Nothing at all. Nothing happens in respect to it at all.

5478. What is the custom of descent there?—I really cannot tell you; it is not dealt with ever. Lord Dunraven owns the whole of it. I should like to add, in connexion with these manors, that in a sale in an auction-room copyhold land fetches exactly the same price as freehold.

5479. At a sale by auction?—At a sale by auction copyhold land fetches full value. I do not think it would make any difference whether the land was in Coity Anglia, where 2½ per cent. is charged, or in Coity Wallia, where a fine of only 6*d.* is charged.

Mr. Griffiths.

5480. Would you kindly tell us what is the state of the cottages on the estate?—They are in good repair.

5481. And plenty of them—sufficient?—I think so.

5482. I think we had a complaint in Gower that there were not sufficient cottages?—We have had no complaints.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

5483. How many rooms do the labourers' cottages generally contain?—I suppose they contain two rooms downstairs and three up—the ordinary cottage.

5484. Are there any squatters' cottages which have been built on these commons which you speak of?—In St. Bride's Major a number have. That is a common belonging to the Duchy, though that is not one of Lord Dunraven's manors.

5485. Have any of them been sold?—I really cannot tell you. I suppose they have.

5486. To the highest bidder, I presume?—I suppose so.

5487. Do not the cottagers who build the cottages have the first offer as a rule?—Offer from whom do you mean?

5488. From the lord of the manor?—I do not think the lord of the manor has sold any.

5489. Who is it that sells if the lord does not?—The man may sell to another man. The tenant who has built the cottage may sell his cottage to another.

5490. Some tenants complain that their cottages were sold after they had built them?—I know nothing of it. I do not think there are any cottages on Lord Dunraven's commons in connexion with his manors. If so they have certainly not been sold by auction or in any way by Lord Dunraven.

5491. Is it not the fact that these gardens set apart were not suitable for them?—The gardens which were set apart in Penlline, do you mean?

5492. Yes?—I really do not know.

5493. I understood they were not suitable at all?—I do not know their position even. It happened before my time.

Mr. Richard Jones.

5494. Are there many tenants under lease on Lord Dunraven's estate?—None whatever.

5495. There is no demand for them?—No. The tenant never asks.

5496. I suppose Lord Dunraven is quite willing to grant a lease if there is any application?—Well, I do not think he would be. We have had an experience of leases the latter part of last century and the beginning of this. Almost the whole estate was let out on long leases for a period of three lives, and we found when these leases fell in that the old buildings had been maintained, and barely maintained, and no new buildings had been erected, and the consequence was the large outlay which I have been speaking of. Therefore, if leases were granted, I do not think the tenant would be benefited in any way, because he would bind himself down for a period of years, and I think it would be certainly detrimental to the estate.

5497. Has it never been customary to grant leases for short periods, for 14 or 21 years?—We have never been asked for one. I do not think the tenants would wish for it.

5498. They would prefer to be yearly tenants?—They would prefer to be yearly tenants.

5499. Do you think it would be better for the landlord and for the tenant?—To have them as yearly tenants?

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

5500. Yes?—Certainly.

5501. Are there any vacant farms on Lord Dunraven's estate?—None.

5502. Have you in any case advertised for tenants?—Yes, we have in one case, a farm that was let with the Wyndham Arms Hotel, Bridgend. We advertised for a tenant for the house, and for the farm.

5503. That is the only instance?—That is the only instance that I can recollect.

5504. You would, of course, advertise in one of the local papers?—If we advertised we certainly should.

5505. In resuming occupation of land for building or planting, do you generally give notice to tenants?—Beforehand?

5506. Yes, beforehand?—Yes, just before we take it.

5507. What length of notice do you give?—Short notice. It is generally agreed upon. Of course, the tenant would be compensated at once.

5508. It is customary to compensate?—Always, if land is taken. Of course, with reference to the question of land taken for building or colliery purposes, a tenant knows beforehand that the land is going to be taken.

5509. Is that a condition in the agreement?—That we can take land?

5510. Yes?—Certainly.

5511. Subject to compensation, of course?—Yes.

5512. Have you made any permanent reductions on Lord Dunraven's estate?—Some few.

5513. Not many?—Not many.

5514. To what extent?—We have reduced in one case I should think 40 per cent.

5515. Upon a valuation?—No, upon agreement with the tenant.

5516. But the land would be valued, I suppose?—We might value it.

5517. Have you made any abatements?—Yes. Since March 1885 we have allowed 10 and 15 per cent., in most cases 15 per cent. It just depended on the farmer and the rental that we let at. Some farms are let at a very low rental; in those cases the higher per-centage would not be allowed. In fact, there are one or two who have not had any per-centage allowed them at all.

5518. I take it according to that there has not been any general readjustment on the estate for a long period?—No. In 1877 a valuation of the estate was made by an independent valuer, and the result of that valuation was 8 per cent. above the rents that were charged then, but that valuation was never acted upon.

5520. I take it if you could not tell me what has been the fall, that this temporary abatement is done in a haphazard fashion?—Well, of course it is not done on a sliding scale as to the prices; it would be impossible to do that, because prices vary so. We take the general state of agriculture. I should certainly say it was not done in a haphazard way.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

5521. You have not a copy of the agreement?—No. I omitted to bring it with me, but it shall be sent.

5522. Are there any penal clauses in your agreement?—There is a penal clause for ploughing up pasture land.

5523. Is that enforced?—I do not think anyone ever does plough up a pasture.

5524. I suppose the clause is respected?—Yes. I do not think anyone would wish to do away with any pasture that he had.

5525. Is there according to the agreement freedom of cropping for the tenant?—No; he has to crop on the four-course system.

5526. And it is generally observed?—Generally observed. No good tenant is ever interfered with in his cropping.

5527. I suppose you only interfere in cases where the tenant is farming to leave?—Yes.

5528. Do you supply the tenants with copies of the agreement on Lord Dunraven's estate?—Oh, yes. A tenant usually has a copy to take home with him to study before he signs it, and after he has signed it a duplicate is given to him.

5529. To what occupation do farmers on Lord Dunraven's estate bring their children up as a rule?—I cannot say.

5530. You are not sufficiently acquainted with the matter to be able to say?—Well, many are farmers and many go to the works. I do not think anyone could answer that.

5531. Do a great many of them go to the coal pits?—Yes, I think so, and other businesses. I do not think a rule could be laid down.

5532. For which are there the most applications, for farms with small or large holdings?—I do not think there is much difference; we so rarely have a farm open.

5533. I suppose some connexion of the late tenant has it?—It is generally settled—some relation. It is very frequently settled by a man when he feels himself old and wishes to settle his affairs; he has a fresh agreement, and someone else's name joined, such as a son, for instance, and the son naturally keeps on the holding.

5534. Do you, according to the agreement, demand any services beyond the payment of rent from the tenant?—No. Formerly they used to do the haulage for repairs done on their farms, but latterly they have not done it, or if they have done it we have paid them for it.

5535. That is general on the whole estate?—Yes, general; within the last seven or eight years I should say we have given up asking them to do the haulage, and have done it ourselves.

5536. In cases of that kind do you raise percentage on the money laid out on buildings?—Never.

5537. Have you had any applications for reductions in rent latterly?—Yes.

5538. Are they granted?—Generally; generally we agree and make a reduction that is satisfactory to the tenant. We have never lost a tenant or evicted one on a question of rent, we have always settled it by agreement.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

5539. Do you give notice to the tenants when you make abatements?—No, I think the notice would be the other way. We should give them notice if we ceased to make abatements.

5540. Did you give them notice when you made the first abatement?—I should say not.

5541. Then they only bring the sum that is usually paid now?—Now?

5542. Since 1885?—They generally bring the full amount and we pay them back, in the same way as a farmer will pay the full amount and we pay him back the landlord's property tax if he has paid it, or if the farmer has a bill against us he pays us the full amount and we pay him the bill. I think it is the habit of the Welsh farmers to pay the full amount, and to get what is coming to him back in cash.

5543. When you intend making an abatement, do not you consider it a hardship to claim the full rent, because perhaps that tenant would be obliged to part with stock which he otherwise might have held, in order to bring the full amount?—We do not demand the full amount. It is only their habit of paying their rent in that way. They know perfectly well that the abatement will be given them.

5544. And still they bring the full amount of rent?—They bring the full amount of rent, in the same way as I say if anything is due from the landlord to them they would still bring the full amount of rent, and then receive what was owing to them.

5545. Of course Lord Dunraven pays the tithe, and he recovers it from the tenant?—Yes.

5546. Does he recover the sum actually paid, or is there a contract made for the payment of tithe between the landlord and the tenant?—The sum actually paid. Of course that varies from year to year.

5547. You stated, I think, that Lord Dunraven's estate covered something like 24,000 acres?—Yes.

5548. And there were five manors on the estate. Would the whole of that 24,000 acres be in one or other of these five manors?—Oh, no; part of it is in the manor of Ogmore, belonging to the Duchy of Lancaster. They are in different manors, but the chief part of the property is in those manors I have mentioned, and in the manor of Ogmore.

5549. I think it is stated that some of the tenants were copyholders. Would it be a large proportion of tenants who were copyholders in those manors?—Not Lord Dunraven's tenants, I am speaking of a copyhold tenant. The man who holds copyhold property.

5550. In the manor under Lord Dunraven?—Yes.

5551. As a copyholder?—Yes.

5552. Would that class of tenant be a large proportion of the whole of Lord Dunraven's tenants? Would there be as many copyholders in these manors of which Lord Dunraven is the lord of the manor as there are free tenants of his own?—I do not think any of his free tenants, or very few of them, own copyhold property. It is held generally.

5553. What I mean is this: The copyholders are on copyhold land, and they, in one sense, may be called tenants of Lord Dunraven and in another sense they may not. But apart from them you have ordinary tenants from year to year?—Ordinary agricultural tenants from year to year.

5554. Would the ordinary agricultural tenants, from year to year, outnumber the copyholders on the estate?—No, I should think not; but I really could not say.

5555. So that really the copyholders would be a very large proportion of the persons on the land in these five manors?—Yes.

5556. Now, that being so, you stated, I think, that the court leets and baron courts were held only occasionally, when there was business?—Yes.

5557. That business would relate chiefly to the copyhold tenants, I presume?—No, not at all; entirely to the management of the commons.

5558. In which the copyhold tenants and the others would also have rights?—Yes.

5559. Then if it be so, taking the copyhold tenants, they have been probably for generations upon the ground. Do you consider that the cottages and ground held by copyholders are better or worse taken care of than that which is in the hands of the tenants from year to year?—There are no cottages on Lord Dunraven's manors; no copyhold cottages.

5560. No copyhold cottages?—There are farm buildings and farms which are on copyhold property, but I do not think there are any cottages on the commons, if that is what you mean.

5561. Then I must alter my question. These copyholders are farmers?—Yes.

5562. They are above the rank of cottagers?—Yes.

5563. They are men holding 20 or 30 acres?—Oh, yes, 100 acres.

5564. 100 acres of copyhold land?—Yes.

5565. Do they manage their property and keep their farm buildings in better or worse condition than the ordinary farmer who is a tenant from year to year?—There is no difference whatever in the treatment or management of land, whether it is freehold or copyhold, in these manors. One does not know whether it is one or the other until you come to deal with it.

[See infra question 5685, from which it appears that the copyholders above alluded to are rarely occupants of their own copyhold land.—F. Seebohm.]

5566. Then, turning to those who are not copyholders, you stated that most of them were year to year tenants under an agreement?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

5567. And that agreement with the custom of the country of Glamorganshire you consider to be better for them than leases?—Yes, certainly.

5568. But you mentioned that towards the end of the last century they were not year to year tenants, but they held leases for lives—or a great many of them did?—Yes, that is so.

5569. Did nearly all of them hold leases for lives?—Nearly all of them.

5570. Could you tell what was the reason that the system of leases for lives dropped out, whether it was because the landlord found it in his interest not to renew, or whether it was the tenant that found it in his interest not to renew?—It was certainly not in the landlord's interest to renew.

5571. Did the landlord prevent the renewals would you say? It was not the tenant who said, "I do not want it renewed," but it was the landlord who said, "It does not "suit my interest that these leases for lives "should be renewed?"—Leases for lives in the case of this estate were let at a nominal rental.

5572. Of course, when the lives fell in there would be a fine, instead of the nominal rent I suppose, the rental of the estate would be got out of the fines?—No, there would be no fine.

5573. The ordinary plan in the case of a lease for three lives is that when it is renewed there is a fine?—It was not so in this case.

5574. But perhaps your knowledge does not go so far back as to the previous holding before the last of the leases for lives. Of course, a lease for lives would not go further back than a generation, say?—No.

5575. Then the previous generation before that would have also had probably leases for lives. Do you know whether it was so or not?—I do not know. These are the only ones I know of.

5576. You do not know at all what their origin was. You do not know what made Lord Dunraven at that time introduce the system?—It was by way of a mortgage I presume, money borrowed, and a lease granted for lives at a nominal rent.

5577. That is to say, that he took a fine and then let the land at a very small rent?—Exactly; he took a fine, if you call it that, at the beginning.

5578. Yes, precisely, at the beginning?—There was nothing paid afterwards on the termination of the lease.

5579. But if it had been renewed, in the same way there would be another payment for the next 30 or 40 years or whatever it was?—Yes; but the thing was dropped entirely.

5580. Going back to the system, you have no knowledge at present as to what was the origin of it?—No.

5581. Would your records enable you to go back and to say how long it had been the habit on the estate?—Oh, certainly, we should have a record of the farms before the actual lease.

5582. Would it give you much trouble to ascertain in a few instances whether any particular farm had been held from generation to generation under this same system, and when the system began?—No.

5583. I should be very much obliged if you would take a few instances and give us that information?—I shall be most happy to do so.

5584. Then these leases for lives that I have seen belonging to the district in Gower contain certain points which look very much like the same points as the copyhold system, for instance heriots, and certain restrictions against the felling of timber, and things of that kind. Do you know at all whether your estates for lives had any of those incidents?—I cannot say; I should not think they would be allowed to fell timber.

5585. I should be very much obliged if you could ascertain how far back that principle had gone on your estate, if it would not give you too much trouble?—I shall be happy to give it you.

5586. These copyhold farmers of course have the full right of selling their holdings?—Oh, yes.

5587. And they are very nearly, I think you say, of the value and of the character of freehold holdings?—They always fetch the same price at public auction.

5588. Because the incidents to them are so very good. Do you know whether those incidents have been changed recently, or whether they are the ancient custom of the manor?—The ancient custom, I take it.

5589. I think you have not told us what the fine was on death. Are there any heriots or payments on death?—There are heriots on death, heriots of the best beast.

5590. Does this represent the old original heriots of a very long time back?—Yes.

5591. Do you think it is at all probable that these tenants from year to year who had previously had leases for lives were in previous ages copyholders, who had in that way become enfranchised?—I cannot tell.

5592. You have no record of that time?—No.

5593. They are looked upon as tenants of land which is the freehold of Lord Dunraven?—Certainly.

5594. And the others are on what is called copyhold?—Some of it may be copyhold of Lord Dunraven, copyhold of his own manor, some of his own property, I mean.

Professor Rhŷs.

5595. What is the practice on your estates with regard to credit for tenant's rent. What credit do you give the tenant for his rent?—Six months. We collect in August and February the rents that are due the previous six months.

5596. How do you find that work?—I suppose that is to the advantage of the tenant?—Yes, I suppose it is to his advantage to get six months credit, and it is advantageous to him in this way. When a tenant goes into a farm he has heavy expenditure to make; he has to pay the bill for his ingoing and he has also to purchase implements; for that he has to provide money. Practically at the commencement it would be a year before he paid any rent. If he took a farm on the 25th March he would not be asked to pay any rent for that farm until the following February, the latter end of February, so he would get a 12 months' credit.

5597. I see that exactly in the case of a new tenant, but as your tenants go on from generation to generation, so to say, the occasion does not arise so often?—No.

5598. Then what is the advantage of it in that case?—Well, I suppose it really makes no difference as time goes on.

5599. Do you often have applications for laying arable land down in pasture?—No.

5600. Do you have any applications of that kind?—I think we have had applications, but it is generally done without applying.

5601. Do you allow anything towards it?—No.

5602. You are not asked to allow for the price of the seeds, for instance?—I think we have done that in one or two cases, but not habitually.

5603. It is not a rule, I mean?—It is not a rule.

5604. You have been, I think, 15 years in connexion with this estate. You mentioned the abatements of later years. To what extent have rents been raised in past years?—Not at all, except the cases of these leases for lives which have fallen in; but as I said before they were held at a nominal rent.

5605. What would you say would be the average rent on the estate per acre?—It is so hard to say. It is 24,000 acres; and it is 10,000*l.* a year. That is rather under 10*s.* an acre.

5606. Tell us, for instance, what would be the average rent of what you consider your best land. You might make several categories, no doubt, of the land of different tenants?—Yes. Of course we have some that is not worth 6*d.* an acre. We have other land that is worth 1*l.* or 2*l.* It is impossible to give an average price.

5607. Where would the land worth 2*l.* an acre be mostly—near a town?—Near a town good pasture land near a town. Accommodation land runs up to 5*l.* an acre near a town of course.

5608. Lord Dunraven has had something to do with the Ecclesiastical Commissioners in connexion with this estate?—Yes; we purchased a water right at Aberthaw some few years ago in connexion with the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and also in connexion with them spent a certain sum of money in carrying out drainage operations on the Flemingston Moors. That has had the effect of saving this valuable pasture—rich moorland ground—from flooding, and this year it has been an immense benefit to the tenants.

5609. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners do not do anything of that sort themselves?—We did it together, but we were the large owners: they were on one side and Lord Dunraven was on the other. I think we spent about 900*l.* between us. I may say nothing was ever charged for that to the tenants.

5610. Now with regard to an outgoing tenant. Does it often happen that an incoming tenant finds the fences and the farm generally in a state in which they ought not to be?—Yes, we often have complaints, and have to make some compensation to the incoming tenant on account of the bad state of repair of the fences

5611. But is not there an anterior stage to that? Do you not warn the tenants in advance as to the state of their farms?—Well, we do not know of it.

5612. What means do you take to get them to keep their fences and the land in a proper state?—We do not know that their fences are out of repair.

5613. I think you spoke of some purchases of land having been occasionally made in your district by farmers or by small men?—Yes, farmers have purchased land.

5614. How have those purchases generally turned out?—That I cannot say.

5615. Are the purchasers as well off or better off than your farmers?—I really do not know.

5616. Have they made any of those purchases lately within your time?—I have known several farmers who have bought land at public auction as an investment for their money.

5617. But do you know how that has answered?—I do not know at all. Of course some of them keep it in their own hands and others let it out. I really cannot say anything about it.

5618. In some parts of the country we hear a great deal about their being worse off than tenant farmers; perhaps you have not heard anything of that sort?—No. We have one case where we purchased from a small freeholder and kept him on as tenant, and I think his position was better after he became our tenant.

5619. What was the reason of that—that he had borrowed money?—He had borrowed money, and the charges he had to pay on his mortgage were heavier than the rent.

5620. The cottages for your labourers are mostly in the villages?—Yes.

5621. Do they have gardens to them?—Oh, yes, in every case.

5622. About what extent of garden should you say?—I should say about 30 to 40 perches—somewhere between 20 and 40 perches.

5623. Do any of them, so far as you know, wish to have larger holdings?—No, I think not.

5624. There is no desire of that sort?—No, I think not—not on the part of the labourers. They have sufficient garden accommodation, as much as they can cultivate in their spare time.

5625. You say about 40 years ago there was a large exodus of the working classes from your district?—Yes, particularly from the village of St. Bride's Major. There was a large exodus to Salt Lake City. I think they went to join the Mormons, on religious grounds.

5626. Could you assign any reason for this particular creed taking at St. Bride's Major?—I do not know at all. I cannot myself speak to what happened 40 years ago.

5627. But you must have heard a good deal about it?—Yes. I really cannot tell you.

5628. You mentioned here a suggestion that "farmers should be relieved from excessive "rates." Would you mind telling us a little more about that? What do you suggest?—It is hard to suggest in what way it could be done. If the farmer had less to pay it would certainly relieve him.

5629. Some people suggest that the land does not pay its full share. You do not agree with that view?—No. Some people suggest that the entire rent should go for the purpose of rating. I do not agree with that.

5630. But what would you suggest. Would you give us a little more detail: for instance, one could not get rid of the poor rate?—No, but you could assess it in a different way. Now we will take the case of a large tradesman: he is assessed at no higher rate than a farmer, and his weekly turnover would be just as much as the farmer's yearly turnover, and yet he pays practically the same rates; in many cases not so much.

5631. You would have them assessed differently from what they are now?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

5632. I wanted to ask you your opinion about the Glamorganshire custom. The landlords are satisfied with it?—Perfectly.

5633. We have plenty of evidence of what the tenants think about it?—The tenants are satisfied with it.

5634. With regard to Lord Dunraven's property, a great deal of it is arable?—Yes, a great portion of it.

5635. And there we know the custom applies?—The custom applies there.

5636. Does the custom apply to his hill farms?—I really cannot tell you. I think not; that is entirely sheep pasture. They have no arable land at all.

5637. Does it apply in the Gower farms?—No; there is a different custom. There is a custom for the west of Glamorgan.

5638. Do you know anything about land tenure in England?—No.

5639. Then you could not tell us whether there were any grounds for differentiating land tenure in Wales from that in England?—I do not know of any.

5640. Except the custom?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

5641. I think you told us that these Glamorganshire estates of Lord Dunraven's were very scattered?—Yes, very scattered.

5642. Can you tell me how the estate came to be formed? Was it purchased by Lord Dunraven or his predecessors in title all at once?—Some parts of it have been inherited by Lord Dunraven and his father and grandmother.

5643. Of course you cannot speak from your own knowledge but you can speak, perhaps from knowledge which you have gained as agent as to how the estate was formed. Was it by buying up gradually the property of smaller holders of land?—It was formed by marriages, I fancy, going back to a remote period. I think different heiresses brought their properties into one.

5644. As I understand it then, as far as your researches extend, the estate has been gradually formed; partly by purchase, partly by marriages, and so on?—Yes.

5645. About how long has the estate been of the extent which it now assumes?—About 120 years. It has been exactly the same but for some recent purchases.

5646. Have those recent purchases been extensive? I am not asking in detail.—No, not very extensive.

5647. You think it is about 120 years ago, that this aggregation of property assumed its present size and circumstance?—Yes. Some of the property that belonged to it 120 years ago has been sold, but speaking roughly, it is practically the same now as it was then.

5648. Were the manors bought out and out, do you think, at any time?—I cannot say. I expect they have belonged for very many years. I could not tell you anything about them.

5649. Has there been any general valuation or re-valuation of the estate in the present century?—In 1877 there was a valuation.

5650. That is the one you mentioned. When was the one before that, do you think?—Oh, I do not think that there was one. I do not suppose there was one.

5651. Are there any complaints as to a want of allotments at St. Bride's?—No.

5652. Have no complaints come to your notice?—I think we offered some: we offered a field for allotments, but I do not think we had applications for it from labourers.

5653. Where was the field situated?—The field was situated midway between the villages of Southerndown and St. Bride's Major.

5654. How far from where the cottagers would be living?—Three-quarters-of-a-mile, I suppose.

5655. Have the cottagers in St. Bride's Major good gardens or not?—All of them have good gardens.

5656. What do you call a good garden?—A garden of about 20 to 30 perches.

5657. Those are held, I think you said, chiefly from the farmers, are they not?—Yes.

5658. Not direct from Lord Dunraven?—Quite so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

5659. Are you able to go back in the history of the estate 40 years? I see, according to one statement, you say that 100,000*l.* has been spent on the estate during the last 40 years. Are you able to speak to that?—Certainly I am, by the accounts.

5660. How does the present amount of rent compare with the rent 40 years ago?—It is just about the same, except for the reductions that have been made and the abatements that have been allowed I should say it was larger, because a full rent is charged now for those farms that a nominal rent was paid for formerly; the ones that were held on life leases, which I spoke of before.

5661. Has Lord Dunraven a home farm?—Yes.

5662. Does this 100,000*l.* that has been spent on the estate include the money spent on the home farm?—I do not think anything has been spent on the home farm during the last 40 years.

5663. Nothing of importance?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

5664. I suppose the accounts of the home farm would be kept separately, would they not?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

5665. There is one question again. You say that down in Gower, and on the Gower estate, the tenants are allowed to kill rabbits and game in general; why is this distinction made on the Gower Estate?—They asked for it.

5666. Why?—I do not know why. They wished to have the shooting, I suppose. They preferred having it in their own hand.

5667. Would you be ready to grant it on the other estate if they asked for it?—I think Lord Dunraven would like to keep the game in his own hands near Dunraven Castle and near the preserves; I do not think they would ask for that. There is no game on any other part of the estate except those two places, Coity and Dunraven.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

5668. Is Coity a parish?—There is a village of Coity, situate in the parish of Coity.

5669. Then there is a parish of Coity?—Yes; Bridgend is in the parish of Coity.

5670. Do the two manors, Coity Anglia and Coity Wallia form the whole parish, do they divide the parish into two?—Yes, and part of other parishes as well. The parish of Coychurch is in the manor of Coity Wallia chiefly, I think, and the parish of St. Bride's Minor.

5671. Coychurch Higher, and Coity Higher, and Coity Lower?—Coity Lower is in Coity Anglia, and some parts of Coity Higher are in Coity Anglia and part of Coychurch.

5672. In what land division was Coity originally as far as the documents enable you to form a judgment? What particular division or apportionment was called Coity, so far as you can tell from your documents?—I do not know.

5673. Do you find between the two manors of Coity Anglia and Coity Wallia any difference of custom?—No.

5674. Have you any explanation that you can suggest as to the difference of names?—No, I really have not.

5675. Why one is referred to as English and the other as Welsh?—I do not know.

5676. None of the documents that you have seen throw any light upon the matter?—No.

Mr. Seebohm.

5677. There is one question that I wanted to ask. In the last of the four manors that were mentioned, Penlline; I think you stated that the custom of gavelkind was in force?—Yes.

5678. Does that mean that the farms have actually been divided amongst the sons, or that the family holds together?—They can do what they like with it.

5679. Do they generally sell?—I do not know, really; we do not deal with it; we have nothing to do with the manor of Penlline.

5680. Would you find in that manor that the land was more subdivided into smaller holdings than in the manors where, for instance, the younger son inherited?—I do not know.

5681. You have not noticed anything of the kind—any difference?—No.

5682. Then, having on this estate the two classes of landholders, the copyholder who is practically an owner, and the tenant who is only a tenant from year to year, we have, it seems to me, rather an interesting point of comparison between the two. Of course, the copyholder is practically a large peasant proprietor. Now, would you say that your experience was that copyholders who are thus proprietors, are better off than those who are only tenants from year to year?—Yes, but I would not call a copyholder a peasant proprietor at all.

5683. He is too big to be called a peasant proprietor?—Yes; there are many very large estate owners, part of whose property is copyhold; Lord Dunraven's amongst the number.

5684. But still, the copyholder, who is a farmer who pays rent to himself, who simply pays his tithe, is very much in the position of the owner of his farm as I understand?—Well, I do not think every copyhold tenant occupies the land himself.

5685. It is let?—It is let. I should think it is a very rare case for the copyhold tenant to be the agricultural holder of the farm.

5686. It really is that the land is some of it copyhold and some of it freehold, but it is dealt with very much in the same way—it is all in the hands of tenants?—Exactly; no difference is made.

Mr. Griffiths.

5687. You say the estate you represent was re-valued in 1877?—Yes.

5688. By whom was that valuation made, can you tell me?—By Mr. David, of Llandaff.

5689. A local man?—Yes.

5690. Is he in the habit of valuing land in that district generally?—Mr. David is not alive now, but at that time I suppose he was the chief land valuer in Glamorganshire, and the man of the greatest experience, I should say, in Glamorganshire.

5691. Had the tenants any voice in the appointment of the valuer when the estate was re-valued?—Oh, none at all; they did not know it was going to be done even.

Lord Kenyon.

5692. It was never acted upon?—It was never acted upon.

Mr. Griffiths.

5693. On what ground was it not acted upon?—I do not know on what ground. I suppose Lord Dunraven did not like to raise the rents.

5694. He considered himself a better valuer than the gentleman he employed?—Well, I really do not know. I do not think he would have employed a valuer if he thought he was as good a valuer himself.

5695. Do you not think a valuer employed by a gentleman is more likely to try to please him than the tenant?—I should think not—a fair valuer. A valuation is not a question I should think, of pleasing anybody, but a question of ascertaining what is the value of the land.

5696. Why should it not be done in the usual way—for the tenant to appoint one valuer and the landlord another, and, if they cannot agree, to appoint an umpire. Do you think that would be a reasonable way?—Yes, it would have been very reasonable if the tenants had been agreeable to abide by the valuation.

5697. Then you speak with regard to the lowering of the rents. You have given abatements for several years on the estate, have you not?—Yes, since 1885.

5698. Why not give them a permanent reduction for so many years, and they would be able to have their rates reduced by your so doing, whereas as it is they cannot?—It would make a little difference on the rates they pay I admit.

Lord Kenyon.

5699. You said that some recent purchases had been made. Can you tell me what percentage the rent bears on the purchase money?—I really could not tell you.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

5700. I have here "A Booke of Glamorganshire's Antiquities," written by Rice Merrick in 1578, and edited by the late Mr. J. A. Corbett—I daresay you will have seen it or know something of it?—Yes, I have heard of it.

5701. Coity is referred to as one of the lordships of Glamorganshire. Do you know whether any of the documents in connexion with these manors have any reference to the court of the lordship?—I do not know.

5702. Have you ever come across this spelling, "Tercoity"?—No.

Chairman.

5703. There are several questions handed in from Mr. Vincent. The first is, "What credit "is given for the rent"?—Six months credit.

5704. "What is your opinion of the pre-"ferential claim for rent and its effect upon "the tenants"?—The preferential claim of the landlord?

Chairman—continued.

5705. Yes?—I think it is advantageous for a tenant in many cases. A tenant may be badly off and have a difficulty at the time of paying his rent, and the landlord who has a preferential claim would let his tenant get into arrear to a certain extent, which may tide him over a bad time. If the landlord had not this preferential claim he would certainly insist on the rent being paid directly it was due. He might even ask for it in advance.

5706. "Can you give particulars of a joint "improvement effected by Lord Dunraven and "the Ecclesiastical Commissioners"?—Yes, I think I have given all particulars of that.

5707. You can hand that in?—I have given the particulars in my evidence.

Chairman—continued.

5708. "Are improvements made by tenants "as a rule"?—Never. I may say no tenant ever makes an improvement.

5709. "Have you ever heard of tenant's "interest of which the tenant has a right to "dispose"?—No.

5710. "What do you think would be the "effect if such a right existed"?—We certainly do not recognise any right such as you speak of, and I do not think it would be a good thing. I think the landlord would have less interest in his property, and that he might often have to accept a tenant who would be objectionable to him or a tenant who certainly would be undesirable from his point of view, but against whom he could bring no reasonable legal grounds of objection.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. EDWIN W. M. CORBETT called and examined.

Chairman.

5711. You are surveyor to the Bute estate, and your evidence refers principally to the Glamorganshire portion of that estate, of which the area is 22,000 acres?—That is so.

5712. And the estate is situate in or contains several manors?—Yes, the Manors of Llandough and Cogan, Glynrhondda, Miskin, Pentyrch and Clun, Senghenydd, Ruthin, and that of Lystalabont.

5713. We have heard a great deal about your squatters' cottages. Would you like to tell us anything about them? Do you believe they have been dealt with in accordance with the Act?—Where the commons have been enclosed the squatters and others have been dealt with in accordance with the Enclosure Act. Two commons have been enclosed in my knowledge, Hirwain (Award dated November 17, 1869), and Coedpenmaen (Award dated November 2, 1861).

5714. As regards differences of creed, politics, or language, there is no inquiry made or account taken of them, I suppose?—Oh, no, we are perfectly ignorant of them.

5715. Then about Lord Bute's agent; has he any special training?—Yes I should like now to express my regret that my father, who is the principal agent, is unable to be here; he is an old man, and in rather failing health, and is quite unable to come before the Commission. He has been agent for more than 50 years, and he had a special training for it; he has since practised farming on his own account and managed the home farm; he has considerable knowledge of agriculture. I am very sorry that he is not here himself to-day, but it is quite impossible.

5716. Will you tell us under the head of "Occupation" the date of entry for land and houses?—The date of entry for land is the 2nd February; for the house, the May following. The sitting tenant keeps the house and the field and such portion of the buildings as are necessary for the cattle that he may keep till the May following. That is only by the custom of the country.

Chairman—continued.

5717. Have you yearly tenancies on the estate, or leases?—Entirely yearly tenancies, we never heard of leases.

5718. And as regards changes of tenancy, are they frequent on the Bute estate?—No, very rare; and, as in the case of Lord Dunraven's estate, they nearly always go to members of the family; it is practically a succession.

5719. Have you ever known any cases of hardship complained of?—No. I may say there is a most excellent feeling between the tenants and the agents of Lord Bute.

5720. Now about the question of tenancy, can you produce the common form of agreement?—Yes, I have handed that in.

5721. Have you many penalizing clauses in them?—There are clauses to prevent ploughing up of pasture. Then, the tenant has to consume on the premises all hay and clover and so on. I think it is a very usual form of agreement.

5722. May the tenant sell straw?—Not without bringing back manure equal in value.

5723. And there is free cultivation?—Yes; there is nothing said about the four-course system or any special system, but the tenant is to manage the land "in a good and husband-like manner;" and again, "not to mow any portion "of the meadow or permanent pasture land "more than once in any one year."

5724. Are your rents higher in the small farms than the big ones?—I do not think they are for the land. Of course, with a small farm it has got to have its homestead, and so naturally the total rent must be higher per acre to make it equal; but per acre of land, taking land alone, I do not think there would be any difference, as far as one can tell. Rents vary very much, and it is very difficult to say exactly.

5725. What is the rent on the estate—what does it run from?—It runs from 6*d.* to 2*s.* in the hills, to 1*l.*, and in some cases more, close to the towns; but the hill farms and I should think the majority of the land in the hills would be 10*s.* to 15*s.* an acre, and the land in the Vale is about 1*l.*; I should think it would average under 1*l.*

5726. Has there been any increase during the last 50 years?—No; there has been no change at all during the last 50 years, either increase or abatement of the rents. Rents are considered to be fixed very low, and we have made no abatement and made no increase. I am speaking generally. Of course, there have been one or two cases of alterations of rents when new tenancies have been entered into, and perhaps when extensive repairs have been done, or something of that sort.

5727. Who pays the tithes?—The landlord pays the tithes now.

5728. And the land tax?—The tenant pays the land tax.

5729. And the local rates?—The tenant pays the local rates.

5730. Is there any allowance from the owner towards these local rates?—There is an old allowance of 2*d.* in the £; that was made by the late Lord Bute.

5731. What is the size of the farms; what is the average?—They vary very much again. We have a farm of 1,200 acres of rough hill land in the hills; but I think the average would be from 100 to 150 acres.

5732. Is there any scarcity of labour?—I believe there is at times. Certainly last year labour was very scarce at the hay-making time; but that also varies as the works are prosperous or otherwise.

5733. Do you contract out of any portion of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Only the clause relating to notice to quit, clause 33.

5734. You have got a custom of the country?—Yes.

5735. Which is better than the Agricultural Holdings Act?—So it is generally admitted, I think, by everyone.

5736. When he leaves does the tenant obtain full compensation?—Yes.

5737. As far as the game is concerned, is there much trouble?—No; the only part that is preserved is about the village of Llandough and Leckwith, also at Llantrissant, and to a small extent at Llanishen; and there the tenants have always been accustomed and used to it, and there are no complaints.

5738. Have you any small freeholders, men who own their own land?—I have no doubt there are, but I do not know much about them. There are a few, but I think they are decreasing. They are very much in the habit of selling now; they get very good prices.

5739. As regards labourers' cottages, are they very good on Lord Bute's estate?—I think they are fairly good cottages; the newer ones we have built are very good. Of course, some of the old ones are the old-fashioned thatched cottages.

Chairman—continued.

5740. Can you tell us anything about the wages?—I have information from one or two tenants, but I think I had better say that I do not know about that. I think it would be 1*l.* a week without the cottage.

5741. You say the cottage accommodation is improving?—Yes.

5742. Have they any land besides their garden ground?—No.

5743. No small holdings; no allotments?—No, there are no small holdings.

5744. Is there any demand for allotments?—We have met it where there has been a demand. There has been near the colliery villages and towns some slight demand for allotment gardens, and we have supplied them.

5745. Do they hold the cottages direct from Lord Bute or do the cottages go with the farms?—They go with the farms to a great extent, but there are a good many cottages held direct from Lord Bute, particularly in the villages of Leckwith and Llandough; there are a good many cottages there.

See 1–158 25,673, 26,731.

5746. Now I should like you to go to the statements made to the Commission by Mr. Edward John of Cowbridge. Do you wish to say anything about them?—I received a letter this morning saying that you would wish me to give you a written explanation of that matter; that letter was sent to my office in Cardiff on the 4th July, and if I had been at home I should have had plenty of time, but as a matter of fact it was forwarded here. I did not go to my office here yesterday, and I only received the letter this morning. There has been no time for me to prepare a written statement, but I can give you a verbal statement.

5747. Will you tell us if there are any remarks you wish to make?—Mr. John seems to have wished to represent to the Commissioners that the land sold was held on chief or manorial rents. Of course that statement I do not suppose had any weight because it would be manifestly absurd that Lord Bute could sell land held on chief rents or manorial rents. As a matter of fact the pieces of land sold were freehold, exactly the same as any other portion of Lord Bute's Estate. They happened to be small pieces and they were sold principally for the reason that they were a long way from the centre of the estate—detached pieces—let at very low rents and really the rents were hardly worth the expense of collecting; so it was determined to get rid of them; to sell them; but when they were sold the tenants in every case had the first opportunity of buying them at a fair and moderate valuation. Nothing like the price they would probably have fetched if put up to auction, was put upon them. They were offered to the tenants and in a very large number of cases—I think about half the cases—the tenants purchased by private treaty before the sale. Then Mr. John in answer to question 13 said, "For a number of years squatters, as we "call them, had enclosed portions of land

" abutting on commons, or portions of the " commons, for which they paid a chief rent for " a number of years. These enclosures have " not taken place recently, but they have been " held by some owners or different owners for " a great number of years, and during the last " four years to the surprise of everybody the " lord of the manor took and sold the whole of " the squatters' cottages and the enclosures— " honestly speaking, he confiscated the whole " lot of them in this immediate neighbourhood." He says somewhere—I do not know exactly where it is—that they thought they were their own pieces, but as to that I wish to say that where houses have been built on the plots, in every case except two (and I think there were altogether twenty-three cases), they were held on lease or had been held on lease.

See 25,686. 5748. I think you are referring to his answer to Question 118, where he says:—" It was the " general impression and opinion at that time " that there was a great hardship inflicted upon " these people, who really thought they were " the owners of the cottages and enclosures at " the period that they were sold by the lord of " the manor; there was a great deal of talk " about it at the time"?—To show that they could not have thought so, these pieces of land were at the time, or had been held upon leases which distinctly showed that they would have to give them up at the expiration of the leases, all but two cases; there were two cases in which it was not so. Then in other cases, again, the rents had not remained the same; they had been changed; the tenancies had been changed. I find in several cases the pieces of land were held by the adjoining owner, not by the people who had really enclosed them. Then as to being squatters, some were, no doubt, what might be called squatters, but in other cases Lord Bute had held property adjoining, and when the property adjoining had been sold, about 60 years ago, these pieces had been retained for some reason or other, possibly political reasons. I do not know what reason it was, it is so long ago. Then as to the people who are called squatters, I do not think that is a proper name to give to them. Lord Bute claims, and we believe with perfect right, to have the power as lord of the manor to let such pieces of the waste of the manor to people who are willing to build on or enclose them as he thinks proper, provided that he leaves sufficient of the common open for the commoners as pasture. The measure of what is sufficient to be left open is whether the commoners object to the enclosures being made. If they did not think sufficient was being left they very soon would object, and in the past a lot of these pieces were let in that manner.

5749. Then you do not admit that any of these persons whose land was sold had any right or claim to consider that land their own?—None whatever, the statement is absolutely unjustified.

5750. How many plots were sold?—Sixty-nine.

5751. How many were leasehold?—Twenty-eight.

Chairman—continued.

5752. What were the remainder?—The remainder were annual tenancies.

5753. Then a statement was made by Councillor H. S. Davis and Mr. Thos. Williams as to working quarries at Coedpenmaen?—Coedpenmaen common was enclosed under the Enclosure Act. The minerals were reserved to Lord Bute as the lord of the manor, with perfect right to work them on paying compensation for damage done to the surface. In this case referred to by Councillor Davis and Mr. Thomas Williams compensation was claimed; it was land allotted to the overseers, and I think is now in the hands of the Local Board of Health for a public recreation ground. They appointed a valuer and claimed compensation for that; the compensation that that valuer agreed upon was paid.

See 2012, 2026, 25,395, 26,800.

Professor Rhŷs.

5754. You said that the tithes were paid by the owner. I am not quite sure that I understand that. Is there anything claimed from the farmer in the way of additional rent?—Yes; simply since the passing of the Tithe Act you mean?

5755. Quite so?—The rent has been increased by the amount of the tithe. It is a fixed increase and will not vary with the tithe. We took it as it stood at the time.

5756. And with regard to the land tax?—The tenant pays the land tax.

5757. Is that allowed by the landlord?—No.

5758. It is not the same as with the property tax?—No, the property tax, of course, has to be.

5759. I think you said that the freeholders in your district were rather decreasing in number?—Yes, that is so.

5760. Would you give us your opinion why?—Because it is well known in our district that when land is put up to auction very good prices indeed are got for it. There are a number of people who have made money in the coal trade and other businesses who are anxious to acquire little bits of land to live upon or to hold for some reason or other, and so they can do better with it by selling it than by keeping it.

5761. I think you said that you have been building a good many new cottages on the estate lately?—Perhaps I am wrong in saying a good many; we have built some.

5762. Would you mind giving us a description of a cottage of the new kind—the latest kind that you have built?—Yes; there would be a good big living room in front and back kitchen and generally a little wash-house outside to keep the steam out of the house, and three bedrooms.

5763. Are these let to the labourers chiefly?—No, the new ones we have built are generally let with the farms, built at the request of the tenants who have been short of cottage accommodation, but there are old cottages in some of the villages that are let direct.

5764. But the new ones are let by the farmer?—Yes.

5765. Do you think that is a better arrangement?—Oh, yes, I think so certainly.

5766. What are the old cottages like?—They vary very much indeed; they are the old-fashioned thatched cottage with perhaps a couple of bedrooms, but the roof is very low as a rule.

5767. I take it you do not build any thatched cottages now?—Oh, no.

5768. With regard to the depression and the difficulty with regard to agriculture generally, have you any remedy to suggest?—Oh, I dare not take upon myself to do that. That is a thing that is puzzling the greatest statesmen of the time, and it would be a piece of impudence on my part, I think, to suggest anything at all.

Mr. Grove.

5769. Would you consider, generally speaking, that the cottage accommodation is sufficient upon the farms?—Yes, I think it is.

5770. Would you tell us, for instance, what cottages for labourers there would be on a farm of a certain size. Suppose you take a farm of 200 or 500 acres?—No, I am afraid I could not do that, it varies very much indeed. Some are no doubt better supplied than others, and, of course, it depends on the cottage accommodation in the locality, whether cottages can be got apart from the farms. It is almost impossible to say.

5771. Quite so, but are there not cases where you would have farms of 200 or 300 acres without a cottage at all on them?—There would be in the hills. In the hill country they do not require cottages so much; they do not want a great deal of labour (it is mostly sheep-farming), and what labourers they have live in the houses very often, or in some of the places about.

5772. Then I would like to hear what you have to say about the proportion or the amount spent upon repairs?—I am glad you have asked that question. I find that taking the land let to agricultural tenants on Lord Bute's estate, not considering the land let to colliery proprietors and ironwork proprietors, which is a large area, there are 12,500 acres approximately, let to agricultural tenants, the rental of which is 6,600*l.* The repairs during the last five years have been 16,904*l.*, making a yearly average of 3,381*l.*, or practically half the rents. That gives us a rental of about 10*s.* an acre all over the estate, and deducting repairs about 5*s.* 3*d.*

5773. Could you define the way in which that money has gone. Has it gone in repairs generally? Are there any new farm buildings, or can you analyse it in any way?—Yes, I think so. Generally it has gone in repairs pure and simple, but there have been cases of new farmhouses being built and new cottages being built. I find I have here a list of the amounts spent on the different farms, but it does not say for what purpose.

5774. You speak of new farmhouses and new cottages; would there be any new farm buildings for the accommodation of the tenant farmer?—Oh, yes, in some cases.

5775. New?—New, and extensions of old ones.

5776. As well as general repairs?—Yes.

5777. You also say that a very large amount has gone in repairs. Would not that rather indicate that the place has been allowed to go very low before you took it up?—No; I am afraid it is very much the average of the last 50 years.

5778. Very much the average, you think?—Yes. I think it is perhaps fair to explain that we have bought considerably lately, and we have found the places that we have bought in bad repair. That qualifies what I said to a small extent, but that is all.

5779. Those that you have bought in that condition are included in this total?—Yes, we have not charged any more rent in those cases where we have put them into good repair.

5780. Then it would appear from your statement that your repairs are about 50 per cent. of the rent?—Yes, that is so.

5781. Would you consider that something like an average in the district?—I really do not know what other people spend. I heard Mr. Randall's evidence that theirs was about 25 per cent.; I think we have the reputation of doing repairs rather liberally.

Mr. Seebohm.

5782. A portion of it probably would be what might be called capital expenditure?—Capital expenditure without any return in the shape of increased rental.

5783. You stated, I think, what we have had in evidence from other quarters, that almost all the tenancies are from year to year?—That is so.

5784. And it is in reliance on the special custom that that becomes a good arrangement?—Yes.

5785. At the same time, I suppose, you agree with the others that the farms go from father to son for many generations?—Yes, to a great extent. I may say we always consider first the relations, either the son or other relations, of the sitting tenant in making a new letting.

5786. Have you records which would show what the last witness showed, that about a hundred years ago there were leases for lives?—I do not think so of farms, but I do not speak very positively. The records that we have immediate access to go back about 70 years, when the survey of the estate was made, and I do not think there was any land then held on lease; there may have been little bits here and there on short leases, but the general rule 70 years ago was at will.

5787. So that you think tenancies from year to year have been the rule for a long time?—Yes, for a very long time on the Bute estate.

Mr. Richard Jones.

5788. Is there any credit given to the tenants on Lord Bute's estate?—The rents are collected in June and December which are due in February and September.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

5789. You did not enforce that clause in the agreement then?—The clause as to the rent not being paid for 30 days, you mean?

5790. Yes?—No, that is never enforced. That the solicitors advise us is a necessary clause in case of the tenant getting into hopeless difficulties; it is a protection more against his creditors than against himself.

5791. I see you have written opposite the sixth clause here, "This is never strictly en- "forced, the landlord supplying the gates free "of cost"?—Yes, we do.

5792. Has it been the habit to enforce that clause, or what could have been the object of inserting it?—I really do not know why the word "gates" was put in, because we never use them. The clause says that when new gates are required on the premises the tenant shall procure them from the landlord, who agrees to supply them at cost price. As a matter of fact we have always supplied them free—always; and I cannot explain why it is put into the agreement, I must admit. This particular clause might have been copied from an old form and not noticed. There is no object in it whatever. And I may mention with regard to the next part, the haulage, it is very rare for the tenant to do any haulage. We generally do it ourselves.

5793. In cases where the tenant does the haulage do you make any addition to the rent when you carry out repairs?—We very seldom make any difference in any case to the rent on account of repairs. It would be only under some extraordinary circumstances where a man wanted something for buildings that were really not required for the holding, and we might say, "Very well, we will put them up for you if "you pay us whatever the cost is." We have done that in one case to my knowledge near Cardiff.

5794. Have you had a good many applications for extension of building. You must admit that the character of farming has changed a good deal of late years; there is more stock kept. Have you had a good many applications of late years to make additions to farm buildings?—Yes, I think I may say that we have.

5795. You meet the wishes of the tenants in that respect?—Yes, as far as we can within reason. Of course there are cases where they are very small holdings, and where, if we were to spend the money that we were asked to spend on repairs, we should simply get no return at all. It is a very difficult question with a farm building and houses on a small holding, because you cannot get rent to pay any return for what you expend.

5796. I see, according to clause 5, the tenant is not "to mow any portion of the meadow or "permanent pasture land more than once in "any one year." Would you enforce that clause in a year like this?—No, I do not think we should in a year like this. I am afraid he will not get a chance of mowing it once in many cases this year. In fact, I do not think we should enforce it in any case unless a man made a habit of doing it, and was really injuring his land, or likely to be leaving.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

5797. What is your impression as to the character of the farmers on Lord Bute's estate, are they thrifty and hard-working people?—Yes, I have no hesitation in saying they are exceedingly. I have very great admiration for the Welsh farmers. They certainly are a hard-working, thrifty people, and we have between them and us the very best of feeling; never any grumbling or complaint, and altogether they are very well off.

5798. Do you encourage the breeding of better horses on the estate by providing entire horses for the use of the tenants?—We did get a big Clydesdale stallion down, and kept him for the tenants. They had to pay for him. They did not get him free. But it was not a success. I think he was too heavy for the mares in our district. They did not care about him. Also, we keep a good bull. I do not know whether you noticed, but we got the first prize at the Royal the other day, for a heifer bred by this bull, and fourth prize in another case; we got the first prize at Bath, in the West of England, for another heifer bred by him; and so on. We keep a first rate bull, but the tenants have to pay for the use of it. I do not pretend that we keep it for the tenants free.

Mr. Griffiths.

5799. May I ask what is the charge generally made to a tenant who wishes the use of the bull?—I am afraid I cannot tell you that.

5800. In your notes of evidence on depression, you state that the depression is counterbalanced by the increased cultivation. Would you kindly explain that?—It should be increased "population"; that is a mistake in the notes. Our land lies very much indeed in a colliery district; large colliery districts have sprung up requiring quantities of milk, cheese, and so on; and (this is only an expression of opinion), I think, that has to some extent counteracted the general depression. At any rate, farmers in our district have not felt the depression anything like it has been felt in England in the purely agricultural part of the country.

5801. It requires a good deal to counterbalance the present depression. That is what made me ask the question?—Yes, but I think you will find that as your inquiry goes on, in the immediate neighbourhood of Cardiff and the hill district about Cardiff, where the big collieries are, that the depression has not been felt to any great extent. Last year was a bad year; the price of mutton and sheep fell terribly, and I am afraid this year it will be equally bad.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

5802. I understand you are a surveyor, are you not?—Yes.

5803. You so describe yourself. What kind of agency work do you do upon this estate therefore?—My business is more connected with the letting of building ground, the building ground part of the estate.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

5804. For building purposes?—For building purposes.

5805. That would be chiefly, I suppose, within the area of Cardiff or near by Cardiff?—Chiefly, and where there is any building going on in the estate, but of course I have given these notes of evidence after consultation with my father, and it is his experience I am using; not my own.

5806. Does your father, or do you on his behalf attend also to the agricultural portion of the estate, actually to it, I mean?—He attends to it; I assist him generally, and he has other assistants of course.

5807. You are not the solicitor to the estate?—No, my brother is.

5808. Are you the steward of any of these manors, or is he?—He is the steward.

5810. I may tell you at once that a good deal of the information that I should have liked to ask for in reference to what I understand to be the portion of the county in which the Bute property is situate would be upon matters as to which he, as steward of the different manors, could better give evidence than you yourself probably?—That would be so. I could give you some information upon it. I can tell you about the enclosure of these commons of Hirwain and Coedpenmaen if you wish.

5811. May I put a case to you, seeing that you can speak in reference to the relations of Lord Bute to the commoners and the people who are living within easy distance of the Common. Supposing a man were, with your consent, as agent, to build on a waste bit of property and that you having given your consent told him, "You will "be quite safe, but you must pay half-a-crown "a year rent." Supposing he built a cottage upon that; supposing a few years after that you, as agent for Lord Bute, sold the property over his head and turned him out, would that be a hardship or not in your judgment?—As far as I am aware such a case has never happened.

5812. That is not an answer to my question?—No; but it is a case that never would happen.

5813. I want your opinion upon the question whether it is a matter of hardship or not, because you have come here to say that certain evidence that Mr. John gave did not amount to any evidence of hardship as I understand?—I come to say that Mr. John's evidence is not the fact; I say he is mistaken in his evidence; he has not given us facts.

5814. Then let us proceed by steps. Mr. John's evidence was not only evidence of fact; it was evidence of opinion as well. Do you admit that the case I have put to you, if such an one had ever taken place, would be a case of hardship or not?—It depends to a great extent upon the number of years that the person had held the piece of ground. If a man had held the piece of ground for a sufficient number of years to recoup him for his building considering the small amount of rent he paid compared to the real value of the land, I do not think it would be a hardship; I think he would have nothing to complain about.

5815. But if he were turned out before he had recouped himself you think it would be a hardship?—Yes. If we had promised the man, "You "shall not be turned out so long as you pay this "rent," and we did not keep our word, and we did turn him out before he had had time to recoup himself, it goes without saying that it would be a hardship.

5816. But if you gave an absolute permission of that kind, it would be a hardship to turn him out at any time, would it not?—Yes, but such a promise is quite beside the mark, if you will excuse my saying so, because such a promise would never be given on such an estate as ours.

5817. I have not said yet whether it has been given or not, because I do not know. Let me read you the answer given by Mr. Daniel Jenkins: "18 years ago there was an old ruin "there, what they call the old turf house, and "they allowed a workman to build a cottage in "one of the ruins. He asked the consent of "the lord of the manor to build the cottage, "and he gave consent, and he had to pay a "rent of half-a-crown for the cottage, thinking "he was thoroughly safe of the cottage. In "about 12 or 13 years after he had built that "cottage it was advertised for sale here, with "several other little plots." Can you give any information to the Commission in reference to that incident mentioned by Mr. Daniel Jenkins?—Yes, it was not sold. See 1148-1163.

5818. He does not say it was sold. It was advertised for sale?—Then the hardship does not come until it is sold.

5819. Do you recollect that case of your own knowledge?—I do not recollect it of my own knowledge, but possibly the facts are as he says. I do not know that they are, and I do not know that they are not.

5820. He says it was advertised for sale?—It was advertised for sale.

5821. The next question is: "Was it sold?—"(A.) Several pieces, I have three pieces on the "farm myself—adjoining my farm a garden "and a piece of enclosure and two pig cots, "which my poor father had taken. He paid "for those; and those were advertised, but "unfortunately for them they had enclosed the "cottage in those pieces which belonged to my "farm, and I made that objection, and it was "not sold that day. In reference to this cottage "the parties went up to the agent, Mr. Corbett, "and he said he would consider the matter "afterwards, and it came before the leet court "at Llanharran, and the leet court said it was "very hard for them to sell that cottage after "the work and labour in building it, and they "granted that they should keep it in the life of "the man and wife—that is, David David and "his wife. I do not know what will become "of the property afterwards; it will very "likely be sold again"?—But he has got a little bit mixed, I think, in his answer. I think he mixed up the two things, and I can very well understand it. There was a case where a mistake had been made in the boundary and the piece was not sold on account of that. But it is not the case of the man in the middle of the common—David David—but refers to a distinctly different thing. As a matter of fact, when the facts of the case were brought before us it was not sold but it was reserved to the man and his wife for their lives, and I quite fail to see where the hardship comes in under those circumstances.

5822. It may be of course all wrong, and then upon this we want, if you will kindly give it to us, your knowledge of the facts of the case; that a certain number of people had built cottages upon waste pieces of land near this common or on this common, and subsequently they paid rent to the agent of Lord Bute, the lord of the manor, and subsequently the lord of the manor comes and sells these plots. I am not raising any legal question at all, you understand that?—Quite so.

5823. That is what Mr. John complains of as a hardship?—I know it is.

5824. Do you deny the facts or simply say that in your opinion Mr. John's views are wrong?—I deny his facts, and where he is wrong I specify the facts.

5825. I thought he was definite in his facts?—I have tried to explain the circumstances; in every case but two where there were cottages built the people had leases or had had leases of them. How could those people imagine they were their own houses when they held them under lease?

5826. Was it a lease granted after they had built. It may be quite consistent with their rights, but were the leases thrust upon them or not?—These leases were granted 70 years ago. I cannot tell whether it was before or after they had built. No one living now can tell; but we find they were held under lease, so that disposes of Mr. John's statement that they did not know that they were not their own.

5827. I understood Mr. John's evidence that these people were trespassers upon the waste of the manor?—I do not know that it would be right to say they were trespassers. As I have said before, the lord of the manor was advised that he had a right to let such pieces as he thought proper, provided he left sufficient for the commoners; and I do not know that they were any more trespassers than a man taking a plot of land in a town to build upon. It seems to me it is a similar case.

5828. If without any consent at all a man squats and builds upon the waste of the manor he is a trespasser, I suppose?—Distinctly so.

5829. I understood the case put by Mr. John was that?—Well, he did not know anything about it, he cannot know what happened 70 or 80 years ago, any more than anyone else.

5830. Then you do not know?—No, I certainly do not know.

5831. I thought a moment ago you were trying to explain it?—I said I did not know under what circumstances these leases were granted; whether the houses were built at the time or whether they were not built at the time.

5832. Have you one of the leases here?—Yes, I think I have one here.

5833. Perhaps the recital or the tenour of the lease will explain it?—I do not know that it will show very much; they are very different to the leases at the present day. But I will hand you this one. (The witness handed in the following agreement.)

"A duplicate delivered to David Reynolds, 14th June 1824.

"Memorandum of an agreement made the fourteenth day of June, 1824, between David Stewart, of Great Russell Street, in the county of Middlesex, the Agent for and on the behalf of the Most Honourable John Crichton Stuart, Marquis of Bute and Earl of Dumfries, of the one part, and David Reynolds of Pen Lline, in the county of Glamorgan, shoemaker, of the other part as follows:—

"In consideration of the said David Reynolds having given up an existing grant on the hereditaments after mentioned with other, Lord Bute agrees to grant to the said David Reynolds, who agrees to take of his Lordship all that cottage, tenement or building situate at the Danam, in the borough of Cowbridge, with 12 perches of ground adjoining, now in the occupation of Thomas Evan. To hold from the first day of May last for the lives of the said David Reynolds, aged 47 years, Alice his wife, aged 47 years, and David their son, aged 15 years, and for the lives and life of the survivors and survivor, at the yearly rent of five shillings to be paid quarterly, and which the said David Reynolds agrees so to pay, free from all taxes, rates and deductions whatsoever. He further agrees to put, keep, and deliver up the cottage and buildings in good and complete repair, on having rough timber in the woods, lime at the kiln, and stones at the quarry (which several materials Lord Bute engages to supply), the said David Reynolds hauling the same, and at his own cost, doing the repairs, from time to time, to the satisfaction of Lord Bute's agent. The said David Reynolds is not to sell, assign, or in any other way, than by his last will, part with his lease, or his interest therein, or in the said cottage, without Lord Bute's own written approbation, being, however, at liberty to let the cottage.

"As witness the hands of the said parties:

"D. STEWART.

"DAVID REYNOLDS.

"Signed by the parties in the presence of

"WM. BULL."

It is endorsed: "Lanblethian—Agreement "with David Reynolds for a Cottage at Cow-"bridge for three lives. Rent 5*s*."

5834. This is a memorandum of agreement, dated 14th day of June 1824, between the agent of the then Marquis of Bute on the one part, and one David Reynolds of Pen Lline, shoemaker, of the other part, and it says: "In "consideration of the said David Reynolds

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

" having given up an existing grant on the " hereditaments after mentioned with other, " Lord Bute agrees to grant to the said David " Reynolds, who agrees to take of his Lordship " all that cottage, tenement, or building, situate " at the Danan in the borough of Cowbridge, " with 12 perches of ground adjoining now " in the occupation of Thomas Evan. To hold " from the first day of May last for the lives " of the said David Reynolds, aged 47 years, " Alice his wife, aged 47 years, and David their " son, aged 15 years, and for the lives and life " of the survivors and survivor, at the yearly " rent of five shillings." That, Mr. Corbett, is a memorandum of agreement for a lease of an existing cottage, tenement, or building?—Yes, that particular one.

5835. It appears it was in exchange for an existing grant. That does not seem to me to touch upon such a case as Mr. John had in view. That is a lease for three lives, and it is interesting in that regard?—Yes; well I only mention the fact that these were in the year 1824. Out of 23 I think it is, that built upon them, there were only two which were not at that time either held under lease or under agreement for lease. I put it to show that the people knew that it was Lord Bute's freehold, and that it was nothing in the nature of a chief rent, or as long as they paid us a nominal rent they would keep their land. I think that perfectly clear when they had leases.

5836. The document which you put in does not show anything of the sort. That does not seem to be the case Mr. John is referring to at all. Mr. John said the squatters had fenced in portions?—He makes a general statement.

5837. Not quite so: " The squatters had " fenced in portions of such waste land, and " the chief rent was paid to the lord of the " manor, the Marquis of Bute, or to his agent " Mr. Corbett. After these people had built " upon this waste land and enclosed it, and paid " rent to the agent, the enclosures were sold, " and they were turned out"?—Then I say to that it cannot be the case that they were ignorant of the terms they held it upon, because the terms are set out in these leases in nearly every case.

5838. We are not enquiring into the legal rights here. It does not matter, according to Mr. John's argument when it took place, but supposing it took place 100 years ago?—I cannot put it clearer than that; if that is not clear enough for the Commission I cannot put it any clearer.

5839. In the year 1823, we will suppose a man very improperly goes and encloses a bit of this common, of which the then Lord Bute was lord. His agent, the agent of the landlord, finds that he has, and trespassed and improperly built the cottage, and then says to him, " Well, " never mind, you have done it; now you pay " us 5*s.* a year rent," or make him a tenant from year to year, or supposing a lease for three lives is given upon that. The point that Mr. John is making is, that it is a great hardship that these people should be turned out, it may be in 70 years or 20 years, having been treated, as it were as copyholders of the manor?—No.

5840. Not as persons who had built under an ordinary building lease?—Exactly the same.

5841. That they should be treated as persons who had no legal or moral claim to the property at all. That was the gist of Mr. John's complaint?—Well, my answer to that is that I do not agree with him.

5842. Can you give us any information as to how many of these pieces of land that were sold by Mr. Alexander come under the general description I have mentioned or not?—Twenty-eight of them were held under leases.

5843. Leases similar to those which you put in?—I have not seen them all, but I take it they would be. Some were more recent, and would be the modern form of lease.

5844. In other words, I may take it they were pretty old leases?—A great number of them were in existence 70 years ago.

5845. And at very small or nominal rents?—Yes, small rents; half-a-crown, five shillings, and so on.

5846. What have you to say to Mr. Alexander's evidence?—I have nothing to do with his evidence at all.

5847. Have you read Mr. D. T. Alexander's evidence?—Yes, I have read it in the newspaper; I do not think I have read it in the official print; but he gave his evidence of his own notion; we did not ask him to give evidence. See 1762–1803.

5848. That is what struck me at one time. I see at question 1768 in answer to Professor Rhŷs, Mr. Alexander says: " For instance, rents " are stated here to have been chief rents. My " instructions were that they were absolute " rents, and not chief rents." Of course he is quite right from a legal point of view, but we were not upon the question of law at that moment at all, but upon the question of what was just and what was right. The point that Mr. John had been making, although Mr. Alexander did not seem to observe it, was that these people were paying such small rents that virtually they thought they were copyholders of the manor?—Well, I do not think he was justified in saying it, and I do not believe any of them thought it.

5849. And he goes on to say that: " But so " far was Lord Bute anxious that these people " should retain their holdings that my instruc- " tions were to receive anything fair in con- " sideration of the properties which had to be " sold." What explanation can you give of those instructions?—Well, Mr. Alexander forgot himself. The real state of things is what I explained to begin with; that we made what we thought a fair valuation in the interests of the property under all the circumstances, and offered it to the tenants at those prices. I do not pretend they were nominal prices. I say they were fair prices—they were less than we should get if put up to auction doubtless.

5850. Mr. Alexander is an auctioneer of experience?—Yes, very great experience.

5851. And you employ him?—Yes, but he did not fix the prices. He got confused evidently. He made a lot of mistakes in his evidence; he did not go as our representative, and I simply say that his evidence is not correct.

5852. I certainly thought Mr. Alexander was answering to the best of his ability, just as the other witnesses had been doing?—Yes; no doubt he did not wilfully say anything that was not true.

5853. Have you the valuations in writing?—No, I have not them with me, but I can furnish you with the amounts that everybody paid for the land, if it is considered at all essential.

5854. Perhaps it might be just as well?—I cannot do it now, but I can send it on afterwards.

5855. I am not expressing any opinion of my own upon the matter; I have been endeavouring to bring to your notice Mr. John's contention. I still confess I do not understand this sale. Do you know whether it gave rise to any irritation in the district?—I believe not. None came to our ears. None of the tenants protested. The only protest came from some of the adjoining landlords, who thought they ought to have had the first offer of the pieces. I never knew there was any irritation or ill-feeling about it until Mr. John gave his evidence. There were two or three cases in which the pieces were withdrawn from sale; there were widows and two or three people who were unable to pay, and we let them keep them for their lives at a small rent. We were intending to treat the tenants fairly in the matter, and I am convinced that we have not only done so but we have treated them liberally.

5856. Mr. Alexander said in answer to question 1778: "Why should he offer property at a "nominal sum if there was no peculiarity about "it? It is a matter for Lord Bute and not for "me"?—My answer to that is that he was wrong. They were not offered at a nominal sum; they were offered at a moderate but fair value in our opinion having regard to all the circumstances of the case. Besides which Lord Bute is not a grasping landlord, who wants to get the uttermost farthing for every bit of his property; he would let these old tenants have them on better terms than he would let strangers have them.

5857. It is a question what was done?—We let them have them at what we considered were very moderate prices, but not fairly to be called nominal prices.

5858. I want to bring it clearly to your mind what Mr. John's contention was, to give you an opportunity of answering it?—If I may be allowed in just a few words to recapitulate what I have said, I think it may be as well, as I do not seem to have convinced you.

5859. I have expressed no opinion at all?—Not exactly in words, possibly. Where the people have built houses on their land, in nearly every case they were held under leases. That is the point. That shows that Mr. John was wrong in saying that they thought they were their own pieces of land. In the other cases where they were not held under leases, the tenancies and the rents have been altered in several cases, and there was every reason to know that we treated them as freehold property. But even supposing a person had imagined it was his own freehold as long as he liked—I am talking not of the places where there were buildings, because they could not have imagined it in those cases—but in the case of small enclosures where they had a piece worth a pound or so for a shilling a year for 70 or 80 years, they had recouped themselves over and over again for making the enclosure; so that in those cases there could be no hardship either, even if they had thought so.

Lord Kenyon.

5860. There was an instance brought to our notice at Pontypridd of a recreation ground where there was some complaint made. Do you know anything about that?—Yes, that was on the Coedpenmaen Common. A portion of that common was allotted to the overseers and churchwardens of the parish of Eglwys-ilan for the recreation of the people, and handed over afterwards to the Pontypridd Local Board—they have not done anything to it, but that is by the way—but the right to and of getting the minerals was reserved in the Award to the lord of the manor, Lord Bute, provided he would pay compensation for any damage he did to the surface. The Local Board made a claim for compensation, and appointed a valuer to settle it; that valuer did settle it, and the amount was paid, so that I fail to see where any grievance comes in there. I may mention that no tenant of Lord Bute has made complaint; all these people are irresponsible outsiders. See 575

5861. It was originally a piece of rough ground outside?—Yes, rough rocky ground.

5862. You mentioned the fact of the repairs. Did you include in your statement of 3,000*l.* odd per annum any gifts of bone or draining?—No.

5863. Simply repairs to farm buildings?—That is all. We never gave any bone, and we have not done any draining lately; it very soon chokes up on most of our land.

5864. You have not been asked to do any in recent years?—No.

5865. Have you had any applications to assist in laying down pasture?—No, we never hear of that.

5866. With regard to abatements; have you made any abatements?—We have never made any abatements as a general thing; our policy has been to let our farms low; we do not make increases when the times get better, and we do not make abatements when they get bad, so that the tenant must provide for the rainy day, and when the times are bad. That has been our policy; I do not know whether we shall be able to continue it in such times as we are getting now.

5867. Do you have many applications for farms?—Oh, plenty. We have dozens.

5868. The tenants do not leave?—No, never, except in case of death.

5869. Have you many arrears?—No, practically no arrears at the present time with the agricultural rents.

5870. I forget what you said the average rental was?—The rental is 6,600*l.* for 12,500 acres, but the land near Cardiff in what we call the Vale of Glamorgan is from 15*s.* to a pound.

5871. That is very good land?—Yes, it varies; some is very good. The better land is 1*l.* The best land we have is 1*l.*, with the exception of some at Cardiff where it is partly used for garden, and there the farmer pays 2*l.* a year, and there is also some grass land near to the town where we get 2*l.* a year for it.

5872. Why are these penalising clauses in the agreement inserted? Are they inserted as protective clauses?—Protective clauses, in case we get hold of a thoroughly bad tenant, who begins to ruin his farm as he is leaving. As long as the tenant is likely to continue we never find fault with him.

5873. You think it would be foolish not to insert some such clause?—Yes, you must have it for your protection, I think.

5874. What would you consider to be the percentage that the landlord gets on the capital that he has in land?—That is a very difficult question. I think the best way of answering that is, that the experience of recent sales of land about Cardiff has been that people would do very much better to sell their land than keep it. There was a sale the other day of land belonging to Sir Joseph Spearman, which sold at from 40 to 50 years' purchase, after making deductions for ordinary repairs, not such repairs as we do, but taking about 10 or 20 per cent. for repairs. As a general rule it would pay much better to sell than to keep.

5875. Are the cottages on this property held direct from the landlord or are they let with the farms?—A great many of them are let with the farms, but there are others held direct.

5876. Which do you think is the better plan?—Those held direct are not occupied by farm labourers. They are occupied by people working on the railways and at the docks and places about. I think it is a much better plan for the farmer to have them in his own hands, because then he has better control over his labourers.

Chairman.

5877. There are four questions handed in by Mr. Vincent. "Apart from what Mr. John "states, do you believe these people were "squatters at all, or trespassers from the "beginning"?—Well, that is going back fully 70 years, and it is old history; I cannot say.

5878. "Are penal clauses in the agreements enforced?"—I have just answered that.

5880. "Were any and what protests made on "the occasion of the sale of these squatters' "holdings?"—I have said already I do not believe there were any. I ought to say that I was not there myself, but I have enquired from those who were, and they say no protest was made except one from a solicitor to an adjoining landlord, who said it was too bad to advertise them for sale and then not to put them up.

Mr. Seebohm.

5881. With reference to this lease that you have put in, I see it is only a 5*s.* rent, so therefore, it cannot have any political origin. You stated I think that you have the records for 60 years. Do not you think if you were to go beyond 60 years you might find that your tenants from year to year held under somewhat similar leases to this?—I really cannot tell.

5882. Would it be too much trouble to enquire in your office?—I could get it done, but at the present time my brother, who is the solicitor and who has the charge and knows where these documents are, is away, but when he comes back, which will be perhaps in a month's time, I will ask him to look them up, and give you any information, but I think it is very doubtful whether we could give it to that extent.

Professor Rhŷs.

5883. Some portion of the Bute estates are situate in the hills?—Yes.

5884. Where the tenants, I suppose, speak Welsh?—Yes.

5885. Do you have any difficulty with regard to the language?—None at all. Our cashier who collects the rents is a Welshman.

Re-examined, 26,731.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JAMES EDMUND VINCENT called and examined.

Chairman.

5886. You are secretary to the Landowners' Association of South Wales and Monmouthshire, and your offices are at 8, Princes Street, Westminster?—That is so.

5887. Are you prepared to answer any questions that may be put to you by members of the Commission, if such questions relate to matters within your knowledge?—Yes.

5888. And if they do not involve a statement of facts which have come to your knowledge since your appointment as secretary?—I ought perhaps to explain that. When I was appointed Secretary to this Association, I sent out a kind of catechism of questions, marked at the top, "Private and confidential," to various members of the Association and various other landlords. I got of course answers to a great number of those. It is clear I cannot reveal the answers to those questions except in cases where I have asked leave. So when it appeared to me convenient that I should tender to the Commission a statement of abatements and reductions, and such observations as to the history of the rent which were made, I sent round a circular to each of the people who had answered questions, to see if he, or she, as the case might be, objected to my using these precise figures about the abatements and reductions, and history of rent, I hoped that they would say so. Other questions are not covered by that, but I thought it was necessary to make that explanation.

5889. You claim to have made a special study of the Welsh land question for some years?—I do.

5890. You produce a statement in five columns, headed name and address of landowners; name and acreage of estate; with the abatements, reductions, and observations made by the respective landowners as to the history of the rental?—Yes, that is correctly extracted from the returns which were made to me.

5891. You will produce, if required, the original documents?—Yes, I have them here.

5892. From which the returns were extracted?—Yes, I have them here for inspection.

5893. But you cannot produce them at present?—I can do it at this moment.

5894. You are prepared to pledge yourself by oath if required, to the correctness of these statements?—Yes; I think I can show it to you very easily. Here is one of the cases that I have in this book.

5895. In your paper you produce a list altogether of 28 owners of property, the highest holding being 43,692 acres, and the lowest being 107 acres?—Yes, that is so.

5896. The total being 158,928 acres in the hands of 28 persons?—Yes, all in Glamorganshire.

5897. All in one county?—Yes.

5898. Can you give us the acreage of that county?—I am afraid I cannot at this moment.

5899. You can hand it in?—Yes.

5900. So as to see what proportion those 158,928 acres bear to the rest of the county?—I should say in all these cases there is great difficulty in dealing with Welsh counties. The acreage looks large, but a considerable portion of it is mountain land.

5901. Have you any tabulated statement of the rental of this enormous lump of land?—I have no statement of the rental in South Wales at all. I found there was an objection to answer about that.

5902. That is a matter you are not at liberty to state?—No, I have not got it. I did not ask it. I was told I had better not.

Chairman—continued.

5903. You have not any idea of what the amount of money lent on this enormous piece of land is?—No.

5904. You did not ask and you did not get it?—I am reasonably sure if I had asked for it I should not have got it. I mean people will not tell you what they owe.

5905. They will not tell you what their estates are mortgaged for, and their rents?—No, that I know to be the case; but in South Wales and in North Wales the basis of contribution to these Associations is usually with reference to the rental. A man will say, my subscription is too much, because I am encumbered; but he will not tell you how much he is encumbered, no one of them ever will.

5906. Practically what you are prepared to give us is the name of the owner, the address, the name of his estate, and the number of acres he holds?—And the amount of his abatements and reductions, and observations as to the history of the rent made by him or her.

5907. The rent not being given?—Quite so.

5908. I do not think it would be advisable to go through this now. It will appear in your evidence, and we can ask you about it hereafter?—Quite so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

5909. As I understand it, you have got, in the book which you call the book of original documents, all the facts upon which you have based this general statement?—Yes. I have the authentic returns of the various landowners, from which I have extracted this statement.

5910. You do not know it of your own knowledge, and you would be glad to accept their statements?—That is the exact value of the statement so far as it goes. Every one of them is in their own handwriting or in the handwriting of their agents.

Chairman.

5911. You will not mind answering any question about this later on?—I will answer any question you please. I propose to give you a table for every county.

5912. We are much obliged to you for having compiled it, at what must have been a great deal of trouble?—I am only too glad to put it in in that way, otherwise I should have had to call each separate person, and there might be 100 people to be called.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

5913. You are only the conduit pipe in giving us these particular facts?—Exactly. (The witness handed in the following statement.)

GLAMORGANSHIRE.

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to History of Rent.
A. C. Bruce Pryce, Abbeyholme, Cheltenham.	Monknash, near Bridgend (3,100 acres).	In 1882 we returned the tenants 5 per cent. on the agricultural farms.	In the same year, as the decline of prices of produce seemed likely to last, the estate was revalued, and the rents reduced on an average of about 10 per cent. In 1886 there was a further reduction on one large farm, and again, in 1889, there were further reductions, so that the total rents (including tithes), which in 1878 were 2,377*l.* are now 1,850*l.*, equal to a reduction of 25 per cent.	The whole estate was re-valued in 1873, and that re-valuation increased the rents about 7½ per cent. The Monknash Estate was re-valued in 1882, and the rents reduced as I have mentioned.
Marquis of Bute, Cardiff Castle.	Glamorganshire Estate (22,000 acres).	No, except in one or two exceptional cases not referable to agricultural depression.	No, except in one or two exceptional cases.	The estate has not been revalued as a whole within the last 50 years. Rents have not been raised except in one or two instances under very exceptional circumstances.
Godfrey L. Clark, Talygarn, and Mrs. Jackson, Manor House, Dawlish, in moieties.	The Heath Estate (2,745 acres in Glamorgan principally and Monmouth).	Per-centages have been allowed during the years 1879, 1886, 1887, 1888, and 1889, and when wanted by the tenant time has been given for payment.	No permanent reduction has been made.	The estate was re-valued in 1872, but the variation in rental was small.
D. H. Davies, Morfa House, Llantwit Major, Cowbridge.	107 acres - -	Reduced 30 per cent. since 1877.	- - - - - -	I did not succeed to the property until 1874. I believe this property was advanced 10 per cent. in the year 1857. The tenant at this rent, that is something less than one pound per acre, gets on fairly well.
Frederick Lewis Davis, Abergavenny.	Rhoose Farm, near Cowbridge (194 acres).	No - - - -	About the year 1880 my father reduced the rent from 250*l.* to 200*l.* a year, making a reduction of 20 per cent. permanently.	The rent of this farm has not been altered for 60 years, with the exception of the reduction of 20 per cent. referred to.
Earl of Dunraven, Dunraven Castle, Bridgend.	Dunraven Estates (24,000 acres).	Abatements of rent commenced being made in the year February and Lady-day 1885, to February and Lady-day 1886, and have continued every year to the present time, at the rate of 15 and 10 per cent., according to the circumstances of the case, the great majority at 15 per cent.	In some cases, not many, a permanent reduction has been made.	The estate was valued by an independent valuer in 1887 for purposes of rental. His valuation exceeded the rents charged by over 8 per cent., but the valuation was not put in force.
Mrs. Gwyn, Dyffryn, Neath.	Dyffryn (3,510 acres)	Yes, frequently; amounts of 10 per cent., 15 per cent., and 20 per cent. have been remitted to individual tenants, leaseholders, as well as yearly tenants. 10 per cent. all round was remitted at the last rent audit.	Yes, many of the rents have been permanently reduced. During the last 12 years, ending September 29th, 1892, the rental of the Glamorganshire Estate has been reduced about 8 per cent. all round.	There has been no re-valuation of the estate.
Captain J. G. R. Homfray, Penllyn Castle, Cowbridge.	Penllyn Castle Estate (2,025 acres in Glamorgan and Monmouth).	Yes, from 5 per cent. to 10 per cent.; for the last rent audit, 15 per cent.	Yes, some in the case of old tenants.	The estate has not been revalued, nor have rents been raised during the last 50 years.
O. H. Jones, Fonmon Castle, Cowbridge.	Fonmon Castle (1,100 acres).	Yes, regularly every year. Since 1879 the amounts vary from 5 to 20 per cent. on different farms and at different times.	Yes, on two farms, about 12 per per cent.	The estate has not been revalued. Rents were raised in some instances by my late father, I think, about 1870.

This farm is situate in the parish of Cilybebyll in Glamorganshire; it consists of a dwelling-house with suitable farm buildings and 130 acres of pasture land; from the above figures it will be seen that the rent inclusive of tithes amounts to about 4*s.* 6*d.* per acre.

* Rent reduced. Tenant paid tithes until 1891.

N.B.—It will be seen that in the last seven years nearly 20 per cent. of the rent has been paid away in repairs.—R. H. M.

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to History of Rent.
James Lewis, Plas Draw, Aberdare.	Llwydcoed (1,800 acres in Glamorganshire and Brecknockshire).	10 per cent for the last seven years, excepting in 1889–90, and 15 per cent. for the half year ending August 1892.	No.	—
Sir William Thomas Lewis, The Mardy, Aberdare.	Glamorganshire (1,200 acres in Brecknockshire, Glamorganshire, Carnarvonshire, and Monmouthshire).	(Abatements in Breconshire)	Reduction in Monmouthshire -	I have only acquired the farms within the last 20 years, and there has been no re-valuation since they have come into my possession, nor have rents been raised during the time.
Mrs. Mackintosh, of Mackintosh, Cottrell.	Llancaiach Estate (held in equal moieties with Edward Rhys Wingfield, Esq.), also separate estates at Cottrell and Taffswell (5,025 acres).	No abatement on Llancaiach Estate. A rebate of 10 per cent. made to Cottrell Estate tenants last audit.	No. Cottrell Estate was only acquired in 1891, when it was valued.	The estate has not been revalued. The rents are practically the same as they were 50 years ago.
Major Robert Henry Mansel, as trustee for Mrs. L. A. Mansel and own property.	Glamorganshire (130 acres).	Yes, 5 per cent., 6¼ per cent., 17 per cent., 9 per cent., 10 per cent., 8 per cent. (See statement sent by Major Mansel.)	—	The estate has not been revalued, nor have rents been raised so far as I am aware.
John Cole Nicholl, Merthyr Mawr.	Merthyr Mawr (3,154 acres).	Yes, 1879–1887 to all the tenants; a special allowance to each tenant, not a general per-centage, as the rents are very uneven. Some tenants with high rents get allowances every year, though their rents are nominally the same. Others get allowances frequently, while the very old takings seldom get allowances as the rents are low. Rents are never raised on the occupying tenants.	Yes, by abatement continued year by year, or by permanent reduction whenever necessary. Farm. / Old Rent. / New Rent. Llanffa - - / £ 400 / £ 320 Clement and Beors. / 123 / 120 Wick - - / 90 / 80 Candlestone - / 205 / 190 Witney - - / 210 / 190 Laleston - - / 44 / 32 Croesgwtta - / 180 / 150* Merthyr Mawr - / 400 / 320 Pentrellwnt - / 180 / Annual allowance, 15*l.* per annum. Tyla - - - / 110 / Annual allowance, 7*l.* per annum. * Further offer of a reduction of 16*l.* per annum 1892.	Estate has never been revalued. I am told by tenant that one farm was re-valued and rent raised for selling purposes and never reduced. However, it is now particularly low rented. The usual plan is to re-value farms on death of the tenant, and to re-let on that basis. The new rent is generally higher than the old one as the old rents are below market value, in many cases being very old. This plan has not been invariably carried out. It is the rule never to raise the rent on the occupying tenant on this estate.
Thomas Penrice, Kilvrough near Swansea.	Kilvrough (5,500 acres).	No substantial abatement has been made on this estate for the last 50 years, nor have the rents been raised to any appreciable extent.	See in "Abatements" column -	The last valuation of the estate was made nearly 50 years ago, and its effect was to equalise rather than to increase or reduce the rental. Rents have not been raised "to any appreciable extent" during the last 50 years
C. J. Collins Prichard, and Mrs. Prichard, 29, Victoria Square, Clifton.	Pwllywrach, parish of Colwinstone (900 to 1,000 acres).	We only came into possession of the bulk of the estate since the latter end of 187-. Since 1878 abatements have been made to tenants varying from 5 to 15 per cent., and in one case the entire half year's rent of one farm, 40*l.*, was given back, and this put the farmer on his legs.	In 1889 a permanent reduction was made of 15 per cent.	We do not think the estate has been revalued during the last 50 years. The Village Farm was slightly raised by the late owner. One farm, the Tydraw Farm, formerly let at 25*s.* an acre, is now let at 15*s.* an acre, including tithes.
Lewis William Shedden, Graigwen Lymington.	Craigwen and Pontypandy (430 acres).	I have never been asked to grant any abatements, or return any per-centages.	No, there has never been any occasion.	The estate has not been revalued during the last 50 years. The rent of Craigwen Farm was raised 5*l.* last year when it changed tenants, the out-going tenant having made sufficient money on the farm to retire.
Sir Arthur Stepney, Bart.	The Stepney Estate (about 180 acres in Glamorganshire).	Ten per cent. allowance from rent during from 25th March 1885 to 25th March 1888. In the last 12 months of this period we also allowed the rates on the 10 per cent. since we have been giving in kind.	—	A valuation chiefly for private information, and which was not acted upon, was made in 1880, and on this small quantity of land in Glamorganshire the valuation showed an increase of about 12 per cent.

Miss Talbot, Margam Park.	Margam and Gower (43,692 acres).	In 1892, 15 per cent.; in 1886, 25 per cent.; and in 1881, 20 per cent.	In very few cases. The total reduction would not exceed 150*l.* a year on the Margam estate. In Gower none of any consequence.	The estate has not been revalued, but during the last 36 years there has been a revision of the rent in every case of a new tenancy. Rents have been raised in a great many cases when a change of tenancy has taken place, but only then. Until 1858 there was hardly any change, but from that time until 1880 there was an increase in the rent when the circumstances would admit. In Gower the raising of rent on change of tenancy has not uncommonly been the result of competition among applicants.
Colonel Turbervill, Ewenny Priory.	Ewenny Priory (3,000 acres).	To my knowledge for the last nine years half of all local rates have been remitted, and generally 5 per cent. in addition; also during the last six or seven years the landlord has paid all the tithes, which have never been added to the rent, making the total annual deduction 15 to 20 per cent.	One farm in the parish of Marcross, over 5 per cent. Copy of letter, June 24th:— "The average yearly sum expended in repairs and improvements on farms on above estate for 12 years ending 31st March 1893 was 272*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, or 10·4 per cent. on net rental of 2,500*l.* For many years past there has been allowed off the rents all the tithe and half of the rates. Rentals are a little below the valuation."	The estate has not been revalued to my knowledge, nor have I heard of its being done. In the parish of Ewenny, wherein the estate mostly lies, there was a valuation made for rating purposes in 1872. The gross estimated rental of which was used for rating purposes from which the deductions specified have been used.
John Edw. Vaughan, Rheola.	Rheola Estate (5,800 acres in Glamorgan and Brecon).	On occasions abatements have been made in individual cases, but no general abatement has been made, the rents having remained unaltered for a very long period.	The rent roll from farms on this estate is about 4 per cent. lower than it was in 1877, and in some cases the lands are let tithe free, which increases the per-centage of reduction by about another 2 per cent., making in all 6 per cent reduction.	There has been no general valuation of the property during the period named. A considerable portion of it had been let at nominal rents for lives by a former owner, a fine having been taken, and as these fell in from 1823 to 1858, the farms were re-let at fair rents. Except in a few instances there has since then been little variation.
A. V. H. Vaughan-Lee, Dillington Park, Ilminster.	Llanllay (5,800 acres in Glamorgan and Brecknockshire).	No general reduction or abatement has been made, but in some instances allowances have been made. Ten per cent. was allowed to the tenants in Llangefelach parish at the Christmas collection.	Taking the whole of the farm rental it is 7 per cent. less now than in 1877.	No general re-valuation has taken place, but in some instances rents have been altered. Comparing the rental of a portion of the property (about 3,500 acres) the difference in the rental between the present time and 50 years ago is 44*l.* 10*s.* in favour of the present time. Taking the area above quoted the difference in rental as between the present time and 50 years ago, is less than 4 per cent. In some individual cases the rent is the same, and in some cases lower. The difference chiefly arises from one farm, the rent of which in 1843 was 137*l.* 10*s.*, and at the present 200*l.* tithe free. This farm was let from 1865 to 1882 for 250*l.* It is possible that in 1843 an old lease existed, but this I cannot trace.
Lord Windsor, Cardiff.	Windsor (18,187 acres)	In 1879, 10 per cent. on one year's rent. In 1881, 10 per cent. on half year's rent. In 1886, 10 per cent. on one year's rent. In 1887, 10 per cent. on one year's rent. In 1888, 10 per cent. on one year's rent. In 1889, 10 per cent. on half year's rent. In 1892, 10 per cent. on half year's rent.	There has been no general reduction of rent, but rents have been reduced in special cases, the total permanent reduction amounting to 739*l.* 10*s.* As against this there have been increases on farms close to Cardiff in four instances. One farm of about 400 acres (the tenant of which retired, and whose family have occupied the farm since 1806) is now let principally as accommodation land, at an average of 2*l.* per acre, which shows an increase on the rental of 423*l.* 10*s.* Another small holding, on change of tenancy (the old tenant having died) is now let as a dairy farm with improved buildings, shows an increase of 26*l.* 15*s.* Another farm shows a small increase of 28*l.* 15*s.*, made on change of tenancy (the former tenant's family held the farm for a great number of years, at a low rent). The fourth case being an increase of 12*l.* for exceedingly good house and buildings erected, the tenant requiring this, being a land agent and valuer, and not dependent on the farm for a living. The net decrease, notwithstanding the increase before mentioned, amounts since 1877 to 248*l.* 11*s.*	Estate has not been re-valued.

Mrs. Johnes, Lieut-General Sir J. Hills-Johnes, K.C.B., V.C., and Lady Hills-Johnes, Dolaucothy.	Dolaucothy (3,613 acres in Carmarthen and Glamorgan).	Lady Day, 1882, on all the estates, 10 per cent. Michaelmas, 1882, 10 per cent. to small tenants who pay once a year. 1883, 5 per cent. in Glamorganshire. 1884, 5 per cent. in Glamorganshire. 1885, 8 per cent. in Glamorganshire. Michaelmas, 1885, 10 per cent. on all Estates. Lady Day, 1886, 10 per cent. on all estates. Michaelmas, 1886, 10 per cent. on all estates. Lady Day and Michaelmas, 1887, 10 per cent. on all estates. Lady Day, 1888, 10 per cent. on all estates. Lady Day and Michaelmas, 1892, 10 per cent. on all estates.	Rents reduced - - £ 155 13 0 „ increased - - 13 10 0 142 3 0	Estates have not been re-valued. Some of the rents have been raised, probably due to re-adjustment of land, or to rebuilding of the farm-house and out-buildings. Every farm-house and its out-buildings has been put into thorough order, many rebuilt.
Colonel Gould, Frampton.	Great Frampton (160 acres).	I allowed an abatement in the years 1882, 1883, 1884, of ten per cent.	25 per cent. From 300*l.* to 225*l.* beginning in 1885.	It was re-valued in 1885, the result being to reduce my receipt.
Mrs. Booker, Velindra House, Cardiff.	Velindra and Maesmawr (547 acres).	Not required.	—	—
Miss Clara Thomas, Llwyn Madoc, Garth.	Llanbradach (1,152 acres).	The following abatements have been made:—1886, 10 per cent. 1887, 10 per cent. Half-year ending February 1888, 10 per cent. Half-year ending August, 1892, 10 per cent. Half-year ending February, 1893, 10 per cent.	The rent roll has been reduced from 596*l.* in 1874, to 537*l.* in 1893.	—

SEVENTH DAY.

6, Old Palace Yard, Westminster, 8th July 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD KENYON (CHAIRMAN).

SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
MR. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
PROFESSOR RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
MR. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
MR. EDWIN GROVE.
MR. RICHARD JONES.
MR. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

MR. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.

Mr. JOHN HUGHES called and examined.

See 6175, 34,669, 34,708, 36,303.

Chairman.

5914. Mr. John Hughes, I understand that you carry on business at 79, Mark Lane, in the City of London, and that you are the owner of a small mineral property of 49 acres in extent called Pistill Gwyn, situate in the Cwm-nant-ddu valley near Abersychan, Monmouthshire?—Yes.

5915. How have you become the possessor of that property?—I derived the property under the will of my late mother who died on the 10th of January 1887.

5916. You have applied to be admitted as customary heir for some time?—As long since as May 1887.

5917. Why have you not entered into your property?—Because the steward, Mr. Charles J. Parkes, demands as a fine for such admittance two years' full value of the premises, namely, 500*l.*

5918. The property being leased to a colliery company?—Yes.

5919. You think that sum unreasonable?—Certainly, compared with anything that has been paid in years gone by for the same property.

5920. Your mother was the possessor of this property before you?—Yes.

5921. And she paid no fine?—She paid no fine. I have the copy of her admittance here, which I should like to produce.

5922. And you claimed to be admitted on the same terms?—Yes.

5923. That was refused, and this fine was demanded?—Yes.

5924. That has been ever since 1887?—Ever since 1887.

5925. How was your mother heir to this property?—She derived it under the will of her father, the late Daniel Williams, of Penlasgarn, in the parish of Trevethin, near Pontypool.

5926. Did he pay any fine?—He purchased the property, and paid a fine of 12*l.*

5927. Your contention is that it was not usual to charge the fine on the customary heir under the will, on descent in fact?—Yes, that is my contention.

5928. But only to demand it in the case of an alien?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

5929. You have proof that this has been done before in the same locality?—Yes; I see that on August the 10th, 1818, Thomas Lewis and Anne Lewis respectively, the customary heir and widow of Philip Lewis, were admitted as customary heirs to this property without paying any fine.

5930. Was this the same manor?—This is the same manor and the same property, and on the same day those persons surrendered this property to my grandfather. The point I want to bring out is that it was not usual to charge any fine at all for the ordinary admittance on descent; and it was only usual to charge a fine when the property was surrendered to an alien; and the old documents which I have here prove that in a very complete manner.

5931. Thomas Lewis and Anne Lewis succeeded. Was Philip the father of Thomas Lewis?—Yes.

5932. You have still further records I think?—Yes; going back to November 3rd, 1812, John Lewis and Lewis Lewis were separately admitted to this property as customary heirs and no fine was recorded on the copies of their admittance, which I have here. On the same day these persons separately surrendered the property to Philip Lewis, who, as an alien, paid 8*l.* as a fine for admission.

5933. You have further copies still?—I have further copies. There is one in 1832, and another in 1829, and another in 1817, and another in 1813 in reference to other properties, all of which have no fine attached on the record.

5934. It seems Mr. Parkes made some admission to you at Pontypool?—Yes; I went down to the Court Baron and presented myself formally for admittance. He at first said that that was not the place for considering the amount of fines, but I quoted to him from a letter which I have here, written three years ago, in which he had asked me to come down to the Court Baron, and that that was the place where the fine should be discussed and probably settled, and after that he allowed me to go on.

5935. But he said that such omission to record fines was through ignorance of the true rights and customs of the manor on the part of the then stewards?—Yes, through ignorance.

Chairman—continued.

5936. Does he claim under an old Act?—Not an Act, a Judgment.

5937. A decision of Judge Bacon?—Yes.

5938. And that they are entitled to a fine not exceeding two and a half years. Is that so?—Yes, he claims under a decision in the High Court of Chancery by Judge Bacon, made in the XVI. James 1st, 1619, that the lords and ladies were entitled to a fine not exceeding two and a half years' full value of the premises, and this fine, which has since been reduced to two years' value, he is instructed to claim upon every admittance on behalf of the lords and ladies.

5939. But you think that that cannot be considered to apply to cases on descent?—Quite so. I claim to be admitted without any fine at all. That lawsuit was, I take it, in reference to fixing the amount of fine of some particular property that should be charged; it does not apply, I contend, to my case.

5940. May I ask if you have ever brought this before a court of law?—I have not.

5941. And you wish to place the deeds which you have before the Commission so that they can be put on record?—Yes, I do, for the benefit of other copyholders, because I have been down in the neighbourhood travelling about, and very few of them have any old records at all; in fact, it is quite unusual to have such a number as I have, I believe, except in the case of large landed proprietors.

5942. Of course you are aware that we can make no statement upon anything that is before a court of law—we cannot give any legal opinion about it?—I do not wish that.

5943. We shall be happy to receive any documents you wish to put before us which may be of historical value or interest to the matter before us?—I appear here because I consider this attempt of the lords is a grievance, for until I am admitted I have no legal title; I cannot sell the property.

5944. May I ask if you know of any other cases where so large a fine has been demanded?—Oh, they are attempting to get this fine on every admittance.

5945. Who is the lord of the manor?—I cannot tell you who; there are several. Mr. Parkes is the steward.

Mr. Grove.

It is divided into tenths, and one proprietor, I think, holds five-tenths, and the other five-tenths are divided.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

5946. As I understand, the gist of your complaint is that the fine which is demanded is too high, and is based upon a principle which makes the fine uncertain?—My contention is that I am asked to pay a fine where I should not pay any at all.

5947. I think I heard you describe this property as a small property of 49 acres?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

5948. Do you claim as copyholder the right to work the minerals?—We have worked them, and they have been worked before, in my grandfather's time, as a mineral property. In fact, I have a copy here of the contract which he made when he purchased the property, a very old one, and it is rather interesting on that account, in which the coals and minerals are distinctly mentioned.

5949. This must be a customary freehold, I take it?—No.

5950. I do not understand how the copyholder has the right to work the minerals simply because he is a copyholder?—Well, we have done so.

5951. Do you know whether the tenant himself, your grandfather, worked it?—I could not say. The property was let to a tenant for agricultural purposes.

5952. This, I take it, is simply an agreement between Anne Lewis, Henry Lewis, and Thomas Lewis?—Yes, whose admittances I have here.

5953. The parties are Anne Lewis, Henry Lewis, and Thomas Lewis, on the one part, and Daniel Williams of the other part?—Yes, my grandfather.

5954. Daniel Williams was your grandfather?—Yes.

5955. Then it witnesses that "Anne Lewis, "Henry Lewis, and Thomas Lewis, did bargain "and sell and surrender to Daniel Williams "their right, title, interest, claim, and demand "to a certain messuage, barn, and lands called "Cwm-nant-ddu"?—That is the name of the valley.

5956. "In the lordship of Wentsland and "Bryngwyn, between the lands of the lord of "the manor and the lands of William Henry." Then follow other descriptions of the parcels, "together with all timbers, trees, and likewise "all coal, ironstone, slate, and minerals what-"soever"?—That is the part I wanted you to see.

5957. This agreement, of course, the lord of the manor had nothing to do with. This is simply an agreement between certain tenants of the manor to sell?—Will you allow me to explain that the steward of the manor, Mr. Parkes, lives in the neighbourhood; in fact, he has himself worked clay from under this very property, and paid royalty to the Ebbw Vale Company for doing so. He is perfectly cognizant it has been done; there is no dispute about that, but the lords are now attempting through their legal advisers to claim the minerals.

5958. I did not understand that before. Then, as a matter of fact, the lords of the manor do assert a title to the minerals?—They are attempting to do so now. Here is the account of a sale of some mineral property in the neighbourhood of Pontypool, at which the steward, Mr. Parkes, publicly makes a proclamation that they intend to claim the minerals. This was in 1889, and I believe their claim dates, according to the paper, from two years before that. "Mr. C. J. Parkes, the steward of "the manor of Wentsland and Bryngwyn, rose

" and stated that he was instructed to give " notice that the lords and ladies of the manor " claimed the minerals under the copyhold lands " referred to in the particulars of sale just read " by the auctioneer, and that they denied the " existence of any custom in the manor autho- " rising the tenants to work such minerals."

5959. To clear up the matter a little further, who let to the Ebbw Vale Company?—My mother.

5960. That was on the 1st of December 1881?—That is the date of the last lease, but the property had been worked by the Ebbw Vale Company long before that. In fact, when I say worked I mean rented, because the property itself is worth very little—the surface value is not worth more than 18*l.*—but it happens to lay down the side of a mountain, and, consequently, is useful on account of the wayleave through it from properties further up the valley. That is really the cause of its present high value. It is a purely temporary high value, it is not a permanent value, and it is on that ground, I think, the fine of 500*l.*, supposing any fine were legal, is unusually high, because it is not an improving value, as all mineral property becomes of less value as it is worked.

5961. Do you understand that Mr. Parkes claims not only the minerals, but the fine of 500*l.* as well?—Oh no, one at a time. He claims this high fine on the ground that the usual fine is two years of the full value, and, as the full value is 250*l.* a year, he claims 500*l.* That is a separate matter entirely from the question of minerals. He does not put in a claim to the minerals. In fact, as I say, the usage of the property for the past years is so great, the custom of rendering to ourselves royalty for all coal and minerals worked has been so established, that I do not think he would introduce it in our case. But the attempt is made in reference to unworked properties in which there has been no right established either by the lord of the manor or by the copyholder.

5962. Then what I understand you to say is, that according to the custom of this manor there may be a right for the tenant to work the mines?—I will not say anything as to what the custom may be in reference to other properties. I can only tell you about our own.

Mr. Seebohm.

I should like to see the admission, to see whether in the admission there is any sanction to the transfer.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

5963. That is a very important point which Mr. Seebohm suggests. This is a memorandum of agreement of the 6th of June 1818?—Yes.

5964. That was an alienation of the interest of the Lewises in the property to your grandfather?—Yes.

5965. There ought to be on the court roll some notice of this, say, of the admission of Daniel Williams?—Here is a copy of it. I do not think you will see anything about coal mentioned in that or in any of the admittances. It is not usual.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

5966. This admission begins with a usual form enough, stating, " that the court halimot of . . . " lords and ladies of the manor was held at the " dwelling-house of Anne Lewis, widow, in " the parish of Trevethin, in the county of " Monmouth, on Monday, the 10th day of " August, 1818, by and before Thomas Edwards, " gentleman, steward of the said manor, and " the homage, to wit, John Jayne and William " Henry, gentlemen, then and there present." They are the two freeholders. Then " to this " court came Thomas Lewis, and he did sur- " render, by the rod, into the hands of the " lords and ladies of the said manor by the " acceptance of their said steward, according " to the custom of the said manor, all his estate, " rights, title, interest, claim, and demand what- " soever, on to and in all those several pieces " or parcels of land, called and known by the " name of Tyr Ann Rees, with the house and " barn thereto belonging, Coed Godra, Caescybor " and Cae Llwyn y coed and Caemain adjoining " the Darren, situate, lying, and being in the " parish of Trevethin, in the county of Mon- " mouth, abutting on to the lands late of Phillip " Lewis, to the lands of Edward Thomas, to the " lands late of Charles Williams, to the lands " of Moses Harper, Esquire, to the lands of " William Jones, to the lands late of William " Jones, of Penlasgarn," and so on. " And the " reversion and reversions, remainder and re- " mainders thereof, to the use and behoof of " Daniel Williams, of Penlasgarn, in the parish " of Trevethin, in the county of Monmouth, " Esquire, his customary heirs and assigns for " ever, according to the custom of the said " manor for ever. Whereupon the lords and " ladies of the said manor, by their said steward, " did grant the seizin and admittance thereof by " the rod, according to the custom of the said " manor. To have and to hold all and singular " the said premises, with the appurtenances, " unto the said Daniel Williams, his customary " heirs and assigns for ever, according to the " custom of the said manor, by and under the " yearly rents, heriots, duties, suits, and services " anciently due and of right accustomed, and " the said Daniel Williams gave the lords and " ladies of the said manor for a fine for such " his estate and entry into the said premises " the sum of 12*l.*, and having done his fealty " is thereupon admitted tenant in the presence " of the homage above named." That is 1818.

Mr. Seebohm.

It is a customary freehold?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

It seems to me to be so; not a true copyhold, therefore, in the ordinary sense of the term. That is, of course, another question which you would probably know better than I should.

5967. There may be a freehold held according to the custom of the manor, and it looks as though this were so. You must not take anything we say as a binding legal opinion upon the matter?—No. But this is the point I should like to bring before you more particularly, and that is that here (handing in two other documents) are the ordinary admittances, and there is no record of any fine, and wherever the fine is taken it is always recorded in writing.

5968. This is an admittance on descent?—Yes. It is exactly the same day as my grandfather was admitted. This is the point I am contending for here, that there is no fine at all—the document is perfectly free of any fine.

5969. Really, Anne Lewis, who is one of the parties to this memorandum of agreement, was only admitted on the very same day that this bargain and sale was carried out?—Yes. So that it does not appear necessary, according to the custom, to come and be admitted directly you become holder of a property.

5970. These are much the same form until we come down towards the latter part of this instrument?—Yes.

5971. "To which said Anne Lewis, the lords "and ladies of the said manor by their said "steward did grant seizin and admittance of "the said premises by the rod, according to the "custom of the said manor for the term of her "widow's estate therein. To have and to hold "all and singular the said premises with the "appurtenances unto the said Ann Lewis for "the term of her widow's estate therein, ac-"cording to the custom of the said manor, and "she was admitted accordingly"?—You see the sons come in as the customary heirs.

5972. It is quite clear that the widow alone could not have made a title?—No.

5973. The other one is "to which said "Thomas Lewis, the lords and ladies of the said "manor by their said steward did grant seizin "and admittance thereof by the rod according to the custom of the said manor." Those are the same words as in the admittance of Daniel Williams?—Yes, exactly.

5974. There is nothing about any fine there?—No. That is the point I wish to make a record of. Here are two other documents just the same. I think they are very interesting as establishing this point. For instance, here is a case of an ordinary admittance and here is a surrender. In the latter there was a fine charged and in the former there was no fine charged.

5975. Do you know whether the courts of this manor are held at any stated time?—Yes, in June every year.

5976. Is there a court leet held?—Yes.

5977. As well as a court baron?—What is the difference? I do not know.

5978. The differences are mentioned clearly enough in the law books, but we want to know exactly what is done at these courts?—I have only been to one of them, and then they did not want me to make an appearance; they wished me to keep away if possible; that was on the 23rd of June in this year; I made this formal protest and took these documents down with a view to what I am bringing before you now, the custom of the manor with reference to admittance.

Mr. Griffiths.

5979. It appears to me to be a question of law as to whether the lord of the manor has the right to charge?—A question of custom.

5980. Supposing you paid these two years claimed, and you paid before the expiration of the two years, could the same claim be made in the next two years?—Certainly. As soon as I died the property would come to someone else, and he or they would have to pay this fine over again.

Mr. Seebohm.

5981. It seems to me that the case resolves itself, does it not, simply into this: You do not bring before us the question of the minerals at all?—No.

5982. And what you say is that after acquiescence, at any rate, for a very long period in the practice of not taking fines on descent they are now beginning the practice of taking fines on descent?—Yes.

5983. That is one point you wish to bring before us?—Certainly.

5984. I suppose the real difficulty that you have in establishing your claim is in obtaining something which should be absolutely decisive as to what is the custom?—Well, I produce three admittances, my mother's, my grandfather's, and one before that.

5985. I quite see the full force of that, but what I am trying to look at is how it affects us as a Commission. In what way do you bring it forward as a grievance?—As a grievance of attempting to charge a fine when there has been no fine taken before. I think it is a very great grievance.

5986. Is your grievance that the law does not afford an easy enough way of settling the question whether a custom is so-and-so?—Not at all. I am suffering nothing at present. I have made formal application to be admitted. They cannot seize the lands, because I have made formal application to be admitted. The delay is theirs, they want me to be admitted and to have the question of the fine, if any, settled afterwards, but I object to that. I say I am ready to be admitted on the custom of the manor, which is without a fine. I am not suffering any immediate grievance, except that I have no title to the land.

5987. Then I do not see quite what you ask of the Commission?—I come here, because as I tell you, I have found in travelling round the neighbourhood with a view of getting other copies, that there are so few copyholders that have any records at all to produce, and as I am afraid many poor copyholders have not got the evidence that I have to fall back upon (I am not at all afraid on my own account), I think it only right I should come and place it before the Commission as a record, because otherwise you cannot establish the custom. I also wished to supply the Commission with information which, according to the syllabus, they desired to have, viz., as to "what fines and other charges are "made on admission and enrolment?" and "are "they considered oppressive or otherwise?"

5988. Then I think in receiving that evidence and placing it upon record we have done what you wish?—That is so, certainly.

5989. May I ask you just one question with regard to the facts of the case. How came the lordship to be divided? We are told it is divided; it is not one but there are a great many lordships?—I cannot tell you that.

5990. There are several persons who are together the lords of this manor?—Quite so. But I have here admittances as far back as 1725, in which several names of lords and ladies are mentioned, but I cannot tell you why there were several.

5991. It is a curious case?—Oh, is it?

5992. I mean it is one of the peculiarities of your case that the lord of your manor is not a single person but a great number of persons. Do you think it became so by descent or by sale?—I could not offer any opinion on that matter.

5993. It is not known in the neighbourhood; it is not a matter of any notoriety?—No, they do not trouble about that at all.

5994. Have you a map of the property?—Yes, but not here.

5995. The Ebbw Vale Company have leased from you the whole of the land?—The whole of it.

5996. And the use they put it to is that a railway goes over it connecting one part of their mineral property with another?—That is so.

5997. And the rent instead of being agricultural value of 1*l.* per acre, or perhaps even less than that, upon the mountain there, has by reason of being situated close to this mineral property suddenly been raised one may say to the value of 250*l.* a year?—Yes. It is quite a local value; as long as the line in the neighbourhood will be required, and you know the neighbourhood.

5998. Yes, I know the district very well. What length of railway is it that runs over your property: a quarter of a mile or half a mile?—I suppose somewhere between a quarter of a mile and half a mile.

5999. You speak of Mr. Parkes having worked clay from this property since it has been held by the Ebbw Vale Company?—Yes.

6000. And he also gave notice that the lords and ladies claimed certain mineral rights—that they claimed the royalties. Has he worked clay from this property since he gave that notice at the sale?—Oh, no, that was prior to that some years.

6001. Is there a general feeling of discontent in the district?—A very strong feeling.

6002. Can you explain why the tenants who are admitted at every Court more or less—there are always admissions going on—do not have any documentary evidence to put in? Is it not a rule that the steward would give a document similar to this to everyone who is admitted, stating the terms upon which he is admitted?—Certainly, but it would appear that as a value is only attached to the one copy you hold yourself many people have neglected these old copies: in fact I have had to communicate with many members of my grandfather's family in order to obtain these copies and they had been thrown away as of no value and put in old boxes.

6003. I rather gather from you that you have been recently trying to see some copies that have been issued by the steward lately but you have not been able to get hold of them?—I am not looking up for recent copies of admissions. I want old copies to establish the custom and I find it very difficult to get them. I can get plenty of recent ones but they are of no value.

6004. Would you allow the secretary to have copies of those made which you have before you?—Certainly. If you would allow me to suggest, I do not think it is worth the trouble and expense of copying the whole of them, if a record was simply made of the fact that no fines were charged on admission by descent and that fines were charged upon surrender I take it that would answer the purpose.

6005. I should suggest that it would be most advisable for us to get a complete copy of one and then a footnote that there were other similar documents produced, dated so-and-so to so-and-so, in which no fine whatever was mentioned?—You can have my mother's copy or my grandfather's copy.

6006. I should like you to leave all those documents with the secretary so that we can make extracts from them?—I will do so.

6007. In the previous cases where fines have been paid it was then of course purely agricultural ground of very low value?—Well, in the earlier part of the present century it was begun to be worked as a colliery when my grandfather bought it.

6008. Worked as a small independent colliery?—Yes, they drove levels in and there are the remains of them still. It is most curious how many people have attempted to work that property.

Professor Rhŷs.

6009. For the sake of putting those papers on record, I will just ask you to name each of them, and then I will ask you if there is any mention of a fine. I want you just to state enough to enable one to recognise them hereafter, if there should be a search for them at any future time?—I will begin with my mother's admission. The admission of Anne Williams, April the 10th, 1839.

6010. Is there any mention of a fine there?—No fine.

6011. What is the next one?—The admission of Daniel Williams on the 10th of August 1818, by purchase; there is a fine of 12*l.*

6012. That was not by descent?—No, that was by purchase. Then on the 10th of August 1818 admittance of Anne Lewis and of Thomas Lewis.

6013. Is there any fine?—No fine. Then there is the admittance of Philip Lewis on the 3rd of November 1812.

6014. Is there any fine?—There is a fine of 8*l.* because he purchased it. Then there is the admittance of Lewis Lewis and John Lewis, November the 3rd, 1812.

6015. Was that by descent or by purchase?—By descent; and there was no fine. Those are the documents.

6016. Which would be the documents you wish particularly printed?—My mother's and my grandfather's. (See Appendix.)

Mr. Grove.

6017. These all refer to the same property?—They all refer to the same property.

6018. It has never been divided in any way?—No.

6019. From beginning to end it is the same boundary?—Yes, the whole property.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6020. Is not this what really takes place, that so long as there is no alienation, tenants do not apply for admission on descent?—They are not particular about it. The important point is to pay the heriot; that has to be done; and the probate of the will has to be enrolled on the court rolls. So long as that is done, it does not appear according to custom to be necessary to go and get admitted until they want to sell the property.

6021. So far as your experience goes of this manor, tenants habitually neglect to ask for admittance?—I should not like to give an opinion about that without inquiry. I have known cases where they have not been admitted for 20 years. I have known cases where they seek admittance as soon as they can.

Sir John Llewelyn.

6022. I rather gather that what you contend is that the existing law is too complicated to assist you to obtain what you think is full justice?—I contend that the present recent attempt to enforce a fine for admittance on descent is very arbitrary and contrary to custom.

6023. Do you contend that the present law will not meet your case?—Yes, so far, because there is so much power in the hands of the steward. I found it very difficult to have a discussion with the steward at this court baron. I have a letter here in which he distinctly tells me first of all that that is the proper place to discuss it.

6024. Perhaps I may put the question more concisely. Do you contend that you have a legal remedy?—I am not particularly anxious to move in the matter. I receive rents.

6025. That does not answer my question?—I do not know how I can answer it, except I want to conform with the custom and obtain legal possession. In order to do that I must be admitted, and in order to be admitted they want me to agree to pay a fine of 500*l.*, which I object to.

6026. I should like to know how it is you think the Commission can help you except by giving publicity to what you put before us?—Only in that way. I thought it would be a good way of placing it on record.

6027. I quite understand you are not representing yourself alone?—It struck me in travelling the neighbourhood, that so few people have any record of the custom that little by little the steward undoubtedly will introduce this new custom of making a fine payable on every admittance, and it was very necessary I should make a stand, and I have letters supporting me in that attempt.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6028. The point you are making is this: that here your family have been in possession of this property for a great many years?—Yes.

6029. Now you find you cannot complete your title without getting a document from the steward?—Yes.

6030. When you apply for the document you are met with a claim which you say is harsh and oppressive?—Certainly.

Mr. Seebohm.

6031. What you say is that this question of copyhold property is giving rise to a good deal of difficulty in connexion with minerals at the present time?—Yes, I can give you the names of persons who are now in great difficulty.

Mr. Grove.

6032. Have you attempted or has there been any attempt by tenants to enfranchise their holdings under this manor?—Yes, I know of a case at Pontypool now which has been lately enfranchised, but at a very high rate, I understand.

6033. Were the expenses heavy because of the lords and ladies of the manor being divided into so many parts. Do you mean you suppose it is a high rate on that account—legal expenses?—No, it is high because the total amount charged for the property is great.

6034. Probably on purpose to cover that matter, because I take it it is not a thing which may be done by the steward alone—it would have to be referred to all the legal representatives of all the lords and ladies of the manor which is divided into tenths?—That is very probable.

6035. And probably the high rate is to cover the necessary legal expenses?—Quite so.

Mr. Seebohm.

6036. Besides that, if it be admitted they have the right to the additional fines, it increases the sum?—Yes, it does.

Chairman.

6037. There are three questions put in by Mr. Vincent. He says, "In order to be quite "clear, may I take it that the witness con- "tends—First, that the fine is illegal in toto?" —I contend that it is contrary to custom.

6038. You do not contend it is illegal in toto? —I will not say that.

6039. In which case Mr. Vincent says you have your remedy—"Secondly, that it is ex- "cessive even if legal?"—Certainly.

6040. "Thirdly, that it is only if the claim is "made legally, that you have a grievance "against the existing state of the law?" I take it Mr. Vincent means that your grievance lies against the law only if it is made legally? —I do not think I have a grievance against the law. My grievance is against the present system by which it is administered by the steward.

Chairman—continued.

6041. And against the excessive fines?—Yes.

I think I may say that the Commissioners are very much obliged to you for having taken the trouble to give them this information.

Re-examined, 34,708.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Edwin Sidney Hartland called and examined.

Chairman.

6042. You are Registrar of the County Court of Gloucestershire?—The county court of Gloucestershire holden at Gloucester.

6043. And District Registrar of the High Court?—Yes.

6044. You have practised as a solicitor at Swansea from 1871 to 1890?—Yes.

6045. And you wish to give evidence as to the Duke of Beaufort's estates in the county of Glamorgan?—Yes.

6046. You have some statement to make about the River Tawe?—The Duke claims the bed of the River Tawe for miles beyond the point at which it is, or at which it has been tidal during historical time as I understand. He prohibits mining beneath the bed, or the throwing of a bridge from bank to bank, either altogether or except upon payment of rent and wayleave.

6047. Then you have some statement to make as to Landore?—At Landore,—that is, I believe, within the tidal limit,—he some years ago absolutely prohibited the Tyrglandwr Colliery Company, without assigning any reason, from mining beneath the bed. They were about to take some coal from, I think, Mr. C. H. Smith, who was a tenant of Lord Jersey, but the prohibition by Mr. Baker, the Duke's steward, prevented them. The result was that they were obliged to close their works. Their pit was within about 200 yards of the river, and they would have had to go under the river to get at Lord Jersey's coal. They had to close the works, and in consequence a large number of colliers were thrown out of employment.

6048. And lately some other person has obtained leave to mine?—Has obtained leave, I understand, on paying a way-leave of 2*d.* a ton for going under the river bed.

6049. And higher up the Swansea Vale, when the Swansea Vale Railway was made, the Duke threatened to stop the company from crossing the river at Morriston?—To stop them from crossing the river at Morriston, at Clydach, and at Glais.

6050. But the company had their way?—Yes, they went on, and the Duke, as I am informed, took no further steps.

Chairman—continued.

6051. Is that above the tide-way?—That is above the tide-way. See 6408.

6052. Then there was a case of the Ynispenllwch Tin Works?—Yes, the Ynispenllwch Tin Plate Company some years ago took a lease from the Duke of the right to cross the river by a bridge, and the bridge is there now. The lease has, I believe, expired, but the terms were 10*l.* a year sleeping rent, and ¼*d.* a ton royalty the sleeping rent to merge in the royalty. The lease has expired, but the rent is still claimed and paid by the successors of the Ynispenllwch Company.

6053. Then the Graigola Colliery?—Gueret's Graigola Colliery at Clydach has recently taken a lease at 5*l.* per annum of a similar right, that is, to cross the river by a bridge without any royalty, but with the stipulation that they are not to take goods across belonging to anyone else. Those two bridges are certainly far above the tidal part of the river, and the Duke is not, as I am informed, there a riparian proprietor.

6054. Has the Duke's right ever been challenged may I ask? Have legal proceedings ever been taken?—I do not know. I believe not.

6055. I asked you that because we do not wish to go into any cases that have been decided in a court of law?—I believe not. I am not aware of any.

6056. The Duke is lord of the manor of Trewyddfa?—Yes.

6057. He lets the waste for building?—He lets the waste of the manor for building. See 23,345

6058. You have something to say about Messrs. Calland?—Messrs. Calland are copyhold tenants of the manor. Their estate is now, I think, pretty well covered with buildings; at all events it consists almost entirely of building land, and the reversions of building leases, some of which have been granted for many years. A few years ago they were mortgaging the property; the mortgagees took counsel's opinion on the title, and under his advice required a license to lease. Counsel was of opinion that a forfeiture had probably been committed by leasing without a license. On applying to the Duke of Beaufort they were compelled to pay a fine of 500*l.* and the costs of granting the license.

See 6412.

6059. You have also some complaint to make about the Duke's building leases for artisans' cottages; do you mean that the charge is excessive?—Yes, I think the charge is excessive. It is higher than the charge which is usual for lease and counterpart in other estates. The charge is five guineas. One of the terms is that no assignment or underlease is to be effected without a license, and that license is to be endorsed upon the lease itself, and signed by the Duke himself. That necessitates the sending of the leases up to London, and frequently their detention there for some time. I have known them to be detained for many months.

6060. But is not that very commonly the case?—Not to send away your title deeds to have the license endorsed upon them.

6061. For each license the Duke's solicitors charge two guineas?—Yes, two guineas.

6062. And the alienation fine is what?—The alienation fine is a recent introduction within the last 20 years. It is a fine of 5*s.* to the Duke on every assignment; that is in addition to the charge for the license.

See 23,351–23,368.

6063. You have some particulars to give about a particular case in 1879?—Yes, in 1879 there was a case in which the license was absolutely refused. There was a lease taken of part of Trewyddfa in 1872, I think, by two men named William Williams and John Richards. The land was practically valueless for any other purpose than building, and the rent they had to pay for an acre was five guineas. In 1878 or 1879 they arranged to grant two underleases of portions of the ground for the purpose of the erection of cottages, and they applied to Mr. Baker, the Duke's solicitor, for a license, which he refused. He told them that if they wanted to underlease the property they must surrender the whole lease to the Duke, and the Duke would himself grant the underleases, and of course he would get the profit. I understand that after considerable negotiation and the intercession of Mr. John Glasbrook, who was a large tenant of the Duke, they were obliged to come to those terms, and the original lease was surrendered, and fresh leases were granted to the two underlessees and two fresh leases, one to each of the original two tenants (the original lease was a joint one), and there was an additional rent imposed.

6064. You have some statement to make as to the manor of Clase belonging to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners?—Yes, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners claim as lords of the manor the minerals under the property of the customary freeholders. This is a new claim since the manor has belonged to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners—since it has been transferred by the Bishop of St. David's, to whom it formerly belonged. There are dealings by the customary freeholders with the minerals shown upon the rolls of the manor for 70 or 80 years prior to that period.

6065. You are going to refer to a school board case which Sir John Llewelyn knows something about?—Yes, in that case I may say there were difficulties owing to Sir John not having been then admitted a tenant, but these difficulties were greatly complicated by the claim which the Commissioners made to the minerals, and which of course Sir John could not concede. After considerable negotiation it was arranged that the school board should take a conveyance jointly from the Commissioners and Sir John Llewelyn. After that was arranged it was more than three years before they fixed the sum they would require as consideration for joining in the conveyance. This, and the negotiations as to the exact form of the reservation of minerals—upon which they raised fresh difficulties—and some other unimportant points, took about four years and a half. This I attribute—very largely, at all events—to the dilatoriness of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners and to the difficulties which they raised chiefly in consequence of this claim to minerals.

6066. Had there never been any trouble with the Bishop of St. David's, the former owner?—No.

6067. Have you any records of that date?—No.

6068. Then the expense of the purchase was increased by the action of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners?—The expense of the purchase was very largely increased by the action of the Commissioners.

6069. You acted as solicitor for one of the customary freeholders?—I acted sometime ago as solicitor for one of the customary freeholders, who, not having been admitted tenant, was anxious to complete his title. In February 1884 a draft surrender and admittance were forwarded to the solicitors to the Commissioners for approval, and after some difficulty and many interviews they were settled, when unfortunately the steward died. This occasioned delay, and on the 11th of March 1885 the solicitors to the Commissioners raised a fresh difficulty as to admitting to the minerals. After many interviews they absolutely refused to admit without expressly excepting the minerals. When I remonstrated they only told me, "Well, you "can go to the court and get a mandamus." After two years' negotiations they suggested that the tenant should buy the minerals, but that was impracticable for family reasons, and he was obliged to abandon his attempt to perfect his title. Their attitude towards all the tenants is the same, the object being to compel them to enfranchise and pay for the minerals; and this they have succeeded in, as I am informed, in some cases.

6070. There seems to have been a considerable amount of red tape about it, then?—Yes, and a little more than red tape, I think.

Sir John Llewelyn.

6071. In regard to the difficulties that you have had experience of, both in the matter of mining royalties, and as to the charge of a wayleave for crossing the river, has any evidence as to that been laid before the recent Commission on Mining Royalties?—I am not aware of that. What I have spoken to has been simply the wayleave.

6072. Underground?—Underground wayleave at Landore and bridges at Clydach and Ynispenllwch.

6073. Those questions were largely gone into, I believe, by the Mining Royalties Commission?—I dare say they were, but I did not follow closely the proceedings of that Commission.

6074. You are not aware whether any evidence of the nature you have just been laying before us was laid before that Commission?—I am not aware.

6075. With regard to the alienation fines, do I understand you to complain that it is a grievance that the license, when it is endorsed, calls for an alienation fine chargeable by the Duke's solicitor of 2*l.* 2*s.*?—That is their fee for endorsing the license and obtaining the Duke's signature.

6076. Is the 5*s.* added to that, making 2*l.* 7*s.*?—Yes.

6077. So it is 2*l.* 7*s.*; not 2*l.* 2*s.*?—Yes.

6078. Can you tell me what the ordinary charge in the neighbourhood is for a licence to assign?—It used to be 1*l.* 1*s.*, but I believe it has been recently reduced. I believe on your estates, Sir John, it has been reduced.

6079. And on the Corporation estates, I think?—The Corporation has reduced the charge, and Sir Robert Morris has reduced the charge. In fact, I think several of the large landowners around Swansea have reduced the charges.

6080. Would you consider that a charge is reasonable—some charge?—Yes, if done; but I do not consider the reservation of a license reasonable in itself.

6081. Do you think that it would be right for the owner of the property to know who his tenant is?—Yes, to know who his tenant is; but that object is effected on other estates by requiring notice to be given to the agent and an entry to be made on the lord's rent roll, and a smaller fee is payable for that—a fee of 3*s.* 4*d.*, or something like that.

6082. Then it is not the fact of there being a charge at all, but the amount of the charge that you think is unreasonable?—The amount of the charge is what I chiefly complain of. But I think it unreasonable that the tenants should be required to pay at all. It is really part of the landlord's expenses of management.

6083. Coming on to the question of minerals; that of course is a technical and a strictly legal question about the ownership of the minerals. As a matter of fact, I daresay you are aware that a great deal of the coal has been worked in the manor of Clase largely by Lord Swansea?—Yes.

6084. And other people?—And others, yes.

6085. Are you aware what has been done with regard to the lords of the manor in respect to that coal?—So far as I know nothing has been done, but then you are aware that I have left Swansea now for three years; whether anything has been done since then I do not know.

6086. I am only asking you to speak of your own knowledge?—So far as I know, nothing has been done. I believe the solicitors to the Commissioners are anxious not to go into court themselves; they do not want to go into court as plaintiffs at all events.

6087. With regard to the building upon the Manor of Trewyddfa, do you know to what extent the waste of the Manor of Trewyddfa has been let for building?—I do not know to what extent. I know that many houses have been built upon it.

6088. Are you aware of the acreage of that manor?—I am not.

6089. When you were there and knew the district of your own knowledge, was there not a very considerable amount of land there still unbuilt upon?—Oh, yes, and there is still; I was there a week ago.

6091. Do you not think that it would be greatly to the public benefit if a clear understanding could be arrived at as to the way in which that land could be utilised for building purposes?—I think it would be greatly for the public benefit that an understanding should be arrived at as to the way in which that land should be utilised. I think you, Sir John, are a tenant of the manor. Some years ago, the school board of Swansea proposed to take a piece of the waste for the purpose of erecting a school.

6093. Do you remember that he opposed on principle all enclosures of commons?—I think he did. The duke's solicitor was very anxious to get the board to buy by agreement, but the site was ultimately abandoned.

Professor Rhŷs.

6094. I have put together the various items which you have mentioned as paid to the duke, and it struck me that you practically represented his grace as making rather a better thing out of his rights than most landlords. Is my impression correct?—Well, I think that is the impression at Swansea.

Mr. Grove.

6095. There is one point in your evidence that I do not know that I quite clearly understood. You said, I think, that the duke refused to allow the Tyrglandwr Colliery Company to mine beneath the bed of the river, and that that industry was completely stopped, and that a large number of colliers were thrown out of employment in consequence of that; and that afterwards some other person agreed to pay 2*d.* per ton for the coal so worked, and then it was allowed to go on?—Not exactly so. I am not aware whether there was any coal to be worked under the river; but what has recently been agreed upon is 2*d.* per ton as a wayleave.

6096. As a wayleave?—As a wayleave to go under the bed of the river.

6097. Is that wayleave considered excessive?—That is considered excessive.

6098. What is the ordinary wayleave in the district, ½*d.* or 1*d.*?—It is less than that. The wayleave which he charged for a bridge at Ynispenllwch was ¼*d.* per ton.

6099. For a bridge?—That was for a bridge, yes.

6100. Then that was a surface wayleave?—There was no surface wayleave because the Duke is not a riparian proprietor.

6101. But when you say a bridge, what does that mean?—I mean a bridge. I mean that the Duke claims the right to prevent bridges being put over the river, not only over that portion which is tidal, but for miles above it.

6102. And in that case it was ¼*d.* per ton agreed?—¼*d.* per ton was agreed to.

6103. But in the other case, the case of the colliery, he insisted upon 2*d.* per ton as a wayleave?—Yes, that is quite a recent taking, as I understand.

6104. Then you spoke of this case in 1879 when those licenses were refused?—Yes.

6105. You say that they asked that the lease might be surrendered?—They compelled the surrender of the lease, because, in order to keep faith with the persons to whom the lessees had agreed to underlease, the lessees were obliged to surrender their lease.

6106. What length of lease, then, was unexpired when that surrender took place?—About 54 years, I should think. I may say that the Duke's building leases for cottage property are only 60 years in length, and the covenants are all of them of a very onerous description.

6107. And the legal charge of five guineas is considered excessive, I suppose, for a workman's cottage, is it not?—It is excessive.

6108. And does it probably go so far as to prevent cottages being built by men who would otherwise be likely to put them there?—My opinion is, from what I know of the place and the people, that people do not take leases so readily of the Duke of Beaufort's property as they would if the charges were more reasonable, the term longer, and the covenants less stringent.

6109. Are there any fairly analogous cases in the district where the charge is less?—The charge is everywhere less in the district.

6110. What would be the average charge for a lease of that character?—About four guineas, with, in some cases, at all events, half-a-guinea for the plan.

6111. About 4½ guineas?—That is 4½ guineas. It would never exceed that.

6112. Does this five guineas include the plan?—I think it does. I am not quite sure about that, but I believe so.

6113. But it is usual, is it not, to have a plan with each lease, however small a plot?—Yes, it is necessary.

6114. You spoke of some boundary stones having been recently put up in certain parts of the property with the letters "D.B." on them?—Yes.

6115. When you say "recently," how far back do you refer to?—Within the last 15 or 16 years.

Mr. Seebohm.

6116. Are we right in understanding that this property of the Duke of Beaufort, to which you allude, is all under him as lord of the manor?—He claims the right to the bed of the river so far as it is tidal, as lord of the Seigniory of Gower, as I understand. By what right he claims the bed of the river beyond I am at a loss to understand.

6117. But as regards these other points—minerals, and so on—you speak of the customary freeholders, I think?—That was as to the manor of Clase, belonging to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

6118. Then let us restrict ourselves, for the moment, to that. In what way do those customary freeholders differ from ordinary copyholders?—They are not expressed to hold at the will of the landlord.

6119. Do they pay a small quit rent?—Yes.

6120. A very small one?—A very small one.

6122. But being customary freeholders, and paying a small quit rent to the lord, the legal point arises whether they have a right to the minerals or not?—Quite so.

6123. And I understood you to say that that right has lain dormant for a long time on the part of the lords of the manor, but that now, owing to the increased value of the minerals during the last 50 or 60 or 70 years, the question has been raised and is now unsettled whether the minerals belong to the customary freeholders or to the lord of the manor. Is that correct?—No, pardon me, the manor has not belonged to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for more than 15 or 20 years I should think, and it is only since the Bishop of St. David's transferred the manor to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners that the question has been raised. Prior to that, for 70 or 80 years there are upon the rolls of the manor records of dealings with the minerals on the part of the tenants. One of my client's own title deeds in that case that I spoke of, in theyear 1866, I think, was enrolled upon the records of the manor—I mean one of his title deeds dealing with the minerals.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

6124. Then the question really is whether it is right in a district like yours, where minerals have become of such enormous importance, that the question of how they are to be dealt with should be left to be fought out by individuals in which case naturally the weaker individuals stand to lose rather than to gain, or whether the whole question should be in some way or other taken up, and put upon a more proper basis. Would that be the view you would put before the Commissioners?—I think that that should be done, certainly. My view is that the claim for the minerals on the part of the lord is an entirely new claim, and amounts, in plain terms, to extortion.

6125. And your view being so, you do not think it is fair that it should be left to individuals to fight the battle in each case?—Quite so.

6127. Then with regard, not to this particular manor and the minerals, but with regard to the general increased value of property owing to the increase of population, and owing to the minerals, the question between the lord of the manor—who claims, I suppose, some sort of right in the waste—and his lessees, is something of the same kind as the question, how far the increased value of his property ought to go to him, or whether any of it should go to the customary freeholders under him?—I am not aware whether the tenants of the manor of Trewyddfa, which belongs to the Duke of Beaufort, are customary freeholders or copyholders. Sir John Llewelyn could probably say that better than I.

Sir John Llewelyn.

6128. I think they are customary freeholders; but I think you said just now—and I was going to ask you to correct that—that it was an unprofitable manor?—I was referring to the manor of Clase.

6129. I beg your pardon. You are now speaking of Trewyddfa?—Yes.

6130. With regard to the other, I was going to say they are not entirely customary freeholders there, but there are some leases on lives besides under the Ecclesiastical Commissioners?—Oh, yes, possibly.

6131. In which the minerals would not be touched; they would be claimed and admitted as belonging to the tenant, I think, there. But you are not speaking of that?—No, I am speaking as regards the minerals of the customary freeholds only.

6132. And as regards these building leases is the increased charge generally made on the ground that they are customary freeholders; because if the lord claims that he is lord of the manor or lord of the waste, and it is a question on what terms he should grant that waste in leases, the persons who take those leases are very much at his mercy as to what payments should be made?—Of course, where you have a town with a large and increasing population and the land around it in the hands of only a few landlords, those landlords are practically in the position of monopolists, because it is absolutely necessary that the people whose business brings them to that town should obtain dwellings on the spot, and the landlords are therefore able practically to dictate the terms upon which they will grant their leases. There is no fair competition.

6133. Then in this case of building leases, it is not a question of manorial rights at all; it is a question simply of ownership, of there being few owners?—No; what I complain of is that the Duke grants wastes of the manor for building, and renders no account, as I understand, to the copyholders, so that they get nothing. The Duke treats, in fact, the waste as if he were the absolute owner, discharged from all rights of copyholders or anybody else over it.

6134. And that brings it, not within the category of its simply being a monopoly of owners, but really makes it a question of manorial lordship?—Yes.

6135. And the rights of the lord in the waste?—Yes.

6136. And there is no easy machinery by which the rights of the copyholders, as between them and him, in these cases can be settled?—Quite so.

6137. May we take it that that is one of the points you wish to put before the Commission?—That is one of the points.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6138. You are a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, I think?—Yes.

6139. And the author of divers well-known works on folk-lore and historical subjects. Have you made any study of the history of Swansea or Gower as to which you would like to give any information to the Commissioners?—No, not specially.

6140. As to the origin of these rights of the Duke of Beaufort. Have you anything you would like to say to the Commissioners?—No, I do not know that I have. I understand that they are of very ancient date, going back to a Royal grant in the reign, I think, of King John. May I express the opinion that it is a very undesirable thing that royal rights should be in the hands of a subject, and that steps should be taken to vest them once more in the Crown. In case this were done, and it were thought right to compensate the Duke for the loss of the rights in question (about which I express no opinion), I think it most desirable that strict inquiry should first be made as to what those rights really are, so that he should not be paid for more than his bare legal rights, no matter for what length of time he had claimed or even obtained more.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

6141. I observe that you drew a distinction in your evidence between the rights of the Duke of Beaufort as lord of the seigniory of Gower and as lord of the manor of, we will say, Trewyddfa?—Yes. See 6628.

6142. Did I understand you to say that the Duke of Beaufort claims what may be called, regal rights above the points at which the river ceases to be tidal?—Yes, so I understand. At all events, I do not know on what ground he claims those rights if it is not as lord of the seigniory.

6143. In fact, do those who act on behalf of the Duke of Beaufort claim the bed of the river above the point at which it ceases to be tidal?—Above the point at which it ceases to be tidal for several miles.

6144. Where does it cease to be tidal?—At Morriston. There is a weir at the Lower Forest, and it is not tidal above that. That is a very old weir.

6145. That is the lowest weir on the river?—That is the lowest weir on the river.

6146. And that is just above Morriston?—That is just above Morriston.

6147. And about three miles from the mouth of the river, I take it?—Yes, about three miles, more or less.

6148. Do the cases that you have mentioned relate to a part of the river above this weir?—Not the case of the Tyrglandwr Colliery Company. That is at Landore, but the other two cases I mentioned of—Gueret's Graigola Colliery and the Ynispenllwch Tin Plate Works—are considerably above the tidal portion of the river, and the threats made by the Duke to stop the crossing by the railway related to a part above the tidal portion of the river.

6149. You say the Duke of Beaufort is not a riparian proprietor at these points?—He is not a riparian proprietor.

6150. Is he lord of the manor abutting upon the bank of the river?—I am not aware that he is. I never heard of any claim upon that ground.

6151. The manor of Trewyddfa does not run down to the river?—Yes, I think it would, but that is below Morriston.

6152. Then, do I understand that the Duke of Beaufort has been attempting to prevent people from putting bridges across the river about Morriston?—Yes, unless they would pay him for the privilege for doing so. Lord Tredegar, higher up the valley, exacts wayleaves for bridges, but there, I think, he is a riparian proprietor.

6153. You say you have known Swansea for a good many years, and practised as a solicitor there?—Yes.

6154. What do you say, speaking broadly, is the effect of the existence and exercise of these seigniorial rights upon the progress of the community?—There are constant disputes about the foreshore and the rights claimed there by the Duke of Beaufort, and a good deal of unpleasantness in consequence, and the tendency of course of these claims must be contrary to the public interest there; but I do not know that I can go so far as to say that I know of any material injury to the public interest—speaking of the community. But I have never followed with any attention the discussion of the questions between the Duke and the Corporation of Swansea or the Harbour Trust relating to the river on the foreshore.

6155. I understand the effect of the evidence you have just given to be this—that it gives a good deal of power to the lord of Gower for the time being in reference to the development for commercial purposes of the district?—Yes. To that extent, so far as the interference with the river is concerned, I think it is very detrimental to trade. It imposes a burden on these industries which they ought not to be called upon to bear.

6156. Do you think it is expedient in the interests of the whole of the community to give so much power to any one man?—Very inexpedient indeed.

6157. You think it does not work well?—I think certainly not. You see the Duke is a powerful man with considerable resources, as compared with anybody whose interests come in conflict with his own down there, and people are loth to fall foul of him.

6158. With reference to this manor of Trewyddfa, are courts held regularly in the manor?—I think courts are held, but I do not know any details about them.

6159. Have the tenants any opportunity of objecting to any enclosure on the part of the lord?—I do not know, I have no information as to the holding of courts.

6160. I suppose in this particular manor the grazing is of no great importance is it, if I remember its situation rightly?—No, there is a plentiful crop of stones.

6161. In the building leases that you referred to, what is the form of covenant you refer to as to alienation or assigning of the term? I will put my question in a more concrete form. Does it provide for an absolute discretion on the part of the Duke, or does it say that the Duke shall not refuse except for reasonable cause?—It vests absolute power in the Duke.

6162. The manor of Clase is the manor just beyond Trewyddfa, is it not?—Yes.

6163. Higher up the valley?—Higher up the valley.

6164. Can you tell me whether you have come across any leases for three lives in that district—leases of land in the manor of Clase for instance?—Building leases for three lives.

6165. I beg your pardon, I am reserving the matter of building leases, but leases for any purposes?—I should not like to charge my memory on the subject; I have not had much to do with that at all events.

Chairman.

6166. There are two questions put in by Mr. Vincent. One is, "Do I understand the "witness to say that some body or corporation "enjoys and pays for leave to go under the "river? Who are they?" Do you know of any body or corporation which enjoys and pays for leave to go under the river?—I understand that the Duke has recently agreed (I may be wrong, of course) with Mr. Fred. Richards to permit him to mine under the river for the purpose of obtaining a road to the coal on the other side.

6167. Then there is another question, "Have "you ever had a complaint from any copyholder "or commoner of Trewyddfa as to the Duke's "operations interfering with the sufficiency of "grazing? This I ask, because subject to the "sufficiency of grazing, the Duke claims the "benefit of the statute of Merton"?—I think I have already stated, in answer to Mr. Brynmor Jones, that the grazing is not of much value.

Professor Rhŷs.

6168. I was going to ask you with regard to the case you mentioned just now, of threats by the Duke of Beaufort or his agents, whether you have any letters or documents relating to that?—I have one letter from Mr. Baker, which contains an unmistakeable threat. He says: "I return you this lease"—(this is addressed to the solicitor who was acting in the matter)—"It "must be understood that no breach of covenant "as to assigning or underleasing will be allowed. "Yours truly, Charles Baker." That I understand was written at this point of the negotiations: after the Duke had refused to allow the execution of the under-leases, and before it was arranged that the original lease should be surrendered for the purpose of the new leases being granted. The letter is dated the 3rd January, 1879.

6169. What is the usual practice with regard to assigning?—With regard to the granting of licenses?

6170. Yes?—They are ordinarily granted as a matter of course—not invariably—some landlords exercise what I might perhaps call caprice.

6171. Is there any clause in the leases?—The ordinary clause inserted in the leases down there in that neighbourhood is a restriction which gives an absolute license to the landlord to veto the dealing with the property on the part of the tenant.

6172. Generally, or only on this estate: are you alluding to this estate particularly?—No, that is general, but it is now becoming more usual than it was to insert a proviso that the license shall not be refused except for reasonable cause.

6173. Is there anything of that sort in the leases under the Duke of Beaufort?—Nothing.

Mr. Grove.

6174. In any recent leases at all of the Duke of Beaufort's?—I do not know of any recent leases, because I have left Swansea for the last three years; but speaking up to the period within three years or thereabouts, there was no modification.

Chairman.

6175. Did you hear the last witness's evidence?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

6176. Have you anything to say with regard to that. Have you any knowledge as to the claims of lords of the manor to the minerals, and the excessive fines demanded?—A property passed through my hands about 19 years ago belonging to a manor near Pontypool. It was a customary freehold, and the minerals were worked by the tenant. To the best of my recollection no fine, unless it were a nominal one, was exacted.

6177. In the manor of Wentsland and Bryngwyn?—I think that was the one—Wentsland and Bryngwyn.

6178. That would be the same manor that Mr. Hughes was speaking of?—That was a case of purchase. I acted for the vendors, and was present at the surrender and admittance of the purchaser.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6179. Where is the manor of Kilvey?—Kilvey is on the east side of the river Tawe.

6180. Has your attention been directed to the very interesting case of the Duke of Beaufort v. Smith, in which the Duke of Beaufort brought an assumpsit for money due for customs, duties, and tolls upon, and for coals raised and gotten from the plaintiff's manor and seigniory of Kilvey, and carried through the said manor and seignory, and sold and exported to sea over Swansea Bar?—I know there was such a case, I have never had occasion to look into it.

6181. This is what is stated in the report: "The plaintiff claims to be the owner of the "port of Swansea. He also claims, either as "the lord of the said seigniory of Gower, or of "the manor of Kilvey and other manors parcel "of the said seigniory, the sea shore between "high and low water mark, lying within the "said seignory of Gower, including the manor "of Kilvey and the borough and manor of "Swansea, and also (with certain exceptions) "the soil and channel of the navigable part of "the said river Tawe." That is the river you are referring to?—Yes.

6182. The river that flows down through the Swansea valley, and enters the sea near Kilvey?—Yes.

6183. There I see that the claim is limited to the navigable part with certain exceptions?—Well, it is pressed much beyond that now.

Mr. Seebohm.

6184. Is the tidal part and the navigable part the same thing?—Yes, practically, but for very small vessels.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6185. I should think that looking at the nature of the river now, a claim limited to the soil and channels of the navigable part, would be somewhat different from a claim to the soil and channels of the tidal part?—I understand small craft have come up to Morriston. I have never seen any there; and I may be misinformed on this point. But if so, my case is so much the stronger.

Sir John Llewelyn.

6186. The tide will go beyond that I think?—A little beyond that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6187. Not beyond the weir?—Not beyond the weir.

6188. The weir is not a quarter of a mile from Morriston, is it?—Oh, yes, I should think it is; the Lower Forest Weir I should think is rather more, but the tide never could have come up, at all events during recent times, beyond the weir, and, as I am informed by geologists, certainly not during historic times so high as the Duke claims.

The witness withdrew.

Chairman.

I understand that the agent and steward of the Duke of Beaufort are here. Perhaps during the interval for luncheon they may be prepared with evidence with regard to the statements made by Mr. Hartland.

Mr. T. C. Bayliss: With reference to that, my Lord, may I say that the matter referred to by Mr. Hartland, was a matter which occurred in the lifetime of my late partner, Mr. Baker, some years ago, and I am not prepared at present to go into the full details, but I think very likely that some legal points arose with regard to a defeasance, whether a defeasance should not be executed by the new assignee or lessee, or whether, in order to make the assignee liable to the Duke, there should not be other leases altogether. I think there may be some point of that kind.

Mr. T. C. Bayliss—continued.

Chairman.

Then you will prefer to give your evidence on some future date?

Mr. Bayliss: I am not prepared to go into it now: it came upon me quite by surprise.

Mr. HENRY ALFRED CHAPMAN recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

See 5094.

6189. You are the Mayor of Swansea, I think?—Yes.

6190. And you have come to give evidence relating to the action and the rights of the Duke of Beaufort on the foreshore of Swansea Bay?—Yes.

6191. And the land which formed part of the foreshore and has since been reclaimed from the sea by natural and artificial means. May I ask you, to start with, whether any legal proceedings have been taken with regard to this foreshore?—There was a case in 1848 of the Duke of Beaufort v. the Corporation of Swansea.

Chairman—continued.

6192. And what was the result of that action?—The Duke won his case as against the Corporation.

6193. We do not wish to put ourselves in any way against the decision of a court of law; we can hardly, I think, enter into anything that has been already decided in a court of law; we can only accept your evidence and put it on record. I understand you wish to give evidence to show whether or not that legal decision affects the town of Swansea harmfully. Is that so?—That is so.

The Commissioners deliberated.

Chairman.

6194. We wish it to be clearly understood that in receiving evidence as to the grievances of the borough of Swansea we must not be understood to be impugning the authority of any decided case, but, on the other hand, we are not so much concerned with what is the law as with what ought to be the law. We shall be very glad to hear your evidence in that regard?—Precisely; that is what I understood the Commission would desire. I should like, if you will allow me, to say this: when I was before the Commission in Swansea we desired to give evidence not only with regard to the foreshore and the bed of the river, but also with regard to common rights of Plas Marl. I understood from the Commission then, that that portion of our evidence would be received in Swansea; therefore I should like it to be known that we are not prepared to give evidence here with regard to the rights in Plas Marl, and the duke's action there.

Mr. Grove.

6195. Not to-day?—Not to-day; we reserve that. I understood from what was stated then that the Commission would be sitting in Swansea again.

Chairman.

6196. I am afraid it will be some time before we return to Swansea, because we have many other places to go to first. That was our statement at Swansea no doubt; it is in the notes of the evidence?—We shall be very glad to see you down there as soon as you can come.

6197. Now, will you continue with any evidence you wish to give as to the rights of the Duke of Beaufort. Have you got any statement written out that you would like to make, perhaps that would be the simplest way?—Yes, I have here a sort of brief, I should just like to preface it first of all by stating that in the year 1762 an Act of Parliament was passed on purpose to allot to two parties, the Duke of

Chairman—continued.

Beaufort and the Corporation of Swansea, two parcels of open and enclosed land called the Town Hill and the Burrows, in the borough of Swansea. That was to the effect that 150 acres of the Town Hill should belong to the Duke, his heirs and assigns for ever, and the burgesses of Swansea were to have, in their corporate capacity, that portion of the land called the Burrows.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6198. Is this a private Act?—Yes, a private Act.

6199. Have you got it, Mr. Town Clerk?—(Mr. John Thomas, Town Clerk of Swansea.) No, I have not got a copy here.

Mr. Grove.

6200. (To the Witness.) Could you give us the extent of the Burrows. You told us the extent of the Duke's part was 150 acres?—It would be somewhere about a similar amount—something like 150 acres. It extends from the Vivian stream down to the pier. I should think it is quite 150 acres. In fact it is all immediately abutting on the foreshore right away the whole length of Swansea down to the Vivian stream. I may state that one portion of that Act stated that "all the rest and residue "of the said parcel of land called the Town "Hill, and all the said piece of land called the "Burroughs, which were thereby vested in the "burgesses and their successors in their cor-"porate capacity for ever in severalty freed "and discharged of and from all, and all "manner of right, title, and interest whatso-"ever which the Duke of Beaufort, his heirs "and assigns, or any person claiming or to "claim by from or under him, or by from or "under any Lord or Lords of the said Borough "and Manor could or might have, or to pretend "to have, in or to the same, or any part thereof, "save as in the Act thereinafter excepted." There was also a clause saving the rights of the Duke of Beaufort, as lord of the seigniory of Gower, or of the said borough or manor of Swansea, that is, that the Duke was to have the 150 acres on the top of the hill, Swansea was to have the Burrows, and the Duke, as I understand, the foreshore. Now the Duke has got the lot.

Chairman.

6201. Is that the effect of the tide?—No, it is the effect of his agents. The Duke has the Town Hill, he has also that portion of land abutting upon the foreshore, and he has now got the foreshore as well.

6202. And in your opinion that is inimical to the public interests?—I think I shall be able to prove that in a very few minutes.

6203. Is this piece of land the piece of land that was affected by the action of 1848?—A portion of it. In that action what was contended was this. The corporation had, in the public interest, tipped some land upon the foreshore, thus driving the foreshore backward, but tipped also upon land that had accrued by natural means—that is, by the alluvium of the sea, which I take it would then have been the property of the owners of the adjacent land. Because the Swansea Corporation tipped this ballast and so on, driving back the sea also upon land that had accrued from the sea, the Duke took action in the matter, and the decision was given against the corporation; it was decided that the Duke should have not only the land that had been made by the corporation upon the foreshore, but also the land that had been made by natural means before the corporation had tipped upon it.

6204. Now, will you continue your statement?—"The Duke claims the whole of the foreshore "of Swansea Bay, in other words, the sea shore "between high and low water mark, and his "predecessors have received, and the present "Duke is still receiving, money in respect of "any clay, sea-weed, and sand, that may from "time to time be removed. The Duke claims "this property as his absolute freehold, and has "in recent years disposed of a portion thereof "to a person named Mr. John Dickson, receiv-"ing as consideration money therefor, the "sum of 25,000*l.*" I must interject here that Mr. Dickson, for a trifle less than half that property, for which he paid 25,000*l.*, has since received 56,000*l.*, so you may understand the value of the property in that immediate neighbourhood, and the detriment it is to the Swansea Corporation that the property should have thus slipped from their hands. "That the Duke has "also received from the Corporation of Swansea "payments from time to time in respect of "sewer outlets placed on the foreshore. That "by reason of the construction of the Swansea "Pier a considerable quantity of land has been "reclaimed from the sea, and this land was "claimed by the Duke. The Corporation "resisted the Duke's claim, contending the land "belonging to them as owners of the adjacent "soil, and in the year 1846, or thereabouts, an "action for trespass was brought by the Duke "against the Corporation, when it was held "that the land in dispute, having been reclaimed "from the sea by artificial means, and not "being a natural accretion, the land belonged "to the Duke of Beaufort, and not to the "Swansea Corporation. That by reason of "this decision the Duke has become possessed "of property which will prevent the burgesses "of the borough gaining access to the foreshore, "at certain points, without committing a "trespass. That the Duke's rights to the "foreshore ought to be investigated by Parlia-"ment, and the same properly defined. That "it is wrong in principle, and contrary to "public policy, that any individual should, "either by reason of a grant from the Crown, "or in any other manner, become possessed of "any part of the foreshore, which, according to "the natural order of things, ought to be open "to free and uninterrupted use by the public. "That his Grace the Duke has also received "from the Swansea Harbour Trustees large

" sums of money in respect of land between " high and low water mark, sold by him to the " trustees. The following is a list of some of " the payments thus made :—In the year 1840, " 1,500*l.* was paid to the Duke by the Harbour " Trust for the Duke's rights to a ferry across " the river Tawe, the purchase also including " part of the foreshore. In the year 1869, a " further sum of 500*l.* was paid to the Duke " for land upon which was afterwards con- " structed what is known as the Western Pier." —or rather the continuation of the pier—" In " the year 1879 the Swansea Harbour Trust " paid to the Duke 17,500*l.* for that part of the " foreshore within the borough known as " Fabian's Bay, and other adjoining foreshore " property. This land was acquired by the " Trustees for the formation of what is known " as the Prince of Wales' Dock. 25,000*l.*, as " already stated, was also paid to the Duke, by " Mr. John Dickson, for other portions of the " foreshore of Swansea Bay. At the time of " the construction of the South Dock, land " reclaimed from the sea was sold by the Duke " of Beaufort to the Harbour Trust, for the " construction of such dock, the consideration " being a reservation to the Duke of wharfage, " 1,300 feet long, by 120 feet wide" (he is getting the lot now) "and in 1885 negotiations " were opened between the Harbour Trustees " and the Duke for the acquisition by the " Harbour Trust of all the Duke's rights in the " bed of the Swansea River, from a weir at " Morriston" (that is at the end of the tidal river) " to the extreme end of the Swansea Pier, " the Duke asking 25,000*l.* for his rights as " Lord of the Seigniory of Gower and Kilvey. " These negotiations ultimately fell through, " certain members of the Harbour Trust " declining to recognise the rights of the Duke " to dispose of the property in question. As " further evidence of the way in which the " development of the harbour is interfered with " by reason of the Duke's alleged rights, it may " be pointed out that in the year 1883, the " Globe Dry Dock Company entered into " arrangements with the Harbour Trust to rent " from them certain wharfage, at the rate of 1*l.* " per foot frontage, to be used in connexion " with a gridiron, for ship-building purposes, " intended to be constructed upon that part of " the harbour immediately adjoining. These " negotiations, however, fell through, owing to " the terms demanded by the Duke being " prohibitive to the company in question, for " like reasons, in the year 1882, the application " of Messrs. Richardson Brothers, to rent land " on the east side for like purposes also failed. " Secondly, as to the bed of the Swansea River." —the other, of course, was relating to the foreshore—" The Duke claims the bed of the " Swansea River as his absolute freehold, and " as a result it is impossible to either deepen the " river, or to do anything to improve the " navigation of the Tawe, without first obtain- " ing the concurrence of the Duke, and com- " pensating him for any imaginary injury that " might be occasioned to him. That the " Swansea Corporation, in connexion with their " sewerage system, have been prevented laying " any sewers discharging into the river Tawe, " without first compensating the Duke." I may mention that there was a very considerable period of time intervened between our first of all entering into communication with the Duke and our being able to obtain permission, putting the town to a very great deal of inconvenience on account of the absolute necessity there was for making the sewerage system there. " That " the Duke's rights in respect of the Swansea " River ought to be thoroughly investigated " and decided. That in this case it is equally " improper, and unbecoming the 19th century, " that rights such as those claimed by his Grace " the Duke of Beaufort should any longer " remain unchallenged." That is practically my brief. There are other points that I think it would be well to refer to in connexion with that.

6205. You have never thought of trying any other test action, I suppose. That action of 1848 was considered to be sufficient?—I do not know what was the reason then, but I have it in my own mind that it was the reason stated by the previous witness; that the Duke has very great influence and very great resources down in that immediate neighbourhood, and that might have something to do with it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6206. The case was not taken to the Exchequer Chamber or the House of Lords?—No.

6207. Do you know why that was?—I can only suggest, I do not know really.

Mr. John Thomas (Town Clerk of Swansea): There was an application for a new trial. A rule nisi was granted, and afterwards the rule was discharged; the case was not taken any further.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

The rule was discharged by Chief Baron Pollock, Baron Parke, Baron Alderson, and Baron Rolfe.

Mr. John Thomas: That is so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

I do not know, Mr. Town Clerk, whether you are going to give evidence, but perhaps I might ask you now, why was not the case taken to the Exchequer Chamber?

Mr. John Thomas: I know of no reason beyond the expense incurred by the Corporation, in those days. The litigation, such as it was, cost the Swansea Corporation 4,000*l.* I rather incline to the opinion that the Corporation did not proceed on account of the expense.

Witness.

e 6418. I may mention, in connexion with the foreshore, that there is tipping going on at the present time of the most offensive nature, completely spoiling that portion of the bay. It was at one time the most fashionable part of the bay to bathe in, it would be a very unfashionable body that would bathe in it now. I have here some photographs [producing same] showing the way the bay is now being spoilt by the action of the agents of the Duke. In the first photograph there, instead of our beautiful yellow sands that used to be such an attraction to Swansea, you will see the foreshore is in a very disgusting state on account of the action of the waves upon the tipping, carrying the small debris down to the pier and making it completely black, and the very offence for which the Corporation was mulcted of land that they had made is now being carried on by the Duke's agent in a much more offensive way than it was done then.

Chairman.

6208. These tippings are done to reclaim land, are they not?—Obviously.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6209. I have not had the benefit of a copy of your evidence, and I am not sure that I have gathered rightly the effect of some portions of it. There was a transaction, as I understand, between the Duke of Beaufort and the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the borough of Swansea, before the time the South Dock was built?—That is so.

6210. To what property did this action of the Duke of Beaufort against the Mayor of Swansea in 1848 apply? What the report says is this: It was an action in respect of "trespass for "breaking and entering a certain close of the "plaintiff, at Swansea, in the county of Gla- "morgan, abutting on the east on the western "pier of Swansea, and on the south on the "seashore, and for erecting thereon certain "seats," &c.?—Yes, that was the land that constituted the so-called Burrows.

6211. How was that land formed?—By the gradual accretion of sand that was washed up by the tide, the sea was going further back, or, you might say, the land was encroaching upon the sea. On purpose to make it convenient for commerce there, they allowed the tipping of ballast upon that shore, consolidating the land, and, as I understand from the evidence that was given there, they tipped it a little bit too far. On purpose to prevent this ballast from being washed into the sea, slag was sent out from the Western Pier, about 80 yards along the shore, and it was raised so high that the inhabitants of Cambrian Place, which you will remember overlooks the South Dock now, complained of it. It was then levelled, so that they might be able to see the sea from their windows, and on purpose to make it comfortable and convenient for the inhabitants of Swansea it was laid out, and seats were laid there. The action of trespass that the Duke brought against the Corporation was, I understand, in respect of the provision of those seats.

6212. Then a portion of the land in question in that case was artificially interposed between the sea and the land?—Yes.

6213. And the other portion was the gradual result of natural processes?—Just so.

6215. But then it is perfectly clear from this case that the Duke put in the grants from King John and from King Edward I. giving him virtually regal rights. What I cannot understand from your evidence is this: Taking that to be so, taking it that the land belongs to the Duke of Beaufort, as it appears to do, it belongs to him in the same sense in which the sea-shore belongs to the King or Queen as lord of the shore. Does he claim to exercise the rights of an individual owner over it?—It appears so from the action that has been taken continuously, and the selling of the freehold of it to people.

6216. I notice the selling too; of course, that might be a selling of whatever rights were implied as belonging to the Duke of Beaufort under the circumstances. Have the Duke's agents done anything with this property at any time?—Oh, yes, they have sold a portion of it.

6217. I mean actually done anything in the way of building, for instance?—They have allowed us to build a hospital, for which we are very much obliged to them—a fever hospital, which is exceedingly convenient—and for that we are paying them 10*l.* a year; I beg pardon, I thought it was 10*l.* a year, but I am told it is a nominal rent.

Sir John Llewelyn.

6218. A removable building?—A removable building for infectious diseases.

Professor Rhŷs.

6219. Anyhow, you pay a rent for it?—We pay a rent for it, and they are also receiving, as I understand, 2*d.* per load from those who bring the refuse to tip upon the foreshore. They are making that charge of 2*d.* per load in making this land.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6220. The Duke of Beaufort, I gather, is lord of the manor of Swansea as well; there is a manor of Swansea?—Yes; two distinctive titles, as I understand; he is lord of the manor of Swansea and also seignior of the seigniory of Gower.

6221. From the evidence before us to-day, he appears to be lord of the manor of Trewyddfa, also lord of the manor of Kilvey, as appears from this case of the Duke of Beaufort v. Smith, and I understand he is lord of the manor of Swansea as well?—Yes.

6222. And over and above that he is lord of the seigniory or honour of Gower?—Yes, which overrides, as I understand, the lordship of the manor of Swansea.

6224. Quite so, but all the manors are in the Terra de Gower. Kilvey is in the seigniory of Gower?—But the seigniory, I think, overrides the whole lot of them.

6226. We cannot decide anything. I only want to know what inference is to be drawn from what has been actually done since 1849. As I understand your evidence, the Duke of Beaufort treats this land exactly as though he were a private proprietor of it?—Precisely so; from all the evidence I can gather he is treating it as his own freehold. Whether his right as seignior of Gower, or lord of the manor of Swansea, enable him to do so, I cannot say, but the facts seem to be that he is treating it as his freehold, selling it and letting it, and giving permission to tip upon it, and making charges for doing so—taking tolls for permission to take away the sand and the clay, and so on—exercising all these rights of absolute ownership.

6227. And stopping the public from passing over?—Yes. I take it we cannot now obtain access to the sands except by committing a trespass. He is also making a charge in respect of our sewer pipes being allowed to go down into the bay. He has charged also the bathing company some sort of wayleave for a pipe to go underneath the railway in order to obtain the sea-water from the sea that they pump up for baths. He also charges for the outlets for our sewers. All these are charges by the Duke upon us.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6228. The south dock is on the right bank of the river, is it not?—The left, looking up. Looking towards the sea, it is on the right.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

6229. That is, the right bank of the river?—Yes.

6230. Then it runs parallel to the sea, does it not; almost at right angles to the river?—Yes.

6231. And to the north dock?—Yes.

6232. Then there is a bit of land, is there not, between the south dock and the sea?—Yes.

6233. Does the Duke of Beaufort, or do the purchasers from him, claim that as private property?—That portion of it belongs to the Swansea Harbour Trust under their agreement with the Duke and the Swansea Corporation.

6234. That is the bit that was bought from the Duke by the Harbour Trust?—Yes, in consideration of the Duke having the right to 130 feet of wharfage. The spoil bank that was naturally made by excavating the dock went out that way, and I think it is under that right also that he claims all the encroachments upon the foreshore as his own private property.

6235. If you cross over the south dock or the basin and go to the left you get to the pier, do you not?—Yes.

6236. Whose property is the land between the pier and the land between the sea and the south dock?—The Duke of Beaufort claims it, and is in possession of it now. It was of that piece of land that those photographs were taken that I showed you. You will have noticed one in which the pier rail is shown. That photograph shows a portion of the ground you are referring to.

6237. By what right do the public go along the pier?—None at all except by the grace of his Grace the Duke of Beaufort. I beg pardon, they have a right of way through the Harbour Trust Estate, but on purpose to get on to the pier from any other portion of the town, it is only by the grace of his Grace, except at the very further end of the dock. Paxton Street is the first, I believe, that we have a right to. We have a 30-feet road, which is cut off completely. At the building of the south dock it was reserved for the use of the public, but the Duke having built further and further on, we are now prevented altogether; so this 30-feet road is no use again to the public at all.

6238. How did the Harbour Trust come into being. Was it by Act of Parliament?—First of all, the south dock estate——

6239. My question is about the present Harbour Trust. How did they come into being. Was it by Act of Parliament?—An Act of Parliament, and taking over the south dock estate.

6240. I see that, according to this case, the Duke of Beaufort v. Smith, the Duke is owner of the port of Swansea—lord of the port. "The plaintiff claims to be the owner of the "port of Swansea," and that seems to have been admitted. What arrangement was made with the Duke of Beaufort at the time the Harbour Trust was formed?—He is represented on the Harbour Trust; I think he has two, if not three, representatives there.

6241. Going back to that case, let me ask—Is this property between the high and low water marks. I am trying to understand the matter. It says that the trespass for which the action was brought was the erection of benches on a ballast bank on the seashore at Swansea between the high and low water marks. Is that the case?—That is the fact. The case was brought before the court.

6242. Do I understand, Mr. Mayor, that you complain of the terms exacted by the Duke of Beaufort? I will put my question, perhaps, in a clearer form. Assuming that by law he has these rights, which appears to be the case, does he claim too much?—I think they are very detrimental to the commercial interests of Swansea. For instance, there was 17,500*l.*, a perpetual rent-charge, you may say, upon the Harbour Trust before they could make the new dock, the Prince of Wales' Dock.

6243. That is not what I meant. Supposing that these rights belong to the Duke of Beaufort legally, and that, therefore, the persons intending to improve the port and borough of Swansea are at his mercy; do you consider that he, as an owner, is asking too much habitually?—My impression is this—that the rights were conferred upon him, not for his own special benefit, not for his individual benefit, but to hold them for the benefit of all; and that he is accruing to himself the whole of the profits. As I take it, he holds it by his gift from the Crown, not so much for the individual, but to keep it and take care of it as lord and seignior, and that it may not be used by the one against the benefit of many. It is more to prevent others doing the very thing which he is doing himself.

6244. The general rule of law is perfectly clear that the ownership of the shore, so far as the reach of the medium high tide between the spring and the neap tide, is vested in the Crown. That is always interpreted to be practically for the public interest, because in that regard the interest of the Crown and the interest of the public must be identical in all practical purposes?—Yes.

6245. Your complaint, as I understand it, is that he, having got a grant, which from the largeness of its terms includes what would ordinarily be vested in the Crown, is exercising it, not as the Crown would exercise it, but as a private owner?—As a private owner pure and simple. If there was any adequate compensation to be given to the public by the seignior there would not be so much to complain of, but he is getting all he can and giving nothing for it.

6246. I am basing the question upon the assumption that the case of the Duke of Beaufort v. The Corporation of Swansea is conclusive?—I sincerely hope not.

6247. We should not express an opinion upon a purely legal question?—I quite understand that.

6248. I think the questions which have just been asked very much bring the matter to the point, but, I should like to put this question to you. The Duke of Beaufort claims not only to be the lord, but also to have these greater seignorial rights. As Mr. Brynmor Jones has said, I suppose we must take that case as settling that, under one of those two heads, he has these rights. It does not follow from anything we have heard that he has them as rights which another lord of the manor would not have. Then one naturally asks the question whether you consider that he is exercising these manorial rights, or these seignorial rights, differently from the way an ordinary lord of the manor would be entitled to exercise them elsewhere?—My only experience is under the Duke of Beaufort. I do not know what other lords of a manor have done, but if they all act in the same way as the Duke of Beaufort has, the sooner they are done away with the better.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

6249. Would it not follow, that if the Duke of Beaufort had these rights, not as lord of the manor of Swansea, but from the Crown, that he could exercise no greater rights than the Crown can exercise; and that if it be clear—I not say it is—but, supposing that it was clear that the foreshore opposite the town of Scarboro', for instance, belonged to the Crown, it would be thought a monstrous thing for the Crown to exercise the rights which the Duke of Beaufort is exercising at Swansea. That is what you feel?—That is what I feel.

6250. I am not speaking of the legal point at all, because it may be that that is not the position of matters; but there is that view, which I think may be perfectly fairly put before the Commission: that if these rights are exercised as rights which have been transferred from the Crown to an individual, the individual ought to use them with the same care, and for the public good, in the same way as the Crown. But there is another point which I do not think we have at all made clear; whether he does not exercise these rights as lord of the manor of Swansea? It may be that the owner of the ground at Scarboro', for instance, might have rights as lord of the manor in the foreshore, and then perhaps the public view which Mr. Brynmor Jones has expressed, might have to some extent to be qualified. But then that brings it down to the point, does it not, that you consider that whether these rights are exercised by the lord of the manor, as lord of the manor or as lord of Gower under grant from the Crown, that in either case he is using those rights to the detriment of the growth of the town of Swansea, and that there ought to be some way in which, for the good of the many, these questions could be settled. You bring it before the Commission as one of those things in which, whether the law is so or not—even if it is so—it is a case which may be fairly represented as a grievance of the town of Swansea against an individual?—That is so.

6251. That is the way in which you consider it ought to be put?—That is the impression we have in Swansea.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

6252. I think it is quite right it should be recorded, but you understand we do not go into the legal question at all?—Quite so.

Mr. Grove.

6253. You say that the Duke deals with this property as an absolute freehold?—So it appears to us.

6254. And he sold a certain portion to a Mr. Dickson?—Yes.

6255. Did Mr. Dickson give 26,000*l.* for it?—25,000.

6256. And you say that he then sold half?—Less than half.

6258. So that it would appear as though the whole of the property was worth, we will say, in round figures, 120,000*l.*, or something of that sort?—The price that Mr. Dickson received for it from the London and North Western Railway was arrived at by arbitration so that you may take it that it was somewhere nearly fair.

6259. Why did not the Corporation of Swansea purchase that property at that time?—For what purpose?

6260. If it was worth so much value, would it not have been a good business purchase for them?—Corporations are not allowed to speculate with the ratepayers' money.

6261. That is a very good answer. I suppose, Mr. Mayor, you could give us possibly, if we wish it, any further information—because the whole thing is rather intricate, and wants to be looked at carefully—when we come again to Glamorganshire?—I shall be very pleased to do so.

6262. You spoke of tipping offensive matter in the bay at the present time?—Yes.

6263. What about the port sanitary authority—could they not prevent that?—Well, when I speak of it as being offensive, I do not say it is prejudicial to health, being town refuse, and building refuse; but it is offensive matter being placed in immediate contiguity to the tide, and more especially at our favourite bathing spot.

6264. Of course you consider that, if it was offensive to health, you could deal with it as the Port Sanitary Authority?—Yes.

6265. You say that the land used by the London and North Western Railway Company was taken from Mr. Dickson by arbitration?—Yes.

6266. That land was immediately in front of the bay?—Yes.

6267. Supposing the Duke of Beaufort dealt with that property as lord of the manor, would that enable him to treat it as his private property?—That is a legal question; but I should say No, if you asked me my opinion.

6268. Then, if he is dealing with it as lord of the seigniory of Gower, would it be right, do you think, for him to go further than the Crown generally does?—I must make you the same answer again. As I understand, the lord of the seigniory of Gower is paramount to the lords of the different manors. These manors are in the seigniory of the Gower; he is not only the lord of the manor, but also his own master.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6269. What I understand from the cases, is this, that these manors are parcels of the honour or seigniory of Gower, and secondly, it might well be, I do not know whether it is so or not, that the lord of the manor, we will say of Clase, which happens to be the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, really held of the Duke of Beaufort, as lord of the seigniory of Gower, and not of the Crown. This grant of the seigniory of Gower took place in the reign of King John, that was before the statute of Quia Emptores. One thing in reference to that, if I understand that statute aright, the rights of the lord of the manor are given up by the statute of 1862, are they not?—No, he has been exercising his rights as lord of the manor up to the present time. He is holding a court leet there.

6270. I thought you read a statute in which the rights of the lord of the manor were given up?—In the Act of 1762—I am under that impression myself—but still it has not been acted upon. I should be very sorry indeed to mislead you on any matter. I see there was also a clause saving the rights of the Duke of Beaufort as lord of the seigniory of Gower, or of the said borough or manor of Swansea.

Chairman.

6271. Is that a copy of the exchange of 1762?—That is a report made by the town clerk to the town council in 1886. We were asking how we stood in the matter, and that is the report we received. (The Report referred to is printed in the Appendix.)

Professor Rhŷs.

6272. Does that, in your opinion, give him a right to deal with it as his absolute private property, either as lord of the manor or as seignior of the seigniory of Gower?—I can only give my opinion—no, it does not.

Sir John Llewelyn.

6273. I ask you whether the Duke to your knowledge has sold any other land than that which you have already spoken of to Mr. Dickson—any other of this land reclaimed from the sea?—That was the only sale made to Mr. Dickson, but the Duke has sold land to the Harbour Trust.

6274. I am coming to that. The land which you have spoken of extended from Vivian Stream to the pier?—Yes, the Burrows—the portion allotted to Swansea by the Act of 1762.

6275. You also told us, I think, that he required an acknowledgment in regard to the Prince of Wales' Dock. Land had been acquired from the Duke in Fabian's Bay?—Yes, that is the other side.

6276. What was the acknowledgment paid to the Duke for that?—17,500*l.*

6277. The effect of the reclamation from the sea would be to cut the public access off from the burrows?—Yes, from the burrows to the sea.

6278. You consider that to be very detrimental to the interests of the public?—Oh, very much so.

6279. Is that encroachment as you call it continuing—extending?—It is being done at the present day, no doubt at the present hour, carts are going there tipping.

6280. Do you contend it is illegal?—I contend it ought to be.

6281. Have any other steps been taken since the year 1848 to test the legality?—We did attempt to stop Mr. Dickson, who had bought some of this land from the Duke, from selling sand.

6282. You consider the matter to be a pressing one?—Certainly I do.

6283. I think the words you used yourself just now were, if I took them down rightly, that the Duke's right to the foreshore ought to be investigated and defined by Act of Parliament?—Yes.

[Adjourned for a short time.]

Chairman.

6284. We are very much obliged to you for your evidence; it has been most interesting, and I should like to know whether you have anything to add to it now?—Yes, I should like to put in a map we have here showing the accretion not only by the sea, but also by artificial means. I think the high-water mark is different there in two or three places, and I may say further, this was the original high-water mark, somewhere about 1840 when the original offence for which the Corporation has been so severely punished, was committed, Cambrian Place that I referred to is somewhere about here, and the sea came up within a short distance of where Cambrian Place is. (The witness explained the positions on the map.)

6285. This is all formed by the recession of the sea?—Yes, since about 1840.

6286. Is it so recent as that?—Yes. Permit me to show it you on the map: here you will see the high-water mark in 1855, and here in 1878, and there in 1893. It keeps on accreting not only by alluvia, but also by the tippings going on. This is the place represented in the photographs, where the house refuse and town refuse and building material has been pitched, and this is all slag. At one time this was the favourite portion of Swansea, where the principal bathing used to take place, but now it is simply impossible on account of the dirt that is thrown up.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6287. As I understand, the Guildhall and Cambrian Place are about there?—Yes.

6288. Is it the fact that from Cambrian Place you could see the tide coming in and out before the docks were built?—Oh, yes. And that was quite a pleasant walk in the neighbourhood.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

6289. The assembly rooms are there now?—Yes, they are.

Chairman.

6290. The docks I suppose are a great benefit to the town?—Yes, they have sacrificed the beauty of this particular portion for the interests of the town. The bay is very lovely all the way round.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6291. My impression is that I have seen engravings or pictures of Cambrian Place in which you could see at one end of it a little sail, and the tide flowing?—Yes; there are several old pictures of Swansea which we could easily put in evidence in which the whole of it is shown as a pretty piece of sea scenery.

6292. How many acres of land have accreted since the time you refer to?—What the whole amount is I do not know, but you can easily suppose it must be over 100 acres.

6293. Have the Corporation of Swansea always acted as though this decision in 1849 absolutely prevented them from taking any further action in the matter?—They have; you see the Duke is such a very big man.

6294. You were afraid?—Yes, that is about it. Some of them were. We are living in a different age now, and although the Duke is a very big man we have also grown now, so that we are not afraid so much. Opinion has grown larger.

Professor Rhŷs.

6294A. You were somewhat afraid of the expense?—That I think was a good excuse.

6295. Have you anything more to add to your evidence besides putting in the map?—I think I have pretty well exhausted it. I was asked as to the question whether the Duke's right should be compensated or not. I think if I could give expression to an opinion, I should certainly say, yes, so far as the rights are concerned according to their present value; not prospective value. Say, for instance, there was a debtor and creditor account kept as to the amount he has received from this time back—to compensate upon those terms and not from this time forward what he might be likely to receive.

6296. You are of opinion that the land will become more valuable?—Oh, certainly.

Sir John Llewelyn.

6297. I think you took rather a higher ground, did you not, that the Duke's rights being royal rights ought not to be exercised as against the public?—Yes, certainly.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. ROBERT DICKSON BURNIE, M.P., recalled and further examined.

See 5106.

Chairman.

6298 You are M.P. for Swansea?—Yes.

6299. You have heard the previous witness's statement. Have you anything to add to it?—Just a little in confirmation. I may say that almost all that he has said I am in sympathy with, and I think it represents the facts of the case.

6300. You endorse his evidence?—Yes. In consequence of the very complete evidence of the mayor, I think it will be only necessary for me to detain you a short time. I may explain to those of the Commission who do not know it that I have had many years' experience of public work in Swansea in connexion with the Town Council of Swansea, and as Chairman of the Finance Committee, and Chairman of the Finance Committee of the Harbour Trust, and also as mayor; I am therefore able to bear out what has been taking place, and can say how detrimental to the commercial interests of Swansea this continual control of the Duke of Beaufort as a private individual has been. When any new scheme has come up it has at times been dropped because it has been necessary to get the consent of the Duke of Beaufort. Then with reference especially to the question of delay to the drainage works; that was a source of considerable anxiety to the corporation for many years. We had our drainage works constructed; we had gone to considerable expense to improve the condition of Morriston, Landore, and Plas Marl which was in a most unfortunate insanitary condition; fever was about, and yet we were unable to complete the sewerage works through the refusal of the Duke to allow it to be drained into the river. Now, I wish to express this opinion, whether it was right or not right to drain into the river it seems to me it cannot be to the public interest of a large town like Swansea that any individual, however high in position, should be able to control such an important matter. Then I remember, also, the proposal to buy up what were called the Duke's rights to the foreshore and to the bed of the river. It was due to a small opposition, strenuously urged, that 25,000*l.* was not paid for those rights. It thought that the harbour trust could afford to wait, and the tendency of legislation was not likely to be more favourable to lords of manors and seigniors of seigniories, and, as a consequence, the proposed purchase fell through. I think the mayor has shown you that Swansea has been a fairly rich plum to the Duke of Beaufort. Rightly or otherwise, large sums of money have been obtained from land and property in connexion with Swansea. I want to supplement that, and to mention that in addition the sum of no less than 8,000*l.* was paid to the Duke of Beaufort some few years ago for what were called his rights to the minerals under the town of Swansea. So far that sum has been quite unremunerative to the corporation, but that is an additional amount that the Duke has had out of Swansea. Then, in addition to what he has had from the corporation and from the harbour trust, large sums have been drawn from the railway companies; I merely mention this to emphasize that out of Swansea the Duke of Beaufort has received very considerable financial returns. I do not think I want to do more than (if you would allow me) make what I think is a practical suggestion with a view to bringing about what I should like to arise out of this Commission. From the evidence of Mr. Hartland, I think you will have gathered that, assuming the Duke to have rights on the tidal or navigable parts of the river, there is some doubt whether he has not gone beyond those rights by going above the weir at Morriston. I think that is one point with respect to which there ought to be every inquiry. Another point is this: much of this land, I am of opinion, has been gained from the retreat of the sea and from natural causes. It has been argued here to-day, and I believe that is the law, that the foreshore that is added on by artificial works belongs to the seignior of the seigniory of Gower: but that land that has been added on by accretion or by retreat of the sea, would have been the land of the corporation of Swansea. I think it is desirable, even assuming the Duke's rights to that portion that has been gained from artificial works, that there should be some further inquiry as to whether the whole of that has been due to the artificial works, or whether part has not been due to the natural accretion of the sea. As the mayor says, the Duke has had the whole. Those are points which strike me as requiring more elucidation and investigation. Then Mr. Hartland has also mentioned the land, that from his evidence we gathered, has been wrongly attached or annexed in the neighbourhood of Swansea. There, again, is a question that it is of great importance to further elucidate and inquire into, viz., whether that is so or not. Assuming that we admit all the legal rights as the Duke assumes them himself, I think it will be found that he has even exceeded those. Then I want to call your attention for a moment to the Act of 1762, because I think it will clear up questions which were put by Mr. Seebohm and Mr. Brynmor Jones as to whether these foreshore rights might not have been claimed in the capacity of lord of the manor. There evidently had been disputes between the town of Swansea and the Duke up to the time of the Act of 1762, and it was ultimately compromised and embodied in the Act of Parliament that the Duke should take 150 acres of the Town Hill Estate, which the mayor has referred to, and the words are to this effect, "reserving the remainder," that is after the Duke takes the 150 acres "of the Town Hill," and what was then known as "the Burrows" (and by "the Burrows" is meant the line of property where the sea used to come up to in olden times), "bordering the Swansea "foreshore, to the inhabitants of Swansea." Under this Act of Parliament the manorial rights I think were made over to the town at the time that the Duke was granted his 150 acres. It goes on to say that it should be placed to the inhabitants of Swansea "freed "and discharged of and from all manner "of right, title, and interest whatsoever which "the Duke of Beaufort, his heirs and assigns, "or any person or persons claiming or to claim "by, from, or under him, or by, from, or under "any lord or lords of the said borough or manor "could, or might have, or pretend to have, in, "or to the same, or any part thereof." I think it is open to this observation, that in that Act of Parliament, if the Duke had any rights as lord of the manor to the foreshore they would have been extinguished.

6301. Lord of the manor you said?—Yes, lord of the borough or manor. Then comes the greater interest, the seignior of the seigniory of Gower. I take it the lord of the manor is the lesser, included in the greater, and although those foreshore rights, if there were any, had ceased to him as lord of the manor, he retains, and considers afterwards he is entitled to, as seignior of the seigniory of Gower. I do not know whether that explains to Mr. Seebohm the idea of any rights to the foreshore that may have existed for the Duke as lord of the manor. It seems that the claim now is as seignior of the seigniory of Gower, and not as lord of the manor. I think I have shown there are three or four vital points with reference to the interests of the town of Swansea in which there is good ground for inquiry as to whether the position to-day is right or not; that is to say, whether land has been enclosed and annexed, which ought not to have been enclosed, or rights have been asserted over parts of the river that ought not to have been asserted, and whether the claims to foreshore rights are good or not. My idea is this, that if the Commission could see their way to recommend that as a preliminary to Parliamentary interference, an expert should be appointed to inquire into the position of matters, it would not only be useful as regards Swansea, but I believe would be useful as regards many of the other important parts of Wales. It demands inquiry, and the only thing is how is the best practicable way to get at the exact facts. I do not think I should be right in detaining the Commission any longer unless it is to answer any questions that you may desire to put to me.

Sir John Llewelyn.

6302. You said that a few years ago, 8,000*l.* were paid for the minerals underneath the borough of Swansea. Of course there has been no attempt yet to work them, but it is possible in future days there may be?—I think the balance of opinion is that the minerals are not of much practical value. I should have said that I am informed by the town clerk that under the Act of Parliament of 1762, the minerals were reserved to the Duke, and that is why the minerals were sold subsequently for 8,000*l.*

6303. Whether valuable or not, they now belong to the borough of Swansea?—Yes, for the sum of 8,000*l.*

Mr. Seebohm.

6304. You speak of the corporation of Swansea as being entirely distinct, of course, from the Duke of Beaufort as the landowner. When was the corporation of Swansea created?—It is a very old corporation.

6305. Do you know whether the charter was from the Crown or from the Duke of Beaufort at that time?—I think the original charter was from Henry II.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6306. There were earlier charters, I think?—At any rate, they are very old indeed.

Mr. John Thomas: We go back to King John.

Mr. Chapman: William de Breos was the first seignior.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6307. By that name they were granted; that is, by the name of Terra de Gower; they were granted by charter by King John in the fourth year of his reign. Is the first charter of the borough of Swansea from that time granted to William de Breos?—I think it is; that is my recollection.

Mr. Seebohm.

In those charters are there any words giving jurisdiction over the port, or anything which would be useful in this question. For the purposes of this inquiry we have not had it put before us as to whether there be in those charters any matters which would constitute, perhaps, an important element in the matter.

Chairman.

6308. Perhaps they will produce them. Have you regarded it from that point of view: that the corporation itself would probably have rights?—Certainly.

6309. They have not been brought forward to-day: and those rights are not such rights under the Charter as limit the rights of the Duke of Beaufort either as lord of the manor or seignior of the seigniory of Gower?—I have always understood that the charters of Swansea have given very great freedom: more than the usual freedom given in charters, rather than less.

Mr. Chapman.

I remember one from King John in which it gives rights to cut down certain wood and make certain tolls and certain charges for entering the port. They are peculiar names, but it means that they have a right to take wood and levy toll upon the wood brought to the town.

Mr. Seebohm.

6310. How does it come that the Duke of Beaufort is the lord of the port?—Mr. Brynmor Jones read that from some law suit.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

In the case of the Duke of Beaufort v. Smith, to which I alluded, the question of the Duke of Beaufort as owner of the port appeared to have been more or less relevant, and it is expressly stated in the report that the plaintiff claimed to be the owner of the port of Swansea. As a rule, by the common law, it is the King who would have been the owner of the port.

Mr. Seebohm.

When the King by charter created the corporation one would have naturally supposed there would be some words which would have carried the right to the port.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

I understand that to be this: that the Duke of Beaufort under this charter, or, rather, as the successor in title of the person who obtained a charter or grant of the land of Gower, claimed that he had the same rights which the King would ordinarily have had in reference to this port.

Mr. Seebohm.

Having given a charter, his rights would be limited by the charter which was given.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Undoubtedly he could not derogate from his own grant.

Mr. Seebohm.

6311. I do not know that we can follow that further now?—I may mention there is a very valuable book in existence, called "The Charters of Swansea," published by Mr. Francis, in which every charter is set out.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6312. If I remember aright the Board of Trade have now vested in them by statute the duty of attending to the interests of the Crown in regard to the foreshore?—Yes, I believe they have.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

6313. Have any representations ever been made, so far as you know, by the corporation of Swansea to the Board of Trade in reference to the action, or any threatened action of the Duke of Beaufort?—Not to my knowledge. I might explain here that although the corporation have never taken any active steps during recent years, there has been a continuous agitation with reference to the idea that the people of Swansea were being unfairly treated in reference to their foreshore; but it has never concentrated itself sufficiently for any special action to have been taken.

6314. Then, so far as you know, the Crown itself has never had occasion to consider its position in regard to the rights of the Duke of Beaufort?—Not to my recollection.

6315. With regard to the Act of 1762, as I understood the section, or the portion of the Act that you read, the interest and right and title of the Duke of Beaufort to the Burrows was expressly given up?—That is as I understand it.

6316. So that after that Act, and after those 150 acres were taken possession of by the Duke under that Act of 1762, that parcel of land was vested in the corporation of Swansea?—That is as I understand it.

6317. The very considerable accretion of land shown upon the map produced by the mayor is immediately adjoining now the Burrows?—Yes.

6318. Do I understand you to contend that that really ought to belong to the corporation as appurtenant, as it were, as owners of the borough?—I am inclined to think that the action between the corporation and the Duke of Beaufort arose out of this—the people of Swansea had been under the impression that under the Act of 1762 they were entitled to all those rights; that is how I assume the lawsuit came about in 1846, and the people of Swansea were surprised to find that the Duke of Beaufort was stepping in to claim them.

6319. As I understand the general law applicable to the matter it is this: that as to lands gained from the sea, either by alluvion, that is by the washing up of sand, for instance, so as at any time to make what was mere foreshore terra firma, or an addition by dereliction, as when the sea shrinks back below the usual water mark; that in those cases if the gain of territory, the gain of land, has come about little by little, by imperceptible degrees, it belongs to the adjoining landowner?—That is as I understand it.

6320. But that if by any sudden natural cause, or some artificial cause, there is a considerable increase of land it belongs to the Crown?—Yes; I understand the position to be as you put it; I tried to express it in that way.

6321. I want to understand your contention as representing the people of Swansea. You say that by the Act of 1762 the Burrows became vested in the people of Swansea, freed from any claim or title of the Duke of Beaufort?—Yes, that is it.

6322. And then, partly by natural causes, and partly by artificial causes, very considerable accessions of territory has taken place?—Yes.

6323. Are there any means of ascertaining how much is due to the sudden or artificial cause, and how much to the imperceptible and natural cause?—It is one of those points that I think an expert might be able to get out.

6324. An expert in what?—Well, a person who understands all about Crown rights and regal rights, common lands, &c.

6325. Prima facie, that means a lawyer?—Whether a lawyer or not I cannot say, but he should know the law and custom as regards manorial and seignioral rights, common lands, and the like.

6326. It seems to me to turn very much on the question of fact after all?—Some one must investigate. Even the facts stated by Mr Hartland to-day would have to be investigated, and they are exceedingly complicated. With all due respect to a Commission like this, I do not think a Commission such as this could be expected to fully investigate points of that sort.

6327. Of course we cannot affect to investigate with any closeness the rights between individuals; what we want to understand is what grievances there are, if any, which take place and which happen in consequence of the existing state of the law. Having read the report of the case of the Duke of Beaufort v. the Mayor of Swansea I cannot find that there is any reference at all to this Act of 1762 there?—Of course the Act of 1762 is not so much a foreshore Act as it is the assigning or making over of the property that bordered the foreshore—the Burrows.

6328. That is true; but as I understand it the land which was in dispute in this action of trespass was part of the land which had become added to the Burrows since 1762?—Certainly.

6329. Then, "And all the said piece of land "called the Burroughs, which was thereby vested "in the Burgesses and their successors in their "corporate capacity for ever in severalty freed "and discharged of and from all, and all manner "of right, title, and interest whatsoever which "the Duke of Beaufort, his heirs and assigns, or "any person or persons claiming or to claim by, "from, or under him, or by, from, or under any "lord or lords of the said Borough and manor "could or might have or to pretend to have, "in or to the same, or any part thereof." That is all the Burrows?—Yes.

6330. "Save as in this Act excepted"?—Yes.

6331. There is a saving clause on the rights of the Duke of Beaufort, as lord of the manor of Swansea?—The right to the minerals.

6332. What does the Act say?—I tried to get the Act this morning, but I found in the House of Commons library they did not go back further than 1798; the town clerk would have the Act.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

6333. Do you know now what the attitude of the agent is in regard to the right of bathing, for instance, at Swansea?—Is there any toll charged to any person—to the keepers of the machines the people, I suppose, use for bathing?—I think they do pay a toll for the bathing machines.

6334. To whom?—To the Duke, I think. I cannot speak with certainty, but I am under that impression. Sand has been sold from the beach. They do make a charge for the standing of the bathing machines.

6335. The Duke makes a charge?—Yes.

Mr. Glynn Price, Agent to the Duke of Beaufort: A nominal charge.

Chairman.

Do I understand you to say a nominal charge?

Mr. Price: Yes.

The Witness.

I do not know whether it is a nominal charge, but I say a charge is made.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6336. Are there any byelaws of the corporation in reference to bathing?—Yes, there are byelaws of the corporation as to the times of bathing, and what they shall wear.

6337. Has there been any interference on the part of the Duke with regard to the right of bathing?—I am not aware of any.

6338. Apart from charging a toll for the machines?—Not that I am aware of. He has interfered with the rights of putting sewerage pipes; he has claimed the right in the same way as for the water pipes from the "baths"; he claims a rental, so that he assumes what appears to be an absolute and individual ownership.

6339. With regard to the taking of sand, do you know anything about that?—At one time there was a very great disturbance in Swansea; a lot of people were sent to gaol for taking sand; they were selling sand and people refused to pay and asserted their rights. The Duke intervened, and I am not sure, but I think I am right in saying that he discontinued charging but prohibited anyone taking it.

6340. Is there any fishing done by means of nets or weirs placed on the foreshore?—Yes, there are weirs along the foreshore.

6341. Who exercises the right of fishing in that way?—I think the Duke exercises all the fishing rights there.

6342. Does he charge the persons who put the fishing weirs there?—That I cannot say.

6343. How about the oyster beds at the Mumbles? What is the practical position in regard to them?—I believe the Duke claims the foreshore there.

Chairman.

6344. And the oyster beds?—And the right to put them there, I believe, I know the Duke refused to allow the sewerage pipes to be put at the Mumbles at one time, and created a lot of dissatisfaction with the Mumbles villagers.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6345. Is it the fact that there was a prison or gaol in connexion with the seigniory of Gower or the manor of Swansea, I know not which, at Swansea?—I do not know.

6346. You do not know when it was discontinued, if there was one?—No.

6347. Is the Swansea Castle, or the site of the Swansea Castle, the property of the Corporation now?—The Duke has an interest in it certainly.

6348. Do you know if there is any court held in connexion with the seigniory of Gower or by the Duke of Beaufort, or any steward or agent in his behalf, as lord of Gower?—I suppose you mean what is called the leet court.

6349. Mr. Mayor told us there was a leet court held, but is it a court of the seigniory of Gower or a court of the manor of Swansea?—I should say the manor of Swansea, because a leet court is held in other parts. For instance, a leet court is held at the Mumbles.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

6350. What is the manor there, Oystermouth?—Oystermouth; it would be as lord of the manor, I think.

Chairman.

6351. There are two questions put in by Mr. Vincent—"Does the witness contend that "there has been any alteration in the nature "and cause of the accretion of land since the "decision of the Court of Exchequer, or does his "suggestion as to natural causes go to the time "before that decision"?—I do not define any time; only during the period that this land has been acquiring as a whole.

6352. "Are you aware that the foreshore is "frequently the property of others than the "Crown, for instance in Carnarvonshire, cer-"tainly," and Mr. Vincent says he thinks in Durham in the Ecclesiastical Commissioners?—I have heard that the Ecclesiastical Commissioners have rights in the foreshore, but I do not know.

The witness withdrew.

Alderman Morgan Tutton called and examined.

Chairman.

6353. Are you a member of the corporation of Swansea?—Yes.

6354. You have heard what the previous witnesses have said?—Yes.

6355. Do you corroborate their evidence?—Yes, in most parts, very nearly all.

6356. Do you wish to add anything yourself to that evidence?—It has occurred to me that I may say a word or two in reference to the point that has been raised as to the Duke of Beaufort being owner of the port of Swansea. I happen to be a member of the Swansea Harbour Trust, I am one of the trustees, and according to the present charter of incorporation of the harbour trust, the Duke of Beaufort has in virtue of two offices two appointments upon the trust, in fact two of the gentlemen are here to-day, and I think there are two others. The corporation has the appointment of nine members, and the remaining portion, with the exception. I think, of the Earl of Jersey, who also has a seat there, are elected members by the traders.

6357. How many in all?—Twenty-four. I mention that matter in reference to the point that was recently raised as to the Duke's claim to be owner of the port. To my mind it would appear that whatever the position may have been before the incorporation of the harbour trust itself the fact of their being four seats reserved to the Duke in his right would appear to show that whatever rights he previously had possessed would have passed from that position and have taken the position of his nominated members on the trust. When I say nominated members, perhaps that is not quite correct, because one gentleman is in virtue of being the steward, I think, of the seigniory of Gower, and the other is in virtue of his office of coroner to the seigniory of Gower, practically I think, and the nomination of the Duke in the other two offices are direct appointments by the Duke. It has always been, at any rate during my recollection, and I can go back for a considerable number of years now to matters in connexion with Swansea, it has always been considered a sore point by the burgesses that the position of the Duke in reference to the foreshore is not clearly defined. If you would allow me I would point out in reference to the accretion on the foreshore upon the map produced by the Mayor what I think would tend to show that, although part of the contention of the Duke would be correct in regard to one part of it, it is not so likely that it could equally apply to the other portion. I am speaking now of the line running from east to west, and more particularly in regard to what has been called the slag bank. Whatever direction that slag bank took, and it could not have been absolutely from east to west, the accumulation there, the accretion of ground, being by an artificial means, could only have gone out not quite to the 80 yards mentioned, but only a part of it, because it would not have gone direct from east to west. Therefore, the accretion afterwards from the point of that 80 yards to the westward, at any rate to the eastern end of what is now the south dock, would have been a gradual process and should have vested in, I take it, the burgesses of Swansea. It would appear that there must have been some right of the burgesses there even to the south of not only the south dock but also to the south side of the London and North Western Railway Company Branch where the corporation road runs, a 30-feet road that is declared of right as belonging to the burgesses. That is altogether to the south side of all the south dock works. The slag bank was constructed apparently to protect the ballast that formerly was tipped on what would have been the north and south line.

Sir John Llewelyn.

6358. I follow that, but could you not indicate that to the rest of the Commissioners on the map?—Yes, certainly.

[The witness explained further to the Commissioners upon the map.]

I should like to point out, that whilst the Duke has disposed apparently of different interests and has received valuable consideration for them, in the case of the south dock the money payment, I think, was only a nominal amount; but he had a very valuable consideration in the 1,300 feet wharfage, which would have been worth 4*l.* a foot, taken at the same value as the Prince of Wales's Dock. He has also received payment for permission to extend the west pier beyond the point, I take it, of high and low water mark. He has assessed the value of his right in the bed o fthe river at a considerable sum. He has been paid a large amount for the site of the Prince of Wales's Dock in what was Fabian's Bay, but still the Duke holds apparently his rights on the foreshore, and he has his full representation on the Harbour Trust, which would appear to have been given him first of all in satisfaction of his right or claim to be the owner of the port. So whilst there have been these large considerations taken out of the harbour, the Duke's position upon the whole appears to hold good, or that would be the contention from the side of the Duke. Consequently, the burgesses are continually being, as it were, landed in a more difficult position than they originally were. The great desire is, that it should be made, as far as practicable, perfectly clear where their interests, if they have any, begin and where they end, and what the powers and the interests of the Duke of Beaufort really are in regard to the future. I would point out, in reference to the 30-feet road, that although they have the road in that particular spot, it is practically useless to them, because it is barred by a high palisading, constructed by the London and North Western Company, under their powers of purchase. Following the suggestion made by the mayor and Mr. Burnie, I would also suggest that anything that would lead to the proper definition of the rights of the one and the other would be what the burgesses require; but they do feel that it is rather hard that out of the rates they should be expected to incur a very heavy outlay for simply asking what they apparently would like to ask Parliament to do for them, or upon the report of this Commission, namely, that the whole question in whatever way may seem desirable or for the best interests should be taken up, and that the position as at present existing should be clearly and finally defined.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

Chairman.

6359. Are you of opinion, then, that the suggestion of Mr. Burnie is a good one, that the Commission should recommend the appointment of an expert to examine into this?—Well, without using the term "expert," and I do not know anything better to apply, I would certainly adopt the principle, that there should be an inquiry into the position and the rights of the burgesses of Swansea to the foreshore.

6360. Have you anything further to add to your evidence?—I have nothing further to add, but I will answer any question you would like to put to me.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6361. I do not quite see what such an expert as has been referred to could do unless, of course, the Duke of Beaufort voluntarily submitted to his award or jurisdiction?—That is one of the difficulties I see, and that is the reason I did not quite adopt the word "expert."

6362. I should have thought that something, such as an Act of Parliament, would be really required to deal with the matter?—That is what I should hope.

6363. That is without any consent on the part of the Duke?—I take it that this Commission would make a report, upon which some proceeding would be taken; and my suggestion is that a report, in the wisdom of this Commission, should include a recommendation of some such kind as would commend itself to their judgment upon this particular point. The burgesses feel that they have no other way of getting at it unless it is by the expenditure of a large amount of money, which those of us who are only, perhaps, holding office for a limited time, feel it is doubtful whether we are justified in incurring. It would mean the expenditure of large amounts of money, and when there are urgent sanitary requirements and such things staring us in the face, it is doubtful how far we could pledge the credit of the municipality to incur that expense.

6364. I think I have quite followed the point you have been making, but perhaps I had better suggest to you what I gather it to be, so that there may be no doubt about it. You say that owing to the nature of this grant the burgesses of Swansea have been at a perpetual disadvantage in dealing with the Duke of Beaufort in this sense, that he claims the foreshore. The total effect of all the transactions that have taken place is this: that the point to which the ordinary tide runs has been forced back?—Yes, that is so.

6365. And although it is forced back, and although the corporation have been paying these sums to the Duke of Beaufort, still he comes with his grant in his hand and says "I "am the owner of the foreshore still"?—Yes.

6366. Then you have to begin the negotiations de novo on the same basis as before?—Yes.

6367. Is that the point?—That is the point. I might mention the fact that some years ago I lived in Cambrian Place, which runs parallel with the half-tide basin. I acquired an old lease of that house, and those houses, as Sir John Llewelyn knows, at one time were held to be the first residential houses, at any rate about there.

Sir John Llewelyn.

6368. The Assembly Rooms were there?—They were close by. When I lived at that house first, I could see every ship entering the port of Swansea; it was all perfectly clear right away down; all the property is now deteriorated to the extent that they are all used for offices—although I have my own offices there still—but for residential purposes they are destroyed.

Chairman.

6369. Still that would be due partly to the making of the docks?—Yes.

6370. And the docks are of great use to the town?—Yes, that is true.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6371. Did you know Swansea before the south dock was made?—I was there down over the ground before it was actually constructed, although my memory does not serve me very clearly about that now.

6372. I see the high level branch of the London and North-western Company runs to the south of the south dock?—Yes.

6373. The wharfage accommodation is between the railway and the south dock?—Yes, over which the coal drops come.

6374. And then you come to the roadway?—This is the roadway.

6375. Is this part left uncoloured here on the map belonging to the Harbour Trust?—That belongs to the Harbour Trust.

6376. And to whom does the roadway belong? In whom is the freehold of the roadway vested?—I think the freehold is vested in the burgesses—the freehold of the road.

6377. That is the road made at the time that the dock was made, or shortly afterwards, for the convenience of persons coming or going to the south dock?—No, it was not made shortly afterwards, because for some time after, the position of this road was undefined.

6378. I want it as a matter of fact, is this alluvion, or how is it made? Who made it?—I think it would have been made at the time of the construction of the south dock.

6379. It is not a metalled road?—No, it has not been metalled. There is a railway there.

6380. That was a road artificially made by those persons who were making the south dock. At any rate, whether it was a road or not, the soil was put there by those who made the dock?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

6381. Beyond that we have, as I understand this map, a further level bit, or comparatively level bit of land, which is enclosed within the green marks?—Yes.

6382. How did that come to be made?—It was made principally by the ballast brought from ships discharging from these points over this land shown here. It ran to that point, and then down along, tipping as they went along.

6383. Did the Harbour Trust not lay claim to this bit of land so artificially made by ballast?—No, I think the tipping was only done by arrangement; whether it was with the London and North-western Company or the Duke, I do not know, but it was only by arrangement that they were allowed to tip there.

6384. In process of time the tipping goes on, and then the Duke of Beaufort sells this to Mr. John Dickson?—That appears to have been the position. The tipping of the waggons was being continuously done there, but not so much in regard to this section.

6385. If the Harbour Trust asked for permission from the Duke of Beaufort to tip, or pay him anything for it, or came to an arrangement with him as you say, it seems odd it did not occur to anyone to say to him "now, "however, this will belong to us and not to "you"?—Well I do not know, I had nothing to do with it at that time. I think they took powers under one of their Acts to tip ballast along there on the foreshore.

6386. I could understand the owner of the foreshore saying "Well, you asked my permission "to tip and of course I gave it to you, but you "ought to have known what you were doing." I am putting aside old rights now; I am putting the modern position. "You have "abandoned the ballast and you have chosen "to let me take possession of it"?—Whatever the arrangement was it would have been an arrangement between the Harbour Trust and the Duke, or the London and North-western Company who had the position at the time.

Mr. Grove.

6387. How was the Harbour Trust constituted? Was it by Act of Parliament?—Yes.

6388. And then there were certain privileges given to the Duke to nominate so and so to represent certain interests?—Yes.

6389. Was that challenged at that time by the Corporation of Swansea, or by anyone at all that you know?—Oh no, I think it was not challenged, the corporation had the nomination of nine members by the same charter.

6390. Nine out of the 24?—Nine out of the 24.

Chairman.

6391. Mr. Vincent wishes me to put this question. "Does the witness know that after

Chairman—continued.

" the action, a deed defining the precise rights " of the Duke and the corporation was drawn " up" ?—No, I am not aware of that.

Chairman.

Are you aware of any such deed, Mr. Town Clerk ?

Mr. Thomas: There is a deed existing between the Duke and the corporation as regards the Duke's rights in respect of the property acquired by the Dock Company originally, before the Harbour Trust took over the south dock—defining the position of the property of the Duke and the corporation—but that does not at all affect the question of the foreshore; certainly it affected this land that has been added to what was known as the Burrows.

Chairman.

It affected the question of the foreshore as it was then ?

Mr. Thomas: As it was then.

Chairman.

But not the accretion since ?

Mr. Thomas: Not the accretion since.

Chairman.

Can we have a copy of that document ?

Mr. Thomas: By all means. I have not it with me, but it can be obtained.

Witness.

That would have occurred when so much of the corporation property was taken as was needed to give the Harbour Trust or the South Dock Company at that time the wharfage they have on the north side.

Sir John Llewelyn.

6392. It was necessary then for the specific purposes ?—Yes, so that it was not anything with reference to the foreshore rights.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Thomas called and examined.

Chairman.

6393. Are you the Town Clerk of Swansea ?—Yes.

6394. Do you wish to add anything to the evidence which has been already given ?—I have nothing to add beyond this. An allusion has been made to the Town Hill and Burrows Enclosure Act, and a great deal has been said about that Act here to-day. I have not brought with me a copy of it, being under the impression that there was really nothing in the Act at all bearing upon the matter, the subject of your inquiry, because the rights alluded to there surrendered by the Duke were the rights over the property allotted to the corporation under that Act of Parliament. It did not at all concern the rights of the Duke as regards the property which was not the subject of the Act of Parliament.

6395. It was only in reference to one particular matter ?—Then as to the finding of the jury in connexion with the action between the Duke of Beaufort and the corporation in the year 1848. The first question by the judge to the jury was this. He said: " Is the land be- " tween the high and low water mark part of " the seigniory of Gower," to which the jury replied " Yes." Then the fourth question was: " Did the Burrows mentioned in the local Act " extend to the high water mark," to which the jury replied " Yes." So that there is a finding that the Burrows allotted to the corporation under the Act of 1762 extended to high water mark. That is clearly proved by the finding of the jury in that case.

Mr. Seebohm

6396. To the then high-water mark, or the high-water mark for the time being ?—To high-water mark, I take it, at the passing of the Act of 1762.

Mr. Brynmor Jones,

6397. The point that Mr. Burnie and the other gentlemen have been making seems to me to be this; that taking that to be the case, that if land by natural causes is added to the Burrows, it belongs to the owners of the Burrows ?—The owner of the adjoining soil.

6398. It is in that way the Act is relevant ?—Yes, but there is no question that the property allotted to the corporation under the Act of 1762 at that date extended to high-water mark; therefore, of course, if there is any natural accretion I take it that the land would belong to the owner of the adjacent soil, that is, the corporation, where they have not disposed of the soil. But in the case here with the Duke, this being the result of artificial means, as I understand, the court held the ordinary rule of law did not apply, and in that case it belonged to him and not to the owner of the adjacent soil.

6399. The jury found that it was part of the seigniory of Gower ?—Yes.

6400. The court determined what the rights of the seigniory of Gower were ?—The jury found that the lands between high and low water mark were part of the seigniory of Gower.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

6401. And this artificial accretion is between what was then the low and high-water mark?—What was at a certain time.

6402. You are disposed to admit that, inasmuch as it was an artificial accretion it would not belong to the corporation as the adjoining proprietors, but would belong to the lord of the manor or the lord of the seigniory?—That would appear to be the finding of the judges.

6403. That does appear to be the finding, but there is nothing here as to what the lord may do with the foreshore, or any land that he acquires?—Oh no. Of course that decision merely deals with the land that was reclaimed by the sea by these artificial means. Beyond that point, I believe, the decision does not go.

6404. The way in which it is put in the book is, that by grant from the Crown, a subject may have a local ownership of a certain portion of the sea, its creeks, &c., and of the shore?—Yes, and in this case, I understand the Duke claims under certain grants made from the Crown.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Glynn Price called and examined.

Chairman.

6405. We will give you an opportunity now, if you choose, of giving rebutting evidence at once, so that both may appear printed together, and if you prefer to wait you can give us your documentary evidence at some other time?—I have not any documentary evidence, but there are a few points touched on to-day upon which I might offer an explanation.

See 6047.

6406. Take the evidence of Mr. Hartland, as to the bed of the River Tawe?—As regards that, he states what is practically correct, viz., that his Grace does exercise acts of ownership over the bed of the river beyond the point to which the tide flows. With regard to his remark as to a recent arrangement between a certain colliery proprietor and the Duke of Beaufort, as to working minerals under the bed of the river, that was never carried through. Negotiations were entered into, but they were not carried through. The other circumstances to which he alluded, as to persons being prevented from crossing under the bed of the river, occurred, if they occurred at all, before my recollection—they are not within my knowledge.

6407. There is another matter, that when the Swansea Vale Railway was made through Clydach, the Duke threatened to stop the Company from crossing the river at Morriston?—That took place before my time.

See 6052.

6408. Then there was the question about the Ynispenllwch Tin Plate Company?—That was an arrangement entered into a great many years ago, and was carried out by a deed. I think that deed ran for 21 years, and on its expiration a yearly tenancy was entered into on the terms of the deed, or rather the tenancy continued on the terms of the deed.

6409. A lease was not demanded or granted?—Not at the expiration of the license.

6410. Then there was the Graigola Colliery at Clydach?—Messrs. Gueret's Colliery. An arrangement was entered into there for the construction of a bridge.

6411. Then there was something at Trewyddfa, Messrs. Calland, the mortgagees, required a license to lease, and to obtain this license they had to pay the Duke 500*l.*; is that so?—That is a matter which did not come under my immediate control.

Chairman—continued.

See 6

6412. Are you aware whether the usual charges for building leases are five guineas?—Yes, they are.

6413. That no assignment is to be effected without a license to be endorsed?—Yes.

6414. And the fine is usually 5*s.* for that?—With regard to the alienation fine it is only in some cases that is embodied in the lease; a great number of the Duke's leases have not that clause inserted at all; it is only inserted in some cases, and it is not as often inserted as it used to be.

6415. It is inserted now?—In some cases, but not as often as it used to be. It is not an invariable rule to insert the alienation fine of 5*s.* in the lease.

6416. For each license the Duke's solicitors charge 2*l.* 2*s.*, besides the alienation fine?—That is so; that is the custom. With regard to the license, I have had handed to me items of the work done in connexion with these licenses by the solicitor. I think it would be as well if I read them out. It is as follows:—"Items of charge of 2*l.* 2*s.*
"for license to assign. On receipt of letter "from lessee's solicitor, asking for license to "assign; writing his Grace's local agent with "full particulars of application, and to know if "there was any objection to the proposed
"license being granted.
"Writing to Badminton for counterpart
"lease.
"Writing, acknowledging receipt thereof.
"Writing lessee's solicitor for original lease.
"Writing him acknowledging receipt thereof.
"Instructions for license.
"Drawing same and fair copy.
"Engrossing same by endorsement on lease
"and counterpart.
"Writing his Grace, with appointment to sign
"license.
"Attending his Grace on his signing same,
"and attesting.
"Writing local agent, with license and in"structions to hand same over on payment of "any arrears of rent, heriots, &c., and fee for
"license.
"Writing to Badminton, returning counter"part lease.
"Letters, &c."

6417. Is it a fact that the Duke signs every license himself?—Every license; he signs it personally.

6207. 6418. Are you prepared to give rebutting evidence with regard to the rights of the foreshore now, or would you like to make some statement?—I should like to make a statement and reserve some portions of it. Of course I do not go into the question of title. I should more particularly wish to refer to this modern tipping which is going on at the present day, and explain how it arose. A good deal of material was being tipped five or six years ago on the beach, close to the edge of the land which now belongs to the London and North-western Railway Company. It really created a nuisance. The material was tipped there by the public without anyone's consent, very often in the night, and was left there in heaps, and it really became a nuisance; it obstructed the way to the fever hospital belonging to the corporation and to the pier, and it seemed impossible to stop it. It seemed to be a want that the public felt to have some place upon which to deposit this refuse—excavations from buildings and different kinds of refuse. Consequently, I arranged to put a man there to take the refuse and level it, and I also instructed him to reject any refuse which might be of a nature which would be offensive or prejudicial to health. This material was taken and the tipping ground has been very largely availed of, and I should say that this shows it was a public want which was met by the Duke allowing the public of Swansea to tip on this place on payment of 2*d.* a ton for the material tipped, which I considered would just about pay the cost of levelling. The tip has been kept level. I have a plan here and some sections, showing that the tip was kept level, so that it might not obstruct the view or the passage of people over it, and not be an impediment in any way to people going to and fro. Also, when it was represented to me that the tip was close to the hospital and might obstruct the sea breezes, which are so desirable for the hospital, I kept the tip at each side of it, as I think the corporation plan shows. I may say it must be a convenience to the public of Swansea because they have tipped, I think, something like 20,000 tons of material there. In my view I do not think it has created a nuisance. The place was not what you might call a nice seaside promenade by any means. You have the coal drops and the dock, and more than that, the fever hospital there, and people as a rule I fancy do not care to walk about or promenade close to a fever hospital. In connexion with that I think it shows that the corporation did not regard it as a very desirable public promenade, when they applied to the Duke not long since for four acres of this ground upon which to erect a permanent fever hospital. The present one is temporary, and it covers about one acre of ground. They applied for permission to erect a permanent one, covering an area of four acres, one side of which would be very close to the pier.

6419. Have you anything to say with regard to the bathing rights? Is there any charge?—Yes, there is a small charge, a nominal charge. People have not bathed very much at that particular spot, close to this tip, for many years, and hardly at all since the Fever Hospital was planted there.

6420. And about the sand?—The Duke has sold the sand as he has done from time to time for a great number of years.

6421. And the fishing rights?—Within the borough, I think almost without exception, the persons who have put poles into the soil have put them there by the license of the Duke of Beaufort as lord of the seigniory.

6422. Now, I think we had better proceed with your evidence. You are agent for the Glamorganshire estates of the Duke?—Yes.

6423. You succeeded your father in 1883?—Yes, that is so.

6424. He had been agent, or has been agent, a long time?—For 33 years previously, and I may say his father before him was also engaged for the Duke in Glamorganshire. I am the third generation.

6425. Your evidence covers the seigniories of Gower and Kilvey, of which the Duke of Beaufort is lord?—Yes.

6426. The seigniories include several manors?—Yes.

6427. And the area is 182 square miles?—Yes, here is a map showing it.

6428. What is the extent of the property?—It comprises a large area of waste land, some 13,000 acres, I think, and a good deal of enclosed land very much scattered about all over that area.

6429. You have not any statement of the exact acreage?—Not the exact acreage; the property is very much scattered.

6430. Are courts held?—Courts are held every year for the Duke's demesne manors in May of each year usually.

6431. Leet courts and baron courts too?—Yes, they are held at the same time before the same jury.

6432. And the officers are regular officers appointed?—Yes.

6433. There are stewards, deputy stewards, bailiffs, pound keepers, &c.? Are you steward?—No, I am not steward. His Grace's solicitor, Mr. Baylis, who is here, is the steward.

6434. You say there is a considerable area of unenclosed land and various commons?—Yes.

6435. Will you give the names of these commons?—I have only mentioned some within the seigniory; I have picked out instances. I have not given the whole.

6436. Some parts of the commons are suitable for cultivation?—I think some of the low-lying portions may be, and those in the neighbourhood of mining villages and growing populations

6437. But the profit from the reclamation you think doubtful?—Very doubtful, I think.

6438. Are the commons well utilised at present?—Yes, I think fully.

6439. Have there been any inclosures?—A few, but I do not think the tendency to inclose has been so great of late years as formerly. I was rather surprised to find how few they have been in number and in extent. I think approximately they average about an acre a year over the last 10 years; that is only speaking roughly, of course.

6440. What do you consider the effect of unenclosed land?—I think it is very useful for the depasturing of stock, and for the use of farmers in the neighbourhood.

6441. You consider it raises the rental value?—I think so.

6442. You think sheep farming is a decadent industry?—I think it has been declining the last few years, certainly, as to the profit which is derived from it, in consequence of the large importation, from some years past and up to the present time, of foreign wool, and from the large quantity of frozen mutton coming into the country which depreciates prices.

6443. Have you any remedy to suggest?—It is rather difficult to suggest a remedy, but I should think some measure of protection—I can hardly say in what way or what measure—but some measure against the free importation of foreign produce.

6444. We had some evidence given with regard to a suggested stamping of foreign meat?—I think that would be desirable.

6445. As to management, you think no rule could be laid down?—No.

6446. On the whole you think large landowners are the best?—Yes.

6447. And why?—Because as they have large properties, it is not so necessary for them to make the very utmost that they can out of their farms. If a man has two or three farms, and it really forms his living, he has in justice to himself to make the most he can out of them, but if he has a large number of farms then he can content himself with smaller rents.

6448. As to cultivation, you lay down no rule?—No rule.

6449. Do you consider that language, politics, or religion, make any difference in the choice of a tenant?—Not the least; speaking personally I do not even inquire what are the politics, or the form of religion the applicant may favour.

6450. You only care for the financial and personal ability?—Yes.

6451. You never took an applicant without some character I suppose?—I make some inquiry; generally applicants are known to me. There are very few changes of tenancy in consequence of the farms passing from father to son or to some relation. Really it very seldom occurs that there is a change, and when a change does occur someone probably that I know takes the property.

6452. Your date of entry is the 29th September?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

6453. You have some leases?—Yes, we have only one lease on the estate altogether.

6454. And yearly agreements?—One farm lease I should say; of course there are a great many other leases.

6455. Have you a copy of your agreement?—I have handed in the forms of agreement that have been in use for 40 or 50 years.

6456. Has there been any change in the agreement?—Only such as the changes in the law necessitated from time to time; not substantial changes.

6457. You say there is no great demand for leases?—I have not found that there is.

6458. Would they be granted if there was a demand for them?—They might be. Every application would be considered on its merits.

6459. You believe the tenants feel they are free under the yearly agreements?—I think so.

6460. Are the changes of tenancy more frequent now than formerly?—No, I do not find it so.

6461. You cannot remember any occasion on which His Grace distrained for rent, or compelled a tenant to leave?—No, I cannot remember any such occasion.

6462. There have been some changes for causes unconnected with holdings—what do you mean by that?—What I meant to say was this: that when a change takes place it generally takes place for some other reason than the terms upon which the holding is held, and irrespective of any action of the Duke. A man may want to leave to go to some other part of the country, or want to give up farming, or something of that kind, or for some private reason of his own.

6463. You think they do not leave on account of failure now?—Not in our part of the world, and I hope they will not have to. Up to the present time they have held their own pretty well in our part of the world.

6464. Then resumption of parts of a holding for building, &c. or planting. Is compensation as a rule made?—As a rule.

6465. And for brickfields?—Oh yes, there is generally a special arrangement entered into.

6466. You have some verbal tenancies under the Glamorganshire custom, do you consider the Glamorganshire custom a good one?—It would not be under what your lordship understands, as the custom of East Glamorgan, but our western custom, such as it is.

6467. That differs from the other?—Oh, yes, very materially.

6468. You do not contract out of section 33 of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No.

6469. And you have had no complaint of oppressive clauses?—No, we have no penal clauses in the agreements.

6470. The amount of rent varies considerably?—Yes, the rent varies so much that it is very difficult to fix any average rent.

6471. You say some pay 4*l.* an acre?—That would be for accommodation land somewhere on the limestone—probably in the parish of Oystermouth. A good deal of grazing land is let at 4*l.* a year; it is either grazing land or market gardens.

Chairman—continued.

6472. That is by arrangement with the tenants?—Yes.

6473. Upland lands average 7*s.* to 10*s.* per acre; lowland lands average 15*s.* to 25*s.* per acre?—Yes, I should think that would be about the mark. It is a very difficult matter to answer definitely.

6474. The rights of pasturage are taken into account in settling the rent?—No doubt they were originally. I know pretty well what a farm is let at, and how much it is worth, and the rent is carried on. No doubt originally the right of pasturage was taken into account.

6475. Have the rents varied much during the last 50 years?—No, I think they have remained the same.

6476. You exact no other service than the rent?—No.

6477. No walking with hounds, or anything of that sort?—Oh dear no.

6478. You never let to the highest bidder?—Certainly not.

6479. And tenants with capital are much to be desired?—Certainly.

6480. Have you something to say about reductions and abatements?—None have been made on His Grace's Glamorganshire estate. I consider the rents are fair and reasonable. There have been no applications made hitherto. I do not think the tenants have been at all dissatisfied.

6481. You consider the rents are an average for the good years and the bad years?—Yes.

6482. Then the payment of rent takes place two months after the rent is due. When would that be?—That would be somewhere in the month of May for the rent due on the 25th of March. The rent which became due on the 29th of September, I should collect some time in the month of November.

6483. Do you find they are usually punctual in payment?—I must bear testimony to the punctual manner in which they pay the rents. If from any cause one of them should happen to find it a little inconvenient on the day to pay his rent, he has only to explain the reason why, and I am always ready to listen to and wait for him.

6484. Have you many arrears at the present time?—Oh yes, some.

6485. You think the preferential claim for rent is helpful to the tenants?—I do, decidedly.

6486. Why?—Because I think it enables many a man to get possession of a farm who might not be able to do so if his landlord was not able to give him a little credit for his rent, and especially where a man passes from a small farm to a large one. There it might be very useful indeed, because when he passes from a small farm to a large one, he wants all the capital to use which he can get, and if the landlord will give him credit that amount of capital can be made use of in working the farm.

6487. You say the existence of this preferential claim is well known to other creditors?—I think so. It is well known all through the country.

Chairman—continued.

6488. Then you say the rates are high?—They are certainly higher than they used to be.

6489. What is the reason for that?—Generally the improvements going on in the country, which require more money to carry out; therefore, the rates have to follow.

6490. Do you think they are higher than they should be. Do you think they are unfairly proportioned?—No, I think not. Generally they are fairly proportioned.

6491. And you say the size of the farms, on an average, is 80 acres?—About that, as near as I can judge.

6492. That would not include sheep farms?—No, not large upland farms, but the general run of the farms.

6493. And there has not been much consolidation of the large farms with the little ones?—Very little, I think.

6494. The nature of the farming, you say, is mixed?—Yes.

6495. And labourers are scarce?—Yes they are especially scarce in our district because of the large demand for labour at times, in the works and collieries, and the men leave to take up work in the collieries and works because the wages are higher. The high rate of wages is a great inducement to them, and causes them to leave the land.

6496. Can you say what the average wage is?—It varies a great deal according to the proximity of a farm to a town; it is difficult to say. Near a town, I suppose, the wages would be about 1*l.* or 18*s.*, and in the country about 15*s.*

6497. Have they fallen or risen on the whole?—Risen, I think, on the whole—decidedly.

6498. Land, you think, is not going out of cultivation?—Not in the district with which I am acquainted.

6499. Is land laid down to pasture in your part of the world?—More than it used to be.

6500. And the disposition to reclaim has vanished?—Yes, on the higher land. It is very noticeable on some of the upland farms adjacent to a waste; you often see the enclosed land, which has been enclosed land, I suppose, for centuries, adjacent to the common in very much the same condition as the land outside on the common itself. I have noticed that many times.

6501. Do you suppose that is because of the depreciation of agriculture or that it is not found profitable?—That it has not been found profitable to cultivate the land.

6502. You say that arable is laid down in pasture because it pays better; and you say root crops have increased?—Yes, I think so certainly.

6503. Is there more stock kept?—Yes, the increased root crops tend to support more stock in the winter.

6504. And fallowing has decreased?—Yes, it is very seldom practised now.

6505. The reason of that is the low price of corn?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

6506. And the effect is a reduction in the number of labourers?—Yes, a decided reduction.

6507. As to improvements—you say this question cannot be answered generally — but as to repairs? — As to repairs, except in very exceptional cases, they are done by the landlord.

6508. Does he do the haulage, or the tenant? —As a rule the tenant does it, but in some cases the landlord helps.

6509. And makes special arrangements?—Yes.

6510. Is any percentage ever charged?—No, not in my experience.

6511. Does the landlord hang the gates?—No, the tenant usually hangs them.

6512. You say where improvements are effected by the tenant, compensation is obtained apart from custom by agreement between landlord and tenant. By that do you mean apart from the custom of the country?—What I meant to say was this: It is quite possible some compensation might be arranged between the landlord and tenant in any special case. It is open to the landlord and tenant to make special arrangements.

6513. I thought it might be something which was not stated in the custom of the county?—No.

6514. Then you say there are no contracts out of the Agricultural Holdings Act. Sometimes tenants contract themselves out of section 33 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, but you say that is not the case on the Duke of Beaufort's estate?—Not on the Duke of Beaufort's estate; they are all yearly notices, to expire on the 29th September—in almost every case.

6515. And there are no contracts out of the custom of the country?—No.

6516. You say you have received no applications for consent to improvements?—None.

6517. But consent would be given if they were reasonable?—Yes, I think so, in most cases.

6518. As to the custom of the country—have you anything to say about that?—The custom of the country is that the out-going tenant should sell. He makes an auction sale in the usual way, and sells all he has to sell. In some cases I believe he even sells the manure if he has any stacked, should the incoming tenant not care to purchase. Very often the incoming tenant takes the manure at a valuation, and he mostly buys such things as he thinks it would be to his advantage to buy. Then he enters on the farm and pays for certain tillages and for manure applied in the last year.

6519. A proportion of bone manure?—A proportion of bone manure, and for lime.

6520. And cake?—Yes, and cake; but I believe he pays for nearly the whole of the lime if it is applied in the last year; but as a matter of fact I do not think tenants generally apply lime in the last year of their tenancies.

Chairman—continued.

6521. You say that permanent improvements are generally done by the landlord?—As a rule they are done by the landlord.

6522. The custom of the country would give compensation for that?—No, I think no compensation.

6523. Then in-coming and out-going tenants. You say out-going tenants may sell by auction stock, crop, hay, corn, straw, turnips?—I should also add to what I have said that it is the custom of the country for an out-going farmer's roots to be allowed to mature on the land before they are taken away after being sold by auction.

6524. Has the out-going tenant any restriction? —None, except the general restriction that he shall farm properly.

6525. He may sell all his produce—his hay and straw?—Everything.

6526. There is no restriction that other straw shall be put in its place?—No, nothing in our case, or by the custom of the country.

6527. There is no preservation of game I believe?—No, the Duke does not preserve

6528. Then as to agricultural education you say that fruit and poultry are neglected?—I hardly like to go as far as that. I do not think that, but I think there should be more fruit grown, and poultry of a better class kept, and more of it, perhaps.

6529. Has there been any agricultural education in your neighbourhood?—I cannot speak as to that.

6530. Then as to the railway rates. You say there are many complaints?—Yes, people complain that the long distance rates compare very favourably with the short distance rates. I mean in one sense that they compare unfavourably. I will explain. A man sends his produce a long distance and pays less than a man who sends his produce a short distance. It was mentioned to me this week that butter coming all the way from Ireland to London pays about half-a-crown per ton less carriage than butter coming from Caermarthenshire, which is just below Swansea.

6531. You think there is room for improvement there?—Yes.

6532. You know of no combination among landowners to refuse certain classes of tenants? —No.

6533. Then as to proprietary farmers, you say the old freeholders have for the most part sold to large owners?—Yes, I think they have nearly disappeared.

6534. But there has been competition for land recently offered for sale, and the prices paid tend to show the moderation of the existing rental?—Yes, there has been very keen competition indeed.

6535. Can you give any instances here?—I have them here. Here are instances of farms bought by non-agriculturalists, that is, by people who have made their money in tin works or the iron trade, or some business or occupation other than farming. There was a farm called Bachygwreiddyn sometime ago which comprised 157 acres 1 rood 10 perches, the rent was 100*l.*, and the price paid was 5,170*l.*, or something like 51½ years' purchase on the rental. I can give many more where the prices on the rental ran to 35½, 29, 37, 53, 41, 54, 46½ years' purchase. I took those at random from information I had at my office.

6536. You think that tends to show the moderation of the existing rental?—I think so. They must see their way to get some interest on the purchase money otherwise they would not give it.

6537. Have there been many sales on the Duke of Beaufort's estate?—Not of farming land.

6538. Small freeholders you say have decreased in numbers?—Yes, I think so decidedly, and probably the reason is that they saw by selling their freeholds they could turn their money to better advantage, and there would be a difference in their favour between the interest on the purchase money and what they would pay in rent for land.

6539. You think they are better off?—Yes, certainly in the sense that they would have some money in their pockets to help them to farm.

6540. You say the migration of labourers into towns is considerable?—Yes, very considerable.

6541. And the cause is that they get higher wages there?—Yes, very much.

6542. What do you consider to be the relations of landlord and tenant?—Very friendly all round the neighbourhood. Speaking personally, I am very friendly with all the tenants, I think I can safely say.

6543. You consider the class of farmers in your part of the world to be a good class?—I do.

Sir John Llewelyn.

6544. In this map is the seigniory of Gower co-terminous with the diocesan boundary?—Yes, it is in some parts, with the diocese of St. Davids. I am not quite sure whether it is in the upper part, but for the greater portion it is so.

6545. You speak of the unenclosed land, and you give us some instances of commons, naming several?—Yes.

6546. And you go on to say that some parts are suitable for cultivation. Could you give us any kind of intimation what proportion of the whole now unenclosed would be suitable for cultivation?—It would be a very difficult thing to do—very difficult.

6547. You have not gone into that matter?—No, I have not, or only generally.

6548. Is it within your knowledge that there has been a proposal for the enclosure of commons contained in an Act?—In any particular neighbourhood?

6549. I am asking you the question whether it has been proposed?—I cannot say that I know of such a proposal.

6550. Fairwood, for example?—No.

6551. You say that the profit of reclamation would be doubtful?—I fancy it would be.

6552. Does that apply to the whole or part?—It would apply to some parts more than others

6553. Unenclosed districts are very considerable?—Yes.

6554. They are very much appreciated in the district?—Yes, the farmers generally really appreciate their rights and are very jealous of them.

6555. Do not the cottagers use them very largely?—I think they do, but I cannot admit they have a right to; I think they do to a certain extent.

6556. Largely, I think. When you say there has been no general increase of rent in 50 years, I do not quite understand your meaning?—I mean there may have been special circumstances connected with some particular farm which might have led to its rent having been raised, but there has been no general scheme for increasing the rents over the estate.

6557. Then I notice you say in your abstract of evidence that the rates are high in many villages; what is the meaning of that?—I think there must be a misprint in your paper. It does not convey any meaning to my mind.

Mr. Richard Jones.

6558. Perhaps it refers to the cost of sanitation?—No, I do not think I made any special reference to rates in my rough proof at all.

Sir John Llewelyn.

6559. Then I will pass it by?—It was simply a note I made in pencil on my proof for my own guidance.

6560. Now about the proprietary farms, at the end of which you say that small freeholders have decreased in number because they could obtain a good price for their land, and you have given us instances why it is better to be tenant than owner. Give us a little more information about that?—I think they may find it better to be tenants than owners in some cases, because if they can sell their land at a high price and rent land at a moderate price they would have some cash in their pockets to help them to farm with, and to help to keep them apart from their farming operations.

6561. Have there been many instances to your knowledge of that?—I have heard of some at different times.

6562. Has the Duke been a purchaser at such?—No.

Professor Rhŷs.

6563. Have you many cottages on your own estate?—Yes there are a good many, but they are not occupied generally in connexion with farms but in connexion with small agricultural holdings.

6564. Do not your farmers have labourers?—Yes.

6564*a*. How are they housed?—They very often live in villages and come to work on the farms; sometimes they are housed in farmhouses and live in the houses with the farmers.

6565. Sometimes in the villages?—Sometimes in the villages.

6566. Is house accommodation plentiful?—Well that is rather a difficult question to answer, because the villages differ so much.

6567. Do they usually have any gardens?—Yes, as a rule.

6568. I think you said that you made no systematic abatements. Have you had many applications for abatements?—No, I cannot say that I have had any applications for abatements—not direct applications.

6569. You say poultry is not so much reared as it might be?—I think more might be kept, and of a better quality.

6570. In some districts there are foxes, for instance, kept. I know farmers who cannot venture to do much in the way of rearing poultry on account of the foxes. Is that so on your estate?—No, I think it is quite the other way. There is a dearth of foxes when they are wanted.

Mr. Grove.

6571. You gave a list of certain of the common lands and you are going to put it in in evidence?—I have not a complete list here. I merely mentioned a few names of commons. I understood from the questions, the Commissioners wanted to have a few names mentioned in order to identify certain commons. I did not understand that they wanted a complete list.

6572. It occurs to me that it would be desirable to have a complete list?—I should be very pleased to furnish it to the Commission.

6573. And approximately the acreage?—I can give approximately the acreage of each.

6574. Have you put in a copy of your agreement with the tenants?—Yes, I have.

6575. And is a copy given to each tenant when they sign it?—Yes.

6576. As a matter of fact you give them a copy?—Yes.

6578. You would not consider that the want of cottage accommodation on a farm has anything to do with the dearth of labour. Do you not think that the men—say married farm labourers—if they had a decent cottage with good garden where they could settle down would be less likely to go to the ironworks, and that you would get more labour permanently on the land?—Yes, I think that would be the case; but there does seem to be a very strong attraction towards the towns at present. There is the higher wage and I think increased amusements in the towns have something to do with it. There is more life, and they see more of what is going on, and that operates with the younger people.

6579. Would not a decent cottage with a good garden tend to counteract that to some extent?—I think it would.

6580. From that point of view do you consider that your farms are fairly well placed as regards cottage accommodation for the men?—Fairly so, I should say.

6581. Take a farm of 200 acres now. What cottages would you have. Would you have one cottage or two cottages for farm labourers as an average?—In some cases there might be one, and in some cases two, and in some cases there might be an adjacent village where the men could live and come out to their work.

6582. So that it is possible and even probable that you would have farms of 200 acres without cottage accommodation of that kind?—Oh, certainly, it is quite possible.

6583. Can you give us any instances of the present railway rates?—I have not gone into the question minutely, I merely hear about them when they crop up in the course of conversation.

6584. You could not say where it is to, and where it is from, and the particular class of goods?—No, I could not.

6585. Although the Duke does not preserve game in Glamorganshire, have the tenants the right to shoot what they like on their own land. What arrangements do you make as regards game?—In some instances the right of shooting is let, but I do not think there is any preservation of game in the ordinary sense of the word There is very little game anywhere in the district.

Mr. Seebohm.

6586. Is it a fact that you have recently claimed that the minerals on customary freeholds belong to the Duke and not to the customary freeholders?—There has been no claim of that kind put forward by the Duke. I do not think the point has arisen.

6587. Have you many customary freeholders on your property?—I do not think there are many.

6588. Most of your tenants would be tenants from year to year under the custom of West Glamorganshire, which differs from that of East Glamorganshire?—Yes, the agricultural tenants would be under the custom.

6589. Have you records of the estate going back for many generations?—Yes, for a long time.

6590. Have you any knowledge, or could you easily obtain knowledge, as to how far this system of year to year tenancy goes, whether before that there were leases for lives or anything else?—Yes, I believe I can go back nearly 100 years.

6591. Do you know whether there were leases for lives?—I do not think there were many agricultural leases for lives.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

6592. You think the year to year tenancies do go back a very long way?—A very long distance, as far as I have had occasion to look back.

Mr. Richard Jones.

6593. You say that the rents have not varied much for fifty years. I understand by that that the rents are not fixed by any well-defined principle?—I do not quite follow what you mean.

6594. You have no principle to go by in the fixing of rents?—The greater number of these rents were fixed long before I was born, I should say.

6595. Are those rents going on?—To a great extent.

6596. I should think there is but very little relation between the price of stock and produce and the rent fixed, because the conditions have varied very much during fifty years, have they not?—There is no doubt they have, but still I think the rents must have been fairly fair otherwise tenants would not have been willing to pay them and go on paying them.

6597. Do you not think it would be fairer and more satisfactory to the landlord, and also to the tenant, if the profits from land were more equally divided between landlord and tenant—because the price of produce has varied very much during fifty years, say during the years from 1872 to 1876—the tenant would get a very much greater profit from the produce of the land than he would at the present time?—Yes, but I think over a series of years up to the present time at any rate, in a district where mixed agriculture is pursued, the rents have worked out fairly, because the prices have averaged themselves over a number of years. Sometimes they were very high, and sometimes comparatively low, but when the prices were high, the rent remained the same; so that it has worked out fairly all round over a number of years.

6598. That would do very well, if the same man farmed a farm for 50 years, but the tenants change, and the man who farms for 50 years would not be farming under such favourable circumstances as the man who was farming 25 years ago?—No, that is true, although in our district the price of meat and stock has kept up fairly well until recently.

6599. According to your own showing, sheep farming is a decadent industry?—I think I said the profit is less. I do not know that the number of sheep kept is less.

6600. I have the figures by me of the price of corn. We will go back to the year 1840. Wheat in that year was 66*s.* 4*d.* a quarter, whereas in 1890 it was less than one half, viz., 31*s.* 11*d.*, and yet the rent remains the same?—I cannot go back myself, but from what I have heard people say, meat was very low years ago, and then it came up in price. It was very much lower 25 years ago than during the last 10 years. That is what I have heard.

6601. From 1870 to 1875 it was very high?—Yes, that was during the very good times at collieries and works; but prior to that it had been going up, I mean for some years; that was the climax of high prices, I fancy.

6602. Do you not think it would work out better if the rent was re-adjusted occasionally instead of going on for 50 years?—I think it is a matter for agreement between landlord and tenant. I do not see how you could re-adjust it in any way which would be better than by the landlord and tenant agreeing between themselves.

6603. You say that there is no disposition to reclaim land, that that disposition has vanished. What inference do you draw from that?—When I say reclaim land, I mean reclaiming waste land adjacent to farms. I think the reason for it in a measure, which I should give, has been the high wages, which men can get by working in works compared to what they would get if they worked in reclaiming land. If they spent the same time in reclaiming land, they would get very much less out of their labour than they would by working in a works at a day wage.

6604. Then you attribute it to the shortness of labour?—Yes, in a great measure, and to the labour that there is being drawn off to the works, because a man with labour to dispose of can dispose of that labour better by working in a works or a colliery than he can in reclaiming land.

6605. Are you referring to farmers now?—I am referring to the small farmers we have in our district. We have some small holdings, which are held by men who work in the collieries themselves, and fill up their time on their farms. At harvest time, for instance, they would neglect the colliery to work on the farm.

6606. How does it apply to large farmers?—We have not very many large farmers in my district, not such as you would find in England. I think the average of the farms would be about 80 acres.

6607. You say there is some land laid down in permanent grass. Does the Duke render any assistance to lay it down?—None, I have never had an application. I think the tenants must find it more to their profit to do it, and they do it without any reference to the landlord, or his agent.

6608. Have you many applications for extension in buildings of late years?—More in the way of repairing existing buildings.

6609. Has not the number of stock increased on the farms?—Yes, but they run out a great many of the rough stock and the young stock; they do not put them into the houses very much.

6610. How do they fare in the seasons like we have had the last two years?—Well, they do not fare as well as if they were in houses, there is no doubt about that; but they make shift somehow or other.

Mr. R. Jones—continued.

6611. They have never made any application?—Never would be rather strong to say, but I cannot recollect a case now. No doubt many a man would like to have splendid buildings if he could have them, but I do not see how the landlord is to afford to provide them without increasing the rent or getting some interest on his money. Anything in a reasonable way he would do, no doubt, but not build a large number of extra buildings.

6612. Have you many Englishmen on the Duke of Beaufort's estate?—Some, but the tenants are mostly Welshmen, and people who have been born in the neighbourhood. We have not a great number of Englishmen.

6613. Do you find much difference in the habits of the English farmers to the Welsh farmers?—Do you mean habits of life.

6614. Yes, habits of life?—I think the Welsh farmer can live perhaps quite as hard, to put it mildly, as an English farmer. I think they are very hard working and careful living people.

6615. Do you think they are very thrifty and pinch themselves more than Englishmen?—I think they have been brought up perhaps to live in rather a different way, and so perhaps they may not feel it; they go on as they have been accustomed to. They have been brought up in a particular way and they continue in it, and the Englishmen may have been brought up to live on another scale and they continue in that way.

6616. You have noticed there is a difference in the habits?—I think the Welshmen on the high lands certainly live somewhat harder. You can hardly compare cases, because perhaps the Englishman on the low land has different means, so that it is difficult to make a comparison, and I should not like to do so.

6617. You have been asked some questions with regard to cottages. Have you any vacant labourers' cottages?—None.

6618. When an old cottage goes down do you generally erect a new one in the stead of it?—I have not had any experience in that way. I cannot recall any that have gone down at present.

6619. Does the Duke do anything to encourage the better breeding of cattle and horses among his tenants?—I think he does a great deal in Gloucestershire and the neighbourhood of his own home, but with us he does not do anything in that direction.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6620. I do not propose to go over the whole of your evidence, or to ask many questions at this late hour of the day, but I do want to ask you one or two questions. You are the agent for the Glamorganshire estates of the Duke of Beaufort?—Yes.

6621. Does your sphere of work as agent extend to making arrangements about foreshore and such matters?—Yes.

6622. You, I think, referred to the seigniories of Gower and Kilvey?—Yes. Perhaps I might more correctly have said, the seigniory of Gower, which comprises the seigniory of Kilvey.

6623. Do you draw a distinction between the lordship of Kilvey and the lordship of Trewyddfa, for instance, which is a manor belonging to the Duke?—There would be certain distinctions, because in the fee of Trewyddfa there are copyholds, and, so far as I am aware, in the manor or seigniory of Kilvey, or whatever one may call it, there are none.

6624. I see, from that case I referred to, there are customary freeholds in Kilvey, or there were?—There were.

6625. But there appear to be no copyholders, in the true sense of the term, in Kilvey?—No.

6626. Can you tell me how many manors there are in the seigniory of Gower, including Kilvey?—There are a number of mesne manors, some of them reputed manors, so that it is rather difficult to answer that question; but in the seigniory of Gower the Duke's own manors, including the seigniory of Kilvey, are six.

6627. Would you give us the names?—The manor of Swansea, the manor of Oystermouth, the manor of Loughor, the manor of Kilvey, the manor of Gower Wallicana, and the manor of Gower Anglicana. Those are the Duke's demesne manors, his own manors. There are a great many other mesne manors, held by various persons within the seigniory, of which I can hardly give you a complete list to-day.

6628. Take Trewyddfa, of which we heard something from Mr. Hartland. I understood that the Duke was lord of that manor?—Yes, it is the fee of Trewyddfa which was part and parcel of a manor called Pennard. The manor of Pennard does not belong now to the Duke.

6629. You mean by that, that this manor of Trewyddfa was held of the manor of Pennard?—There was a manor of Pennard which, up to comparatively recent times, was the Duke's own manor, and connected with that were several fees; all those fees have passed to the purchaser of the manor of Pennard, except Trewyddfa.

6630. Were those fees connected with your holding, it does not much matter which, with the manor of Pennard; were they scattered through the seigniory?—The other fees, excepting this fee of Trewyddfa, were adjacent to the manor of Pennard—close to it.

6631. But this one is separated?—Yes, a considerable distance.

6632. Is there any court of the seigniory held as distinguished from the court of any mesne manor?—No, no court.

6633. Is there any separate steward of the seigniory?—Yes, the steward of the seigniory is also steward of these manors—of each manor.

6634. Has that been, so far as you know, the history of the estate?—So far as I can go back, and I have seen a record going back a great number of years.

6635. Are there any seignioral rights exercised by the Duke of Beaufort with regard to any manors other than these mesne manors in Trewyddfa?—I cannot recall any at this moment.

6636. I see in your evidence you draw a distinction that a lawyer would draw between the seigniory of Gower and the manors within the seigniory. I want to find out whether the Duke as seignior exercises any rights against the lords of any other manors within the seigniory or lordship?—No, I cannot recall any instance in which he has within my experience.

6637. I can draw your attention to what was in my mind with reference to the matter of foreshore. You talk about a manor of Pennard, for instance; that manor of Pennard has boundaries which abut upon the sea?—Yes.

6638. Does the lord of the manor of Pennard affect to exercise any rights to the foreshore?—In that case there is hardly any foreshore at all; the tide does not ebb and flow much there.

6639. Taking the whole coast of Gower, has there been any conflict between the Duke of Beaufort and his predecessors in title and the lords of the manor, or the owners of land abutting upon or adjacent to the sea coast?—I cannot recall any, and in the case of some of the mesne manors, the mesne lords exercise certain rights.

6640. When you say the mesne lords, do the lords recognise that they hold of the Duke of Beaufort, and not direct of the Crown?—Oh, yes, because a good many make certain annual payments.

6641. Do they ever do anything in the nature of homage, or render any service?—No, they make these payments annually.

6642. Give me an instance?—Yes, there is one of 1*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.* a year, and other small sums of that sort.

6643. Tenants' payments, recognizing the lordship of the Duke of Beaufort, and made in respect of the mesne manors?—Yes, mesne manors.

6644. Does the Duke of Beaufort, or has the Duke of Beaufort within your recollection exercised any jurisdiction, I mean jurisdiction in a strict sense?—No, I am not aware of it.

6645. Would an escheat go to the Duke of Beaufort?—I really cannot answer that, nothing of that kind has come under my observation.

6646. Are there any other officers of the seigniory besides the steward?—Oh, yes, there are a good many.

6647. Of the seigniory, observe?—I beg your pardon; no, only the steward.

6648. No constable?—No, not for the seigniory that I am aware of.

6649. No pound keeper?—Not for the seigniory. There would be individual pound keepers for the individual manors appointed at the leet and baron courts every year.

6650. Which was the castle or mansion or court of the seigniory?—I should fancy—although I really have no ground for saying so—that Swansea Castle would have been the chief castle.

6651. Was there any prison at the castle?—Yes.

6652. Up to what time was it actually existent?—It was before my recollection. I think the imprisonment there of debtors was done away with by some Act of Parliament.

6653. It was the Duke's private prison, or his seigniorial prison?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

6654. Did you give an approximate date?—No, I did not give one, but I should think considerably over thirty years ago.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6655. Do you think you could give us a map (the Secretary suggests I should ask this question) of the seigniory showing the manors belonging to the Duke?—I am afraid it would be a very difficult matter to do that with the accuracy with which I should like to do it.

6656. Are the boundaries of the manors unascertained?—Some of them are ascertained I think very much more definitely than others. Some of the manors are very large indeed, comprising a great many thousand acres, consequently it would be rather a difficult task, I think, to give reliable information.

6657. I take your answer to be you cannot undertake it?—I should not care to undertake it.

6658. You are not in a position to lay before us a map showing the boundaries of the different manors belonging to the Duke of Beaufort?—I should not like to undertake to do it.

Chairman.

6659. As to any rebutting evidence you would like to produce with regard to these other statements in evidence before us, we shall be very glad if you will do it at some future time.

Re-examined. 23,343.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned.

EIGHTH DAY.

The Shire Hall, Bala, Tuesday, 12th September 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

LORD KENYON.
SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
MR. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
PROFESSOR RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
MR. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
MR. RICHARD JONES.
MR. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

MR. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.

Chairman.

Gentlemen, before we begin, I should like to remind those present that a very serious calamity happened some time ago to a member of our Commission, Sir John Llewelyn. He underwent a terrible family bereavement. I have had a letter from him to say that in spite of that, he feels it his duty to be present with us to-day. He will be here about half-past 11 o'clock, and before he comes I should like to have passed a vote of condolence with him and his family, according to the wish of all the Commission.

I propose, therefore, "That we desire to express "our most sincere sympathy with Sir John and "Lady Llewelyn and their family in their "great affliction, and our appreciation of the "high sense of duty which has prompted him "at once to continue his work on the Royal "Commission under such terrible and trying "circumstances." I shall not put it to the meeting, but assume it is carried unanimously.

Before we begin the examination of witnesses, my brother Commissioners wish me to say a word or two upon some four points connected with our procedure, especially as this is the first sitting of the Commission in North Wales. The first is with reference to unfair attacks upon individuals. The second is the protection of witnesses. The third is the necessity of personal attendance on the Royal Commission in the different parts of the country where we sit; and the fourth is the exceptional treatment that Glamorganshire has received.

In the first place I do not think I can do better than repeat what I said at the opening of the Commission in Glamorganshire with regard to the unfair attacks on individuals. "We do not "anticipate that the Commission can be made the "means of any unfair attack on the character "or conduct of any individual, but in case any "individual should feel himself aggrieved by "any statements which he believes to be un-"founded, we provide the following checks, "which we believe will be adequate for the "prevention of pain or injury in the first "place," and to this I call your attention most particularly, "permission will be given to any "person present at any sitting to put questions "in writing to any witness through me, the "Chairman;" but of course the Commissioners reserve to themselves the right to determine whether that question is admissible or not. Then, in the second place, "the Secretary has "been instructed to send notice forthwith to "every person whose character or conduct "is impugned by the statement of any witness, "thus giving such person an opportunity "of explanation, or of rebutting the charge "either personally or by letter."

Chairman—continued.

Now I come to, perhaps, the most important thing of all, and that is the treatment of witnesses. I then said, "Experience has shown "that, unless witnesses speak out boldly and "without fear, inquiries like the one we are "engaged in are futile. We have no reason to "believe that undue pressure will be brought "upon any class of witnesses or any individual "witness; nor have we reason to think that "the giving of evidence by any person in this "country will lead to his being in any way "injured. But it is, of course, possible—we "cannot shut our eyes to what has, before now, "taken place in regard to affairs of this kind, "—that some men are less scrupulous than "others, and that it is possible that witnesses "who speak here what is in their minds may "be subjected to loss and annoyance. We "desire, therefore (and it is our duty to do so), "to point out that the recent Act, the Wit-"nesses' Protection Act, 1892, affords a remedy "adequate to meet any ordinary case."

Now I come to the necessity of personal attendance. It is absolutely necessary that everybody who is at all interested in the objects of this Commission should attend personally at the sittings held in the districts in which they are interested, and do the best they can to meet us. We are doing the best we can to meet all classes in Wales, and we hope that gentlemen will meet us in the same way and in the same spirit. We think it right to call the attention of landlords, tenants, and others to the importance of their being present, so that if there is any rebutting evidence to be given by anyone, it may be done at once, and in the presence of the original witness. It is manifestly impossible for the Commission to sit again at each place; that is out of the question. We have a great deal of ground to cover, and it is absolutely impossible for us to be called back at a moment's notice to a place where we have already sat, therefore persons interested may lose an opportunity of promptly traversing any evidence submitted to the Commission if they do not take advantage of the opportunity given when the original evidence is tendered. Glamorganshire was rather an exceptional case. We were anxious to go to work without any delay in the Principality, but we were told that we had gone to Glamorganshire rather too soon, so I said there that we were aware that the fact of our having visited Glamorganshire so early may have made it difficult for all the evidence to be prepared. Under those exceptional circumstances we were willing, if it was desired, to make further arrangements for taking evidence with regard to that county; but we were careful enough to point out that it must be distinctly understood that we were in no way laying down any precedent. "Our rule must "be that at each sitting local evidence should "be given representing all phases of opinion, "and that in the event of any witnesses failing "to give evidence it must not be assumed that "we can make arrangements for giving them "a further opportunity of doing so." I think that is all I have to say now, and I shall now call the first gentleman who has voluntered to give evidence, Colonel Lynes, of Derby House, Colchester.

Chairman—continued.

Colonel Samuel Parr Lynes called and examined.

Chairman.

6660. I believe you are Colonel Lynes, of Derby House, Colchester, and you have property in this county?—In this county and Denbighshire.

6661. What is the acreage of your property in Denbighshire?—The acreage of my property in Denbighshire is about 3,000 acres, in Merioneth about 2,200 acres.

6662. What district do you give evidence for?—In the parish of Llangwm in Denbighshire. My chief evidence relates to Denbighshire.

6663. What do you particularly wish to speak to?—The reason, I believe, why I was requested chiefly to give evidence was that I have been spending the major portion of all income for the last five years in improvements on my property, and expenses connected with the estate.

6664. There is nothing previous to that that you particularly wish to speak about?—No, nothing, unless you wish to ask me anything. I have answered all the questions put before me.

6665. You are able to give a detailed account as to money spent on repairs and improvements, and also as to the period over which the money has been spent?—Yes.

6666. Will you kindly tell us what you wish to say on that point?—I have received close upon 10,000*l.* within the last five years, and I have had 973*l.* 13*s.* 8*d.* myself out of that. Each item is put down here and the improvements and estate expenses come to close upon 6,000*l.* out of it. The other is law expenses and expenses connected with the estate, such as tithes, charity, and things of that sort. I can show here in detail that out of about close upon 10,000*l.*, as I say, I have not had 1,000*l.* myself; I have spent the whole of the remainder on the property.

6667. Nine thousand pounds out of 10,000*l.* has been spent on the property?—Nine thousand pounds out of 10,000*l.* has been spent on the property, and out of that close upon 6,000*l.* absolutely in improvements and estate expenses.

6668. Over how many years did you tell us that was?—Quite five years, now.

6669. You will hand in a schedule giving particulars of this expenditure?—With pleasure. I did not make it out to hand it in, but I can hand it in, later on, to the Secretary. (See Appendix.)

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6670. Did I understand that you became the purchaser of this property?—No, it has been in my family for nobody knows how long quite; it is a remnant of a very large old property that had very little done to it, from various circumstances, until I came into possession five years ago.

6671. It was in a bad condition at that time?—Yes, the buildings were.

6672. How many farms?—About 40 tenants.

6673. In Denbighshire, and how many in Merionethshire?—There are about 40 tenants altogether; only two big tenants in Merionethshire.

6674. When you talk of improvements, I suppose you mean the improving of the buildings?—Yes, entirely.

6675. We have not had it particularly in what manor your estate is?—In the Manor of Dinmael in Denbighshire, and in the Forest of Amnodd in Merionethshire.

6676. Have these improvements consisted in making new buildings or repairing the old buildings?—A great deal in new buildings—the mass in new buildings—new houses and new farm buildings, and I am going on with them until I complete them to my satisfaction.

6677. Are they chiefly arable farms or pasture farms?—Pasture almost entirely in our part—a little arable.

6678. What is the average size of the farms?—There are six of about 300 acres and over, six of 100 and over, 10 of 50 acres and under, and nine of 15 acres and under.

See 10,368.

6679. Was any part of this estate recently enclosed?—There was an enclosure in 1863. Advantage was taken of the Enclosure Act.

6680. How many acres were enclosed then?—I am sorry to say I cannot tell you the acreage.

6681. Roughly speaking, what was the proportion of the amount enclosed there to the amount of property which you had before the Enclosure Act?—I am sorry to say, without getting it up, I could not tell you. I have not gone into that sufficiently. We have the maps to show it, and all that was sold.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

6682. I mean when the enclosure took place, was only a small portion allotted to your estate, or was it considerable in area?—You may say a small proportion, comparatively speaking, I think.

6683. Well, 500 acres?—Yes, it would be as much as that, my agent says.

6684. And the whole estate is 2,000?—3,000 over here in Denbighshire.

6685. The Enclosure Act applied to the Denbighshire property, did it not?—Yes, not to the Merionethshire.

6686. Do you recollect whether any recreation grounds or allotments for the use of the labouring poor were apportioned at the same time under this Enclosure Act?—No.

6687. None?—None; it is not a thing which would be appreciated there, I think, with us. I do not think it would be taken advantage of.

6688. But by-and-bye in the future it might be useful, might it not?—I do not think so. They are essentially sheep farmers; they do not even garden.

6689. Were there any squatters' cottages on the common and the waste?—Yes, there were a few.

6690. How were they dealt with?—They were sent away, and the property was sold and apportioned by the Enclosure people, and some of the ground sold to pay to the Enclosure Commissioners for the costs, I believe.

6691. Then the squatters were sent away, you mean?—Yes. I was looking through the old accounts last night at the time the squatters were there; they had not paid any of them previously, they were all in arrears.

6692. And so they were evicted?—Yes, they were sent away, a few of them. There were only a few of them, I believe.

6693. Were there any sheepwalks or rights of pasturage in existence over the waste which was enclosed?—I presume so, there were rights. They had rights over this—what was common land before—I believe.

Mr. J. M. Griffiths.

6694. You spoke of some buildings on your estate. Was the hauling done by the tenants or the landlords?—By the tenants.

6695. Were they paid for the hauling?—No, it has been the custom always for them to haul in our part of the world. They take it as a matter of course. I have never heard a word; they are glad to do it, of course, for their improvements.

6696. I suppose if the tenant is obliged to leave his house he is paid for it?—If he leaves his holding, paid for what?

6697. For the hauling he has done?—If he leaves his holding?

6698. Yes?—Do you mean paid after leaving?

6699. Yes?—We have had no instance of it that I know of.

Mr. J. M. Griffiths—continued.

6700. You have never had any of your tenants leaving after they had done hauling?—After they have done buildings, do you mean?

6701. Yes?—There are some who have left, but we have not paid them if they have gone away.

6702. Have you made any abatements in rent for bad times?—Yes.

6703. To what amount?—Ten per cent. Then they make abatements for themselves by being in arrears, a great many of them, besides.

6704. Is the tithe added to the rent?—I pay the tithe, and I have for some years. It was revalued, and when it was revalued I took the tithe upon myself. The farms were valued, and I took the tithes upon myself six years ago.

6705. Have you any farm cottages on the estate?—Very few.

6706. In what state are they?—They are all in very fair condition, and what are not I am going on with as fast as I can.

6707. How are you off as to water supply?—Very good.

6708. In some places in this district I am afraid the water is very scarce?—We have not had any complaints about water supply. I believe the water supply is very good. I have carried water in one instance through pipes a long way for one farm that was short of water, and that is excellent now.

6709. Do the tenants in any case pay any increased rent on account of the buildings?—No, not a halfpenny, and any man that I found, when I came into possession, who had expended anything on his farm for buildings, however long back, I repaid him if I could find it out.

Mr. Richard Jones.

6710. Do you appear in an individual capacity or as the representative of the landlords?—In a purely individual capacity.

6711. I think you said in your opening statement that you had been put forward because you had spent so much on your estate during the last five years?—The reason why I did not come forward of my own accord is that this is only the remnant of what was a big estate—only a small portion—and I did not know whether I had any right to come and speak for the landlords, but I was requested, when I sent in my evidence, to come, and the chief thing that I thought it possible I could bring satisfactorily before the Commission was that I had done a good deal for the people on the estate.

6712. By whom were you requested to appear?—By Mr. Owen, the Secretary of the North Wales Landowners' Association.

6713. I suppose you were selected because it was understood that you would be able to present the best case for the landlords?—Oh, I have not the least idea of that; I do not know that I was. I only say, that from not living up here myself and being very well up in things, I do not know that I can give you very much information beyond this one point, which I suppose would be satisfactory to everybody.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

6714. Are you well acquainted with the history of your estate. Can you tell the Commission how much was spent on the buildings previous to these five years. For instance, can you go back 50 years?—Yes, we could by looking back into things.

6715. Can you supply us with figures?—No, not now. I did not expect that question would be asked, but there has been a great deal of neglect—I do not mind saying that—from misfortune. My step-uncle, who was in possession for many years, was a very great invalid, and unfortunately not in a condition to look after his own affairs.

6716. Then the Commission are to understand that the figures you have supplied us with are not to be regarded in any sense as those applying to a typical landlord, but that there is something special in your circumstances?—No, I do not think so. I am not aware that there was.

6717. Well, it seems to us, at any rate on the face of it, that it is so. I will ask you this question. You say that you spent 10,000*l.* within the last five years?—Very nearly.

6718. Have you a home farm?—Well, there was a home farm until last year when the tenant gave up, and the tenant of the house has taken a good bit of that land, and the home farm has been broken up.

6719. When was the home farm broken up?—Last year.

6720. Was there any money laid out on the home farm during the last five years?—No.

6721. None whatever?—No, I do not think so. The buildings were not adapted to it; they were very bad for a farm, and the tenant had an opportunity, I believe, of getting a better farm in the district, and he went.

6722. With regard to the cottages, have any labourers' cottages been allowed to fall into ruin on your estate?—(After turning round to ask his agent)—Mr. Jones, my agent, says there have been a few down at Llangwm.

6723. And none erected in their places, I suppose?—No. I am going on. There are some not absolutely new buildings, but being put right and being added to now. There is not very much demand for labourers in that district where my property is; the holdings are generally farmed by their own people. I do not think if we put up a lot of cottages that they would be tenanted.

6724. There is not much employment for labourers on the farms of your estate?—Not much.

6725. Do we understand that the farm is managed by the farmer and his children?—Mostly, you may say.

6726. When a person applies for a farm on your estate, do you generally ask him what family he has?—(After asking his agent)—No.

6727. Have you made any permanent reductions?—Yes. Permanent reductions were made after Lady Day in 1887. Temporary abatements are made from time to time, according to the season.

6728. Can you tell the Commission to what extent you made permanent reductions?—I could hardly tell you. I have got a statement here of the rent in 1859, in 1863, in 1872, and the rent in 1893.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

6729. When you made these permanent reductions, were they general or in special cases?—They were general.

6730. On every farm?—On every farm, I believe.

6731. Were you guided by any principle, either valuation or anything else?—Mr. Jones, my agent, says at least 10 per cent.; he revalued them.

6732. They were reduced generally 10 per cent.?—Yes.

6733. Have you made abatements in addition to the permanent reductions?—Yes.

6734. To what extent?—Ten per cent. to those who paid their rents.

6735. Do you supply the tenants with notice when you intend making an abatement?—Yes.

6736. In every instance?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

6737. You have been telling us what you have done since you came into the estate. I should like to ask you one or two questions about the previous time. I suppose these 40 tenants are chiefly pasture holdings?—Yes, chiefly. There are some biggish ones that have arable land—not up in the hill, but in the valley.

6738. You said in some cases you found out that they had made their own buildings?—Yes, in a few cases.

6739. And in those cases you repaid them?—Yes, I repaid them when I found out what it was.

6740. Do you think it was the custom of the country—say a generation ago—for these tenants to build their own houses and make their own improvements?—I am afraid I cannot answer that question satisfactorily to you not to be certain.

6741. In the old times did they have agreements, or was it all by custom?—By agreement.

6742. You have agreements now?—Yes.

6743. Have you any objection to hand in one of the forms of agreement?—Not the least. (The witness handed in an agreement.)

6744. You had no custom of the country like the Glamorganshire custom?—Latterly there have been no agreements at all, my agent says; he explains to them what it is. There are a number of them who have been there a very long time, and the new ones accept the fact; they do not have any agreement. I am afraid it is more satisfactory to have them, however, perhaps, as certain things have turned up and we are going to have them again. They know they can stay as long as they like, so long as everything goes on properly. The agreement handed in, I should say, is an old one.

6745. On the whole the condition of the estate before you took it was not such as you would consider to be a good condition?—No, the buildings and houses had been left to go very bad.

6746. But the families had been left to live on the estate from generation to generation?—A great many of them.

Professor Rhŷs.

6747. I wish to ask you a question of an antiquarian nature. Your name is Lynes?—Yes.

6748. I think you say that your family has been in possession of these estates for a long time?—Yes; we do not know how long.

6749. What is the earliest name you find in your books?—The name is Wynne all the time. I inherited it through my mother, who was a Wynne of Garthmeilo.

6750. I understand before the recent Act, with regard to the landlord paying the tithes, you had taken the tithe upon yourself?—Yes.

6751. You have advanced the rent?—No; I had the estate revalued with that object.

6752. But you did not advance the rent?—The estate was revalued on the understanding that I was going to pay the tithe.

6753. Then I may take it you did advance the rent to cover the tithe?—When it was revalued the rents were absolutely lowered to what they were when the tithe was paid by them.

6754. So that you took upon yourself to pay the tithe and lower the rents at the same time?—Although after the valuation the result showed that the grass rents were lowered, when I also took upon myself the payment of the tithe, yet it is not quite correct to say that I paid the tithe and reduced rents at the same time, because my agent tells me in the re-valuation he valued the farms taking into consideration the tithes.

6755. You do not remember the totals of those years?—They are in the paper.

Mr. Seebohm.

6756. It does not give the totals?—I do not think it does; it was only for my own information, in case I had any question put upon it. We will have it completed if you like.

Professor Rhŷs.

6757. I think it would be better?—We will have it completed and give it to you.

Mr. Seebohm.

6758. We can have them added up here, but what we wanted was to have it just at the moment?—Yes, I am sorry.

Professor Rhŷs.

6759. You have been five years in possession of the estate?—Yes.

6760. You say you are not prepared at present to give us an account going back 50 years?—No.

6761. You have taken a period of five years?—Yes.

6762. Could you give us the figures for the five preceding years, and tell us what was spent on repairs?—Not without looking up the matter; I cannot give it to you here.

6763. But I think you have admitted that the state of the buildings was not such as you could approve of?—Certainly not; that is the reason I put them right.

6764. What time do you spend on your estates?—I come up every rent audit. I am in the army, and am therefore employed, and do not live there.

6765. But you have a house on both estates?—There is a house in Denbighshire, not in Merioneth, but it is let. The tenant who has it now gives it up next year, and then I propose to come and live there virtually.

6766. At present your information comes, of course, from your agent?—Chiefly.

6767. And from your books?—But I always go over the place, generally speaking, on account of seeing the improvements, and so on, that are being done, and I go up to the rent audit generally.

Lord Kenyon.

6768. Colonel Lynes, you are the owner of the Amnodd Estate?—Yes, of a portion; what we have put down there.

6769. And Mr. Oakley is your shooting tenant?—Yes.

6770. Have you ever had any complaints about the game?—None whatever.

6771. You have had no complaints about the game being let?—I have never heard a word.

6772. I am very well acquainted with that property; I have shot over it for the last 15 years; I never heard a word of any sort as to that.

6773. Mr. Richard Jones asked you if you were specially put forward as the representative of the landlords. You said that was not the case, as I understood you?—No.

6774. You simply sent in your own account?—I sent in answers to these questions. I was astonished at being asked to come.

6775. Have you ever had any complaints of any hardship as to the clauses in your agreements?—Never.

Mr. Richard Jones.

6776. Before Lord Kenyon goes further may I see the agreement?—Lord Kenyon. Yes.

6777. You have handed in a copy of this agreement?—That is the one. You can have it. Latterly we have had no agreements at all.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6778. It is not your agreement?—No, it is not. With recent tenants my agent says we have had no agreements. We do not disagree among ourselves, and the things have all been left in that way. They understand the matter. I have asked him to have agreements made out, because it would be very satisfactory for the future.

6779. Are you going to copy that one or have a fresh one?—A fresh one.

6780. Would you mind letting us see, not to-day, but at some time, the leases or agreements in connexion with this estate?—Certainly.

Lord Kenyon.

6781. There is a list which you have handed in here, of the rents and reductions. I understand the rent of 1893 includes the tithe?—It includes the tithe.

6782. And the rent in 1872 does not include the tithe?—Yes.

6783. Then you would hand in this to the Commission also?—If you please.

Mr. Seebohm.

6784. Roughly speaking, I see in 1859 the total of rents was 880*l.*, and in 1893, 1,041*l.* Are the tithes included in both cases?—No, not in 1893. They do not pay them; I pay them.

Chairman.

6785. There are some questions handed in by Mr. Vincent. He asks you: Do politics, language, or religion make any difference to you in choosing your tenants?—No.

6786. Do you produce the particulars of the sale for the purposes of the expenses of the Enclosure Act?—These are the particulars. [Producing the documents.]

6787. Perhaps you might hand them in?—Yes. [Handing.]

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6788. Upon that, may I ask you a question or two. You say that in choosing your tenants, politics, religion, and so forth have made no difference. Have there been many changes of tenancy during your five years?—No, very few.

6789. How many, do you think?—Three, I think it is.

6790. How did they come about?—Well, one was unfortunately a very drunken man, and another was very much in arrears, and could not go on as a farmer at all; it was hopeless. We did not make him pay up. We did not distrain upon him, or make him pay his arrears. We let him go, poor fellow.

Chairman.

6791. There is another question from Mr. Vincent: Have you any cases in which families have been on your estate for many generations?—A good many. There is one over 300 years; one over 200; two over 100; one over 80; another over 80, and two over 50, and a great many of the others have married daughters of people on the property, but they are not handed from father to son.

Chairman—continued.

6792. A question is put by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: What is the average rent per acre on your estate?—The average rent varies between 7*s.* and 30*s.*; 30*s.* is the highest, but it is less than 7*s.* really. I cannot tell you absolutely accurately.

Lord Kenyon.

6793. That does not include sheepwalks, I suppose?—Sheepwalks go with the farms.

6794. I mean, you do not include the acreage of the sheepwalks?—No.

Mr. Griffiths.

6795. I understood you to say that your farm land was chiefly arable?—Not chiefly arable. Chiefly, you may say, sheepwalks. They are sheep farmers—stock farmers. There is arable in the meadows, low-lying.

6796. Do you consider that the rent in 1893 has been reduced in proportion to the very much reduced prices of corn and other produce?—Yes, I believe so. I asked to have it valued on a proper valuation as between man and man—between landlord and tenant. I have no wish to have it other than it should be.

Mr. Richard Jones.

6797. Do the tenants in your neighbourhood avail themselves of the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No.

6798. Do you know of any instance where a tenant has asked his landlord for his written consent for a specific improvement?—No, not one that I know of.

6799. Do you know of instances where tenants carry out improvements?—No, the only instance that I know of is this: Last year we gave a man some timber to put up one of those corrugated iron things for his hay. He has put up the corrugated iron and we have given him timber. That is the only case I know of anywhere. I have tried to explain that I have done everything. If they want improvements I do it if I think it necessary.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Ivan Thomas Davies called and examined.

Chairman.

6800. Would you like to be examined in Welsh, or will you give your evidence in English?—I prefer to speak Welsh, but if you think it facilitates matters, I am quite prepared to give my evidence in English as best I can.

6801. Would you perhaps begin in English, and if you find any difficulty in explaining yourself, please turn to Welsh, and give it exactly in your own way—exactly as you find it best for yourself?—Thank you, my Lord.

6802. Shall we begin in English?—If you please.

6803. Where do you live?—At Llanuwchllyn.

6804. Have you got your notes?—Yes.

6805. On what branch of enquiry do you wish particularly to speak?—On the first head—Landlordism and common land.

Chairman—continued.

6806. Are you a tenant farmer?—No I am not.

6807. Have you ever been one?—No, but I was brought up on a farm.

6808. But you have never been a farmer yourself?—No.

6809. What might your profession be?—I am a Congregational minister.

6810. And born and bred on a farm?—Yes, born and bred on a farm.

6811. You are qualified to speak about farming, as you have been brought up amongst farmers on a farm?—Well, I do not know much about farming certainly, as I have never been a farmer myself, although brought up on a farm.

6812. But you have always lived amongst farmers?—Certainly.

6813. And you are amongst your friends and you know about their circumstances?—Certainly.

6814. You wish to speak about landlordism in relation to houses built on pieces of common land. Is that so?—Yes, on common land.

6815. Where was that common?—It is known as Garneddwen and Rhosucha.

See generally, 7320–7524.

6816. In what parish?—In the parish of Llanuwchllyn.

6817. What do you wish to say about that?—About a number of houses built there, I suppose during the last 60 years, and they were ordered to pay rent a short time after—a few years afterwards in some cases—and the rent was advanced three or four times in some cases.

6818. Rent has been advanced?—The rent in the first case was advanced. Will you allow me to refer to one case?

6819. Yes, please do so?—About 1838, John Davies, now living at Bryn Glas, built a house and cowshed, and enclosed an acre or so surrounding it. For many years he paid no rent. Subsequently John Williams, the then agent of Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, ordered him to pay 2*s.* 6*d.* a year.

6820. The agent of Sir Watkin?—Yes, he is now dead.

Chairman.

6821. Is there any representative of Sir Watkin in the room?

Colonel Hughes; I represent Sir Watkin.

Chairman.

6822. Do you hear what is going on?

Colonel Hughes: I do pretty well.

Chairman.

If you wish to hear better, please come forward. (Colonel Hughes took a seat near the witness.)

6823. (To witness.) Would you kindly continue. You had better begin that again, I think?—About 1838 John Davies, now living at Bryn Glas, built a house and cowshed and enclosed an acre or so surrounding it. For many years he paid no rent; subsequently, John Williams, the then agent of Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, ordered him to pay 2*s.* 6*d.* a year. This was done because the landlord was practically irresistible, and no one dared disobey. The rent of 2*s.* 6*d.* was afterwards doubled and then quadrupled. About 10 years ago Rhosucha was apportioned and a part was added to Bryn Glas, and in consideration of this addition the rent of Bryn Glas was fixed at 30*s.* Sir Watkin has never to this day spent anything on this property.

6824. Will you tell me what you mean by "apportioned"?—Parts of this common of Rhosucha and Garneddwen were apportioned and joined to the different holdings. Rhosucha was apportioned and a part was added to Bryn Glas and those cottages were on portions of it.

6825. Do you mean to say that they were turned out of their holdings?—Oh, no, they have the holdings still, but part of this Rhosucha when it was enclosed by Sir Watkin——

Lord Kenyon.

6826. Do you mean the common was enclosed?—Yes.

6827. Under an Act of Parliament?—I cannot say.

Chairman.

6828. Is that all you have to say about that instance?—That is all I have to say about that case.

6829. Are there any other cases?—There is the case of Tanyffordd. William Edwards, who died in 1892, built a house and enclosed around it on the above-mentioned common land. First year he paid no rent. Subsequently John Williams, the then agent of Sir Watkin, ordered him to pay 1*s.* 3*d.* a year. The rent was increased afterwards at various times—twice, six times, 12 times, 24 times the original sum. The rent is now 3*l.*, but a cottage has been built, towards which Sir Watkin paid the joiners and masons and found the materials, and William Edwards contributed the cartage and haulage and kept an account up to 28*l.*, when he gave up keeping an account. There is the case of Penrhiw, where John Evans built a house and enclosed an acre. He was ordered to pay rent 2*s.* 6*d.* a year. Some time afterwards other land was added, and now Ellis Evans, the son, has 10¾ acres, for which he pays 10*l.* The land is 600 feet above sea level. Then there is the case of Tynycefn, where William Davyd built a house and enclosed two plots of ground. Rent of 2*s.* 6*d.* ordered as above. Subsequently this was doubled, then quadrupled. Then the rent was fixed at 30*s.*, when other land was added. There is another case at Tyntwll, where John Roberts built a house. He was first ordered to pay 5*s.* For 13 years he paid no rent, but at the end of this time he was compelled to pay for the 13 years at the rate of 2*s.* 6*d.* per year. Now the rent is 2*l.* Then as to Cefn Rhôs, Edward Evan built a house and enclosed a plot of ground. He was ordered to pay 2*s.* 6*d.* rent per year. He enclosed portions at three or four different times. When Rhosucha was apportioned he had a part, and for three years paid no rent for it. A new house was built, the greater part of the expense of which was borne by Robert

Evan (son of Edward Evan) and the rent was raised to 4*l.* 4*s.* In the case of Penyffridd, Evan Ellis enclosed a plot on Rhosucha. He was ordered to pay 1*s.* rent a year to Paul Panton (a neighbouring landowner). When Sir Watkin bought the Panton estate the rent of Evan Ellis was increased to 1*l.* There is again the case of Brynamlwg: Edward Edwards built a house and enclosed a plot. He was ordered, as above, to pay 2*s.* 6*d.* by John Williams, who said that otherwise the Government might take the property without compensation. With this threat in view, and fearing the consequences of refusal with regard to his father, who was a tenant of Sir Watkin on a neighbouring farm, Edward Edwards paid. There is also the case of Rhydymawn, where Davydd Hugh built a house and enclosed a plot. He was ordered to pay rent as above. His house is now a cowhouse joined to Penrhiw. There is another case of Tynewydd, where David Rowland built a house and enclosed a plot. He was ordered to pay 2*s.* 6*d.* as above. Afterwards the rent was increased to 5*s.* David Rowland died, and his widow held the house. On her death Sir Watkin's agent took the house, and possession was refused to the son of David Rowland. In the case of Rhydydrain, John Rowlands built a house and enclosed a plot, and was ordered to pay rent as above. On his death the house passed to his niece, who emigrated. R. Rowlands, Madog, paid the niece 20*l.* for her interest in the house, and R. Rowlands secured the rent for years. When Madog was rebuilt the house was taken away from him. Then there is the case of Gardd Jac Hughes, where Thomas Hughes, about the period 1820–30, enclosed a plot situated at a corner formed by the River Twrch and the road leading from Llanwchllyn to Dinas Mawddwy. He never paid rent for this plot. He was succeeded in the property by his son, John Hughes, who occupies, at some distance off, a cottage belonging to Sir Watkin. Up to the year 1875 the receipts were worded, "House and two dwellings." In 1878 the receipts were worded for the first time "House and garden," and these words were inserted by the estate agent of Sir Watkin without John Hughes' knowledge, and not a word was said to him of the change made. When John Hughes found it out he dared not mention it to John Williams the agent, lest he should be turned from his home. That is all bearing upon that.

6830. That bears on houses built on common land?—Yes.

6831. Is there any other subject you want to speak about, Mr. Davies?—Yes, about landlordism in its relation to politics and creed.

6832. What have you to say about that?—With reference to the general election of 1859. The following Nonconformist tenants on the Glanllyn estate, belonging to Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, who voted for the Liberal candidate, were evicted from their farms and superseded:—(1.) John Thomas, Pandymawr, Calvinistic Methodist; this farm was let to Mr. Jones (from Flintshire), Churchman. (2.) Edward Edwards, Llwynllwydyn, Baptist; this farm was let to Robert Jones (of Llanfor), a Churchman. (3.) Edward Ellis, Tyceryg, a Calvinistic Methodist; this farm was let to William Jones, of Bala, Churchman. (4.) Mary Jones, Gweirgloddwen, Independent. Mrs. Jones was 76 years of age when she was evicted. In two months after, she died, her death being undoubtedly hastened by the eviction. Her old home was let to the Misses Roberts (of Bala), Churchwomen. Mrs. Jones was evicted because her son, the Rev. M. D. Jones, Principal of the Independent College, Bala, took such an active part in politics as a Liberal. (5.) David Jones, Pentrepiod, Independent; this farm was let to Hugh and Owen Pugh, Pentrecogwrn (Churchmen). In course of time this family obtained the following farms, Ceri, Penrhyn, Pentrepiod, Pentrecogwrn, Tyceryg, Bryncocyn, part of Pantymarch. (6.) Peter Jones, Goat Inn (Bala); this house was let to Evan Owen (Talybont, Cardigan) Churchman. (7.) Peter Jones, Murddyn-Mared, Methodist. Sir Watkin's agent failed to let this farm for some time. After failing to find a suitable tenant, this farm was eventually let to Peter Jones's son, Morris Peter, at an advance of 5*l.* in rent.

Chairman—continued.

The following Noncomformist tenants on the Glanllyn estate belonging to Sir W. W. Wynn, who refrained from voting for either candidate, had their rents raised as appears below:—

1. Robert Jones, Llwyngwern, Independent, 4*l.*
2. Richard Jones, Cefnprys, Independent, 5*l.*
3. Ellis Jones, Prys Mawr, Calvinistic Methodist, 2*l.*
4. Hugh Roberts, Bryngwyn, Calvinistic Methodist, 5*l.*
5. David Roberts, Garthisa, Calvinistic Methodist, 2*l.*
6. David Jones, Caer Gai, Calvinistic Methodist, 15*l.*
7. Edward Edwards, Penygeulan, Calvinistic Methodist, 10*l.*

With reference to the general election of 1868, Thomas Rowland, Hafodyrhaidd, a Nonconformist, a tenant on the Glanllyn estate belonging to Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, voted for the Liberal candidate. A few months after the election the roof of the house fell in. Thomas Rowland went to Glanllyn and asked Sir Watkin's estate agent to rebuild the old house. The agent refused. Thomas Rowland was compelled to live from house to house, and come to the fields every day. He placed the horse in the cowhouse, and he and his wife lived in the stable. The stable was 13 feet long, 12 feet 5 inches wide, 11 feet 4 inches from the ridge of the roof to the floor. The floor was earth and the stable was very damp. They lived in the stable for six months. They then removed to Tynywern, owing to the wife's confinement. About May 1870 they returned to the stable and lived there for eight and a half years. Then a notice to quit was served on them by Sir Watkin Williams Wynn's agent, John Williams.

Chairman—continued.

At the same time six or seven acres were taken from their holding, and these six or seven acres were joined to Llwyncadi. This compelled them to reduce their stock from five cows to three and 100 sheep to 50. The first year after this the rent remained the same. On receiving notice to quit Thomas Rowlands went to Glanllyn and asked that a house should be built at Hafodyrhaidd or to allow him to build, or to offer him another house. The agent refused each and all of these requests, and said that his being turned out was due to the medical officer and the Board of Guardians. Thomas Rowland pleaded his old age (about 73), his long connexion with the estate, and his desire to die a tenant of Sir Watkin's, but all in vain. Jane Rowlands (the wife) called on Dr. Jones, the medical officer of health, and asked why they were turned out when they had nowhere to go. Dr. Jones replied that it was not his doing, as the place had not been mentioned before the Board for two years, and he further advised Thomas Rowlands to stick to that part of the land which he still had, though obliged to take a house at Penybont or Llan. Jane Rowlands, after this interview with Dr. Jones, went to John Williams to ask for the land and a withdrawal of the notice to quit. John Williams asked her, "What will you do with the land without a house?" Jane Rowlands asked him if he had any cottage. He said, "No." The day after, Thomas Rowlands met John Williams by appointment at the Eagle, Llanuwchllyn, when John Williams promised the land for a year, but that the rent would remain the same. In March 1871, Thomas Rowland received orders to go to Glanllyn, and went. Then John Williams told him he might have the land for another year, the rent being reduced 2*l.*, but all the land to remain pasture. From 1871 to 1881 Thomas Rowlands was obliged to buy potatoes, flour, oatmeal, and feeding stuffs, and a family of four remained in the stable. During this period Thomas Rowlands spent about 50*l.*, being all his savings during many years of hard labour, on potatoes, flour, oatmeal feeding stuffs, &c. In 1881 Thomas Rowlands recieved notice to leave, but declined. Thomas Rowlands thereupon took Tynywern—that is when he declined to give up the farm, that is what I mean—for which he paid 32*s.* yearly to Margaret Jones, so that the reduction of 2*l.* a year was really only 8*s.* He lived at Tynywern till 1885 (July) where he had contracted inflammation of the lungs, followed by cancer. It was, however, impossible to attend to him at Tynywern, and he was removed to the stable. From July 1885 to April 1886 he lingered in the stable and died. On his death, Jane Rowlands went to ask for a continuation of the tenancy. John Williams said he would not turn her out, but could not answer for the Board. The end of 1886 (October) Jane Rowlands received notice to quit by messenger from Gwernhevin. The same week John Williams said the Board would not allow her to remain, and that he would not build. Edward Morris, Inspector of Nuisances, told Jane Rowlands it was John Williams who had sent him to Hafodyrhaidd (the stable) and report on same. John Williams gave permission to build, and she built a house, which cost her 73*l.* borrowing 50*l.* (still unpaid) for that purpose. Thomas Rowland never failed to pay his rent punctually. After his death, his widow was equally punctual till last July, when she found it absolutely impossible to scrape the rent together. She has not even a pigstye on her holding; an old gate has to serve as partition between the pigs and calves in the cowhouse. The walls are absolutely tottering, the roof is so dilapidated as to be useless. The cattle are soaking wet when it either rains or snows, and the widow is obliged to cover them with old sacks. Last March she was obliged to shelter a calf in her house, where it remained for a week. I am very glad to understand that Jane Rowland's case is under the consideration of Sir Watkin's present agents, Colonel Hughes and Mr. Morris. I do not believe, and without conclusive evidence to the contrary I cannot believe that the late Sir Watkin was aware of what was going on on his estate at Hafodyrhaidd. In justice to the memory of the late Sir Watkin, I must state that it is inconceivable to me that any Wynn should have so cruelly persecuted an old Liberal, who had the honesty of his convictions, and should have continued his revenge on his helpless widow and fatherless children.

There are some cases, apart from the general elections of 1859 and 1868, where change of views upon politics and religious creed has been followed by acquisition of farms.

In 1874 John Rowlands, once a Nonconformist, obtained the tenancy of Gweirgloddu. The former tenant, Dorothy Jones, a Nonconformist, was evicted from this farm before it was given John Rowlands.

In 1878 David Jones, once a Nonconformist, obtained the tenancy of Pyrsau. The former tenant, David Roberts, was a Nonconformist (Independent).

In 1879 Ellis Thomas, once a Nonconformist, obtained the tenancy of Lôn.

In 1879 Edward Morris, once a Nonconformist, obtained the tenancy of Bryniau.

See 712

In 1879 Robert Roberts, once a Nonconformist, obtained the tenancy of accommodation land at Llan.

In 1879 Edward Watkin, once a Nonconformist, obtained the tenancy of Tynrhos. His sister-in-law, to whom her mother had left the stock, and who was a Nonconformist, being refused the tenancy.

In 1881 Thomas Thomas, once a Nonconformist, received the tenancy of Cwmonen. His sister-in-law to whom had been left the stock, and who was a Nonconformist, was refused the tenancy.

In 1882 Edward Morris, once a Nonconformist, received the tenancy of Tymawr. During the period from 1879 to 1882, Nonconformist applicants for farms who possessed experience and capital were rejected in favour of Church applicants, who had neither.

Chairman.

6833. That is the whole of your evidence —Yes, that is the whole of my evidence.

Sir John Llewelyn.

6834. You spoke first of Rhosucha, which is a common, I understand?—Yes.

6835. Being apportioned?—Yes.

6836. What do you mean by "apportioned"? —Well, the Welsh word we use for it is "Rhanu."

6837. By Act of Parliament?—I cannot say.

6838. Under the English Acts?—By Sir Watkin.

6839. It was apportioned by Sir Watkin?—Yes, by Sir Watkin.

6840. You told us that the rent of Tan y ffordd is now 3*l.*?—Yes, 3*l.* At first it was 1*s.* 3*d.* a year.

6841. So I understand. Is 3*l.* a fair rent?—Well, considering that he had cultivated it himself, and it was better for a long time after he got it than when he got it first, I suppose it would be fair.

6842. What was the rent of Penrhiw?—The rent of Penrhiw, I believe, is 10*l.*

6843. The question I really want to know is, whether Penrhiw, Tyn y cefn, Tyn Twll, Penffridd, and Bryn Amlwg and all the places you quoted are part of Rhosucha?—Part of Rhosucha and Garneddwen. I cannot say where the boundary is between Rhosucha and Garneddwen.

6844. The same district?—The same district.

6845. And it is an enclosed common?—Yes.

6846. Do you object to the injustice of the enclosure of that common?—Well, I think it was very hard upon those poor men when they had built houses upon this common that it should be taken from them without allowing them any compensation. At Rhosucha evidently the land was very much more valuable when it was taken from them a few years ago than when they at first erected houses upon them.

6847. And as to the rent of all those places, do you object to them as being too high?—Oh, no, I do not say that.

6848. It is a question of ownership, then?—A question of ownership.

6849. The Hafod yr haidd, where the Rowland family live, how much land was there in that farm?—I really cannot say what the acreage would be. It is a small farm.

6850. It is a small farm?—Well, I think they pay something like 18*l.* a year, perhaps, for that. It is a small farm.

6851. Then you went on and gave us some very interesting evidence with respect to Nonconformists being turned out of their holdings in favour of Churchmen?—Yes, that was after the general election of 1859.

6852. In what way are you able to prove that the cause of the Nonconformists being turned out of their homes was because they were Nonconformists?—I do not believe it is difficult at all to prove that the old tenants were Nonconformists and that they were followed by Churchmen, and most of these Churchmen were importations. That is all we can say.

Sir John Llewellyn—continued.

6853. You went on to speak of several of them as "once a Nonconformist"?—I beg your pardon. Those referred to a different class.

6854. Yes, more recent; that is true?—Yes; cases apart from the general elections of 1859 and 1868.

6855. You say "once a Nonconformist"; do I understand "now a Churchman"?—Yes, now a Churchman.

6856. I do not know whether I was justified in assuming that, and at the close you said that Nonconformist applicants for farms who possessed experience and capital were rejected in favour of Church applicants who had neither?—Yes.

6857. Is that quite consistent with the good character you gave Sir Watkin Wynn?—Well, I do not know whether Sir Watkin Wynn knew anything about those cases.

6858. Does the same opinion refer to other properties in the neighbourhood, or to Sir Watkin Wynn's only?—Sir Watkin Wynn owns the whole neighbourhood with the exception of a few farms; but half a dozen farms, I suppose, belong to Mr. Price, of Rhiwlas.

6859. With regard to the last paragraph of your evidence, does that apply to the last few years, or to the earlier period you referred to?—Do you mean the application for Nonconformist farms.

6860. Yes?—No. It appears those cases cropped up more during those previous years than they have after.

6861. Can you tell us whether, in your opinion, there are any conditions in the holding of land that are different in this country to other parts of England?—I am not aware. I am incompetent to give an opinion.

6862. Perhaps I may put it in another way. Are there a great number of applicants for any farm that may fall vacant?—Yes, undoubtedly.

6863. A sort of land hunger?—Yes, undoubtedly.

Professor Rhŷs.

6864. Do you know anything about the agreements on the Glanllyn estate?—I have not a copy of the agreement. I believe my friend Mr. Thomas Jones, who is to give evidence after me, has it.

Mr. Seebohm.

6865. In connexion, first, with these squatters, to whom did the common land belong before these squatters occupied it?—I suppose it belonged to the Crown so far as I can gather from these squatters themselves.

6866. To the Crown, or to the Lord of the Manor?—To the Crown I expect.

6867. To the Crown?—It was Crown land. They regarded it as Crown land.

6868. Then these squatters added practically to the Wynn Estate by taking from the Crown land what had originally been Crown property and added it to the estate. Do we understand that? That can hardly be true, can it?—Well, it was added to the Wynn property when it was taken from them by the Wynns; but for several years no rent was paid—well, there is the case of John Davies, of Brynglas, the very first—for many years he paid no rent to anyone.

6869. But do not you suppose that the idea was, that the Lord of the Manor was the owner of the soil of the common, of the freehold of the common, and not the Crown?—I really cannot say that.

6870. We will suppose that the common belonged to some one, whether it was the Crown or the Lord of the Manor; do you think that a squatter taking ground out of the waste—out of that common land—ought to make no payment; is that the feeling that you have?—Well, I should say so myself.

6871. That he had a right to take that land?—Yes.

6872. Without making any payment to the owner, whoever the owner was?—Especially if he got the permission from those who were there, and had the right of pasturage and turbary in that ground.

6873. Then you would ignore altogether the interest in that land of the Crown or of the Lord of the Manor?—Well, I do not pretend to know what manorial rights Sir Watkin had. I have no idea what manorial rights he had.

6874. What I simply want to get at is this: we all understand what common land is—that some persons have common right of pasture over it; but besides that, under the English law some one alone, either the Crown or the Lord of the Manor, is the owner of the soil. You would not dispute that, would you?—No, I would not dispute that.

6875. Then, do I understand that you contend that whoever is the owner of the soil is not entitled to any compensation for that encroachment upon the waste?—Well, I know very little about those matters; I readily admit it; so that I am unable to enter into it.

6876. Then I do not take it that you do ignore the right of the Crown or the Lord of the Manor. I want to ask you this: you state that at first these squatters occupied the land without paying any rent at all. As I understand it, when they first made their encroachments they paid no rent at all?—Paid no rent at all—no.

6877. How many years before the 2*s.* 6*d.* was put upon them?—I cannot give the number of years; only "for many years" I was told.

6878. Then the 2*s.* 6*d.* would be simply a nominal rent?—A nominal rent.

6879. Then that would go on for another number of years?—Yes, for another number of years, and then it would be advanced.

6880. Then it would be advanced. Then you do not think it is at all to be considered that that long occupation without making any payment was in respect of the improvements that the tenant had made, and that after, say, 20 years or 50 years, whatever it may be, the full rent was payable?—Well, it would be on the improvements. Of course the land was very much improved by these tenants in the meantime.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

6881. Yes, but then they had occupied it at a nominal rent for a great number of years in consequence of that?—Yes.

6882. Then that is the position in which we are left with regard to these squatters?—Yes.

6883. Then, as I understand it, you consider that, practically, ought to have given them a freehold?—Or that the Crown should give them the first chance of buying it if it belonged to the Crown.

6884. I think it evidently did not belong to the Crown, because Sir Watkin Wynn raised the rents and took the ownership?—If it was Sir Watkin's property, why did he not interfere at once, instead of letting them go without paying rent for a number of years?

6885. I do not want to infer in the least that this was wisely done, but what I want to know is, whether you do not feel in your neighbourhood that the Lord of the Manor or the Crown, or whoever it was who had possession of the soil, had some right in it which demanded some sort of payment when an encroachment was made?—Yes, undoubtedly, whoever was entitled to the property.

6886. Would you think that it was right that neighbours should encroach upon the common—should take the whole, say, of the mountain land which is now unenclosed—that whoever could get it, in a general scramble, should take possession of it without making any agreement?—No; but I should say the rents that they pay now are very dear considering that Sir Watkin Wynn has not contributed anything towards the improvements—that the rent is dear—is high.

6887. Yes, that I understand to be your opinion, and I do not for the moment contest it, because I do not know the facts. Then with regard to these other cases in connection with the Nonconformists being turned out, in connection with their opinions and their politics—do we understand that that is going on at the present time?—No; nothing at all approaching it.

6888. Then that is rather an old grievance which has passed away?—There is the best feeling prevailing now upon the estate.

Mr. Richard Jones.

6889. Before the land was apportioned do you know whether the consent of those who had rights of common was obtained for the purpose of enclosing it?—I believe it was not.

6890. After it was apportioned was any compensation made to those who had rights in the common?—No; as far as I am aware no one received any compensation whatever, but I believe in some cases, if not in all, they had the land for two or three years free of rent.

6891. You referred to the elections in 1859, 1868 and 1874?—The cases of 1874 are cases apart from the general election of 1859 and 1868.

6892. I suppose there was an election in the county in 1868?—Yes, in 1868 and 1859.

6893. Was there in 1874?—Not that I am aware of; this is independent of elections altogether.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

6894. You have given the date of 1874, and mentioned that a person was evicted from a farm?—That was after the election of 1868—the case of Thomas Rowlands.

6895. Previously to the cases you referred to of persons who were evicted in 1859, and those who had their rents raised because they refrained from voting, do you know of anything in their conduct that could be alleged against them as a reason for turning them out of their farms?—Nothing whatever.

6896. You have mentioned the case of Jane Rowlands?—Yes, Jane Rowlands is in court now.

Mr. Griffiths.

6897. Is it not a common belief among the Welsh people that this common land is the people's land?—Yes.

6898. Do you know of such a thing as a ty un nos?—One of these was more than a ty un nos; it was a tŷ tyweirch; but it had that nickname because it was built over-night, and it has stuck to it to this day.

6899. There is some land attached to it?—Yes.

6900. You mean a house built altogether in one night?—Built altogether in one night, so I understand.

6901. How is it that no rent was paid for so many years, was there no application made for it?—No application was made for it.

6902. And the people thought it was their own?—Yes.

6903. Did they build any better houses after this?—Almost all the houses were built between fifty and sixty years ago, at just about the same period I understand. Some, of course, were better than others, but not much.

6904. Was it a hardship to turn these people out from this land of which they thought they were the real owners?—I think I hardly understand your question.

6905. Do you not consider it a hardship to turn these people out of this land, which they have considered they were the owners of?—Yes, but they have not been turned out; they live on the holdings yet.

6906. They have not been turned out?—No, not one that I am aware of.

6907. They are still on their own holdings, but the rent has been advanced?—That is it.

6908. Do you not think it was rather hard to advance their rent?—I think so; yes.

6909. You know William Edwards, do you?—Yes.

6910. On what ground did he refuse to pay?—He did not refuse.

6911. He did not refuse?—No. The first year he paid no rent; that is what I have been told; I got the information from his daughter. The first year he paid no rent, and subsequently he was ordered to pay 1*s.* 3*d.* a year.

6912. Why do you say that the landlord was "practically irresistible"?—Because Sir Watkin owned almost all the property in Llanuwchllyn, almost the whole parish, and they were afraid of incurring his displeasure for fear of the consequences.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6913. Was it then supposed that Sir Watkin Williams Wynn was somewhat arbitrary in his dealings with his tenants?—Yes; they were all complaining against it.

6914. You said, I think, that you could not believe that he knew really what the facts were, with regard to one tenant?—Yes; I was referring to Hafodyrhaidd.

6915. Did he, to your knowledge, take a personal interest in the acts of his agent?—I believe he did not; that was the general impression at least; of course I have no means of knowing.

6916. Will you tell me in what parish Rhos Ucha and Garneddwen are situate?—In the parish of Llanuwchllyn.

6917. Is it in any manor that you have heard of?—I have heard that it is in the manor of Penllyn, but I really cannot give you any information in respect of those matters.

6918. Do I understand you to say that the action of these persons, John Davies, William Edwards, and others, was taken in pursuance of what they believed to be a kind of old or customary right that they had?—Yes; they looked upon it that they had a perfect right to build one of those tai un nos on it.

6919. That is a house of one night?—Yes, that is the meaning of it.

6920. Then, as I understand it, the point you are making about the action of the agent or of the landlord in this case, is that, knowing or being in such circumstances that they ought to have known of the existence of this belief, the person was permitted to build his house first of all?—Yes.

6921. Without any hindrance or let from the landlord or agent?—Without any hindrance at all from the landlord or agent.

6922. You think that the agent, or somebody on behalf of the landlord, ought to have gone and told them, "Now you have got no right to "do this; and if you do build your house, you "will have to pay rent"?—Yes, certainly; I should look upon that as only fair.

6923. Then it is what is commonly called "standing by" that you complain of. The landlord and his agent "stood by" while these people were enclosing the land, building houses, putting up fences, and so forth; is that not it?—Yes.

6924. Now with regard to the evictions on the grounds you suggest, political and religious grounds; I suppose the way in which you put that grievance is insecurity of tenure, is it not?—Yes, I suppose it would come under that head; but my friend Mr. Thomas Jones, of Llanuwchllyn, is taking up the part of the evidence bearing on that.

6925. You have told us you are well acquainted with the farmers of the district, and were brought up on a farm?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

6926. Has there been, and is there now among the farmers, a desire for more secure holdings?—Yes, a very strong desire.

6927. Do they want leases, for instance?—I cannot say. I do not suppose any have applied for leases that I am aware of, but they consider the tenure is very insecure as it is at present.

6928. What is the general feeling as to the proper kind of remedy for these evils?—There is a very strong feeling in favour of a land court.

6929. To determine the extent of the holdings, the length of tenure, and so on?—Everything in connexion with the letting of lands, and so on; the valuation and other things pertaining to the farm.

6930. Is the condition of the farmer prosperous now in your district?—No; it is quite otherwise.

6931. Is it worse than it was formerly?—Yes, I think it is, according to what they say.

6932. I do not think you have given us your age; perhaps you would not mind telling us that, as it will give us an idea of how far your evidence is of value?—I was born in 1852.

6933. In the fifties and sixties how did the Merionethshire farmer live; you can remember as far back as the sixties at any rate?—In what respect?

6934. In regard to his diet, in regard to the hours of his work, and so forth?—His diet is always poor as a rule; much poorer than English farmers, for instance; much poorer.

6935. Did the children have to work?—Yes, hard.

6936. From what age, about?—Well, from a very very tender age; they had to help during the harvest, and so forth.

Lord Kenyon.

6937. You said that after the election of 1859 certain tenants were evicted. Were those the only tenants who were evicted who left their holdings at the time you have mentioned?—As far as I have been able to make out they were.

6938. They were all Nonconformists?—Yes.

6939. Were there other Nonconformists on the estate at the time?—Oh, yes, very many.

6940. But they were not evicted?—No.

6941. And you know of no other reason why those tenants should have been evicted except for their political opinions?—I do not.

6942. Then you stated that others had their rents raised. Were rents raised at other farms at that time?—As far as I have been able to make out they were not.

6943. You think only on those particular farms?—Only on those particular farms.

6944. You gave us a very sad instance about Thomas Rowlands. It seems almost incredible that he should have been allowed to live in a stable for so long. You say he went to Glanllyn and asked Sir Watkin's estate agent to rebuild the old house. Did he ever see Sir Watkin?—

No, he would go to see the agent whether his office is at Glanllyn or at some other place.

6945. But he never saw Sir Watkin personally?—No, not in connexion with this case.

6946. I understood you to say that he had seen Sir Watkin Wynn personally?—But that was before this happened.

6947. Do not you think that it would have been better if he had complained to Sir Watkin personally?—I believe so.

6948. After the agent repeatedly refused to put matters right?—I believe so.

6949. Mr. Williams, you say, refused Rowlands each and all of these requests?—Yes.

6950. You have given some other instances in your statement. You say here, "Once a Nonconformist." Do you mean that the person had become a Churchman?—Yes, that is so.

6951. You state also that "In many cases "during the period 1879–82 Nonconformist "applicants for farms who possessed experience "and capital were rejected in favour of Church "applicants, who had neither." How were you aware that they had neither experience nor capital. Can you mention any one instance?—I can give you one instance: a case of Edward Morris, who obtained the tenancy of Tymawr. I do not think he had a 5*l.* note. The money he had was supplied by his son, who happened to come from America just at the time.

6952. If his son was willing to give him the money that would be sufficient to turn him into a person with sufficient capital?—Yes.

6953. Are any of these tenants whom you mention as Churchmen who took their holdings between 1874 and 1882 still in them?—Yes.

6954. And they are paying their rents?—Yes, as far as I am aware.

6955. So that they have not suffered from want of capital or experience?—But I cannot say whether they have paid their rents or not.

6956. There seems to have been some harsh treatment of Nonconformists after this election. Could you tell me whether the late Sir Watkin ever gave assistance to Nonconformists in other ways with regard to land for chapels, or anything of that sort?—Yes. When the Nonconformist tenants were building a chapel at Llanuwchllyn he offered them land in addition to the graveyard. Not only that but he practically looked after the road leading from Penybont to Hen Gapel. I believe recently there have been several cases in which land has been let for chapels at a nominal price. I cannot give the exact price but it is only nominal I know.

6957. But the late Sir Watkin and the present Sir Watkin in other instances, except those that you have referred to in the way of politics, have always treated the Nonconformists well?—Yes.

6958. And I think I have understood that the late Sir Watkin was popular in this district?—Yes, undoubtedly, Sir Watkin was most popular.

6959. All over Wales?—All over Wales undoubtedly; none more so.

6960. In short, if these tenants who had been hardly treated had gone straight to Sir Watkin and appealed to Sir Watkin——?—Yes, but Sir Watkin was very unapproachable.

6961. In answer to Mr. Brynmor Jones just now you said that diet in 1860 was not good among the farming class; is it any better now?—Oh, I do not think it is any better.

6962. Very much the same?—Very much the same.

6963. You said you were brought up on a farm. Could you give us some account of what your diet was then?—First of all we had in the morning bruised oatmeal and butter milk; then we had some bread and butter and tea. For dinner we had bacon and potatoes. For tea, at about 3 or 4 o'clock, we used to have a lot of sucan, followed by a cup of tea. Sucan is a kind of thin flummery, or something like that. Then we had porridge or bread and cheese and butter milk for supper.

6964. You think it is very much the same now among the hill farmers, and so on?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

6965. You mentioned that Sir Watkin was very unapproachable. How could Rowlands, for instance, have managed to see Sir Watkin personally, and have an interview with him?—By going to Ruabon.

6966. Would he be certain to have an interview with him then. Could Rowlands talk English?—No, he could not, he was a monoglot Welshman.

6967. Then the same difficulty would apply to many other cases of small farmers and small cottagers, you think?—Yes, I suppose the bulk of the tenants on the Glanllyn estate are monoglot Welshmen.

6968. Now?—Yes, now.

6969. The present Sir Watkin can talk Welsh, can he not?—I believe he can, to some small extent.

6970. So that there were some real difficulties in the way of the small farmers getting personal interviews with the landlord?—Certainly.

6971. And you think that exists at the present day, to a certain extent?—Not to the same extent.

Mr. Richard Jones.

6972. I do not know whether you have stated why Dorothy Davies was evicted from this farm in 1874?—No reason was given. Mr. Williams, the then agent, gave no reason whatever. Her second husband is still living at —— I forget the name of the place; it is just by Brithdir.

6973. What was the impression in the neighbourhood. What was the supposed reason?—The impression in the neighbourhood was that she was turned adrift in order to make room for a Churchman.

6974. And a person who had a Parliamentary vote?—Well, she was married a second time when this occurred, I believe. I do not know quite how it was as regards her having a vote, but the other one was a Churchman.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

6975. Now, you have lived entirely among the farmers at Llanuwchllyn and have had experience of recent elections. Do you know if there has been any complaint of any undue influence?—It is very difficult to define undue influence.

6976. Intimidation?—No, nothing in a direct way that I am aware of. I have mentioned this Hafodyrhaidd case as one instance.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6977. With regard to property taken by encroachers upon this waste land when they built the houses, what did the person who built the house and went to live in it do. How would such a man earn his living?—By working on farms as a labourer.

6978. He was not dependent upon the holding that he obtained in that way?—No, certainly not. Having a little land attached to it, it was better than to live in a cottage; he used to keep a cow as a rule.

6979. And turn the cow upon the waste?—Yes.

6980. Has the amount of common, now enclosed, round each of these cottages been, as a rule, large enough for the support of a cow?—Oh, yes, I believe some of them keep two.

Mr. J. M. Griffiths.

6981. Do you consider it disadvantageous to the tenant that he is not able to speak the same language as his landlord?—Yes, undoubtedly.

Lord Kenyon.

6982. Are you aware that Sir Watkin is educating his son in Welsh?—I believe he is.

Chairman.

6983. I have three questions handed in. I will, first of all, put those handed in by Mr. Vincent. "Is the evidence of Mr. Davies "founded on personal knowledge, or on hearsay, "so far as it relates to (1) political eviction, (2) the squatter's grievances." Do you understand that question?—Yes.

6984. Is it founded on personal knowledge or on hearsay?—It must be on hearsay as to what happened 60 years ago, when these cottages were first built and the land enclosed. I have a very faint recollection of the election of 1859; as to the election of 1868, after which Thomas Rowlands had to suffer so much, I remember that, and I have a personal knowledge of what was taking place at Hafodyrhaidd. I was exceedingly intimate with the family, and lived close by them.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6985. You have taken care, I suppose, to verify your recollection by asking the present tenants and the persons you have named, so far as you have been able to get at them, for the facts?—The evidence referring to these cottages at Rhos Ucha I received from the tenants—those who built the houses, or their descendants—and in the case of Hafodyrhaidd I received my evidence from Jane Rowlands, who is now in court, and ready to corroborate anything I have said, to the best of her knowledge.

Chairman.

6896. Another question handed up by Mr. Vincent is: "Do you say that tenure on Sir "Watkin's estate is insecure now"?—I think it is more secure now than it used to be, especially as far as Nonconformists are concerned. I mean, as far as I am aware, neither Mr. Morris nor Colonel Hughes has shown the least disposition to regard Nonconformists, as such, nor Churchmen, as such, but simply to regard them as tenants.

6987. "Was land for Nonconformist chapels "sold at nominal prices by Mr. Owen Wynne "for Sir Watkin, and was a letter of thanks "written to Mr. Owen Wynne on this point"?—I suppose that would refer to what I said in my evidence before, that land was offered by Sir Watkin for enlarging a graveyard attached to a Nonconformist chapel at Llanuwchllyn, and where Sir Watkin protected the road leading to that chapel. I suppose it refers to that.

6988. Then there is a question put in by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Some of the evicted "men are present in court, are they not"?—Yes, there is Mr. John Thomas, of Pandymawr, who was evicted from Pandymawr. He is in court; and it may be that another tenant, Edward Edwards, is in court; that I am not certain about.

A Voice: He is here.

Mr. J. M. Griffiths.

6989. Why do not these men appear themselves? Is there a reason why they do not appear to give evidence themselves?—They are willing to give evidence.

Lord Kenyon.

6990. They ought to have sent in their names before. Everybody willing to give evidence was asked to send in their names?—I believe Mr. John Thomas, of Pandymawr, has sent in his name.

Chairman.

6991. Then I have a question handed in by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Has Sir Watkin any "manorial right in the district"?—Yes: I always considered that Sir Watkin was lord of a manor in the district.

6992. Is not this district in the manor of Penllyn, which is a Crown manor? Can you answer that question?—That I have no knowledge of.

The Secretary (addressing the Chairman): Penllyn is a Crown manor.

Mr. Seebohm: It does not follow that portions of it may not have been sold off to Sir Watkin.

The Secretary: No doubt; but I am merely saying that Penllyn itself is a Crown manor.

Chairman—continued.

6993. Now, Mr. Davies, there is something you wish to add, I understand?—Yes, this Hafodyrhaidd family received notice from the medical officer of health several times. It cannot be on account of their living in a stable, and it being unfit to live in, because in the Government account of the sanitary state of Wales and Monmouthshire, which is a report by Captain Ellis, who himself was a Conservative, he says, as to Wernddu, which is a farm close by: "Poor house; water rising from floor; no "privy." Then as to Hafodyrhaidd, also just there: "Quite unfit for anyone to dwell in." Then as to Llwyncadi, a small farm close by, he says: "Very damp house, and floor very wet; "water breaking in at back; no privy." Then as to Graig, another farm close by: "This house "occupied by five people; is in a wretched "state, and quite unfit for anyone." Then at Tycoch: "Wretched, poor house, quite unfit to "be occupied; no sanitary arrangements."

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

6994. How far off are these places?—They are close by Wernddu and Hafodyrhaidd are within say 200 yards of each side of Hafodyrhaidd, and I am not aware that either of these ever received notice from the sanitary authorities.

Mr. Seebohm.

6995. Is that the state of things now?—Oh, no, certainly not.

Mr. Griffiths.

6996. Is it not the fact that it is a common belief that if a person lives in a house for 12 years he is entitled by the law to be the owner of that house?—I cannot enter into a question of law.

6997. But is there not a popular belief to that effect?—Yes, there is an impression at Llanuwchllyn that it is the law, but whether it is or not I do not know.

Chairman.

6998. I have one more question sent up, "When was this report of Captain Ellis made?"—I expect it would be in the sixties, between 1860 and 1868. I am sorry to say that the copy I had has been mislaid.

Mr. Seebohm.

6999. This question of the squatters is so important that I want just to know whether we really understand what the view in your district is about it. As I understand it you consider it is a common right to build a house in the night, that that gives a right?—Yes.

7000. And that as the agent did not interfere therefore he has no right afterwards to demand rent?—Yes.

7001. Then beyond that, how about the commoners who had rights of pasture; would it be fair to them that parts of their pasture should be taken away by squatters without interference?—I believe in one or two cases, I think in the case of Penllyn, but I cannot be absolutely certain in which of the houses it is, permission was obtained from the neighbouring farmers.

7002. Then what you really want is that there should be some better mode of regulating the commons?—Yes, just so.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

7003. That it should not be left to this sort of haphazard work, but that there should be some regular mode of dealing with and regulating the commons?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. THOMAS JONES called.

Examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

7004. Mr. Thomas Jones, you are a county councillor, and live at Llanuwchllyn?—Yes.

[The following statement, being the evidence-in-chief of the witness, was read out in English by the interpreter, after it had been previously acknowledged by the witness on being translated into Welsh.]

My evidence refers to the parish of Llanuwchllyn, and part of Llangower, owned by—

Sir Watkin W. Wynn,
Mr. R. J. Price, Rhiwlas.
Mr. Davies.
Rev. W. Hughes, vicar of Llanuwchllyn.

III.—OCCUPATION.

1. The usual term of entry is Lady-Day. Farms are let yearly without exception.

2 The notice to determine the tenancy is a six months' notice.

The following clauses in agreements are considered oppressive:

(a.) Tenants to cart towards buildings without pay.

(b.) Tenant to offer his sheep to incoming tenant or landlord, but they are not bound to buy.

(c.) Landlord contracts out of Agricultural Holdings Act, section 33.

3. Rent:

(i.) Fixed at gross sum by landlord. No uniformity. Recent reductions vary from nil to 40 per cent.

Rent of small farms slightly higher than that of large farms;

On lowland holdings, 20*s.* to 30*s.* per acre;

On upland holdings, up to 12*s.* per acre;

Rights of common are taken into account in fixing rent.

(ii.) Rent is always fixed on valuation of landlord; no arbitration ever resorted to.

(iii.) Rents raised generally.

(a.) Reductions: Sir W. W. Wynn, from nil to 40 per cent. in 1893—on revaluation of landlord's agent. Very few reductions before.

Small reductions on Mr. Price's farm four or five years ago.

None on Mr. Davies' (I think). None on the property of the Rev. Mr. Hughes.

(b.) Abatements: Sir W. W. Wynn 15 per cent. Mr. Davies 10 per cent. Mr. Price and Rev. Mr. Hughes nothing.

Rent paid within three months of its being due.

Chairman—continued.

4. Local rates have not increased.

5. Size of farms:

From 20 acres to 100, at nearly all intervening sizes. Very many consolidations.

The following is a list of the farms consolidated in Uwchafon, parish of Llangower, together with the names of the holdings to which they have been added:

1. Tynrhos to Llechwedd ystrad.
2. Pentrecogwrn to Pentrepiod.
3. Penrhyn to Pentrepiod.
4. Tyddynllafar to Ffynongower.
5. Cwmbyfed to Vedw.
6. Gyrn to Gyrn.

Twenty-one houses, including the above, have been lost or have become uninhabited in Uwchafon.

At present there are only 23 houses there, including only one labourer's dwelling.

About 70 houses have been lost in the parish of Llanuwchllyn within the last 50 years.

Twenty-three new houses have been built where there were no houses before.

Sir Watkin has built many very much better cottages instead of old ones at very moderate rents, but nearly all in the village.

Twenty-seven farms consolidated in the parish of Llanuwchllyn.

1. Ffriddlwyd to Cefngwyn.
2. Caerhys to Coedypry.
3. Tynyclawdd to Pantsaer.
4. Tynant (R.T.) to Tynant.
5. Fotty to Tynant.
6. Tynycornel to Tynant.
7. Tynyfron to Tanybwlch.
8. Nantyllyn to Tynycae.
9. Caepoeth to Caepoeth.
10. Garthuchaf to Plas.
11. Cilgellan to Garthisaf.
12. Dyfnant to Caecoch.
13. Glanymynech to Caellwyd.
14. Gwengrug to Llwyngwern.
15. Hendrebach to Hendremawr.
16. Llwyncadi to Eithinfynydd.
17. Llettycripyl to Llettycripyl.
18. Prysbach to Prysmawr.
19. Pentre to Gwernhefin, &c.
20. Llwynwrach to Caergai.
21. Maesmathew to Cwmtylo.
22. Dolfudr to Buarthmeini.

Chairman—continued.

23. Griolen to Craigytan.
24. Hafodybibell to Tydu.
25. Glanllyn to Gwernhefin.
26. Ceunant Uchaf to Llechweddalchen.
27. Garneddwen to Llechweddalchen.

Effects of consolidation.—Less production, less employment, rent raised. Population and houses less.

Relative effects of small and large holdings:—

(1.) Middle sized holding best farmed.
(2.) Occupier of small farms generally best off.
(3.) No apparent difference in their respective ability to provide for their families.

IV.—Cultivation.

1. Scarcity of labourers at particular times. Fences, ditches, &c. in bad state.

Land wanting cultivation, because of no fixity of tenure.

2. Improvements:

Improvements done mostly by tenants. No compensation for them except by agreement.

4. No attention to any branch of agricultural education except a little teaching in butter making: excellent results.

5. Prohibitive railway rates.

VI.—The General Condition of the Farming Population.

1. Proprietor farmers.

Only two proprietor farmers in the district, all the rest gone.

2. Tenants and wives work exceedingly hard. Children work without pay and often without any compensation.

Rents paid partly by children's unremunerated labour.

3. Hired labour small compared with that rendered by members of household.

Very little cottage accommodation.

VII.—Landlords mostly Absentee.

General considerations.

1. Many of the tenants pay with borrowed money.

2. Smaller landlords' agreements, especially that of the vicar, very harsh.

Before the year 1890 the education question was creating a deal of bad feeling. When the question was gone into by Sir Watkin and his agents, Colonel Hughes and Mr. William Morris, on the one hand and the managers of the British School on the other, a very fair and excellent scheme was arrived at. Sir Watkin very liberally contributing two-thirds towards its maintenance, and the scheme is working remarkably well with excellent results.

See 7032–8, 16,368.

7005. Would you like to give any further evidence?—One tenant particularly wished me to say that the present method of reducing the rent was not fair, and, as an example, he instanced his own farm and the one adjoining, which were both raised at the same time, and one of them has been reduced 40 per cent. now, and the other not reduced at all. That is all I wish to say on that point.

7006. You say that the tenant has to offer his sheep to the incoming tenant or to the landlord, but they are not bound to buy. What do you recommend as being fair?—Inasmuch as the landlord binds the tenant to offer the sheep, the landlord should be bound to buy the sheep at a fair valuation.

7007. You told us that the rent is fixed on the landlord's valuation, but no arbitration is ever resorted to. What arbitration would you like?—That it should be referred to some court or other, or to some person who was deemed to be impartial.

7008. I understand you to say that the tithes in this district are paid by the occupier?—So it used to be according to the agreements, but now the tithe is paid by the landlord, but the tenants pay it in the rent.

Lord Kenyon.

7009. You spoke of consolidation. Those were instances that you gave us?—Yes, I made a list of them.

7010. You say about 70 houses have been lost in the parish of Llanuwchllyn, within the last 50 years?—Yes, more or less.

7011. And 23 new houses built where there were no houses before?—Yes.

7012. Have these houses been lost, according to you, because there was no one to occupy them?—Most of them were going to ruin, and they were not being replaced.

7013. You say Sir Watkin has built many very much better cottages instead of the old ones, and lets them at very moderate rents?—Yes, most of these houses which have been recently built are in the village, but there used to be more houses in the village before.

7014. You say, therefore, that the land does not support so great a population as it did before?—It does not.

7015. As to those houses which you describe as being lost, would they be occupied now if there were any houses there to let?—Yes, they would be, many of them.

7016. You spoke about land going out of cultivation; I take it you mean going out of cultivation, because there is no fixity of tenure?—I believe that that has a great deal to do with it, because the tenants have not any security in regard to their holdings.

7017. Are there many changes of tenancy in the neighbourhood?—A very few now, but in times past many have been turned out of their farms.

7018. You say there are a very few now; therefore would it remedy the present state of affairs?—I believe the tenants would feel greater security.

7019. You spoke of proprietor farmers. You said there were only two, and all the rest had gone; where have they gone to?—Many have been bought up, for the most part by Sir Watkin.

7020. Have the proprietor farmers sold to Sir Watkin?—Yes.

7021. Then I suppose they are better off in not farming land, or else they would not have sold them?—I cannot speak to that.

7022. Can you tell me whether any of these proprietor farmers still are tenants on the lands which they have sold?—The actual proprietors do not live on the land now, but, possibly, some of their descendants may.

7023. You said the landlords were mostly absentee landlords?—Yes.

7024. Would you call Sir Watkin an absentee landlord?—Yes.

7025. Surely he lives in Wales, and he lives as much on his own property as he can, does he not?—He is yonder only a few weeks.

7026. Wynnstay is not very far off?—About 30 miles.

7027. I do not think that is very far off. Would you call Mr. Price an absentee landlord?—So far as he is concerned with Llanuwchllyn.

7028. Has Mr. Price any house he can live in at Llanuwchllyn?—If he was humble enough to go and live in one of them he could.

7029. Would he not have to turn out a tenant of one of those houses if he wished to do that?—Yes, he would be obliged to do so, or else live in one room or more.

7030. Or less. Are there any other absentee landlords you can name?—Mr. Davies.

7031. I think that is hardly "mostly," is it—that is hardly the majority?—I do not mention anyone else except Mr. Hughes, and he is away.

7032. You said one tenant said the system of reducing rent was not fair. You mention your own house?—No, it is not my own case.

7033. I thought it was your own case and the adjoining farm?—No, I gave that evidence because one of the tenants asked me to do it.

7034. Can you give his name?—Yes, if necessity arose.

7035. I want to get the fact, not mere hearsay?—Yes, I am prepared to give his name, Thomas Francis Rowland, of Gweirglodd-ddu.

7036. What was that tenant's reason for complaint?—Both rents were raised at the same time, and now one is reduced to a very great extent, and the other not; his own is not being reduced.

7037. Possibly there may be some other reason I should like to know?—I do not know of any other reason.

7038. Do you know the rent per acre of each of those farms?—Thomas Francis Rowlands will speak for himself. He is here.

7039. There is no instance within your own knowledge in which you think the system of reducing rent was unfair?—I do not say myself that it is unfair.

7040. Do you not think that it is possible for the landlord and tenant to agree between themselves without the intervention of an arbitrator?—Yes, sometimes, but not always.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

7041. You told us that these landlords of whom you have been speaking, contract themselves out of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, section 33?—Yes.

7042. That is the section as to notice, is it not?—Yes.

7043. Do you know whether they have attempted to contract out of any other provisions of the Act of 1883?—In Sir Watkin's agreement that is, so far as I know, the only clause which is excepted.

7044. Do you know the provisions as to compensation in the Act of 1883?—I do not well enough—far from well enough.

7045. Is there any custom of any kind operating as between the incoming and outgoing tenant?—No, there is no agreement between them, but the general rule is that the incoming tenant buys the sheep and so on, at the end of the year. There is no custom.

7046. Is any compensation paid for manuring any of the land?—I do not know of any except by agreement—I mean anything that the agreement may show.

7047. I suppose there is some arable land on most of the farms as to which you are speaking?—Yes, on almost all the farms.

7048. And there is besides what may be called the sheep walk, or the mere pasture land—some meadow land—some good pasture—enclosed?—Yes, in the upland farms.

7049. We have had to day evidence as to a large number of persons having been turned off farms belonging to Sir Watkin. Do you know whether any of them received compensation?—I believe they never had a halfpenny.

7050. With regard to proprietor farmers, how far does your memory go back?—I remember very few. Most of them had gone before I can recollect.

7051. Then so far as you can gather from what you have heard old people tell you, were there many small freehold proprietors in this district?—Yes.

7052. About how far back from the impression that you have, do you think that they were numerous?—About 70 years ago. There were several at that time I think.

7053. Several?—Yes, many.

7054. And they have gradually disappeared as I understand, so far as your knowledge goes, by being purchased by the bigger proprietors round about?—Yes.

7055. I notice that some years ago it was said by a gentlemen who went over Merioneth that many women entering farm service were generally engaged as domestic servants upon the understanding that they were to assist in the outdoor work of the farm, though a few were exclusively employed in the work of the farm?—Yes.

7056. Is that the case still?—Yes, in many cases.

7057. Taking the farms upon the estates that you have been giving evidence about, are there many women servants or domestic servants employed now?—Yes, a good deal.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

7058. And it is the case that they are generally employed as domestic servants in the first instance, as it were?—Yes.

7059. And that, nothwithstanding that they are engaged upon the understanding that they are to do farm work as well?—Yes.

7060. Do they have to do farm work?—Yes.

7061. Are there any women upon the farms of these estates engaged as day labourers, to your knowledge?—Very few.

7062. Do you know what wages the few that are engaged get?—Well, they are engaged at harvest time, and they get from a 1*s.* to 1*s.* 6*d.* a day and their food.

7063. With regard to boys, are many boys other than the sons of the farmer engaged in farm work in this country or in this district? Of course, my questions are devoted to this district alone, I ought to tell you?—A few; not many.

7064. Whose sons are they, the few that are engaged, or the boys you come across; are they the sons of farm labourers, or the sons of other farmers?—Well, both.

7065. What is the youngest age at which they are engaged?—Well, about 14, I believe; something like that some of them may be.

7066. But speaking generally, the farms in this district are rather small. I think you said so?—Yes.

7067. And as you said, they are chiefly pastoral. Is it not the fact that a good many boys are employed?—No, not many.

7068. Who look after the sheep and attend the cattle on the high lying parts?—Well, if it is a large farm, they keep a shepherd sometimes.

7069. Well, with regard to the ordinary farm that we have been hearing about to-day, an upland farm?—The farmer himself, or some of his family generally, or a man-servant it may be.

7070. Did you hear whether any girls are employed at a very young age for out-door work in the farms?—No, I do not believe so; not many before 14.

7071. At 14 are they often at work?—Yes.

7072. Is it the fact that the farmers' children have to work pretty hard?—Yes.

7073. Does the work they are put to interfere with their schooling at all?—Well, not much.

7074. At what age then does the farmer's child generally begin to help about the farm?—They begin to help very early; they begin to help a little about 9 or 10.

7075. Then they ought to be at school?—Well, they will be at school; but they begin to help a little at about 9 or 10.

7076. Then they have to work, either before school hours or after school hours?—Yes.

7077. What is the diet in the farms round about; what food do they get as a rule?—Very plain, I believe.

7078. Do they get fresh meat every day?—No; not even on Sundays either.

7079. Do you mean to say that in any of these farms you have been talking about, a week goes by without any of the family getting fresh meat?—Yes; most of them; I am certain of it.

7080. What do they have then; bacon, ham?—Yes. Well, some of them have solid meat as well, dried.

7081. Do they have tea and coffee?—Oh, yes.

7082. I think you said that many of the tenants have to borrow money in order to pay their rent?—Yes.

7083. I understand the effect of your evidence then is this, that upon these farms upon Sir Watkin Wynn's estates and the other estates you have mentioned farmers find it extremely difficult to pay the present rents?—Yes, in these days.

7084. They are not able to buy anything, you think?—I do not think so.

7085. Then, if that is true, the farmer's life is not entirely a happy one, Mr. Jones?—No, not all of them. There are some of them well off.

7086. Which of them are well off? Do you find that the smaller farmers are well off—the men you have been thinking of, or the bigger farmers—the farmers of bigger estates?—Yes; the smaller farmers work and get salaries for their labour.

7087. But I am talking of a person who farms and makes that the business of his life?—Yes.

7088. You do not understand that to be a paying business, as I understand you?—Some years ago in the upland farms they have done very well, so I understand.

7089. What remedy do you suggest for the state of things which you have been describing?—I cannot say. It is too difficult a problem for me.

7090. Do you think there is any change of the law, for instance, that would be advantageous—I mean a change of the law that would recognise the interests of all parties reasonably and fairly?—I think if they knew they would get their full compensation when they left their farms, that they would farm much better.

7091. Do you think they do not know what the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act are?—Well, you will see from the agreement that it is not that.

7092. No, but then I began by asking you those questions. As I understand in the agreements you have seen, it is only section 33 that is excluded, and section 33 is a section which talks about the notice to quit. Section 33 only says that "where a half-year's notice, expiring "with a year of tenancy is by law necessary "and sufficient for determination of a tenancy "from year to year, a year's notice shall be "required by virtue of this Act," and then it goes on later in the Act to say that that cannot be contracted out of, and that no other provision of the Act shall be contracted out of, which deprives him of any right to compensation under the Act?—So I understand.

7093. If by the agreement it is agreed to exactly all but section 33, it could not affect the compensation. For instance, if a man is going to drain, and he gives a notice to his landlord, then by the first schedule of the Act, he is entitled to compensation if he does drain?—There is a clause in the agreement which says what the compensation is. I have produced the agreement and handed it in.

7094. I should like to look at the agreement. [The agreement was handed to the learned Commissioner.] I think you are wrong. It seems to me that that is not identical with the provisions of the Act. I thought you said it was only section 33 that was contracted out of the agreement. I will just call your attention to section 55, just to bring your mind to bear on the matter, as you have been so good as to get up the evidence carefully. By section 55 "any "contract, agreement, or covenant, made by a "tenant, by virtue of which he is deprived of "his right to claim compensation under this "Act in respect of any improvement mentioned "in the first schedule shall, so far as it deprives "him of such right, be void in law and in "equity"—"except an agreement providing "such compensation as is by this Act permitted "to be substituted for compensation under this "Act." I do not know whether you have considered it. I must look at this agreement more carefully, but we cannot delay now. Lord Kenyon points out that by section 8 the landlord and the tenant may agree upon the amount and mode and time of payment. Perhaps that is all that this clause 16 of the agreement does, and, if that is so, that is valid.

Lord Kenyon.

7095. The agreement is in accordance with section 8 of the Agricultural Holdings Act; is that so?

(Col. Hughes interposing.—Certainly.)

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

7096. It is a matter which requires careful consideration I see now; the intention is to make an agreement under section 8 as substituted for the sections of the Act. That we must consider. Have you considered that point yourself?—No.

7097. You have not considered whether this agreement does violate the Act of 1883 or not?—No.

7098. We must look at it carefully. We must see what terms it uses. Is there any grievance about game, so far as you are aware?—No, very little.

7099. Is there any instance of an indirect pressure—now observe my word "indirect" pressure—being brought to bear upon tenants to become Churchmen, or to vote in a particular way, which has come under your notice?—Well, I believe something was put in their way some time ago to induce them.

7100. As I understood Mr. Davies' evidence, the evidence that he gave "of a series of evictions consequent upon elections," or after elections which occurred before the Ballot Act of 1872 came into operation, I did not hear anything about the election of 1874, or of the election of 1880?—No It was before the Ballot Act.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

7101. Now, without reference to the landlord being willing to resort to a notice to quit, do you yourself observe with regard to county council elections, for instance, and parliamentary elections, any attempt on the part of landlords or their agents to indirectly influence tenants?—Not in the least at present.

7102. Not by way of hope of reward, for instance, of a superior farm?—No, not in the least. They are all quite free.

Mr. Griffiths.

7103. You say the tenants are not paid for hauling?—They were not paid. I believe they are paid now.

7104. You do not mean to say that tenants who do much hauling are obliged to go without payment for it?—Yes.

7105. Can you give us any instance of tenants having to give their labour for nothing?—I cannot call to mind any instance at the present moment.

7106. You complained just now that a valuation was made by the land agent. What remedy do you suggest? You take for granted that a landlord thinks his farm is let very reasonably; the tenant, on the other hand, thinks his farm is let very far too high; if I rightly understand you want some impartial court to appeal to to settle between you and the landlord?—Yes.

7107. I take it for granted the landlord and you are on the best of terms, but still there is something of that sort wanted?—Yes.

7108. You say, again, that hedges and ditches are getting into a bad state; what is the cause of that?—Tenants have no heart to employ labour. The price of labour is very high now.

7109. You think the farmers, as a rule, have not the money with which to pay for putting up fences, the same as they used to do?—No.

7110. Are there any of those proprietary farms, which you spoke of just now, which have been purchased by the tenants?—No, not a single one.

Lord Kenyon.

7111. I understood you to answer me the question that some of the families might be living, although not the original proprietors. Is not that so. I think you answered me that before?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

7112. In taking a farm, do tenants who have children at work on the farm have a better chance of getting a farm, than a tenant who has none?—I cannot say for certain, although that would be a consideration to the Court.

7113. Tenants do not pay their children?—No; children are paid sometimes, but not always.

7114. Do you think farmers' children are as well off, being educated as labourers, or are they paid at home more than the labourers' children?—Well, they are about the same, with a few exceptions. They get more at home than the labourers.

7115. Where do the labourers' children chiefly go. Do they go to sea, or are they employed on a farm; or where do they generally go?—Well, they go to the towns chiefly.

7116. And the young women, too, do they go to the towns?—Yes, they go away to the towns as well.

7117. These abatements that are being made you say are unfair, and you would hand them over to the same Court?—I do not say that. I do not say they are unfair.

7118. One is from 40 per cent. to nothing at all. That seems very fair?—Well, it seems so at first, on the face of it; but there may be some reasons why it is not. I do not know.

7119. Are not the farms in this neighbourhood chiefly let to tenants?—Yes.

7120. How are the farm servants lodged, are they lodged in the houses?—Yes, generally.

7121. And the young women as well?—Yes.

7122. Do they lodge in a dwelling-house, or in out-buildings?—Well, in the house generally, and some may be in the out-buildings.

7123. They only live with just a partition between males and females; is that correct?—Well, now, Sir, the buildings are in much better condition than they were some years ago; they have improved greatly.

7124. Do any of the labourers in this neighbourhood keep cows?—Very few.

7125. Do you think it is an advantage, or a disadvantage, for a labourer to keep a cow?—Yes, it is an advantage.

7126. A good thing?—Yes.

7127. Do you not think the children on the farms learn to milk and grow up more acquainted with farm work?—Yes.

7128. The mother will not last for ever you know?—No.

7129. Then as a remedy I suppose you think the rents must come down; it comes to that?—Yes; they are coming down.

Mr. Richard Jones.

7130. You said in answer to Lord Kenyon that, in some cases the tenant is able to deal freely with the landlord on the question of rent. When is a tenant most free to deal with or to treat with his landlord on the question of rent? Is it before entering into a farm, or after he is established in a farm?—Well, I do not think it is so before entering into a farm. They have only to take it at the rent the landlord tells them.

7131. What inference do you draw from that? Is there any custom in your opinion?—Well, it would be well to have somebody else to refer to as to that.

7132. Then you consider that a tenant farmer is at the mercy and at the will of the landlord? Yes.

7133. And because of that, you ask for some impartial tribunal to decide the question of rent as between landlord and tenant?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

7134. With regard to the outgoing and incoming tenant, you grow wheat, do you not, in this country to some extent?—To a small extent.

7135. What is the custom between the incoming and out-going tenant with respect to wheat?—We do not sow any wheat at Llanuwchllyn.

7136. Not any?—No.

7137. I see by the returns there are 978 acres of wheat grown. I suppose that would be down in the neighbourhood of Corwen?—Yes.

7138. Is the incoming tenant permitted to enter the farm before the 25th March in order to plough?—They agree with the outgoing tenant at the end of the year, and they enter upon the land then.

7139. Oh, they do?—Yes, generally.

7140. But, of course, he is entirely dependent upon the goodwill of the outgoing tenant?—Yes, of course.

7141. If he likes to prove obstinate the incoming tenant could not go on the farm before the 25th March?—No.

7142. Do you know of instances where that has occurred?—Well I cannot call any to mind now, but I think there are instances.

7143. So that the custom works satisfactorily then?—Yes.

7144. In your evidence you say that middle-sized farms are best cultivated, and that the occupiers of small farms are generally best off, will you explain that. How are the middle-sized farms best cultivated?—Well a middle-sized farm will keep as many horses as the big farms, but the small farm does not keep any horses at all.

7145. There is no reference to the large farms in your evidence. It is a question as between the small farms and the middle-sized farms. How do you make out that the middle-sized farm is better cultivated than the small farm?—On a very small farm, they have no horses to plough the land, to cultivate the land the same as a big-sized farm has; that is what I mean.

7146. What is the smallest size of a farm on which a man could live and be continually employed on the farm, that is, provided that he had no children to assist him?—Without any additional labour?

7147. Yes, without any additional labour?—Well, I should say from 15 to 20 acres.

7148. Can a man live on 15 to 20 acres without working as a labourer on the land in this part?—I think some of them do.

7149. Why do the farmers employ women to work on the farm, is it because they get them cheaper?—They get them cheaper, of course.

7150. And that is the reason?—Well, the outdoor work is done in a manner on the farm gratis; all the farm work and the house work.

7151. Is there any dissatisfaction with the table with respect to compensation in the agreement that you put in?—Yes.

7152. What do you say about the first item in the table. Do you think that the improvement after an application of lime on grass land is exhausted in three years?—No, I do not think so.

7153. To what time would you extend it?—Well, five or six years.

7154. That would be in accordance with the Glamorganshire custom. They allow five years there. Is there anything else in that table?—I think there is—where the tenant erects a new building. Well, 12 years is much too little.

7155. What would you consider just to the tenant?—Well, I think the buildings ought to be revalued.

7156. At the end of the tenancy?—Yes.

7157. Anything else?—Drainage.

7158. What about the drainage?—I think that ought to be extended.

7159. You consider the time too short?—Yes.

7160. What about the wire fencing?—The same.

7161. Is there anything else in the agreement?—I cannot call to mind now.

7162. Do you know of cases where agents have been using their position to serve their own personal ends?—No; there may be cases.

7163. Do you know of cases?—I remember
7181. once when a tenant died and he was indebted to the agent, the son applied for the place, and he had it on terms.

7164. In what way was he indebted? Was he indebted to the agent personally or to the landlord?—To the agent personally.

7165. Are there any other instances?—I cannot call to mind now any.

Professor Rhŷs.

7166. You have a farm of your own. You live among farmers and see them every day, and talk to them?—Yes.

7167. They are your neighbours?—Yes.

7168. You spoke of a Land Court just now. Do they say they want a Land Court?—Yes, they do.

7169. Have you heard that expressed?—Yes.

7170. More than once?—Yes, many times.

7171. By more than one man?—Yes, by several.

7172. What do you understand by a Land Court, or what do the people you talk with who want a Land Court understand by it exactly. What do they think a Land Court has to do?—Fix rents particularly.

7173. Anything else?—That is the thing they want mostly.

Chairman.

7174. I will trouble you with a question or two. There is a question from Mr. Vincent. "Please specify the estates on which consolidation "of farms has taken place." Can you do that?—As I have said, there are only a few yonder on the estate of Sir Watkin and the estate of Mr. Price. They are on those estates, and I have given a list of them.

7175. That is the list put in?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

7176. A question by Mr. Owen Wynne. "Is "it not the fact that by agreement every "incoming tenant can enter to do any works of "husbandry on the 1st February"?—Yes, they can come in for the purpose of doing works of husbandry on the 1st February, but they cannot occupy the buildings.

Sir John Llewelyn.

7177. The dwelling-house or building?—The dwelling-house or building. There may be a part that they may occupy as stabling for two horses.

Chairman (to the Interpreter).

7178. Will you give us the answer again.

The Interpreter:—He said that they can enter on the 1st February for the purpose of doing works of husbandry, but not to occupy the buildings nor the house.

Lord Kenyon.

Not to occupy the premises.

Professor Rhŷs.

Then he added that by an understanding with the tenant he might possibly have a part of them.

Chairman.

7179. This is a question put by Mr. Edward Watkin, the agent of the Rhiwlas Estate, "Do "you state that there have been no reductions "of rents on the Rhiwlas Estate in the parish "of Llanuwchllyn since 1877"?—I have said that there have been reductions.

7180. There are questions handed up by Mr. George Owen, one of which the Commission think is hardly necessary to be put. The first question is, "You have spoken of the necessity "of a Land Court, have you considered whether "if there were a Land Court a landowner would "have any interest in improving his estate"?—I think he would have a far greater interest in improving his estate if there were a Land Court.

7181. A question from Mr. John Williams: "Was it on Sir Watkin's estate that the agent "received money for accepting a tenant. If so, "will the witness name a case"?—Yes, Evan Jones, of Rhyd-y-bod.

See 7163, 7430–7497, 7677, 18,294–18,388.

7182. Let us have that clearly?—It was for allowing him to become a tenant after the father had failed at that time—had become bankrupt.

Lord Kenyon.

7183. Who was the agent at that time who received the money?—Mr. John Williams.

Chairman.

7184. Question put by Mr. William Morris, local agent, Glanllyn, Bala: "You said that all "the cartage is done by the tenant. Do you "still maintain that there is no cartage done by

Chairman—continued.

" the landlord on the Glanllyn Estate "?—I do not recollect that I said that all the cartage was done by the tenant.

7185. Were any of these consolidated farms on the Rhiwlas Estate?—I do not remember more than one on that Estate.

7186. Mr. Vincent puts a question "My " instructions are that in 1877 the Rhiwlas " tenants in Llanuwchllyn parish paid rent, " 402*l.*, and tithe, say 15 guineas, and that they " now pay 381*l.* and no tithe. Do you disagree " with these instructions, and if not, do you " maintain still that Mr. Price of Rhiwlas has " not reduced his rents"?—I have said before that Mr. Price did reduce his rents, and that he pays the tithe still. That has been done some years ago.

7188. Could you instance any case where hardship has arisen owing to delay on the part of the landlord in appointing a valuer?—I cannot recollect an instance, but I think I know what this question is directed to—the object of this question. There was a case in which the other valuer and myself could not agree in fixing the price, and an umpire was to be selected, but he could not be found for a long time, and in the meantime scores of the tenants' sheep died. I believe it refers to that case.

7189. "Do you know a man called William Pugh, late of Brynllin, Llanfachreth"?—Yes, I know the man.

7190. Can you give us any particulars of the way the valuation of his sheep was made when he left his farm?—It is the case that I referred to now.

Chairman—continued.

7191. The case where you could not get an umpire, and there was so much delay that scores of his sheep died?—Yes.

7192. That is what I understand you to say?—Yes.

7193. I have only three more questions to put to you. Mr. Llewellyn Jones asks "Are you a " member of the Welsh Calvinist Methodist " Connexion"?—Yes.

7194. "Do you know whether, in the year " 1871 or 1872, an application was made to Sir " Watkin for a plot of land in the village of " Llanuwchllyn to build a chapel on. Was the " application granted? If not, do you know what " Sir Watkin gave as his reason? Where was " the chapel eventually built"?—I recollect that an application was made at that time to Sir Watkin, but he would not grant the application—he did not grant the application.

7195. Where was the chapel eventually built?—Well, it was built on a garden very near the village

Mr. Richard Jones.

7196. On whose land was the chapel built?—On Mr. Robert Roberts'.

7197. Did Sir Watkin state his reasons for not granting that?—I think he said that there was sufficient land to be got elsewhere. I think they wanted to build a chapel then on the other side of the road so as to be more sheltered.

Chairman.

7198. There is another question from Mr. Vincent: "As a fact, are not the sheep accus- " tomed to the hill invariably bought and would " it not be practically impossible for the " incoming tenant to farm without the sheep in " question. Are they not, in fact, valued higher " than sheep in the open market"?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Robert Morris called and examined (through an Interpreter).

Chairman.

7199. Mr. Robert Morris, you are a tenant farmer of Tyn-y-Cae, Llanuwchllyn, Bala?—Yes.

[The following statement, being the evidence-in-chief of the witness, was read out in English by the interpreter, after it had been previously acknowledged by the witness on being translated into Welsh.]

"I am a tenant farmer occupying two small farms called Tyn-y-cae and Nant-y-llyn which are held by Sir Watkin Wynn under a will in trust for certain charitable objects.

"When I took these farms there was no suitable building upon them. The house was under the same roof as a tumble-down shippon, and there was no proper internal partition between them.

"I frequently applied for new buildings or for a reduction in the rent so as to enable me to make the required buildings at his own expense. Ultimately, however, I received a notice from the Medical Officer of Health that the place was unfit for him to live in. I took the notice to Sir Watkin's agent, and the latter told me that I might either build myself or give up the place. As I could not get any buildings, I gave notice to quit, as I thought this might lead to something being done.

"Sir Watkin and his agent at last allowed me what they thought would cover half the cost of building a house, and I had to complete the building at my own expense, leaving the out-buildings as they were.

"The poorness and scarcity of buildings is a common complaint. Instead of repairing buildings, landlords are too ready to consolidate farms; they allow labourers' cottages to fall into ruins, with the result that labourers remove to the villages and towns. In this way the rural districts are being rapidly depopulated. Thus, in Cwm Cynllwyd, where I live, there were 30 or 40 years ago double the number of families which live there now. In my opinion the chief grievances of the tenant farmer are the high rents and the insecurity of tenure. During the last 10 years, especially, the heavy demands upon the purse of the tenant, coupled with the fact that agricultural produce has fallen 50 per cent., have greatly oppressed the farmer. In a large number of instances the landlords have made large reductions, but in other cases no reductions at all or inadequate reductions have been given.

"Owing to the fact that the tenancy is so insecure, farmers will not do what they otherwise would with their land, and in many instances they are not in a position to spend money. Their children have to do a large part of the work without pay; and in some instances I know of farmers' children who have gone away to work and who send home a portion of their wages to pay the rent."

As to the buildings, Sir Watkin did not give me half the cost of building. He was not responsible for half the cost, but he gave what he thought would amount to about half the cost.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

7200. I would like to ask you a question about these farms being held under a will in trust for certain charitable objects. Will you just explain; Sir Watkin appears to me from your statement to have been simply a trustee in this case?—Yes.

7201. He did not keep the rent for his own benefit?—No.

7202. What was the nature of the charity. What were the proceeds devoted to?—Towards the support of the poor in the parish of Llanuwchllyn.

7203. Was it an ancient charity or a modern charity?—It was pretty old. I cannot say for certain how old.

7204. Has that been dealt with by the Charity Commissioners at all. Has there been any new scheme lately?—I do not know.

7205. You have no complaint to make as to the use of the funds produced from the estate?—I have no complaint whatsoever.

7206. Did you say that there were no buildings at all at the time that you first knew these lands?—I said that they were not worthy of the name of buildings

7207. That means that they were very much out of repair, I suppose, and very insufficient?—

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

Yes, the rent was too high for the tenant to do the repairs.

7208. Both the farms that you held were charity lands then?—Yes.

7209. What was the total extent?—One was 24 acres and the other 29 acres.

7210. What were the rents that you paid in respect of these?—25*l.* This is very high land—upland—at the foot of the Aran mountain.

Mr. Richard Jones.

7211. I have one question. You say you live on an upland farm?—Yes.

7212. What are the special grievances of the upland farmers?—That the rents are too high now.

7213. Is there anything else?—The grievances about the buildings on many a mountain.

7214. Not sufficient buildings to shelter the stock?—Yes.

7215. Have you any complaint to make as to the seasons. Have the seasons affected upland farmers in recent years more than they used to?—I believe the seasons have affected them, because our chief market is for sheep and cattle.

7216. The winters of two and three years ago were very severe. Were there any losses of sheep during those seasons?—We lost half the sheep one year.

7217. So that, in addition to high rents, you have to fight against severe seasons?—Yes.

7218. Do you cultivate your farm at all?—Yes.

7219. What is your method of cultivation. When you plough a field what crop do you sow?—Oats.

7220. What after the oats?—I do not think there is much besides oats.

7221. Do you not rise any roots?—We put seeds in with the corn.

7222. Do you not plant potatoes and rise roots?—Yes, potatoes.

7223. When do you plant those?—About the month of April.

7224. I want to know the rotation of the crops?—The second crop.

7225. They come after oats then?—Yes.

7226. And then after roots?—I sow seeds then.

7227. Then you have a crop of corn. Would you sow the seed with it?—Yes, all at the same time.

7228. What corn is it?—Barley and oats.

Mr. Richard Jones.

That is what I wanted to know.

The witness withdrew.

EDWARD EDWARDS called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

7229. Mr. Edward Edwards, you are a farm labourer, living at Maes-y-fallen, Hirnant, Bala?—Yes.

[The following statement, being the evidence-in-chief of the witness, was read out in English by the interpreter, after it had been previously acknowledged by the witness on being translated into Welsh.]

Evidence as to condition of agricultural labourers in parishes of Llanfor and Llanycil.

Llanycil Parish.

"At the present time farm labourers living at their own homes in the parish of Llanycil get 11*s.* a week and their food, with an additional sum of 9*s.* in harvest time, i.e., for four or six weeks. This year, however, the addition was only 7*s.* or 8*s.*

"Single men generally hired for 12 months, May to May. Their wages are from 20*l.* to 26*l.* They work as a rule 13 or 14 hours a day. There is a good deal of 'give and take' on the part of the master and servant as to time. When the servant wants a day off he can usually get it without losing any part of his wages, and on wet days servants are allowed to do something indoors or sometimes are left without work. On this account they will work sometimes 15 or 16 hours in return.

"I have never heard any complaint in the parish of Llanycil as to the sleeping accommodation of servant men. It is generally in an outbuilding, but the men themselves prefer this.

"The number of farm servants in the parish of Llanycil is much smaller than it used to be. A large number of labourers' cottages on farms have fallen into ruins, so that the married men have to live in the villages, where some of the houses are very unsuitable. The rent they pay is from 2*l.* to 3*l.*

"Llanfor Parish.

"Wages much the same as in Llanycil parish. Fully 40 workmen's cottages in that parish have fallen into ruins within the last 50 years. The present houses are generally in the villages.

"I have heard several complaints from Llanfor parish that masters are very exacting with their men, making them work long hours without any equivalent.

"On one farm married men, who live on their food, get 16*s.* a week, and a gratuity of 1*l.* at the end of the harvest.

"One may say that farm labourers in this parish get the same wages as men employed on the railway and on the high road, but the hours of work are respectively 13, 11½, and 11.

"Great complaints are made by workmen as to the rents they have to pay in Bala. Many have to pay 5*l.* to 7*l.* in addition to the water rate.

Chairman—continued.

"Labourers with large families have great difficulty to make both ends meet, and it is absolutely impossible to put money by for cases of illness, &c. When sickness comes they have often either to fall on the parish, or, if they managed to save a little money before their marriage they have to spend this. I could mention cases where labourers' wives have lost their health owing to the severe struggle to find sufficient food and clothing for their family.

"Another thing which makes the lot of the married farm labourer a hard one, is the fact that employment is very uncertain. He may get work for several weeks running at a busy time, but at other times he may be without work for a month or more.

"About 50 or 60 years ago the wages of a labourer without food were 9*s.* a week, with food 6*s.* a week.

"Single men generally hired by the year for 12*l.* or 13*l.*; servant girls from 3*l.* 10*s.* to 5*l.*

"At that time married men generally lived in a cottage somewhere on the farm, for which they paid 1*l.* or 1*l.* 10*s.* rent, and they almost lived on the master's food. They were also allowed to have a stock of peat sufficient to last the year, and the master lent his horse to carry the same home. In return for this the labourer's wife and children assisted at harvest time. The master also allowed the labourer to plant two hobbets of potatoes in his potato field, the master supplying the manure. When the potatoes were raised the master took half and the workmen half. At that time this would mean a sufficient quantity of potatoes to supply the family with half their food for the year. Tea and sugar were unknown luxuries to labourers, but they generally got sufficient butter milk for nothing. Labourers' children went barefooted in summer, and wore wooden clogs in winter. When they were seven or eight years old they were often employed to look after the farmer's animals, and received their food in return. It was quite a common thing for them to go to service when they were nine years old."

7230. Are the cottages supplied with good gardens in this county?—There are very few labourers' cottages in the county, but there are gardens with the existing farm labourers' cottages.

7231. Is it possible for a farm labourer to get a small piece of ground, say a quarter of an acre, to cultivate for his own particular use at a low rent?—Indeed I am not able to answer that, because I do not know of any one who has applied or who has tried to get such a plot and been refused, or tried and failed.

7232. Do you think it would be an advantage to the farm labourer to have a small piece of ground?—Yes, it would be a very great advantage.

7233. But it is unknown in this part of the world?—Most of these houses where they keep a cow have fallen into ruin, and there are very few of them now.

Lord Kenyon.

7234. Do you know whether the Merionethshire County Council have taken up the Allotments Acts?—I do not know.

Lord Kenyon.

7235. Perhaps Mr. Thomas Jones can tell us?

Mr. Thomas Jones. No, they have not.

7236. Is there any demand for anything of that sort in this neighbourhood?—Yes, there is some demand, but still I cannot say there is a great demand for it, because it is so hard to get it; it appears to be such an impossible thing.

7237. Is the condition of the agricultural labourers better or worse than it was 30 years ago?—I do not think there is very much difference now to what there was 30 years, or at any rate 25 years ago.

7238. Wages are higher, I think you said in your evidence?—No, I do not think I said that wages are higher now than 30 years ago.

7239. I beg pardon, it was 50 years ago?—I say so with regard to 50 years ago.

7240. Is that within your recollection?—Yes, that is within my recollection; I recollect as a boy it was more.

7241. Would you say that the condition of the labourers has improved in the last 50 years?—Yes, I do.

7242. And food is cheaper?—Yes, it is.

7243. How do you account for it that the labourers are moving from the country and going into the towns?—One reason at any rate is that the hours with us in Wales are so long, starting at six o'clock, formerly five o'clock.

7244. Would that give the labourer any time to work on a small allotment, if he had any?—No, it would not.

7245. His chief complaint is that the hours are too long?—Yes, that is the chief grievance.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

7246. You described yourself as a farm labourer, did you not?—Yes.

7247. Are you working as a farm labourer now, from week to week?—Yes.

7248. What is your age, may I ask?—Fifty-three.

7249. What wages do you get now?—I get 1*l.* a week for six weeks and 8*s.* for the rest.

7250. During what portion of the year do you say you get 1*l.* a week?—At harvest time.

7251. But taking the year through you get 8*s.* a week?—I cannot say what I would get in the winter.

7252. Taking the last two or three years, have you been regularly employed on the same farm?—No, it is last May I went to the farm where I am now.

7253. Are you a married man?—No.

7254. When you are working in a particular farm now, are you one of those who live in a cottage on the farm, or do you lodge in a town, or village, or what?—I live in the house with them, as a servant.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

7255. In your evidence you drew a distinction between the labourers who lived upon cottages on the farms, and labourers who worked on the farm but lived in a cottage in the village or in a town?—Yes.

7256. You know a good many of the former class, I dare say?—I have known of some, but there are very few now.

7257. How many rooms were there in the cottages on the farm generally?—Sometimes two, sometimes three.

7258. What kind of cottages, as a rule, are there to be had in the villages?—They vary; there are some houses pretty good, and others suitable.

7259. You mean others just comfortable?—Comfortable enough, but they vary as I told you. Some are pretty decent and others are only just efficient.

7260. Then, as I understand, there is no complaint as to the general condition of the cottages in the villages?—There is room for improvement even with those.

7261. Are there many four-roomed cottages in the ordinary villages?—I do not know of any.

7262. You said in your evidence that the married men had to live in the villages where some of the houses are very unsuitable. What did you mean by that; that is a general phrase?—Well, that is very easy to be seen; when a man works four miles away and lives at Bala it is inconvenient.

7263. Then, as I understand you, you think it does add to the hardship of the labourer's lot that he should not be able to get a dwelling-house within a reasonable distance of the place where he has to work. Is that what you mean?—Yes, I say so.

7264. Putting aside that inconvenience, putting aside the distance, is there any general complaint about the condition of the cottages in the villages?—The chief grievance is that the rent is very high.

7265. That is exactly what I was coming to. Do the labourers complain to you that there are not fit and comfortable houses to be had in the villages, or do they complain that the rent is too high?—The chief grievance of the labourers living at Bala is that the rent is too high, and the chief grievance of those living in the villages is that the houses are in a bad condition.

7266. First, taking the houses in Bala, what rent does a farm labourer have to pay for a fairly decent house in Bala?—From 4*l.* to 8*l.*

7267. Take the 4*l.* house. How many rooms would there be in that, as a rule?—As a rule a room downstairs and a room upstairs, and a little back kitchen; sometimes two rooms upstairs.

7268. Is there any garden to that house; I am now talking of the Bala house?—Yes, as to some.

7269. And the rent of the houses in the villages is rather less, I suppose is it not?—Yes.

7270. Now, with regard to the ordinary food. You have given some general evidence about it and I should like to know what are the ordinary meals of the farm labourer. The farm labourer I am asking you about is the farm labourer who goes to work on the farm from the villages or from Bala?—The farm labourer who lives on his own finding?

7271. Yes. I am thinking of the man who lives, we will say, in a village near the lake there, and who leaves Bala and goes every day to some farm in the neighbourhood. What food does he generally get, what meals?—I do not know, indeed.

7272. What do you get yourself; you know that, I suppose?—I live on the farmer's food.

7273. Very well. What do you get from the farmers?—Do you wish to know the whole, everything?

7274. I hope you get a variety, but I should like to know what your breakfast is?—Well, it is sometimes shot. It is bread and buttermilk, or bread and milk.

7275. Do you get tea or coffee for breakfast?—Yes.

7276. Do you get any meat of any kind?—For dinner.

7277. Not for breakfast?—No.

7278. What meat do you get for dinner?—Sometimes bacon, sometimes beef. Where I am now we sometimes get mutton.

7279. When is it that you do get the mutton?—Harvest time.

7280. Take one week with another throughout the year, how many times do you get meat—other than bacon, I mean?—Not often, except on Sunday. When they kill cows the beef is salted and we get that occasionally with the bacon.

7281. I think you know the district of Bala and the parish of Llanycil. That you know best, is it not?—I know something about the five parishes in this neighbourhood.

7282. Do the labourers among themselves, and for the general purposes of life, use Welsh or English?—Welsh always.

7283. Do you find during the time that you have known this district that any English labourers have been coming here, or Irish labourers?—I have often seen one.

Mr. J. M. Griffiths.

7284. You said just now that servants prefer sleeping out. What is the reason?—So that they need not disturb their masters and mistresses, and so that they may go to bed at any time they like.

7285. Is not the real reason because they like to ramble about in the country lanes?—I do not deny that.

7286. Do you consider that men on a farm work as hard as men on a railway?—Yes.

7287. Are they paid as well?—I cannot say.

7288. What age men are generally employed on farms?—From 12 to 60 years of age.

7289 Are there many middle-aged men?—Yes, in some parts.

Mr. J. M. Griffiths—continued.

7290. Do labourers raise sufficient potatoes on the farm lands for the use of their families?—I do not know how that is because they do not live on their master's land now, so I cannot say how far that is so now, but it used to be.

7291. Are they allowed to plant sufficient?—I know that they are allowed to plant potatoes, but whether they are allowed to plant sufficient potatoes I cannot say.

7292. The reason I ask is that we have been told that no further land was required; that they had already quite sufficient?—There are no gardens to raise potatoes here to be compared in Shropshire.

7293. When you were a boy what wages did the labourers receive?—Waggoners' wages were 10*l.* a year, and the wages of the servants, the married labourers, 5*s.* a week and their food.

Mr. Richard Jones.

7294. Is there any demand for small farms; farms that are just large enough to keep a cow?—Yes, I believe you could readily let a thousand of them in this country before Saturday.

7295. Which do labourers prefer, a place to keep a cow, or a cottage with about a quarter of an acre attached to it?—A place where to keep a cow would be much better for them than a quarter of an acre of land.

7296. Could men in small farms of that acreage find employment in the immediate neighbourhood of the different farms?—Yes, they could, and they could work along the railways and on the high road as well. I know of some working on the railway now and keeping a cow.

7297. Is there any demand for skilled labours in your neighbourhood; for men who are able to thatch or shear or drain?—There is some demand at shearing time, but that is only for a few days or a week in the whole year.

7298. Is there much drainage done?—There is not much drainage done.

7299. Is there any migration of farm labourers from this neighbourhood to adjoining counties during harvest time?—They come here from the mines, and so on, at the hay harvest times, and then, again, when the corn harvest is on, going to Cheshire and Shropshire and Denbighshire.

7300. Is there as much labour employed on the farms now as there used to be?—No.

7301. What is the consequence to the farm?—It is not necessary that they should keep as many men owing to there being so many machines, and farmers cannot afford to keep so many servants.

7302. And the consequence is that the farms are not so neatly kept as they used to be?—No, they are not.

7303. Are the ditches and the watercourses kept open?—Very few keep their ditches open.

7304. You have not told us what you get to drink during harvest?—I can speak for myself, if that will do.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

7305. Yes?—Water and oatmeal.

7306. Is it that which is used generally at the farms?—Yes, it is pretty general now.

7307. And the men are perfectly satisfied with it?—They prefer it to anything.

Mr. Seebohm.

7308. When Mr. Brynmor Jones asked you about your wages you stated that during harvest they were 1*l.* a week, and at other times of the year 8*s.* a week. You meant, did you not, with food and lodging in addition?—The average wage for the harvest is 18*s.* a week, not 1*l.*

7309. I only want to be quite clear that you understood what you said. You said you were getting 1*l.* a week during six weeks of the year, and at other times 8*s.* a week. I want to know whether that was with the labourer finding his own food, or while he was getting his own food at the farm house?—Yes, I got 1*l.* a week during the harvest and my food as well. It is the bargain that I made with them. That was last May.

Professor Rhŷs.

7310. In speaking about cottages, I want to know whether you think that if there were better cottages the labourers would remain in the country more than they do now?—Certainly, if they had a good cottage and some land with it, it would be very easy to let it.

7311. That is not exactly what I was driving at. Do you think that the poor nature of the cottages, or the lack of them, is one of the principal causes driving the labourers from the country to the town?—That is the reason—that the houses fall into ruin and the landlords will not repair them and so the labourers leave.

Chairman.

7312. There is a question by Mr. Vincent: "Do you know that the county council has "appointed a committee to administer the "Allotments Act, and that no application has "been made to that Committee?"—I do not know.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

7313. One question on that. You have not read the Allotments Act, I presume?—No, I have not.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

Mr. Vincent: I am instructed that the county council have appointed a committee to deal with it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

But the witness does not understand the question at all.

Mr. Richard Jones.

May I ask if the county council have done anything more than appoint a committee. Have they issued any notices?

Mr. Vincent: That I do not know.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

It is under the Small Holdings Act, I think, that the Committee has been appointed—that is a totally different thing from a committee under the Allotment Act.

Chairman.

7314. There is another question handed up by Mr. Vincent: "If landlords were prepared "to build new cottages do you think the "labourers would pay them rent equivalent to "6 per cent. on their expenditure, if not, is it "reasonable to complain of the absence of "cottages?"—Yes, if they were built, and a place provided for keeping a cow, the labourers would be content to pay for them.

7315. This is a question suggested by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: Do you wish to make any remark about the state of the mountains with regard to the heather not being burnt?—Yes, I say that the farmers suffer great wrong in consequence because they are not allowed to burn the heather.

7316. Where are you speaking of?—I speak of this neighbourhood here—of this district.

7317. You have heard of the Agricultural Holdings Act and the Allotments Act. Have you ever seen any of them?—No; I could read them if they were in Welsh.

7318. Would any of the labourers or people of that class read them if they had them in Welsh?—Yes, they would.

7319. Are they not printed in the newspapers sometimes?—Perhaps they are, but I have not read them in the papers.

Re-examined, 16,678.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

With reference to the question of allotments it may be expedient to mention that the notion which is suggested by the question that the county council have the initiative about allotments is a mistaken notion. It is, "Any six "registered parliamentary electors or ratepayers "resident, in the case of an urban district in

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

"that district, in the case of a rural district in "some parish in that district" are to have the initiative; and the six persons may make a representation to the sanitary authority of the district, then it ultimately may come before the county council for them to make a provisional order.

Mr. Owen Slaney Wynne called and examined.

Chairman.

See 6815, 7677.

7320. I believe you wish to make a statement with respect to the evidence that we heard this morning of Mr. Ivan Davies with regard to commons?—I do.

7321. Will you tell us what you wish to say on that head?—What I wanted to state was as to the enclosure which Mr. Davies referred to on the Garneddwen. I may have misunderstood Mr. Davies as to the enclosure, and as to the time he suggests it was made. I think that the enclosure he refers to was made when I was agent for the late Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, and that would be something like 16 or 17 years ago. I do not consider that the Garneddwen ever was a common — quâ common — as we generally understand a common. The several farmers and occupiers of land in the vicinity of the Garneddwen had a right of turning out so many animals upon it, what we generally call in Wales a joint common; but that it was a common as we ordinarily understand a village common I entirely deny. Sixteen or 17 years ago the Garneddwen was open to the high road leading from here to Dolgelly, and all the tenants' animals could stray along the road as far as ever they liked. I suggested, I think, or rather Mr. John Williams, Sir Watkin's local agent at that time, suggested to me that it would be a good thing, not only for the estate, but for the tenants occupying land adjoining this common, if the road was fenced out and the common was allotted to the several occupiers having animals upon it. I called a meeting of these occupiers together. We all met upon the road in question. I remember it very well, and I told them that I would undertake to fence the road at Sir Watkin's expense, and, so far as I remember, that they should have the land which was to be allotted to them without paying any rent for it till three years afterwards, and that then we would consider the question of rent, and to each of these small occupiers adjoining this common we allotted certain portions of the common, and thereby added to their holdings. That is the statement I have to make. In those days, as everybody knows, the small occupiers had to pay the poor rate, which the landlord has to pay now. That is one reason why a small addition was made to their rents, and in addition to that they had a little more land than they had before, and the rents were readjusted, and I believe they hold still at those rents, which were extremely moderate. Again, as to the buildings on Garneddwen, most of the buildings in those days were very poor. In these days there are exceedingly good labourers' cottages at Garneddwen. They were all rebuilt by Sir Watkin, and there is one house mentioned, that of William Edwards, which Sir Watkin rebuilt, I think. I believe, all those small cottages on the Garneddwen estate were rebuilt at the expense of the landlord. I do not think myself that it was any part of a manor. There is the manor of Penllyn, which is a Crown Manor, and there is another manor of Sir Watkin's own, called Fridd Helig y Moch. It is not part of the manor of Fridd Helig y Moch, for 60 years ago this land did not belong to Sir Watkin at all. Therefore, I do not see why the late Sir Watkin should be in any way blamed for having so treated the occupiers of it at that time. I think Mr. Davies referred to the enclosures as having been made about 60 years ago, and I should like to say that the late Sir Watkin Williams Wynn was not the owner of the estate 60 years ago, because he was only born in 1820, and only came into possession in 1841, and if we go back to 60 years from the present time it brings us to 1833. I do not think Mr. John Williams' father was agent at that time. I think he became agent a short time afterwards. So far as I remember, Mr. Davies said this morning that Mr. John Williams' father told one of the cottagers, John Davies, that he could not live in future rent free, and that he would have to pay 1*s.*, or something of that sort. If they were living rent free, I have no doubt they are what somebody referred to as squatters—and the cottage a caban un nos—and that they legally had no right there at all. It might have been part of the Crown manor of Penllyn. That I do not know, but I can say this, that it was not Sir Watkin's property a great many years ago. I cannot say now when it was bought, but I believe that it was bought by the late Sir Watkin's father from Lord Vivian's trustees. Therefore, until about that time, it was not Sir Watkin's property at all.

Chairman—continued.

7322. I think this is what you refer to, "About 1838, John Davies, now living at Bryn "Glas, built a house and cow shed, and enclosed "an acre or so surrounding it. For many years "he paid no rent; subsequently John Williams, "the then agent of Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, "ordered him to pay 2*s.* 6*d.* a year." I think that is the point?—Yes. I do not think, my Lord, that Mr. John Williams' father was agent at that time. Certainly the late Sir Watkin was not in possession.

7323. He does not say that. He says, "For "many years he paid no rent; subsequently "Mr. John Williams, the then agent of Sir "Watkin Williams Wynn, ordered him to pay "2*s.* 6*d.* a year." I think that quite corroborates what you have said. He lived there for many years without paying rent, and then was ordered to pay it?—What I wished to point out was that I cannot see there was any harm done, but rather the contrary, by enclosing this land which Mr. Davies refers to. I can remember the time very well, and I can remember calling the tenants together, and they seemed not only satisfied but pleased. Then there is one other case which I should like just to refer to, which was the case of Thomas Rowlands, who lived at Hafodyrhaidd. Thomas Rowlands, so far as I can remember now — but I cannot pretend to remember all the things connected with so large an estate, particularly as it is several years now since I had anything to do with the management of it — was living at Hafodyrhaidd when I was there in 1872. I know Hafodyrhaidd was a very wretched house, and I remember going to see it, and I asked for an explanation on the subject. The explanation I received was that old Rowlands had elected to live in this house after he had been offered another house, and that he would not go. The estate decided that as there were several other small holdings close to Hafodyrhaidd, it should not be rebuilt, and I can say to my own knowledge that Rowlands was offered another little farm, which would be rebuilt and repaired, and which probably has been rebuilt since. But he would not go out of Hafodyrhaidd, and he consequently made a grievance of living there. It was in a very bad state of repair, and to rebuild the house and buildings, I should say for that small occupation, would cost a sum of 450*l.* or 500*l.* We offered him another farm, but he would not go, and he elected to live for the rest of his days at Hafodyrhaidd, which I may say myself was a very poor place. But he made a grievance of it, and he would not go out and we did not like to turn him out. I would just add that there were some tenants on the estate, and I daresay are still on that and different estates, whom it is very difficult indeed to convince that the places are bad, and that they are going to have a new house built for them. I remember one instance very well, a little distance from Hafodyrhaidd, of one particular tenant, and the place was not fit for occupation, and we said that we were going to rebuild it, and that he must manage as best he could meanwhile, and he really almost prayed me not to do so. I can name the man and the place also. I remember also, a mile and a half off, building a small house for a tenant, and for ever so long afterwards we could not get him to go out of the old house into the new one. I remember a particular instance of building a new house in the parish of Trawsfynydd which is the adjoining parish again, and the man did not go into the new house, but died in the old one I am merely quoting these cases to show how hard it is at times to get a tenant to go out of a house in which he has lived for a number of years, although it is in a very bad state of repair. I do not know that I have anything much to add, I am quite ready to answer any questions that may be asked me. There was something said about Sir Watkin having bought up all the proprietor farmers in the parish of Llanwchllyn. I can go back a good many years now, but I cannot remember a single instance of a proprietor farmer having sold his farm to Sir Watkin. It is said that there are absentee landlords, but Sir Watkin always has resided there a good deal, and resides there I think now six weeks in every year, and he is continually running up and down. Mr. Price, of Rhiwlas, lives in the adjoining parish, and I do not think any landlord can be expected to live in every parish in which he has property. Sir Watkin has property in something like 60 parishes, and if he had a house in every parish it would be expensive. As regards clearing out hedges and ditches, it was suggested by one gentleman just now that the absence of labourers was a reason why the hedges and ditches were not cleared out. I do not agree to that. Very few farmers in the country properly attend to their hedges and ditches. Now and again you come across a man who is tidy and clean, and cleans his hedges and ditches very well, but as a rule, I must say, although the agreement provides for a tenant attending to his hedges and ditches, they attend to them very badly. Again, as to labourers keeping cows, reverting to the Garneddwen case, almost all these small holdings in the Garneddwen are essentially labourers' holdings. They are little holdings of 2*l.*, 3*l.*, 5*l.*, and 6*l.* or 7*l.* a year, and they are occupied by labourers who work either on the farms or elsewhere, and from my knowledge of Wales, and of the parish of Llanuwchllyn, I may say there are a large number of these small holdings, and it is a great mistake to say that there are not cottages, and good cottages too, to be got, and more than enough land to keep a cow. I can quote many instances of them in the parish of Llanuwchllyn, and in many more parishes. It was suggested by Mr. Davies and Mr. Jones that the late Sir Watkin was very unapproachable. If there was ever anybody who was approachable by his tenants and all those who had charge of his estates, it was the late Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, because he always paid great attention to what was going on on his estate, and knew everything that was going on, and if anyone had a grievance, they used to come to see him and explain their story. So that it is quite a mistake to suppose that he was unapproachable. Somebody suggested just now that he had refused a site for a chapel in Llanuwchllyn. I do not quite remember the reasons for it. It was in 1871, I think, before I was agent, but I can say this, and I am quite sure I can be borne out by the Calvinistic Methodist body in Wales, that the late Sir Watkin sold, or agreed to sell, and there were actually sold by Sir Watkin to the Calvinistic Methodist body, the sites of the whole of their chapels and the houses adjoining, and the gardens with them on the Wynnstay estates, for a mere trifling consideration. I made out the sum that was to be paid, and after I found there was one chapel which I had left out, Sir Watkin said, "You "need not charge anything for that," and the whole property was sold to them for a very small sum. I have in my possession at the present moment, or it is at Wynnstay, a letter from Mr. Edward Davies, of Llandinam, who came to see me on the subject, thanking Sir Watkin for the very liberal and courteous way in which they had been dealt with. I do not know that I have anything more to say at present. I shall, I hope, give evidence in chief at Dolgelly the day after to-morrow, but I wished just to say these few words to explain what was said this morning, and out of respect to the memory of Sir Watkin, who was always the best friend to his tenants, and one of the kindest possible friends to me.

7324. There is a question put by Mr. Llewellyn Jones. "Was not the farm which "was offered to Rowlands the same farm as "that on which a young man and his sister "became insolvent, and where the rent was this "year reduced from 28*l.* to 18*l.* 10*s.*" ?—I cannot say. The farm that was offered to Rowlands was a farm called Llety Crippil. It was a very nice little farm; whether the rent has been reduced since I cannot say. At the time it was offered to Rowlands I am sure it was worth the money; whether it is worth it now or not, I cannot say; but at the time it was offered to him, which is something like 10 or 12 years ago, I am sure it was quite worth that rent.

7325. There is another question. Did you, yourself, see Thomas Rowlands, or is your knowledge of the matter derived from other persons ?—I have seen Thomas Rowlands several times.

7326. Do you know anything as to the circumstances under which these houses were originally built on the common ?—No, I cannot say that.

7327. You have no knowledge of the instances given ?—I have none at all. I remember them 40 years ago. In those days they were very poor little houses; I can say that. I cannot say how they were built.

7328. Your memory does not go back ?—No.

Mr. Seebohm.

7329. May I ask you one or two questions upon this point, of the common land. Is it a question which is likely to come up in the future ? Is there a large amount of common land, or mountain land, on which these squatters are gradually encroaching, or is it a thing that is dead and gone in the past ?—Oh, it is dead and gone, quite.

7330. With regard to what you said that you thought probably it was a Crown manor ?—I say it might have belonged to a Crown manor.

7331. And if it did not belong to the manor of Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, it probably did belong to the Manor of Penllyn ?—Possibly.

7332. I do not quite see in that case, how the rents upon that land, which is practically Crown land, came into the rent-roll of the estate ?—Well Sir Watkin, as I said before, bought all that property from Lord Vivian. It might have been sold to Lord Vivian previously by the Crown, that I cannot say; but Sir Watkin bought from Lord Vivian.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

7333. Was it not land on which there were rights of pasture ?—Oh yes. I cannot say what it was when Sir Watkin bought it. Sir Watkin bought it, I believe, many years ago from Lord Vivian.

7334. But up to even your own time it was remembered as common land in the sense that there were rights of pasture over it ?—No; I never heard it called "common land."

7335. But it would be common land, would it not, if several people had rights of pasturage over it ?—There were small farms with rights of pasturage over it.

7336. Those small farmers generally have rights of pasture over the mountain ?—They have what we call here a joint right—a right to turn so many sheep or so many cattle on this common, if you like to call it "common."

7337. I do not quite see how, if it belonged to the Crown manor, the freehold of that did not belong to the Crown ?—I do not know that it did belong to the Crown manor. That is only what I am trying to explain, because I do not know it ever did. All I can say for certain is that Sir Watkin bought it; he bought it from Lord Vivian or Lord Vivian's trustees.

7338. Do you know whether there has been a considerable number on the Crown estates of the same kind of encroachments ?—There have been on all the manors in the country in the old days; there always has been a great tendency to encroach.

7339. How have the Crown dealt with that class of squatter ?—They generally exact some little rent from them in some way or another, either 6*d.* or 1*s.*, or something of the sort.

7340. Therefore, what has gone on in your estate is not very different from what has gone on on the Crown estate ?—Very probably that may be so.

7341. But you have no knowledge of it ?—I have no knowledge of it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

7342. With respect to the case of Thomas Rowlands, you say he was unwilling for you to erect a new house ?—No, I did not say that. I said we were unwilling to erect a new house—the estate was—whilst there were three or four other small places close to it, and it was not worth the expense of re-building. The cost of re-building, I think I said before, would be something between 300*l.* or 400*l.* We said to him "We cannot go to the expense of re-building at Hafodyrhaidd, but if you like there is another farm you can have."

7343. We may take it as a case of consolidation ?—Well, you may.

7344. Were there many instances of that kind occurring on Sir Watkin's estate during your agency ?—No, very few. I daresay there might be, perhaps, I cannot recall them now, but there might have been half-a-dozen. I do not think more, certainly.

7345. You say that the late Sir Watkin was approachable, and that he took great interest in his estates. Do you think that he knew of these evictions that you have referred to, which took place in the year 1859?—I cannot say. I cannot say anything about those evictions, or reputed evictions, because I cannot remember them at all.

7346. When did you become agent of the estate?—In 1872.

7347. Mr. Davies referred to a case of Dorothy Jones, who was evicted from a farm, and a churchman installed in her place. Do you know anything of that case?—In 1859?

7348. No, this was in 1874?—No, I do not know anything of it. I am quite sure there was never such a thing occurred, because there was no eviction on Sir Watkin's property. I never had an eviction on Sir Watkin's property in my time. Such a thing was never known.

7349. I suppose Dorothy Jones left the farm in 1874?—I do not know what farm it was. I think he meant 1859.

Chairman.

I think this is David Jones, 1879.

Mr. Richard Jones.

7350. He came in as the new tenant. Dorothy Jones left the farm, Wern Ddu. Do you know the farm?—Yes, I know the farm.

3307. 7351. Did the tenant Dorothy Jones leave in the year 1874?—I cannot remember.

7352. It was during your agency?—Yes, it was. It must have been, if it was 1874.

7353. You have no recollection of anything?—Not the slightest. It would be very hard for me to remember all the tenants who have left on such a large estate. There are something like 1,400 to 1,500 tenants on the estate. It would be impossible for me even then to remember them all, particularly after the lapse of time; 1874 is 19 years ago.

7354. Will you refer to your documents and make a statement at Dolgelly with reference to this case?—I will try if I can find out about it. I do not know whether Mr. John Williams, the local agent, who was here to-day may remember about it better than I should, but I will endeavour to find out about it and let you know t Dolgelly.

Mr. Griffiths.

7355. Were you agent when the rents of these small places were advanced so many times?—The places at Garneddwen?

7356. Yes?—Yes, I think so.

7357. On what ground was that?—As I said before, first of all that we had to put the Poor Rate on the rent, and, secondly, that they were allotted a good deal more land. They were very small amounts. I think many of these, even now, are only 2*l.* or 3*l* a year, including the cow holding too.

7358. But they were advanced repeatedly, so often?—It was never advanced in my time after that one advance that I remember.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

7359. Do I understand that during the whole time that you were chief agent on this estate no notice to quit was ever given to a tenant?—Oh dear me, no; I said no eviction.

7360. What do you call an eviction?—That is a very different thing.

7361. What do you call an eviction?—I call an eviction turning a man out of his holding neck and crop.

7362. That is to say, you only apply the term "eviction" where a man resists the execution of the law?—Yes, resists the execution of the law.

7363. Then you are not in a position to contradict the evidence Mr. Davies gave as to the actual facts, never mind his inferences?—The actual facts of what?

7364 As to the number of persons who, in 1874, I think it was, had left this estate under notice to quit?—I do not think he mentioned anything about notices to quit in 1874.

7365. The whole evidence was on that basis. Lord Kenyon says there are eight of them?—In 1874?

Lord Kenyon.

No, between 1874 and 1882.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

7366. Those are the ones that Mr. Davies picks out?—Very likely that would be notices to quit; I have no doubt that would be so.

7367. You do not call those evictions, simply because those people were law-abiding people, and went in accordance with the notice to quit of their landlord?—I do. I say they had notice to quit for some reason or other.

7368. Quite so, but that does not meet the point Mr. Davies made against you when he used the term "eviction," if he did use it. He meant tenants being sent away by the landlords determining the tenancy?—I did not know he meant that. If he had said "notices to quit" I might have understood him.

7369. Quite so. Now I do not understand this operation of 16 or 17 years ago, about these waste lands. What was the extent of Rhosucha and the other waste bit, Garneddwen? Would you tell me roughly the acreage?—I could not tell you really. It would be a considerable amount, I daresay.

7370. A thousand acres?—Oh dear no.

7371. Five hundred?—I should not think 500 acres, I should think a couple of hundred acres, if it was as much as that.

7372. Whatever it was, this was waste land in the sense that it had not been enclosed, and let to any individual, so far as you know?—Yes, it had been let to individuals but had not been enclosed. It was open to these little farms; they used to turn out sheep, or a pony or cow upon it. The whole thing was open to the high road, and these animals used to get on the high road.

7373. But the persons who so turned out the horses and cattle, and so forth on to this piece were tenants of the estate, were they not?—Yes.

7374. And the farms of which they were tenants were all round about this waste bit?—Yes.

7375. That must have been in some manor, must it not. Do you contest that proposition?—Yes, I do. I do not know that it was in any manor, it was merely open to the road; there are a great many other sheep walks and places that are not enclosed.

7376 Do you mean that you had no document of title which would determine whether this was in one manor or the other of which Sir Watkin was lord?—Not that I know of, because this was a good many years before my time.

7377. Then the only thing upon which you acted, in regard to this common, was the fact that the land round about happened to be Sir Watkin's, and these people were depasturing their cattle there, and you assumed you had a right to enclose it?—Yes, I went to all the tenants in Garneddwen, and asked them if they would be willing that it should be enclosed.

7378. But do you not know as a matter of fact that enclosures can only be affected with regard to the waste of the manor, either by what is called approvement, leaving sufficient pasturage, or else by agreement under seal, or else by Act of Parliament?—Yes I know that, but I did not know it was waste of the manor, I thought it was the tenant's.

7379. Did you take the trouble to ask if it was?—I took the trouble to ask the tenants if they were agreeable to have this fenced in, and they were all most agreeable. That is all I can say. It was theirs before, but instead of the tenants turning on two or three cattle and having squabbles as to whose bit of land the cattle were on I asked them to divide it.

7380. I am not saying you were acting in defiance of the tenants. It is a question of legal efficiency, and I want to understand what steps you took to make this a valid proceeding?—Well, it belonged to the tenants before, only they could not agree which bit of land belonged to each person.

7381. Do you agree that they had any freehold interest in it?—No, it belonged, of course, to Sir Watkin, but the tenants held it in this way.

7382 But you did it knowing it belonged to Sir Watkin, that is what I want to know?—He bought it with the estate.

7383. But the estate must have belonged to some manor?—That I do not know. I suppose it belonged to some manor; it might have been in the manor of Penllyn; perhaps it was.

7384. If that is so, if this was part of the waste of a Crown manor, why should Sir Watkin enclose it?—Because he bought it.

7385. If I buy an estate that does not give me a right to enclose except by agreement or act?—Unless you can do it by approvement.

7386. That is what I pointed out before. It can only be done by approvement by the Statute of Merton, or else by agreement under seal, or else by Act of Parliament. I suggest those points, perhaps you will clear it up after thinking it over a little more?—Not at all. I only say it might have belonged to a manor. I do not know anything of that. When I found it out—and I have known it for a good many years now—I found all these people turned out on this land, and they had a right to turn out on it, they each had a little field and then we fenced off the fields.

7387. When you found these encroachers on this land, did you know that they had built these houses at their own expense?—No, I did not. I know that they paid rent.

7388. Not that generation?—No, and I do not know that their forefathers did. I found they were using it with farms paying an agricultural rent. I cannot see the difference of holding a several sheep walk and a joint sheep walk. You may take a joint sheep walk in which perhaps five or six tenants may have the right of turning out five or six sheep each and I might go to the tenants and say "Look here, "you are all squabbling about these sheep, let us "divide this; you each take a part."

7389. Then the principle on which I understand you were administering this estate was that where there was a waste piece of farm of which the tenants might each have a share—a waste piece of property——?—I do not call it "waste." I call it a joint pasture. There are lots of joint sheep walks in this country, where several tenants have a right to turn out their sheep; so many tenants have a right to turn out so many sheep, and it leads to all sorts of squabbles. I think it would be a very good thing to do away with it. I said to each of these tenants "Let us divide it," and it was done; and I know heaps of these joint sheep-walks in the mountains where, if I were to go to those tenants and ask them to divide those joint sheep walks, I know they would consent to it.

7390. Again I suggest that the principle on which you administered the estate was this, that where you found a bit of waste land which the tenants were in the habit of using for pasturage purposes, you always treated it, or thought you had a right to treat it, as purely private?—No, I do not say so at all. I only say that I considered it was joint pasturage, just as I consider any joint sheep walk, and we fenced it for the tenants.

7391. Take it in that way; in the parcels in the agreement do you mean to say that you put a bit of this common or waste land or pasturage?—It was in before. So much was in before in the parcels. Then, if I remember right, it was measured up and so much given to each before they were given the pasturage on each of these bits.

7392. After your operation they got a definite portion?—A definite portion.

7393. But before that was the right of pasturage stinted so that each particular farmer was only permitted to send a certain number of cattle, or was he allowed to send as many as he pleased?—No, they turned them all out anyhow.

7394. You think so?—I think so.

7395. It looks to me very much like waste of the manor?—It was not waste of the manor.

7396. It looks so to me. I should like to see a document which shows it?—I cannot see any difference between that and a joint sheep walk on which the tenants turn out altogether.

7397. But it may be that the sheep walk is waste of the manor; that is what Mr. Seebohm was putting to you, and that is what I was putting to you. I want you to show me some document or some fact which shows that your view on the matter is right. Can you do that?—No I cannot; as I say, I do not see that this sheep walk is different from any other sheep walk.

Lord Kenyon.

7398. Mr. Davies rather inferred in his notice to quit which I handed down just now, that it was on account of the religious principles which they held?—I cannot remember.

7399. Can you remember any case in which a tenant was turned out on account of his political principles?—No.

7400. Or his religious principles?—No. In the cases I have had to do with I know it was by reason of death or some such cause as that, and I am quite certain it was for no other purpose.

7401. It would not be for religious principles?—No. I know I signed the notice, and I am quite sure I should not sign the notice unless it had been some change by reason of death or something of that sort.

Chairman.

7402. Is not your answer to Mr. Brynmor Jones just now based on the assumption that you acted on the belief that this joint common passed in the conveyance to Lord Vivian's Trustees?—Certainly.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

7403. There, again, if I may venture to say so, that is founded on an erroneous suggestion of law. Supposing that this was part of the manor of Penllyn, the Crown assigns part of it in fee, that does not get rid of the character of the different lands in the parcels so granted?—Well, I answer to the best of my ability, I always considered it, and it has always been considered, as part of Sir Watkin Wynn's property.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

I am quite aware of that. I only asked you if you could find some authority for it.

Chairman.

7404. Mr. Frederick Llewellyn Jones wishes me to ask you when you spoke of "annexing" the common, from whom was it annexed, and by what right?—I do not know that I used the expression.

7405. Was that word used?—"Apportioned."

7406. Then I withdraw that. Then there is another question from the same source. When you say "tenants'" do you mean occupiers of the squatters' cottages or the tenants around the common. I think he means did you look upon the occupiers of the squatters' cottages as tenants?—Certainly they were all tenants, holding as agricultural tenants, although they were small.

7407. Then he asks another question: Did you hear the report read of the unsanitary condition of other houses near Hafod yr Haidd; did you know of their condition and did you take any step to have it remedied?—There were two or three other houses not very far from Hafod yr Haidd which were in a very bad state. I can only say this: for years now Sir Watkin's property has been very much improved, and they are in very fair order; a large amount of money has been spent on them for years. The whole of the property has been improved and a great number of the farm buildings in the parish have been rebuilt or remodelled. There may be, and I dare say there are some few still, which are not in good condition.

7408. Can you mention any cases where notice to quit was given after the death of the old tenant except in the cases mentioned by Mr. Davies?—It was generally given after the death of the tenant. It is necessary.

7409. You gave notice to quit generally?—Yes.

7410. You did give a notice?—Yes, I did give a notice.

7411. Was this the general rule?—Yes.

7412. You invariably gave notice to quit?—Yes, when a death occurred.

7413. If this land was joint pasturage, do you think that the farmers around would have permitted squatters to raise the cottages?—The pasturage?

7414. The pasturage. This is Mr. Jones's question. If this land was "joint pasturage," as it has been said it was, do you think that the farmers around would have permitted the squatters to raise the cottages?—I do not know about the squatters. The squatters were the farmers. Those were the farmers on the land—20 or 30 of them—little small farms.

7415. Who had the right of joint pasturage, the inhabitants or the tenants of the farms?—The tenants of the farms.

7416. The tenants of the farms only?—Yes, the small tenants.

The witness then withdrew.

Re-examined.

Mrs. JANE ROWLANDS called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

See 6832.

7417. Your name is Mrs. Jane Rowlands, and you are the widow of the late Thomas Rowlands. Did you hear the statement of Mr. Davies this morning?—Yes, I told him.

7418. You gave him the particulars?—Yes.

7419. And did he state them correctly?—Yes, and I am prepared to say more, if necessary.

7420 If there is anything more you want to say in supplementing Mr. Davies' statement, we shall be glad to hear you?—He has pretty well stated the facts.

Chairman—continued.

7421. Do you understand English?—No.

7422. Then you would not be able to follow the whole of Mr. Davies' examination, but if you say you supplied him with his facts, we will not trouble you further?—Yes, I supplied him the facts. If anyone says anything to the contrary, I am ready to face them.

Re-examined, 7677.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN WILLIAMS called and examined.

Chairman.

7423. You heard Mr. Ivan Davies' evidence to-day, and we have asked you to come before the Commission to-night at this late hour to enquire from you whether there is anything you would like to say on that evidence, reserving your own evidence, that you have handed in, for to-morrow, when we propose to ask you to come as the first witness. Is there anything on that evidence of Mr. Davies about these squatters' cottages, or about any of the notices to quit, or anything else that you would like to-night to put before the Commission?—I think I could explain the different cases that were mentioned after 1868. Previous to that, I think I can give no evidence, because I was away from home, and I should not be able to give you much information.

7424. You know all about Thomas Rowlands' case if it was after 1868?—That was after 1868.

7425. You remember that?—Yes.

See 6832.

7426. Have you anything to say on that?—I think Mr. Wynne has given the facts of the case in detail pretty well. It appears that Thomas Rowlands came in the first instance, when his house roof fell down soon after the election of 1868; I cannot exactly recollect when. Thomas Rowlands had been previously told that there was no intention of rebuilding at Hafodyrhaidd. The holdings are very small, and the boundaries very irregular and in many cases just in that immediate spot the buildings and the houses are very bad, and it was thought advisable to consolidate the holdings and straighten the boundaries. It was with that intention that part of the land was taken, as stated by Mr. Davies. I am sorry I was not aware that I was to be asked these questions, or I should have been more prepared to give you particulars. I simply speak now from memory.

See also 7466.

7427. Will you think about the matter between this and to-morrow morning, and if there is any further explanation, we can take it before we come to your personal evidence, particulars of which you have laid before us?—With respect to other places where Churchmen were said to have been put in in preference to Noncomformists, the first case mentioned was that at Bryniau. In that case the preceding tenant was a Churchman, and he retired, and the man who is now tenant was accepted as tenant in place of him. In another case, Tynrhos, after the death of the tenant the present tenant's wife happened to be the eldest sister, who for the greater portion of her life, and until within a few years of the mother's death, lived at home; the other sister had been away in service at different places and was away until within a short time of the mother's death; she was a maiden woman, the other was a married woman, already residing on the estate, and she was accepted. Then, in the case at Pursau, David Jones was accepted tenant; David Roberts had left and gone to Trawscoed, a larger farm. There were several applications; David Jones, a man working on the estate, was accepted as tenant for this small farm, and is there still. Then there was a case at Cwmonen: Thomas Thomas, the present tenant, is a son-in-law of the late tenant; he had a large family, and was in a very small farm, with a wretched house and buildings; he was removed from one farm to the other. Then, as to the case of Tymawr, it was Mr. Davies' father who lived there. Edward Morris was one of several applicants. He had a son who had lately come from abroad—I think it was Australia—and the son wished to make the old man comfortable in his old age; he found the necessary money, and the father was accepted as tenant. Then Mr. Davies referred to the case of Weirglodd-ddu. There, the late Thomas Davies died: his widow lived there for a little and then she married again; the man she married had a large farm in fact, a larger farm than the one she left; it was either a case of his coming to her farm, or she going to his. There were several farms on the estate with the houses and buildings in bad repair; among others, this man Rowlands lived at a little out-of-the-way place; he had several children; he was getting on in years; he wanted to get nearer to the village. The house he lived in was condemned by the sanitary authority, and he was accepted as tenant of this farm, Weirglodd-ddu. I do not know that there were any other cases mentioned.

7428. There was the case of Robert Roberts?—Robert Roberts lived in Llanuwchllyn. The late tenant had died, or he was old and failing; this man was a ganger on the railway, a respectable man, and married; he wished to have the land, and he was accepted as being a very suitable tenant, and he has the place still.

7429. Then there was the case of Ellis Thomas, of Llan?—Ellis Thomas was working on the estate, this is a very small place, just large enough to keep a cow. I should add that during that time a great number of farms were given to Nonconformists. Many more were given to Nonconformists than to Churchmen during the time mentioned by Mr. Davies, from 1868 to 1889 or 1890. I have not the particulars here.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

7430. There was one statement that was made by Mr. Jones with respect to 100*l.*?—I am glad to be reminded of that. I have since seen the man, and he is prepared to swear "that in 1886 "he received from me 500*l.* to expend on the "stock of Rhydybod, and that his father owed "me 100*l.* previously; that he gave me notes "of hand for these two amounts of 500*l.* and "100*l.* and nothing further, either then, after-"wards, beyond interest." I will hand that in. You will find there is a mistake in one sentence, as to the first and third person.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

7431. This is a kind of proof that was taken from Mr. Jones?—It was taken not half an hour ago, after the statements made in Court here.

7432. Is he not here now to state that in Court?—He is.

Evan Jones, of Rhydybòd, was called, but did not answer.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned till the following morning at ten o'clock.

NINTH DAY.

The Shire Hall, Bala, Merionethshire, Wednesday, 13th September 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

LORD KENYON.
SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
MR. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
PROFESSOR RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
MR. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
MR. EDWIN GROVE.
MR. RICHARD JONES.
MR. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

MR. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.

Mr. JOHN WILLIAMS recalled and further examined.

See 6 832. 7426.

Chairman.

7433. Have you finished all you wish to say about what we were on last night, or have you anything further to add?—You asked me with respect to Thomas Rowlands, of Hafod-yr-haidd. I find that in 1865 Rowlands was tenant of Hafod-yr-haidd; the acreage was 27a. 2r. 39p., and the rent 18*l.* In 1878, that is some time after the time spoken of by Mr. Ivan Davies, there were 4a. 2r. 20p., called Rhos Llwyncadi, which was put to Llwyncadi, reducing the acreage to 23a. 0r. 19p., and the rent reduced to 16*l.* As previously explained by Mr. Wynne, and by myself, the house and buildings here were very bad. Thomas Rowlands had been told some time previously that there was no intention of building there with the view of straightening boundaries and consolidating some small farms about there, and another farm was offered him called Llettycripil. That farm was then 43a. 2r. 37p., and the rent 28*l.* At the time that farm became vacant there were a great number of applicants, and Thomas Rowlands refusing it, if was given to a man named Evan Evans, who is there now.

7434. Is that all you have to say on that, Mr. Williams?—I am quite willing to answer any question that you may put to me.

See 7163, 7181, 7430–7517, 18,294–18,388.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

7435. I think Mr. Thomas Jones yesterday made a statement to the effect that a man called Evan Jones had become answerable to you for a sum of 100*l.*, or something of that kind?—Yes.

7436. Did I understand you to challenge that statement?—As to having received 100*l.*, I do most distinctly.

7437. Do you challenge the statement made by Mr. Thomas Jones that Evan Jones became answerable for the 100*l.*?—Not at all. He became answerable for the 100*l.*, but it was not money paid to me for his going to the farm.

7438. Was it a debt due from him to you?—It was a debt. He was at home with his father. His father was named David Jones, and lived at Rhyd-y-bod, and had a brother who lived at Dolfawr, David Jones. The father and son were a good deal intermixed in their transactions, and they both owed me money. One owed me 100*l.* and the other 200*l.*, or rather jointly they owed me 300*l.* They both got into difficulties. I should say that one was on Sir Watkin's estate and the other was not; the other was on Mr. Davies' estate. In 1882 they both got into difficulties. I advanced money to Evan Jones and his father-in-law to pay off the creditors at Rhyd-y-bod, 520*l.* Sundry transactions took place during the year. I am sorry to say I have not been able to find the details of them, but by an extract from my cash book I find that on the 24th September 1883, which was 18 months after the time the last 520*l.* was advanced, a settlement was arrived at by which I received a promissory note for 500*l.* from Evan Jones and Hugh Edwards, and from Evan Jones and Hugh Edwards for 100*l.*, and from David Jones the junior and a man named John Jones for 100*l.*, making 700*l.* The old notes were cancelled, and instead of being a gainer by that transaction with the Jones's I was a loser to the extent of over 100*l.*

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

7439. As I understand it then, you did advance 500*l.* to Evan Jones?—I advanced 520*l.*

7440. To Evan Jones?—To Evan Jones and Hugh Edwards.

7441. Was that to pay for the stock?—That was towards paying for the stock.

7442. Then, as I understand your statement, the other promissory note, the 100*l.*, was for the debt of the father?—They were all working the farms together; he was there with his father.

7443. On which estate is Rhyd-y-bod?—On Sir Watkin's.

7444. In 1884 David Jones was tenant of Rhyd-y-bod?—Hugh Edwards was nominally tenant. David Jones was not tenant at that time. David Jones, senior, ceased being tenant in 1882.

7445. He then left the farm?—He did not leave the farm; he stayed on there; he lived in the house with his son.

7446. He lived on with the son, and Evan Jones became tenant?—No, Hugh Edwards,

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

Evan Jones' father-in-law, was the responsible tenant.

7447. In this statement, as put in yesterday, the transaction began as far back as 1876?—I believe that was a mistake on the part of Evan Jones giving the date. I had not the date in my mind at the time.

7448. The only importance of this thing is that you are challenging a statement which Mr. Thos. Jones made, and Mr. Thos. Jones appears to have got it from Mr. Evan Jones, and then Mr. Evan Jones signed a paper which is obviously incorrect?—As to date.

7449. Then he says, "I am prepared to swear that in 1876," and then he goes on?—It was a mistake as to date.

7450. There may be a mistake as to other things as well, because what Mr. Thos. Jones appears to have got from him was that a promissory note for 100*l.* was given in order that he might get the immediate tenancy of Rhyd-y-bod?—I believe Mr. Evan Jones is here. He was sent for. I have not seen him.

7451. Did not you tell Evan Jones he was only to be allowed to be a caretaker for a year unless he gave this promissory note?—The time the promissory note for 100*l.* was given was 18 months after the time that David Jones gave up.

7452. That is not an answer to the question. Did you, first of all, tell Evan Jones that he would only be allowed to stay in the farm as caretaker for a year?—He was unable to get the money at the time, and I told him that I would keep him there; I would do my best to keep him there for a year to see what could be done.

7453. Then I take it the statement made by Thos. Jones is right to this extent, that there was something said about his being allowed to be on the farm as caretaker for a year?—The statement as put in by Mr. Thos. Jones was incorrect, so far as I was concerned, because there was no bargaining about 100*l.* at all at that time.

7454. I have not come to that yet. I ask you was there any conversation about his being caretaker for a year or being allowed to be on the farm, but not as tenant formally, for a year?—There was certainly a conversation as to how it might be arranged for him to keep on the tenancy; he had not the money at the time to carry on the farm.

7455. Well, I cannot put the matter plainer on that point than to say this: you do appear to admit that there was a conversation about his being on the farm as caretaker or in some undefined position of that kind?—Certainly.

7456. Now, having got that much, is it not true to say—I do not say as to the exact words—but is it not substantially true to say that upon his giving this promissory note he became tenant at once?—No, he did not; he did not become tenant for some time. His father-in-law was tenant.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

7457. Did he give you these two notes before he did become tenant?—The notes were given in September 1883.

7458. When did he become tenant?—I cannot tell you without referring. It was some few years afterwards; not for some years afterwards.

7459. Not for some years afterwards do you still say?—He did not become tenant for some years afterwards.

7460. Only about 1889 or 1888?—Well, it may be; I did not look that up as to the exact date.

7461. Do I understand you to suggest that the 100*l.* was due from Evan Jones to you?—It was due from the family to me.

7462. Was it due from Evan Jones to you, was my question?—Evan Jones took some part of his father's debts, and David Jones, junior, took some other parts.

7463. That is not quite an answer to the question. Do you allege that Evan Jones owed you this 100*l.*?—I do.

7464. In the statement which you handed in, and which I think is signed by Evan Jones, and is in your handwriting, these words occur, "That my father owed him 100*l.* previously"?—Yes, but Evan Jones and the father were working the farm together. Evan Jones was at home with his father.

7465. Then it is not accurate in another respect?—It was a date in respect of the time before David Jones, senior, gave up.

Mr. Seebohm.

7466. I wanted to clear up a point at which we left off last night with regard to those cases of Nonconformists leaving farms and Churchmen having been put in. There were five of those cases, I think, which were mentioned by Mr. Davies, and you, I think, told us the particulars of each one of those cases, so far as you could?—I did. See 6839 7426.

7467. You did not tell us whether you denied the fact that there was a change in those five cases from Nonconformist to Churchmen?—Not from Nonconformist to Churchmen; some of them were Churchmen before.

7468. Some of them were Churchmen before?—Yes, and I think I have a list of them.

7469. I do not want to go into each individual case, but I simply wanted to ask you this: How many cases, do you suppose, of changes took place during the period alluded to?—During that time, in addition to the children following parents or relatives following previous tenants, there were changes of tenancies in which Nonconformists were accepted as tenants in the following farms:—

Gelligron	-	Evan Evans.
Bryndu	-	John Evans.
Frondro	-	John Jones.
Alltygwyn	-	Edward Evans.
Coedtalog	-	David Evans.
Graig y tan	-	John Jones.
Deildre	-	Griffith Williams.
Dolfudr	-	Robert Jones.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

Dolbach	-	Owen Rowlands.
Gwernygrng	-	John Jones.
Lôn -	-	William Jones.
Plas Madoc	-	John Thomas.
"	-	Thomas Jones.
Pandy Mawr	-	Margaret Rowlands.
Pant Clyd	-	Evan Edwards.
Trawsgoed	-	David Roberts.
Ty Mawr	-	Thomas Roberts.
Wernddu	-	David Roberts.
Brynhynod	-	Rowland Morris.
Wenallt	-	David Edwards.
Tyntwll	-	Hugh Roberts.
Bryncocyn	-	Evan Evans.
Gilrhos	-	Robert Edwards.

7470. Give us the number of them?—Twenty-two.

7471. Twenty-two changes during what period?—From about 1869 to 1890.

7472. In these cases all the new tenants were Nonconformists?—These were Nonconformists. I am not taking cottages; these are farms.

7473. And they are in addition to those where there was a natural succession from father to son?—Yes, from father to son, or to daughter, and so on.

7474. Amongst those 22 changes would there be any in which Nonconformists followed Churchmen?—I cannot say that there were, unless it would be one—there was one, I think. I believe the tenant of Brynhynod was previously a Churchman. I will not be certain, but I believe he was.

7475. The result of the evidence is simply this, that out of 27 cases which occurred during those years there were five in which Nonconformists were followed by Churchmen, or you may say three or four cases?—Yes, there were some. In the five or six which were mentioned, there were some Churchmen before—two at least.

7476. I only wanted that, because, of course, if we looked upon the five cases as the only cases, the inference would be that it was a custom on the estate, whenever a Nonconformist went out to put a Churchman in. I now understand that there were 22 changes in which that was not the case, so that it was only three or four out of the 27 cases?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

7477. One thing further with regard to Evan Jones and David Jones's case. Did the father become insolvent?—Well, he made a composition with his creditors.

7478. Then the farm, as I understand, was leased, or rather was let, to the father-in-law of the younger Jones and the younger Jones together?—The younger Jones did not become tenant for some little time.

7479. He became tenant eventually?—He became tenant eventually.

7480. Whose name was put to the agreement after the elder Jones's insolvency. Did he still continue the tenant?—Hugh Edwards.

7481. Was there only Hugh Edwards?—To the best of my recollection it was Hugh Edwards; I have not the agreement.

7482. Was it a family arrangement, in order to avoid disturbing?—Well, it was.

Professor Rhŷs.

7483. I think you mentioned there was one case of a Nonconformist following a Churchman?—I believe the previous tenant was a Churchman.

7484. Would you have any objection to give the particulars?—None whatever.

7486. He was a Churchman, you say?—He was a Churchman, to the best of my belief. Cadwalader Jones was the name of the man who was followed by Rowland Morris.

Mr. Richard Jones.

7487. How long were you agent on the on the Glanllyn estate?—After the death of my father. I commenced in 1867.

7488. How long did your agency continue?—Up to 1890.

7489. Over what district did your agency cover?—This district of Llanwchllyn, Llangower, and Trawsfynydd.

7490. In the case of a vacancy, was your recommendation uniformly acted upon?—Certainly not. It generally was, because I had better means of information than anyone else as to who the people were.

7491. Whom did you consult?—I consulted, in the first instance, Mr. William Jones, when he was chief agent; afterwards, Mr. Owen Wynne.

7493. That is not a direct answer to the question?—I cannot at the moment recollect so as to say. There might often have been differences of opinion, but, of course, I invariably bow to those who are above me.

7494. Can you supply an instance where you have recommended a tenant, and he has been refused?—I may say I never did directly recommend any tenant. I invariably took the list, and talked them over.

7495. Did you make any inquiries as to the politics or creed of an applicant for the farm?—They were all generally known to me, and I had no necessity for making any inquiry.

Chairman.

7496. There are several questions handed in. Mr. Vincent asks, "You are not, I believe, a "witness put forward either by Mr. George

Chairman—continued.

" Owen, or anybody connected with him. Is " that so " ?—That is so ; I am not.

7497. The second question of Mr. Vincent is: " I understand you to say, that before " admitting Evan Jones to the tenancy, you " allowed Evan Jones to incur a liability of " his father's to you. Did you inform Sir " Watkin of this fact " ?—Not Sir Watkin, but Sir Watkin's agent knew about it.

7498. I do not think it is a correct statement of the fact in that question. The account which he has given before was otherwise, as I understood it. As I understand, you said that the father had incurred liabilities, not the son ?—Well, the father and son together. They were both working the farm together, and the old man had been practically in difficulties for a long while.

7499. But they were not both tenants of the farm ?—No, not both tenants, so far as having signed an agreement, but virtually tenants. Both had worked the farm together. The son was there with him, and many things on the farm belonged to the son.

Chairman.

7500. Then I have a question handed in by Mr. Jenkyn Thomas. " Did you yourself write " out the paper which you handed in yesterday ?" —Yes, I did.

7501. Another question by Mr. Jenkyn Thomas is, " Is it not a fact that Llettycripil " was not offered to Thomas Rowlands, but to " Jane Rowlands, after the death of Thomas " Rowlands, after the then occupier Richard " Roberts became insolvent." I understand that is the farm which you stated you offered to the tenant when you refused to build up his house after it tumbled down. Is that so ? That was the farm, was it not ?—That was the farm of which particulars have been given.

7502. Which was offered to the tenant, when his house tumbled down, instead of his own ?—Yes.

7503. Now, answer the question. " Is it not a " fact that this farm was not offered to Thomas " Rowlands, but to Jane Rowlands, after the " death of Thomas Rowlands, after the then " occupier Richard Roberts had become insol- " vent " ?—Whether it was to Jane Rowlands I cannot say without looking to dates.

Lord Kenyon.

7504. It could not be Thomas Rowlands if he was dead ?—No, it could not be, but when he died I cannot say.

Chairman.

7505. The statement made was, I think, that that farm was offered to Thomas Rowlands when the house fell down, and he lived in the stable ?—Evan Jones became tenant in 1887, so that it must have been to Jane Rowlands that the offer was made. It was to Jane Rowlands.

7506. That was to Jane Rowlands and not to to Thomas Rowlands ?—Yes.

7507. Therefore, you correct that statement ? —I correct that statement.

7508. Then there is a question handed in by Mr. Owen Wynne, " Do you, understanding that " I have no recollection of hearing anything " about this matter of 100*l.*, still adhere to the " statement that you informed me concerning " it ?"—Not of that 100*l.*, but the transaction of the change of tenancy there.

7509. You still say that you informed the agents about this matter of 100*l.* ?—Not of the 100*l.*—no, certainly not.

7510. Then you withdraw that statement ?— I am not aware that I made it, my Lord, I think there is a misunderstanding.

(The shorthand writer read previous answers of the witness.)

7511. Having that statement before you, do you wish to say that is not the fact ?—My recollection of the transaction is this, that the matter was thoroughly talked over and thrashed out, but as to the details of it, I cannot remember.

7512. You have told us first that you told Mr. Owen Wynne, and then you told us you did not. Which do you wish to state ?—I cannot tax my memory as to the exact details of what was told to Mr. Owen Wynne, but the whole question was thrashed out as completely as it could be.

7513. There was no question of thrashing out ?—The whole transaction, the whole particulars.

7514. Which do you wish to state. Did you tell Mr. Owen Wynne, or did you not, about the 100*l.* ?—I cannot say that I did tell him specifically about that 100*l.* more than anything else.

7515. You tell us you told him about it, and you tell us you did not—which do you wish to stick to ?—I wish to say that I told Mr. Owen Wynne the whole particulars of the case as to the man being in difficulties, and as to the son working the farm with him, and making the best arrangements we could to carry the man on.

7516. Yes or no. Did you tell Mr. Owen Wynne about the 100*l.*, or did you not ?—I cannot say.

Lord Kenyon.

7517. Did Mr. Wynne know that you had advanced any money to him at all ?—I cannot say that.

Chairman.

7518. Mr. Jenkyn Thomas is not quite satisfied with the answer handed in about the insolvency of Richard Roberts, and I will just put this question again. " Is it not a fact that " Llettycripil was not offered to Thomas " Rowlands but to Jane Rowlands, after the " death of Thomas Rowlands, after the then " occupier, Richard Roberts, became insolvent." Do you remember the insolvency of Richard Roberts ?—I do.

7519. You do remember that ?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

7520. Do you remember that that farm was offered to Jane Rowlands, and not to Thomas Rowlands as was stated, after Thomas Rowland's death, after the time that Richard Roberts had become insolvent?—It was upon becoming insolvent that Richard Roberts left the farm. He never had money to go on with it. He succeeded his father, and was never in a position to carry it on.

7521. After the insolvency of Richard Roberts, that farm was offered to Jane Rowlands and not to Thomas Rowlands at all, as was previously stated?—That is so.

Mr. Griffiths.

7522. Were there many tenants in a similar way accepted as tenants on the estate who had no capital?—Not many that I am aware of.

7523. Were there any?—That is more than I can say.

7524. Are you able to tell us?—I cannot speak as to the capital of all of them.

Chairman.

7525. Now we will come to your own personal evidence, if you please, Mr. John Williams. You are a justice of the peace, I think?—I am.

7526. And you live where?—I live at Gwernhefin.

7527. Are you on the county council?—No, my Lord.

7528. You are a tenant farmer and estate agent?—Yes, my Lord.

7529. What is the extent of your farm?—The extent of the farm that I hold under Sir Watkin now is about 380 acres exclusive of the sheep-walk.

7530. What do you wish to give evidence upon?—I have been asked to give evidence with respect to the advance in rent upon my farm.

7531. Is there anything else you would like to speak on?—Nothing.

See 7923–7971.

7532. You wish to confine yourself to the statement as to your farm. Will you tell us what you wish to state about the rent on your farm?—When I took it first in 1868, the rent was 392*l.*, which, excluding the rent upon some land that I did not hold previously, was an advance of 73*l.* upon what my father paid.

7533. Was your father tenant of that farm?—My father was tenant previously.

7534. Joint tenant, I think?—No, sole tenant. I was away from home then. The rent of the farm in 1842 was 282*l.*, and there were some improvements effected by the landlord costing 196*l.*, and interest of 10*l.* was charged upon them increasing the rent to 292*l.* My father, held it at that rent until his death. In the year 1876, there was some alteration made. Part of the sheep-walk was taken away, and there were some small bits of land added, and some cottages built, increasing the rent by 8*l.*, bringing it up to 400*l.*, and at that rent I held it until I gave up the agency. But I should state that in 1879, in consequence of damage being done by the rising of the lake level by the Shropshire Union

Canal Company, Sir Watkin received some considerable sum for the damage to the meadows.

7535. What considerable sum?—I am not quite certain, but I think it was about 80*l.*, something under 80*l.*, 76*l.* I think, but I am not certain of that, of which I received 25*l.* 10*s.*, allowance from the 400*l.* That continued until I resigned the agency, when some fields were required for the new agent, and some Sir Watkin wished to take on hand, and the farm was re-valued then, and the valuation had risen to 452*l.*

Mr. Seebohm.

7536. At what date?—That was in 1891.

Mr. Richard Jones.

7537. To what was it advanced?—The valuation was 452*l.*, but then the 29 acres 1 rood 39 perches was taken away, and the farm is now let to me at an advance—at 417*l.*—having lost the 29 acres 1 rood 39 perches.

Chairman.

7538. That brings you to 1891, does it not. Was the farm re-valued at that time?—It was re-valued at that time when the advance was made.

7539. The advance was 52*l.*?—Yes, 52*l.*

7540. Is there anything more that you wish to say?—I wish to state that I had spent a large amount of money in improving the farm during that time; from 1870 to 1890 I had paid for cake and corn and manure, 5,438*l.*, and the whole of that together with all the produce of the farm excepting about 30 quarters of seed oats, that was sold yearly, was expended on the farm, and the manure value remained also. I paid for draining, exclusive of carriage, 105*l.* I paid for reclaiming—that is an estimated value —210*l.*; I paid for fencing and roads also—an estimated value 120*l.*; and I have laid down to permanent pasture about 272*l.* an estimated value. I should say that I have received no compensation whatever, and that the landlord has not expended anything whatever in the improvement beyond some pipes for draining.

Mr. Seebohm.

7541. What is the difference in the acreage between 1868 and 1891?—Not 1868—there was some land added after the new taking in 1868; and 1891 was 29.1.39; that is 29 acres and a half that was taken away.

Chairman.

7542. Is there anything more, Mr. Williams?—Nothing more than the details as to that, my Lord.

7543. You were, I believe, local agent to Sir Watkin Wynn?—I was, my Lord.

7544. When did you begin your agency?—In 1868.

7545. And you continued it till when?—Till 1890.

7546. You were agent from 1868 to 1890. Had you that farm when you were agent?—I had, my Lord.

Chairman—continued.

7547. And you continued in the tenancy after you gave up the agency?—Yes, my Lord.

7548. You are there now?—I am there now.

7549. Your complaint is that the rent has been raised entirely on your own improvements. Is that so?—That is it, my Lord.

7550. I see you have stated a large sum, 5,000*l.* odd in 20 years?—Yes, my Lord.

7551. You know the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act. How much would you be able to claim now, supposing you were to leave your farm?—I should not be able to claim much now. In fact very little.

7552. A good deal of it is exhausted?—But the increased value is found in the increased rent I have to pay. Unimproved farms right and left of me are reduced. I find them reduced to the basis of 40 and 50 years ago. Some have now been reduced lower than what they were 40 years ago.

7553. Do you keep farming accounts?—I do, my Lord.

7554. You could tell us pretty well then what the state of agriculture is now?—It is certainly very much worse than I have ever known it, at the present time; I have never known it so bad.

7555. How would it compare with recent years—the last year or two. Give a percentage?—I should say that we are now at least 30 per cent. below what we were at the best time. Prices of all sorts of stock, sheep and cattle, are 30 per cent. lower than the best times we have had.

7556. Do you think they have been falling steadily?—Oh, there have been ups and downs, certainly, but for the last 10 years they have been lower. There has been depression for fully 10 years.

7557. What remedy would you suggest?—One remedy that I would suggest would be that the landlord should be protected. I speak to a certain extent as a landlord, having a small property, and I say that we should be protected from tenants running the farms, and I think tenants ought to be protected from landlords taking advantage of tenants' improvements. I think too, that we might be protected by preventing traders from selling as home produce any foreign article whatever. I think, too, that the land bears more than its fair share of the taxation of the country.

7558. What is your opinion of a land court?—The only use of a land court that I can see would be to assess a question of compensation to tenants upon leaving their farms, as to what they are actually entitled to.

7559. Would not that be about the same as at present when it is submitted to arbitration?—But it too seldom is. The Agricultural Holdings Act is so wrapped round with technicalities that there is not one tenant farmer in 20 who is able to take advantage of it: and even if he did it works unfairly to an improving tenant.

7560. What is your opinion of the fixity of tenure?—I do not see the force of it, my Lord.

7561. You do not think that it would be an encouragement to a man to lay out more on his holding?—If he had what is put as free sale on improvements, I think that would be all the tenant farmer could reasonably expect, and it would be much fairer to both landlord and tenant.

7562. If there is this demand for fixity of tenure, why do not tenants accept leases?—Leases are very seldom asked for in this district. The reason why I cannot say. I do not see, as I have said before myself, any great force or any great advantage in fixity of tenure.

7563. In your experience landlords are quite ready to grant leases, I suppose?—Well, they have not been asked for. I do not know a case where a lease has been asked for in this district, I may say.

7564. I want to ask you about the condition of the labourer. In your opinion, is the condition of the labourer better or worse than it was, say 20 or 30 years ago?—Very much better than it ever has been.

7565. What are the current wages for a man on his own finding?—On his own finding I should say from 15*s.* to 18*s.* a week.

7566. Do you mean 18*s.* to a harvest hand or 18*s.* to a waggoner?—18*s.* to a waggoner. Harvest wages are very dear here; they run up to 1*l.* a week and their victuals.

7567. And food is cheaper?—Yes. All necessaries of life are cheaper.

7568. What is your opinion of the cottage accommodation?—The cottage accommodation, so far as it goes, is very much better than what it used to be, but I think that more cottages are required in the rural districts. I think that men are rather huddled together in the villages, and have rather too far to walk to their work.

7569. Do you house any labourers yourself on your own farm?—Not in my own house.

7570. They all live on their own finding?—They all live on their own finding.

7571. Then you could not tell me how they live?—Yes, I think I can.

7572. What do you say the diet is?—Do you mean in the farmhouses?

7573. Yes, either in the farmhouses or their own cottages?—I think there are many others who can speak better than I as to how the labourers live in the farmhouses, but they generally live much the same as the farmers themselves do in the farmhouses. There is no difference made between the small farmer himself and his workpeople.

7574. We had a statement made yesterday that it is very seldom they see fresh meat. Do you think that is correct?—Well, hardly; they see fresh meat very much more than they used to do. I should think there is at least 10 times the quantity of fresh meat killed in Bala now than there was 30 years ago. You see the small farmers and the cottagers taking their pieces home from the butchers' nearly every week I know that my own men use fresh meat occasionally. They often buy a sheep and divide it amongst them. Four or five of them will buy a sheep and kill it and each take a piece.

7575. There was a statement made yesterday which seemed to me hardly correct, namely, that most of the landlords in this district were absentees?—I think they are better off in this district than they are in many.

7576. You mean that the landlords do reside here?—Yes, most of them. I should consider Sir Watkin a resident landowner; he has a house in the place. Mr. Price is close by. Mr Jones of Fron has a house at Bala. Sir Henry Robertson has a house on his property at Pale.

7577. They mainly live on their own property?—Here they do.

7578. Do you think in this district religious questions affect the relation of landlord and tenant much?—I do not think so.

7579. What is your opinion upon the question of politics?—I think that politics are very seldom talked between landlord and tenant excepting in a general way.

7580. Do you mean to say that it does not influence the landlord or the agent in taking a tenant?—I do not think it does.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

7581. Then, as I gather from your answers to Lord Kenyon, the farmers are much better off now than they were some years ago?—So far as the way in which they live goes, yes; not in their pecuniary circumstances. They spend very much more money than they formerly did. The style of living generally is more expensive.

7582. Are they able to pay their rent easily in your experience?—There have been great reductions of rent in most instances latterly.

7583. That is not an answer to my question, I think, is it? Are the farmers in this district able to pay their rent easily? Do they have to borrow money, for instance?—There are very few changes in tenements, and we must take it for granted that they are able to meet their payments, but whether it is done easily or not I cannot say.

7584. Well, that was my point. You cannot say?—I cannot say beyond from my own experience. I know that I have been losing money the last two or three years.

7585. Then you find a difficulty in paying your rent, do you?—Certainly I do. I should have found it difficult to have paid my old rent now in the last few years.

See 6329.

7586. There was one bit of evidence given yesterday by Mr. Davies, to which your attention does not appear to have been called. I will call your attention to it so that you may give such explanation as you like, or as you can. It was in reference to the little plot of ground called Gardd Jac Hughes. Do you remember that piece of ground with the cottage on it?—Yes, it is a small piece of garden in Llanuwchllyn, I think.

7587. Now it is stated that up to the year 1875 receipts for rent were worded in a particular way and then they were altered?—Well, about that time the whole estate was gone through and rather more particularised. Gardens were not mentioned to any of the cottages before.

7588. Do answer my question if you please. Is it true to say that the receipts were altered—the form of the receipts?—They were altered in many cases. I cannot speak to that one particularly.

7589. Did you have any interview with John Hughes about it, or the person who was in possession of this cottage?—Certainly I had. We had interviews with them all. I have no recollection of any objection being made to that. I can say that positively.

7590. But then do you recollect any interview with Hughes at all?—Certainly, many interviews.

7591. In 1875 did you give him a receipt for the small rent that he was paying in a new form?—The receipts were given at the rent day.

7592. That is not an answer to my question?—And what the form was I cannot say.

7593. Did you give him a receipt for the rent that he was paying in a new form?—I cannot say.

7594. I have got two receipts here. One is an 1875 receipt and the premises are described as "House in two dwellings." In the receipt of December 1878, it is "Cottage and garden." Can you explain the alteration?—I cannot beyond this, that there was a garden with the cottage; that he held with the cottage and that was put in.

7595. Very well, that is the only explanation you can give?—That was done with him and many others also.

7596. It has occurred to me that you were agent at the time of this Evan Jones transaction. You said that Evan Jones and David Jones' father became as a family indebted to you. Were you having dealings with them quite apart from your relations to them as agent for Sir Watkin?—Yes, large transactions.

7597.—Do you think that it was quite right to do that from a business point of view—from a point of view of fair dealing, you being the agent? Did you not get a certain advantage in the dealings?—No, certainly not, rather otherwise.

7598. How do you mean otherwise, Sir?—Because they were in the habit rather of appealing to one's generosity in the cases of dealing. I can safely say that it has been greatly to my advantage in dealing with my neighbours since I have ceased having anything to do with Sir Watkin's estate.

7599. So that the more powerful a man is the better it is for the people to deal with him according to you?—Well, it often happens so, Sir.

7600. With regard to Hafod yr haidd a statement was made about the intervention in that case of the sanitary authority. Did you communicate with the sanitary authority at all?—I was a member of the sanitary board here and the matter was brought before our notice.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

7601. Was the condition of any other of the farm-houses brought to your notice?—Many of them were and in many cases the requirements of the sanitary authority were attended to.

7602. What was the reason for not building a fresh house at Hafod yr haidd?—As I attempted to explain yesterday, it had been arranged by Mr. William Jones, before Mr. Wynn's time, to consolidate those small farms there so as to rectify the boundaries. They were very irregular and Hafod yr haidd was considered the place that was the most fitted to be cut up so as to get the boundaries something like regular.

That is all I wish to ask.

Mr. Griffiths.

7603. I do not think you told us what the nature of your farm is. Is it arable, or pasture, or what is it?—It is chiefly pasture now. It has been laid down chiefly to pasture.

7604. Do you plough any land?—Yes, I plough some, but I have laid the greater portion of it down.

7605. What quantity do you plough?—I should think I had about 30 acres under plough this year.

7606. Were you in the habit of ploughing more than that when you commenced?—At one time I used to plough a good deal. When we first commenced the farm there was a great portion of it arable. It has been laid down to pasture now.

7607. Have you any dairy on your farm?—I do not dairy much.

7608. Do you say there is any difficulty in getting dairy maids in these days?—Not in this district.

7609. Do you keep an account of your farming?—I do.

7610. Have you ever compared what you produced from your farm in 1868—that was when you commenced, was it not?—Yes, 1868; 1868 was a very bad year.

7611. Have you compared it as to the amount of your produce in that year, and the amount of your produce at present?—The actual value of it or the amount do you mean?

7612. The amount. Have you compared the two amounts—what you make out of your farm in every way?—I can keep very much more stock now than I could then, in consequence of the farm having been improved.

7613. But can you give us an idea of what the difference is?—In the number of cattle I keep?

7614. In your outlay to begin with?—My turnover is greater now in consequence of my keeping more stock, but the profit is less—not less than it was in 1868—1868 was a very bad year. But when we got on to the seventies we began to be better off.

7615. I do not confine you to that year at all—take 10 years?—From 1870 to 1880 times were good and profitable, and up to 1883 perhaps it was pretty good, but it has been gradually getting worse.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

7616. Do you say you corned rather extensively at that time? What is the difference in the price of corn now, to what you had then?—Corn here is a matter of very small importance. We rise so very little. We are dependent here almost entirely upon the value of store stock—sheep and cattle; but corn is very much cheaper.

7617. What did you do with your corn in those days?—Used it all excepting a little seed oats I used to sell.

7618. In which way did you use it? Did you feed your cattle upon it?—I fed my cattle.

7619. Did those cattle amount to as much money then as they do now, or less?—Oh, very much more than what they do now. Beef is not worth within 30 per cent. of what it was in about 1879 and 1880.

7620. Is the reason why tenants do not apply for leases that they consider the farms too dear to take a lease upon them at the present day?—That may be. I am not aware of any application for leases. I have not heard of any.

7621. It is no wonder if the farms are dear and rents are too high. You say that the cottage accommodation is rather deficient?—Up in the rural districts away from the villages.

7622. What sort of cottages are they?—They are stone invariably, and with slated roofs, and they generally have got two or three bedrooms now. Cottage accommodation is very much improved to what it was 50 years ago.

7623. I see in the report of the Assistant Labour Commissioner that some cottages have not even a fire-place. Do you know of any in the neighbourhood in that condition?—I do not.

7624. You say your rent has been advanced greatly of late?—It was advanced in 1890 upon a valuation made in 1868.

7625. Do you consider it was fair to advance your rent?—Well, I did not consider it was.

7626. At the time?—In 1868.

7627. No, when it was advanced lately?—I thought it was not, it being the fact that times were getting worse, and that the improvements had been effected by me.

7628. Did you complain that it was not fair?—I did.

7629. You could get no remedies?—No.

7630. Do you not think some court of appeal would be good in that case?—I think that a court for fixing compensation for tenants, improvements would be a great advantage.

Mr. Grove.

7631. Just two questions. Is there any dairy teaching here by the county council in this county?—Yes, there has been a school in this district last year.

7632. Do you think it will be beneficial?—Oh, certainly.

7633. Do the farmers about this part use the railway much for conveying their goods to and fro and their cattle?—Well, they are bound to.

Mr. Grove—continued.

7634. Do they consider the rates excessive or do they consider them moderate?—For short distances local rates are excessive. They are very heavy, much heavier than they used to be. For long distances rates are rather less now than what they were up to 1892.

7635. Do you suppose the farmers generally are acquainted with the small book, published at the cost of 1*s.*, which gives the actual rates that they can charge on all the railways?—I do not think they are.

Professor Rhŷs.

7636. You spoke of the cottages just now. Is the lack of cottages of a proper description a consideration that drives the labourers away from the land to the towns, do you think?—I cannot help thinking that if there were some very small holdings—kind of cow plots—that it would be a great advantage, and that they would keep the labourers in the district. The accommodation in the villages is very fair so far as the cottages go. It is the rural districts that are wanting.

7637. The lack of proper accommodation in the districts, you think, tends to clear the labourers away to the villages and towns?—I cannot say that we are short of labour in this district. There is plenty of labour, only they have far to walk from the villages up to the farms.

Mr. Seebohm.

7638. You know the interior of a great many farms in this neighbourhood?—I do.

7639. The farmhouses?—I do.

7640. Could you tell me whether they continue to have that old oak furniture—old oak pieces of furniture which have come down from generation to generation?—There is not much of it left in this neighbourhood.

7641. Do you think that a great number of the people have continued in the same farms for many generations?—Oh, they have, undoubtedly, for many generations.

Mr. Richard Jones.

7642. You said that you keep farming accounts?—Yes.

7643. Can you supply the Commission with a financial statement for the year 1892?—I have not got it here with me.

7644. If the Commission asked you, could you furnish them with a copy of your accounts since 1868?—Yes, I think I could.

7645. Will you kindly send it in?—A copy from 1868 until 1892?

7646. Yes?—I will try and look them up.

Mr. Seebohm.

7647. Not for publication?—Do you mean a summary of them? Do you mean the receipts and expenditure?

Mr. Richard Jones.

Yes, for the respective years.

Mr. Seebohm.

You mean in total.

Mr. Grove.

We do not want full details, simply a summary.

Mr. Richard Jones.

7648. A summary for each year, from 1868 up to 1892. You say that you have expended about 5,000*l.* on your farm during those years, and that in case you left you could not claim any compensation?—I could claim no compensation excepting what was due to me under the Agricultural Holdings Act, or rather what is due to me under the schedule that is in Sir Watkin's agreement—not the Agricultural Holdings Act. But for the permanent improvements I have no claim, inasmuch as it was done without any certificate from the landlord, and I have consequently no claim for permanent improvements.

7649. Which do you think would be more advantageous to you, to be under the Agricultural Holdings Act or under the table of the agreement of Sir Watkin?—I do not think there would be very much difference in it. Probably the Agricultural Holdings Act is quite as favourable, but there is very little in it, taking it all through.

7650. It does not go far enough to meet the necessities of the case so far as the tenant is concerned?—Well, it does not go far enough back, because where a tenant consumes all his crop upon the farm, and the manure—by spending money one year you increase your produce and get the manure from that, and the thing goes rolling on from year to year.

7651. Yes, but that is a question to be left to the valuers. The valuers can go back as far as they like?—Not under the Agricultural Holdings Act.

7652. Oh yes?—I misunderstood it then.

7653. There is no time limit under the third schedule of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I was under the impression that you could only go for a certain number of years back.

7654. The reference is subject to agreement to appoint an umpire?—Ah, yes, if they can agree to appoint, but if you take it strictly upon the Act you can only go for what you have expended during the last few years.

7655. As you fail to follow me we will go to another question. You said, I believe, that home producers should not sell any foreign articles. Was that the statement you made?—No. I said that no foreign produce should be sold as home.

7656. That it should be labelled?—That some steps should be taken for having our home produce sold as such, and foreign produce sold as such.

7657. Have the rates increased very much?—Local rates?

7658. Yes?—Not to any very great extent. The school board has been added, but the others, the poor rate and the highway rate, are much the same.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

7659. Have you anything to suggest with regard to the incidence of rates?—I cannot help thinking that all capital should be rated the same as land is. A trader having 2,000*l.* or 3,000*l.* in his business is only rated just upon his house and premises, which may be 40*l.* or 50*l.* a year, whereas if it be a farmer having that amount he is rated on the whole of his land, which may be 400*l.* or 500*l.*

7660. What you suggest is that personal property should be rated?—I do.

7661. I suppose you acknowledge that there has been an increase in the rates?—Yes, there has been, but not to any very great extent.

7662. On whom has the increase fallen?—On the tenant.

7663. Do you think there would be anything unfair if the rates were divided between the landlord and the tenant?—Well, I cannot say that it would make any very great difference, because those sort of things are taken into consideration, or ought to be, in assessing the value of a farm—the amount of rates upon it.

7664. But do you not think that if the landlord were to pay half the rates he would take a greater interest in the expenditure of the rates, and, that he would do his best to keep them down?—Very likely it might have that effect.

Chairman.

7665. I have two or three questions handed in, Mr. Williams, which I will put to you. You have answered some of them before, but it will not take much time, and I will just put them to you seriatim. This is a question put by Mr. W. Jenkyn Thomas: "Can you explain the "reason why, in the receipt to John Hughes, "the words 'house in two dwellings' were "changed into 'cottage and garden" without "his knowledge." That question has been put to you already?—I am not aware that it was without his knowledge. The whole estate was gone over, and the descriptions corrected in many instances.

7666. This is also a question put by Mr. Jenkyn Thomas. "Did you serve a notice to "quit on Ellen Lloyd, Pentrefelin, a widow "with a number of young children, assigning "as a reason that Sir Watkin was not going to "build at Pentre, and after the tenant, Ellen "Lloyd, left, did you not add some of the best "land of that holding to that of your own, and "erect two cottages at Pentre to accommodate "your own waggoner and your own cowman"?—The old mill at Pentre fell into disuse, and the old cottage and buildings were all tumbling down, and the land was straggling, and it was decided to divide it amongst four different farms. I had some of it, some of it was put to Plas Madoc, some was put to Bryniau, and after that there were two cottages built near where the old house was that I now have. Ellen Lloyd removed to another farm.

(Chairman.) Then practically the answer is yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

7667. She removed to another farm on the estate?—She removed to another farm on the estate.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

7668. Did you answer the question which was put, namely, whether you served a notice to quit, or was notice to quit given?—Notice to quit was given, no doubt, from the estate office.

Chairman.

7669. A question by Mr. Jenkyn Thomas. "Did you do all the cartage on the estate when you were agent"?—Certainly not.

7670. "And are you aware that under the "present management the cartage is evenly "distributed amongst the tenants"?—I do not know how it is done now. Sir Watkin keeps a horse there himself now—he keeps a team himself.

7671. This is also Mr. Jenkyn Thomas's question: "Did you state to Mr. F. Llewellyn "Jones that you could mention cases where "tenants have effected permanent improve-"ments, and have been compelled to give them "up without any compensation?" Will you mention these cases?—Well, as I told Mr. Jones, I had not the particulars and figures, and I did not think it was fair to go and bring forward cases that I could not give exact details of.

7672. The question is, did you state to Mr. Llewellyn Jones that you could mention cases where tenants have effected permanent improvements, and have been compelled to give them up without any compensation?—I have no doubt I told him that there were cases.

7673. Could you mention these cases?—I cannot. I am not able to give particulars or details, or I would.

7674. A question from the chair: At what time did these cases come under your knowledge?—Recently.

7675. This question you have answered before, but it may be put again. It is put by Mr. Jenkyn Thomas: "During the time that "you were Sir Watkin's agent, were you, in "the ordinary course of business as cattle "jobber, in the habit of buying cattle from "Sir Watkin's tenants"?—Occasionally from them as from other people.

7676. "And did you consider that the tenants "were placed in a disadvantageous position as "regards bargaining"?—Certainly not.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Owen S. Wynne recalled.

(Witness.) I merely wish to say, my Lord, in reference to what was said yesterday about Garneddwen—it quite escaped me at the time—if the Crown had any rights those rights were purchased by Sir Watkin 30 years ago. That is all I wish to say—that Sir Watkin purchased the Crown rights.

See 6815, 7320.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

7677. I should like to see the deed?—I cannot produce the deeds. The deeds are not in my custody.

7678. I know. "Purchased all the Crown rights" is rather a vague expression. Taking it liberally, that means the right of administering justice as well in Merionethshire?—The usual Crown rights he purchased.

7679. "Purchased." A phrase like that does not convey any clear or definite meaning to my mind. That is what I mean?—I mean the sporting and manorial rights.

7680. I should like to see the exact parcels in the deed, then I should like to consider the effect of the parcels. After all, it is not for us to determine what rights the Crown had as against Sir Watkin, but what rights Sir Watkin has.

Sir John Llewelyn.

7680*a*. It might be for us to discover whether the rights of the original commoners were preserved by Sir Watkin. It might be a very proper question to ask Mr. Wynne if he knows in whose custody that deed is?—The deed is in the custody of the Wynnstay office.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Thomas called and examined.

Interpreter.

The witness says he will give his evidence in English, and if he is unable to go on, he will turn to Welsh.

Chairman (to the Interpreter).

Will you tell him that every facility will be given to him to give his evidence with as great convenience to himself as possible. Will you tell him that in Welsh.

(Witness.) I understand English.

Chairman.

7681. You are Mr. John Thomas?—Yes.

7682. Where do you live?—At Cloddiau, in the parish of Llanycil.

7683. And you are a tenant farmer?—Yes.

7684. Living on the estate of Captain Jones?—John Jones. I do not think he is a captain.

7685. You live on the estate of "Mr." John Jones?—Oh, yes! Of Old Broad Street, London.

7686. For some years previously you were a tenant of Sir Watkin Wynn?—Yes, and my family were tenants of Sir Watkin Wynn before the battle of Waterloo.

7687. And in the year 1859 you left Sir Watkin Wynn's property?—Yes.

7688. Under what circumstances?—I had notice to quit for voting for the Liberal candidate for the county.

7689. Who was he?—David Williams, of Castell Deudraeth.

7690. How long after the election did you receive this notice to quit?—A few months.

7691. What did you do after the time that you received notice to quit?—I went to Mr. Williams, the late Mr. Williams, and asked him for the farm, and afterwards I went to Sir Watkin Wynn at Wynnstay himself, and I was introduced by the head clerk.

Chairman—continued.

7692. And what happened then?—He told me that he did not know what the notice was for, but he would inquire of John Williams.

7693. And what happened then?—Well, we had to make a sale by auction and to leave the farm.

7694. What year was that in?—1859.

7695. Then what did you do after you had left that farm. Where did you go then?—I bought a farm called Bryncocyn, near Llangower.

7696. What did you do with this farm?—I lived on the farm for about 10 years, and within a few years after I had bought it, I sold it to Sir Watkin, and became a tenant of his afterwards.

7697. You sold the farm to Sir Watkin Wynn?—Yes.

7698. And remained with him as his tenant?—Yes; I forgave him, and he forgave me.

7699. Do you remember what happened in the year 1873?—I sold the farm on the condition of the offer of every farm in the neighbourhood that would become to let.

7700. Just tell us that again. I do not quite understand. In 1873 did you remove anywhere; did you leave?—Yes; but previous, when I sold the farm to Sir Watkin, I made an agreement that they were to offer farms that would be to let.

7701. On the Wynnstay at Llanuwchllyn, and they offered Plas Madoc, and so I removed from Bryncocyn to Plas Madoc in 1873.

7702. And what was the rent of the farm?—90*l*. It was advanced 25*l*.

7703. How long did you remain at Plas Madoc?—Ten years.

Chairman—continued.

7704. That brings us up to 1883, does it not?—Yes.

7705. Did you do any work on that farm; did you improve it?—Yes, I did.

7706. What did you do?—Well, I drained most part of it, and made a great deal of new fences and repaired the old ones, and manured it. As Mr. Wynn knows, it was in a wretched condition.

7707. Did you cart any materials for buildings?—Yes, all the materials. We built a new house, and a new shippon, and we had to rebuild all the buildings; a new cart-house too, and pigstyes—new ones.

7708. All this was done at Sir Watkin Wynn's expense?—Yes.

7709. Except the cartage?—Except the cartage.

7710. What did Sir Watkin give you for that cartage?—13*l.*, or something about 13*l.*; I mean, it may be 10*s.* more.

7711. How much do you think the cartage cost you?—Oh, I could not tell. I carried timber to the yard enough to fill the Canada Docks in Liverpool, I think.

7712. You think it cost you considerably more than 13*l.*?—Oh, yes.

7713. Have you ever asked for any reductions?—On that farm?

7714. Yes?—I asked for 10*l.* reduction, and they would not give it; Mr. Williams and Mr. Wynn; and Mr. Wynn had the face to tell me that it was not too dear.

7715. What did you do when the reduction was refused?—Oh, I left it.

7716. You are not on that farm now?—No.

7717. Whom was it let to afterwards?—It was let to Thomas Jones.

7718. At the same rent?—Thomas Jones was the succeeding tenant, and Mr. Wynn in a few years afterwards was "regenerated," and he gave a reduction of 15*l.*, and I hope he is made a son of God—a child of God.

7719. Had you any restriction on the farm as to selling off corn; could you sell the corn off the farm or not?—Oh, yes; we could not sell the straw, and we could sell the oats and the barley.

7720. And did you consider the agreement was harsh or not, or a liberal agreement?—It was the same sort of agreement on all the farms of Sir Watkin Wynn.

7721. What is your opinion of those agreements; do you think they were fair, and just, and liberal?—Well, they make the agreements on their own terms you see—the landlords. I have got a few other points. I will be only a few minutes if you please.

7722. Oh, say anything you like?—I wish to call your attention to a few points in connexion with land tenure in Wales. In the first place I will tell you the wages I paid 35 years ago. To a servant,—we call "servant" in Welsh "servant-man," not "woman—Gweision," they are called "servants" in our neighbourhood; but in English the word "servants" includes women; but the English language is only a mongrel language, you know. To servant, 4*l.* 10*s.*, now 15*l.* To a man servant, "Gwas" in Welsh, 9*l.*, now 25*l.* I give a contradiction to what Edward Edwards said yesterday. He said there was not much difference between the wages now and 30 years ago. It was a great mistake. If he had said 20 years ago, I would agree with him. Carpenter, 1*s.* 6*d.* per day; they are now paid 3*s.* 6*d.* Blacksmiths, shoemakers, tailors, charge nearly 100 per cent. more. Mole-catchers, 200 per cent. more; and our religion too costs us at least four times as much as it used to do, and in these rural districts nearly all are Nonconformists, hardly one per cent. are Churchmen; so we support two ministers. As I said, high wages are paid at present to farm servants, and by being economical a young man and woman can spare enough money in a few years to stock a farm, a thing which was impossible 30 years ago; and the quarrymen of Ffestiniog, too, get, or at least used to get, such high wages that so many of them are after farms. I know there are four neighbours to me who were farm servants; they are farmers now; and two quarrymen are farmers, the demand increasing every year and the supply getting less, as small farms were swallowed up in big farms. There are 28 small farms in the parish of Llanycil swallowed up in big farms; there are 120 cottages gone down in the parish of Llanycil and only 13 new ones built. This process has gone on to a very large extent in the five parishes of Penllyn. The result is, these big farms are not cultivated, and more demand for land. With such demand the landlord can make his own terms, and under such conditions, and taking all things into consideration, we cannot blame the landlords so much. If we tenants would be landlords I fear it would be worse, because when a tenant sublets a piece, he lets it for more a great deal than he pays for it; and the agent is paid by the landlord, and it is the duty of the employed to do as much as he can to his employer. On large estates, if the landlord and tenants would jointly choose the agent, and jointly pay the wages of the agent, the tenant could expect more consideration. In Llanuwchllyn on Sir Watkin's estate, the rent of every farm was advanced about the year 1840 by one Jones, of Llwydiarth Park. He had only one eye, and the tenants wished he had lost the other, and in succeeding years the rent was advanced when the landlord made a new building. Richardson, of Aberhirnant, imported Scotch farmers, but they could not live; every one of them went away in a few years. Everyone knows that a Scotchman can make a living if anybody can; but these Scotchmen could not make a living on the Aberhirnant estate. In consequence of these years of depression we keep as few labourers as we can, and we cannot afford to buy the manure that is necessary for the land, and in consequence the land is getting out of order, and in a few years it will be exhausted. We all are working farmers. The largest farm in this neighbourhood is Fron Goch, and I am sure no nigger in the Southern States works so hard as the tenants of Fron

Chairman—continued.

Goch. We work from 6 to 8 regularly, and sometimes in hay harvest to 9 and 10. We fare very hard. For breakfast we get "shot," which is ground oat-cake mixed with butter-milk followed with a cup of tea, with bread and cheese made of skim milk, a small piece of bread and butter, the butter hardly to be seen with the naked eye. For dinner, potatoes and butter-milk, a piece of bacon, or "Nefyn roast beef." "Shot" at tea-time, and porridge for supper. We sell all fowls and eggs to get groceries and soap, &c. I wish to say something about compensation for improvements made by tenants. The Agricultural Holdings Act is a dead letter in this neighbourhood. Some landlords give an allowance, others none. We cannot expect much while they can let them. If we starve a horse we cannot expect him to do his work. If the landlord will starve his tenants, it will be a loss to the landlord in the long run. In the feudal system the barons held the land in trust for the king and the State. If we could get a law to proclaim that the land was to be held in trust for the community at large it would be a benefit, and it is sure to come bye-and-bye; but, in the meantime, if we had a land court, and only Welsh to be its members, some from the highlands and others from the lowlands, it would be a good thing; but the English I shut out. The reason I shut the English out is, they do not know the nature of our land and what grows on it, and they do not know our climate. We get more rain than any place in the kingdom, I believe. We cannot give much manure, however, for the oats and barley, or else many a year it will lie down and be half rotten, and a heavy crop of hay will be half rotten. I believe all the trouble of this commission will be in vain without a land court. We cannot expect the landlords to forget number one; we cannot expect tenants to keep off when a farm is given up. Human nature must be changed before that event will occur. I do not expect these things till the Millennium, and the Lord knows when that will commence, I do not mean our noble chairman. One of the prophecies of Robyn Ddu says, that the time will come when the landlords, hat in hand, will be begging the tenants to take farms for what they can afford to pay for them. Several of his sayings are fulfilled, and I hope God this will be ulfilled.

Mr. Richard Jones.

7723. To what do you ascribe the present depression; what are the causes?—Well, I believe that it is to be ascribed to the large exportation of cattle from the States and other countries; and all the wool is brought from foreign countries, Australia and Buenos Ayres, and all those countries; they are all sent to England.

7724. You are not in favour of putting a duty on foreign produce?—Well, if I had my mind, I would.

7725. Which do you think it would benefit, you or the landlord?—Well, certainly it would benefit me if I got more price for the cattle.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

7726. Would it not enable the landlord to get more rent from you afterwards?—Well, I do not think he would try.

7727. You admit this, that the temptation would be very strong?—Yes, very strong.

7728. You talked about human nature just now. I suppose the landlords have a certain amount of it, have not they?—Oh, certainly.

Professor Rhŷs.

7729. What do you expect a land court to do for the farmers particularly?—To put a reasonable rent on farms.

7730. Fixed rents?—Yes.

7731. That is all?—And that would not affect good landlords at all.

7732. You do not want the good landlords to be interfered with?—Well, the land court might look over the farms, but it would not interfere with them if they let them reasonably.

7733. Have you talked with anybody about the land court?—Talked.

7734. Yes?—Probably I have.

7735. With other farmers, I mean; do they ever talk about a land court?—Well, they are in favour of it, everyone that I have been speaking with.

7736. Did you start the conversation about the land court?—I do not know whether I started it or not.

7737. Is it a topic of common talk amongst the farmers about here?—Yes.

7738. Or simply something from the newspapers?—All are in favour of it.

7739. And you expect the land court to put fixed rents?—Yes.

7740. Anything else?—Well, that is the chief point.

7741. With regard to cottages you mentioned that there is a very large number fallen down?—Yes, 120.

7742. In what parishes?—In the parish of Llanycil.

7743. Do not the houses at Bala, for instance, supply the want of cottages a good deal?—The cottages are too dear at Bala. They are from 6*l.* to 10*l.*, and a labourer cannot afford to pay so much. 50*s.* to 3*l.* is the utmost the labourer can pay.

7744. Well, what would you give him? Would you give him a garden or a small plot of ground larger than a garden? What is your idea of a cottage for a farm labourer?—Well, a garden would be enough, I believe, at the present time, because they have no time; they have to work till 8 o'clock in the summer, and until night in the winter, so they have time to cultivate only a small piece.

7745. Somebody yesterday mentioned ground enough to keep a cow?—I am not in favour of that.

7746. Not in favour of the cow?—No.

Mr. Grove.

7747. You say that a good many farm labourers live in Bala or thereabouts?—Yes.

Mr. Grove—continued.

7748. What distances would they have to walk to their work—about?—Well, some three or four miles.

7749. Would they walk that night and morning?—Yes.

7750. That is a very undesirable thing, is it not?—It is.

7751. And that you would correct by having cottages built on the farms?—Yes.

7752. Then you said in your paper—that elaborate document of yours—that the Agricultural Holdings Act was a dead letter?—Yes.

7753. Why has it been a dead letter?—Because it is at the option of the landlords to take it or not was it not?

7754. No. Did you see Sir Watkin about it?—Yes, Sir Watkin called us to Glanllyn.

7755. He called you there?—Yes, to sign.

7756. And he conferred with you?—But he did not wish to be under the Act, so he was not under the Act; do you remember, Mr. Wynn?

7757. You signed yourself out of it. I suppose you mean the clause as to the notice, as to whether it should be 6 or 12 months. That was the clause probably you were alluding to?—It is only six months about here.

Mr. Seebohm.

7758. As to the 120 cottages that you said had been destroyed in this one parish, within what period was that?—During a period of 30 or 40 years.

7759. Forty years?—30 or 40, I am not sure. I have got a paper here made up.

7760. That would be just about the same period as the great rise in the value of labour. You said 30 years ago the labourers were not getting nearly so much as they are now?—No.

7761. So that with their higher wages, part of their higher wages—the value of it—is destroyed by their having to go elsewhere for their cottages?—Yes.

7762. Is it not a fact that your farmers are not in the habit of employing many labourers? It is generally a man and his family employed on the farm?—As little as we can at present.

7763. Were there more labourers employed in old times?—Oh, yes. Within these few years we have got of course nothing by our produce.

7764. But still the labourer gets a higher wage?—Yes. There is a man here who paid 10*d.* a day for hay-making, and now it is a pound a week.

7765. And do you think they get too much?—Well, they get too much, or else we get too little.

7766. You say you want a land court to arrange between you and your landlords what your rents ought to be. Do not you think the tenants might say they wanted a court to fix the wages?—To fix the wages! Well, I believe it will find its level, because I will tell you the servants are very scarce. They can ask as much as they like almost for their own wages, because they marry when they get the first offer.

7767. It is a question of supply and demand after all, is it not?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

7768. And so if there was a land court, it would have to be very much a question of supply and demand?—I do not think you could regulate the wages.

7769. No; but even with rents, would it not be found just the same with rents; must not they, after all, be fixed according to the laws of supply and demand?—Yes.

7770. So that if there was a land court, if there really is what is called "land hunger," and there are so many persons here applying for farms whenever they become vacant, do you think that the land court, after all, would be able to fix rents much lower than they are fixed by the law of supply and demand?—We hope so.

7771. You hope so?—Yes.

Sir J. Llewelyn.

7772. What farm was it you were in when you were Sir Watkin Wynn's tenant?—Pandymawr.

7773. You told us about Bryncocyn?—Yes.

7774. Was that a farm you bought?—Yes.

7775. And sold afterwards?—Yes. I was tenant at Bryncocyn.

7776. Was it your own at one time. You say you bought it. Were you a freeholder of Bryncocyn at one time?—Yes.

7777. Were you better off as a freeholder?—Well, I had a mortgage on it. I was not a freeholder in the true sense of the word.

7778. Were you better off at that time or as a tenant farmer?—No, because interest was so high.

7779. Then afterwards did you sell it to Sir Watkin Wynn?—Yes, I sold it.

7780. And then remained on as a tenant?—Yes.

7781. Did you have an agreement with Sir Watkin?—I had.

7782. We saw some of those agreements on the table yesterday. According to that agreement, had you any right to unexhausted improvements?—I believe there was, after Mr. Wynn came to the agency.

7783. You did some draining?—Yes.

7784. New fences?—Yes.

7785. And some carting—hauling of materials for building?—Yes.

7786. Did you get any compensation for that when you left the farm?—No. All I got was to sell corn out by public auction, and that was accounted for all the improvements.

7787. Was that from the landlord or from the incoming tenant?—Oh, it was settled by Mr. Williams and the incoming tenant.

7788. You do not think that any English people would be good judges of the condition of agriculture in Wales?—If they had lived here they would.

7789. It requires practical experience?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

7790. You said just now that you were not in favour of labourers keeping a cow. What are your reasons?—It would hinder them. It would take time in the hay harvest.

7791. But a woman and children could look to the cow?—Yes.

7792. Do you not think a little milk would be nice to rear up a family?—Well, if they had cottages, I consider they could get plenty of milk.

7793. The gentlemen who were here yesterday were in favour of having a cow for every labourer?—Yes.

7794. And the means of keeping them in the country instead of flocking to the towns?—Yes.

7795. Do you think it would be the case or would not be the case?—Well, if they have allotments, they would like to have a good farm, and the tenant would like to have his best land, and the poor land would not do for the labourer. There would be a great difficulty.

7796. You gave us an account of the wages you paid the labourers, the carpenters, and the mole-catchers, just now?—Yes.

7797. Can you also give us the prices of cattle, sheep, and wool, and those things that you sold at that time? You are taking more money for them now, I suppose?—Yes.

7798. In proportion to the extra money you pay for labour?—In one year we took five yearlings to a fair; we were offered 3*l.* for them; 3*l.* was the price then. Well, I believe butter was about 8*d.* then, and wool about 8*d.* I believe, or something about that.

7799. Thirty-seven years ago?—Thirty-five years ago. Prices were very low.

7800. Quite as low as they are now?—Just the same.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

7801. You said that your family had been tenants of the farm as to which you received notice to quit in 1859 from the year 1815, I think—from the battle of Waterloo you said?—My relations?

7802. Yes?—Yes. They lived at Gwernhefin then, and they were removed by Sir Watkin Wynn to Pandymawr.

7803. Taking the second farm, which is the one in which I understand you were in 1859, was it not?—Yes.

7804. Do you recollect what rent was charged first of all for that farm?—It was 51*l.*

7805. How far back was it 51*l.*?—And it was advanced to 57*l.*

7806. How many advances were there before 1859?—Well, I do not remember that.

7807. You only remember one advance?—Yes.

7808. I understood you to say there is a general feeling in this district in favour of the establishment of a land court?—Yes.

7809. Is that so?—It is so.

7810. I think also you said that one of the main purposes for the land court would be to fix rents as between landlords and tenants?—Just so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

7811. Do you mean by that that a rent, what might be called a judicial rent, should be fixed by it for a number of years, say 15, or do you mean that the rent is to be fixed from time to time upon a fair basis?—Well, from time to time, according to the prices.

7812. Do you mean according to the average prices of all produce, or would you pick out one particular product as a typical product?—All products.

7813. Then your idea of a land court would be this, that when the tenant finds it somewhat difficult to pay his rent, and the times are not so good owing to the falling in the prices of produce, that the tenant should go to the land court and bring his landlord before the court, and then get the land court to fix his rent?—Yes.

7814. Would you do that before the ensuing year, or would you do it in respect of the past year?—Well, they might do it for a few years. It is not necessary to change every year.

7815. No?—Well, for the past year.

7816. Then supposing the landlord was dissatisfied with the decision of the court, and he gave notice to quit, what would you say then? Would you suggest that the court should have any power to fix a term during which the rent should remain, during which the tenant should have it fixed, or not?—I want the law to make the decision of the land court binding—to bind the landlord and tenant.

7817. I thought you said to Mr. Seebohm that your idea was not that the land court should be employed for the purpose of procuring fixity of tenure, but simply for the fixing of the rent?—Yes; the fixing of the rent is the chief point.

7818. Supposing that a court were established, and the landlord gives a notice to quit at the end of the next six months or at the end of the next year, is it any good to fix the rent for the future?—They ought not to have the power to do it without some reason.

7819. Then the sort of court you are thinking of is a court which is to have the power of prohibiting the termination of the tenancy except for some reason?—Yes.

7820. Bad cultivation, for instance, or non-payment of rent?—Yes.

7821. And that sort of reason?—Yes.

7822. You referred to the condition of the labourers' cottages in the country; how do you account first of all for the cottages being allowed to get into this ruinous condition, and not being rebuilt and relet and so forth? Does it not pay the landlord or tenant farmer to keep them going?—Well, the tenant farmers cannot afford to build cottages, and the landlords do not wish to do so.

7823. The landlords do not wish to do so?—No.

7824. Then how do you suggest the deficiency of cottages might be provided for?—Well, if the landlords were to build small cottages, that they might let them for 50*s.* or 3*l.*, and they would be taken freely.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

7825. Has it ever occurred to you that some public body might be given power to acquire land to build labourers' cottages on, and have power to let the cottages?—Well, I do not know, Sir.

7826. Take the County Council, has that ever been talked over amongst you?—No.

7827. Whether the County Council might not be allowed to acquire power to take land for the purpose of building the cottages?—We had a great mind of the County Council at one time, but not so much now.

7828. How do you suggest the deficiency of cottages is to be made up?—Well, if the landlords would be so gracious as to build cottages.

7829. But I suspect it is very much with the landlords as you say it is with the tenant farmers; they do not find it pay, the cottage property does not pay they say?—I do not think they would get much interest for their money, but they may sacrifice a little for the benefit of the community.

7830. Then you are inclined to admit, are you, that it does not pay the landlords in the most wretched cases to build cottages now?—I do not think they would get much interest.

Lord Kenyon.

7831. You say you think the landlord ought to sacrifice a little to benefit the community, do not you?—Yes.

7832. Do you think the landlord would be likely to be encouraged to do this if you set up a land court to fix his rents and say he is not to do this or that by law? I mean to say, if you say he cannot do anything without the consent of a land court, do not you think it is a little hard on him?—I think the good landlord would be benefited by the land court.

7833. It would be a benefit to the landlord?—Yes, if the land court were established.

7834. But the landlord does not think that?—Because the landlord could let it very reasonably. I think ultimately he would be benefited by the land court. He would get more rent.

7835. You think he would get more rent?—Yes, I believe so.

Chairman.

7836. Mr. Evan Jones wishes me to ask you this question: "Having a deficiency of cottage "accommodation, could you say what the "cost of erecting a cottage, including the cost "of land, would be"?—For a labourers' cottage?

7837. Yes?—Well, I daresay it would be 60*l.*

7838. "And what return could be expected "for the outlay with the rents the cottage "would fetch in the rural districts"?—50*s.* to 3*l.*

7839. That would be 3*l.* interest on an outlay of 60*l.*?—Yes, without the purchase of the land.

Lord Kenyon.

7840. Will you build me a cottage for 60*l.*?—[No answer.]

Chairman.

7841. There is a question put by Mr. Vincent, "What was the date at which Mr. Wynne reduced the rent of your successor"?—In a few years after he took it; I cannot say; three or four years perhaps.

7842. "Were times then better or worse than when he refused a reduction to you"?—A little worse. When I departed it was a very good time, but the year before was very bad, and it went worse afterwards a little, and I heard that Colonel Hughes had reduced 9*l.*, and so the reduction is 24*l.* now, and I only asked 10*l.*

7843. "You say you carted an enormous "quantity of material supplied by Sir Watkin "for buildings on your farm"?—Yes.

7844. "And that 13*l.* was too little for you to "receive; can you tell me how much extra rent, "if any, you paid Sir Watkin in respect of his "expenditure"?—It was 250*l.*, I believe.

7845. Did you pay any extra rent on account of these new houses and buildings going up?—The rent was advanced before I got there 25*l.*

Lord Kenyon.

7846. You did not pay anything extra to Sir Watkin on account of those buildings, did you?—No.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN MORRIS JONES called and examined.

Chairman.

7847. Will you tell us where you live?—At Caer Gai, in the parish of Llanuwchllyn.

7848. You are a tenant on Sir Watkin William Wynn's estate?—Yes.

7849. Has your family been long on the estate?—Yes; my grandfather was there on that farm.

7850. When did your father succeed your grandfather?—I believe it was in the year 1841.

7851. Why did your grandfather give up his farm?—Because he was losing money on it.

7852. At what yearly rental?—140*l.*

7853. Perhaps you would like to take your statement and read it. Tell us what happened in 1860 when your father took the farm?—My father took the farm first in 1841 or 1842, I am not quite certain. He succeeded my grandfather to the holding. In 1860 my father's rent was advanced to 155*l.*; it was reduced again to the old rent in 1866 I believe, or 1867.

7854. That was 140*l.*?—Yes. There were two holdings, Caer Gai and Waen Bryncoch. One was an upland or old allotment enclosed in. My father lately used to sublet Waen Bryncoch, I believe for 27*l.* a year. In 1872 the landlord took Waen Bryncoch over and he let it himself, I think for 33*l.* a year, and put another holding in its place called Tyn-twll, which was highly rented at 33*l.* itself, and put the two together at 160*l.* Belonging to this farm there was another small allotment which was detached from our holding and my father sublet that again at 4*l.* to a neighbour. In a year or so he had a notice to quit, and they took that small allotment off and relet it themselves, and they did not allow us anything. In another year or so he received notice to quit again a small shippon and they took off about an acre or a quarter of an acre, or something like that, with it. In June, 1882, my father died, and I being the only one of the family remaining with him, was made executor, and having been brought up as a farmer, I was anxious to keep my home. I had to wait for some time for an answer of any kind, and when the answer came, the terms were these: I might have it for a year at the old rent, or I could have it at an advance of 40*l.* per annum, with a hint that, possibly, after rebuilding (all the buildings being in a very bad state) there would be another addition to the rent, but if I kept it for the old rent for one year, I would not be allowed to plough any grass land up. I believe we never used to plough above 15 or 20 acres of the holding, and if I went away with only that stubble in the yard I would be a great loser. In 1865 I told the agent it was impossible to make the rent. He allowed me 30*l.* I had paid for improvements, and advised me to stick on, as he thought things were certain to improve. But I have not seen any improvement yet. After this, 10 per cent. of the rent was returned for a short time. Two years ago I saw it was useless waiting and wasting my time for worse than nothing, and I applied to the present agent, Mr. Morris, to ask Colonel Hughes if he would walk over my holding. Colonel Hughes and Mr. Morris went over it carefully, and the result was that they reduced my rent by 50*l.* a year. At the present rental, should the market improve, I trust to make both ends meet.

7855. At the present rental you think you can make both ends meet?—If markets improve, as I trust they may. I should like to make the remark that I have drained about one-third of my holding, made a lot of new fences, and carried the haulage for the buildings, which were in a tumble-down state when I began.

7856. You paid for the haulage?—I did it myself.

Lord Kenyon.

7857. Have the buildings been rebuilt?—Yes. They were tumbling down.

7858. Is it not the custom, as a rule, in this part of the country, for the tenants to haul?—Yes, but they think it is not right.

7859. How is the haulage to be done if the tenants do not haul?—Well, I believe they ought to pay the tenant for it, because the tenant must quit at a year's notice.

7860. Is it usual to charge any percentage on rebuilding?—I believe it has been done, but I was advanced before they built anything.

7861. They did not charge any percentage?—Yes, they did before.

7862. Before they were built?—Yes, they put 20 per cent. on, or a little more, before they began building.

7863. The advance of rent had really nothing to do with the buildings; it was put on before the buildings were put up?—Yes, but the buildings were talked about before I took the holding and I just had a hint there might be another advance too.

7864. You did not get another advance?—No.

7865. Instead of that you get a reduction of 50*l.* a year now?—Yes, I have now.

Sir John Llewelyn.

7866. Do you not consider that you are sufficiently protected by the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Well, really I do not think we know much about it here.

Mr. Seebohm.

7867. Is the reason that you do not understand the Agricultural Holdings Act chiefly the fact that the Acts which are in English are not commonly read by the people who only speak Welsh?—Well, I believe that is one cause; that it is not generally understood, and I do not think there is anything to be added if we did understand it—that is my impression of it. We are signed out of it.

7868. When you say signed out of it you only mean in certain particulars, do you not. You do not mean that you are signed out of the whole thing?—Well, I do not understand the Act myself—I cannot answer you.

7869. Do you think that what is done by Government for the benefit of farmers, or for the benefit of labourers is known in these districts throughout the country. If an Act is passed like the Allotments Act, or anything of that kind, is it known all over the country at once through the newspapers?—Well, we have a sprinkling. Lawyers turn it every way about, you see, so that we could not interpret it.

7870. Do you not think it would be better that all these Acts of Parliament which affect your neighbourhood should be translated into Welsh and be exposed or easily sold at the post office?—Well, I do not know. I believe an Act of Parliament if put in Welsh would be very hard to understand.

7871. But still you want an Act of Parliament with regard to judicial rents, for instance—I do not know whether you do personally, but we have had that put in evidence. If an Act of Parliament was not understood, would it not come to nothing, like these other Acts?—I do not think so. If there was some good benefits that must come I am sure we should very soon know it.

7872. Well, it was supposed that the Agricultural Holdings Act gave that benefit, and you do not seem to know it?—I do not think it does give any benefit to us.

Mr. Grove.

7873. Have you no farmers' club in the district. It is easy to have a farmers' club, is it not?—We have not any.

7874. Is there no combination amongst farmers in this part?—No. Well, we have the Agricultural Show once a year.

7875. You have no farmers' club, the same as we should have in South Wales, for instance?—No.

7876. If you had it would be one means of getting information, if you had a good secretary to let you know about such Acts?—That might be so.

Professor Rhŷs.

7877. Do I understand rightly that you are under the impression that the landlord can contract himself out of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes.

7878. That is generally the belief?—Well, that is my belief, whatever.

7880. Do you understand it now?—Well, I do not know. I have been reading cases on the Act, and they seem very unfair. I would not like to make any claim under it.

7881. It seems to me that you are afraid to make your claims under the Act; is that so, or do you think it is not worth while?—Well, I think it is not worth while myself under that Act.

7882. Why?—Well, a lot of our land is in such a poor condition that if we made a claim for a little improvement on pieces, the landlord might counterclaim on the other waste land, which has not been done, and then we should be out.

7883. How could he do that; the whole matter would be under a valuation, would it not?—Yes, but I have seen it at the sessions, when only one field was not cultivated properly a farmer did not get any benefit for all his improvements.

7884. You are afraid of the counterclaims; that is what it comes to?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

7885. You say that your father's rent was advanced from 140*l.* to 155*l.* a year in 1860, and that it was reduced in 1866 down to 140*l.* Can you offer any explanation for that rise and fall?—Well, I can only say I heard him saying that it was advanced because he stopped at home instead of going to vote.

7886. That was in 1859?—Yes, that was in 1859, and was reduced again because he said he would go.

7887. Did he go?—Yes.

7888. For whom did he vote?—I do not know; I was too young. I believe it was for Mr. Wynne, the Conservative candidate.

Mr. J. M. Griffiths.

7889. Do you not think that the tenants who do hauling for the landlords are to blame that they do not enter into some agreement with the landlord with regard to the haulage if they leave their farms?—I do not know how to answer you. I do not think a contract between a tenant and the landlord is quite a free contract. We cannot demand what we want; we must take it as it is.

7890. Still you ought to insist upon your rights when you enter into an agreement with him. It is not supposed that you are going to spend your money without having some security that you are to live on the farm?—Yes, but we are to do it or leave. How can we press and insist upon a thing that we cannot demand—we have to do it or leave.

Mr. Seebohm.

7891. I should like to ask you a question following upon that: Supposing you had a land court, and supposing that land court reduced your rents, would it not increase the competition for farms if the rents were made lower?—I do not think so.

7892. There are a great many people, we understand, always competing for a farm which is to let; is that so?—Quite so.

7893. If the rent of that farm was less than it is now the competition would be increased would it not?—A new tenant is almost always willing to give any rent for his holding the first time.

7894. But is it not the fact that there are so many persons wishing to get a farm which is to let. One of those things which puts you in the position that you are afraid of doing anything against your landlord's interest, or bargaining with him, is because you know that there are so many more who would step in on any terms?—Yes, quite so.

Chairman.

7895. This is a question put in by Mr. Vincent: "Was a new house built for you at a "cost of from 700*l.* to 800*l.*"?—I do not know the cost.

7896. You do not know what the cost of the house was?—No.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Robert Pierce Roberts called and examined through an interpreter.

7897. The interpreter translated the following statement of the witness into the Welsh language, and it was afterwards read in English:—

"Evidence of Robert Pierce Roberts, farmer, Bryn Corwyn, Llanuwchllyn, tenant of Sir W. W. Wynn.

"My father refused to vote in the 1859 election. His rent was raised from 70*l.* to 75*l.*

"In 1892 about 60 of Sir W. W. Wynn's tenants made an application for a reduction to Sir W. W. Wynn's present agents, Colonel Hughes and Mr. Morris. Sir Watkin promised to consider the case of each farmer separately (I can produce his answer), and his agents re-valued or are re-valuing the holdings. They reduced my rent from 75*l.* to 62*l.*"

Mr. Richard Jones.

7897*a*. Do you know if, when your father's rent was advanced in 1859 from 70*l.* to 75*l.* any reason was stated?—I did not hear him say so.

7898. You say that in 1892 your rent was reduced from 75*l.* to 62*l.* on a re-valuation made by the present agent. Are you satisfied with that reduction?—I am content with that re-valuation.

7899. Supposing that prices go down again in another year, and that you do not get a reduction, are you prepared to give your farm up?—I have spent too much money; I could not give the farm up without losing.

7900. Therefore, in that case, you are not able to contract with the landlord on equal terms?—We have agreed now.

Professor Rhŷs.

7901. I do not think the witness understood the question as put, and I should like the interpreter to put it again. (The question was again put to the witness)?—Well, it is a difficult question to answer, I should think, here. We have agreed now, and I have determined to try again.

Mr. Richard Jones.

7902. But you do not feel yourself free to leave the farm because of the money you have expended upon it?—No.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

7903. What remedy do you suggest?—If I chose to leave I should like to get that which is fair for what I have spent.

7904. You want full compensation for all improvements?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

7905. Did you give us the acreage of your farm?—About 85 acres.

7906. What rent?—62*l.* now.

7907. And what sort of land is it?—A variety—different kinds of land.

7908. Is there much rough land about it?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

7909. You stated, I think, that you believed that the rent was raised up to 75*l.* on account of your father not voting the right way?—He did not vote at all. He refused to vote.

7910. You consider that as a reason for the raising of the rent?—That was what I believed.

7911. That was in what year?—1859.

7912. Do you remember the time?—No.

7913. So that it is a tradition in your family?—Yes.

7914. Can you tell us whether you consider that that is quite a thing of the past—that there is now on the estate nothing of the kind?—I believe so.

7915. Both politically and religiously?—I think so.

Mr. J. M. Griffiths.

7916. Do you think the reduction in the rent is equal to the reduction in the prices of cattle, sheep, and corn?—I do not think so.

7917. Would you like to have some court to appeal to in respect of this matter to settle rents?—I think it would be very beneficial.

7918. What is the nature of your farm?—We plough a part, and we have hay on another part, and we keep milking cows.

7919. Do you employ servants?—Yes.

7920. Who does the milking?—The servants and I.

7921. The boys or the girls?—The boys for the most part.

7922. Do you find any difficulty in getting any hands to milk?—No.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Colonel Hugh R. Hughes called and examined.

Chairman.

See 7532–7542.

7923. Colonel Hughes, you are agent to Sir Watkin Williams Wynn?—Yes, my Lord.

7924. You have heard the evidence of some of the tenants on the Wynnstay estate and the other estates. Is there anything you are desirous of speaking to on that evidence?—Yes. I was appointed chief agent to Sir Watkin in

Chairman—continued.

February 1888, and during the following year I worked this estate in connection with Mr. Williams. In February 1889 Mr. Williams gave three months' notice of his intention to resign the agency. He had previously spoken on the subject, saying that he had some intention of doing so, and on the 9th of May following he ceased to act. I received most particular instructions from Sir Watkin that Mr. Williams was henceforth to be on the same footing as the other tenants on the estate. On the 29th of September in the same year the usual notice to quit was served upon Mr. Williams with a view of coming to fresh terms. In May 1890, to the best of my power, I made a most careful survey and valuation of the farm. I fixed the value at 450*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.*, which was exactly worked out. Mr. Williams was extremely annoyed about this, and he made a valuation himself, which amounted to 398*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.* I am prepared to hand in the particulars of both of those, if your Lordship thinks fit. Mr. Williams insisted that I was very much out in my valuation, and naturally I felt anxious—I was very anxious to do justice to the case—and I sent Mr. Smith of Llanbrynmair, who is one of Sir Watkin's local agents, and has had 20 years' experience in the management of estates and land and knows the nature of Welsh land. I sent him over, and I gave him the most strict instructions as to how his valuation was to be made, that he was to keep it down, and it was to be made on the intrinsic value of the land. I will hand in, with your permission, a letter that I wrote to him with those instructions. He went over and made a valuation according to those instructions, which amounted to 453*l.* 3*s.* 10*d.* The matter was held in abeyance for some months then. In the spring of 1891 Mr. Williams took Mr. Rigby, of Sutton Weaver, in Cheshire, a well-known valuer and agriculturist, over the farm. I afterwards met at Chester, Mr. Rigby, Mr. Williams, Mr. Smith, and Mr. William Morris, the resident agent here. Mr. Rigby said he could not object to my valuation, but of course he wished to make the best terms for his client. I repeatedly told Mr. Williams that Sir Watkin's wish was that the whole question should be thrashed out, and that whatever was found to be due to Mr. Williams for any improvements, or whatever he might bring forward, was to be paid at once. This Mr. Williams declined to agree to. I adhered to my statement, and I said that that would be the rent of the farm. There had been an allowance made to Mr. Williams of 25*l.* 10*s.* per annum, part of moneys that are received annually by the estate from the Shropshire Union Canal Company. The valuation that I made was independent of the damage which may or may not have been incurred by the backing up of the lake, but for the sake of peace, as my predecessor Mr. Owen Wynne had given him that, I said that I would also allow that out of the rent. Mr. Williams still stuck to it that he had had the rent raised twice. He appealed to Sir Watkin, and I have Sir Watkin's reply to his appeal, which, with your Lordship's permission, I will read:—"Dear John "Williams, I regret that, owing to having been "away from home so much lately, I have been "unable to answer your letter of October 4th "sooner. With reference to the rental of the "land you occupy, your statement that the rent

"was raised in 1867 at the time of your father's "death and again last year, is quite correct, "but I must remind you that when you took "the farm on your father's death, the said farm "was worth considerably more money than "when he had occupied it, owing no doubt in "a great measure to the energy and care he "had bestowed upon it. In 1867, on your "becoming tenant, the rent was raised 73*l.*" That valuation was made by a man whose memory we all look back to, he was a real good valuer of land, who knew his business. That was the late Mr. William Jones. This in his own handwriting is the valuation made (handing valuation in).

7925. What is the amount?—It is an increase of 73*l.* per annum upon his father's holding. It was raised 73*l.* Sir Watkin's letter goes on—"But in consideration for what you had done "on the farm this sum was given as an annuity "to his widow (your mother) by my predecessor, "and continued by myself up to the date of her "death in 1890, making a total of 1,750*l.* In "1867 you became agent at Glanllyn, and in "that capacity occupied your house and land on "a different footing to ordinary tenants. In "1889 you resigned the agency, but wishing to "retain your present land and house (the estate "agent's house for Glanllyn estate), necessitated "in the first place my building a new house for "the agent, and consequently under the special "circumstances of your case, I had to consider "the position for the future in which you would "hold the house and land, and therefore requested "Colonel Hughes to go over and value your "farm. This he did most carefully, the result "showing your farm to be worth the rent you "now pay for it. You must also remember "that, on your objecting to Colonel Hughes' "valuation, you called in Mr. Rigby to value "the farm in your interest, which he did, but "had no fault to find with Colonel Hughes' "previous valuation. I think these facts prove "that your farm is not over-rented. Now, as "to granting you a substantial reduction in "rent, your farm having been so lately valued, "I regret I cannot see my way to give "it you, beyond a temporary return which I "intend to make to my tenants in consideration "of the extremely low prices stock have realised "this year. As to being not acquainted with "facts you mention in your letter, referring to "work you have done, I am fully aware of all "that is going on on my estate, and with "reference to the management of it, nothing is "done without the matter being laid before me. "I thoroughly sympathise with you when you "say you have lost heavily on your farm last "year, and can only deeply deplore the causes "which have so hampered the agricultural "interest of late. Yours truly, Watkin Williams "Wynn." With regard to the rent fixed, I, of course, only stand here to be corrected by those who know better than myself, but Mr. Williams objected to that rent, and I have taken out of the rent book the rents of six farms which surround Gwernhefin. This I beg to submit to you (handing document in).

Chairman.

7926. Is that all you wish to say upon that?—Well, I think I had better finish. The letter I alluded to was this—the terms of the instructions given to Mr. Smith. They were written by me on the 6th of August 1890. "Dear Sir, I shall feel obliged if you will go "carefully over Gwernhefin. I want to arrive "at this—what is the farm worth to a new "tenant. Mr. Williams insists upon it that I "wish to value it upon his improvements. "Such a charge has never before been made "against me. I have valued upon what I "consider the intrinsic worth of the land; and "Sir Watkin wishes that any claim, if such "there be, should be threshed out and settled." I wrote to Mr. Williams in these terms, on the 19th May 1890, after receiving his valuation: "Dear Sir, I have analysed your figures against "my own, and I find that, as regards the body "of the farm, I am below you. The figures I "have put on the grass land I adhere to. With "regard to the "Rhosydd" (in which you have "included some odd pieces which do not come "under that category) my instructions from the "Wynnstay office were that in consideration of "the improvements made by your father, 73*l.* "per annum was paid to the late Mrs. Williams "for her life." I go on to say that I would lay the matter before Sir Watkin. Mr. Williams adheres to it, that the improvements and all were his own. Sir Watkin was most implicit in his instructions to me about this matter; and he told me all along that he would have it out, and that he wished to know everything. I then wrote to Mr Williams: "As I have understood "from you all along that it is your wish to "come to an understanding, and to retake "Gwernhefin, I now write to say that I am "prepared to let the farm at 450*l.* per annum, "on the usual conditions; and, as I have before "mentioned to you, if you consider you have a "claim against Sir Watkin for improvements, "I have his authority to say that he wishes to "have the thing threshed out and settled." Mr. Williams all along declined that. He said, "I cannot make a bill against Sir Watkin." I said, "Mr. Williams, there is the Agricultural "Holdings Act," and he said, "I cannot go on "that—I cannot give you notice." I said, "I "waive all formalities, I put that on one side; "I want peace; I want the thing put right, and "I will waive all objections of that kind." This was said at the Grosvenor, in Chester, in the presence of Mr. Rigby, of Sutton Weaver, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Morris. I said to Mr. Williams: "Sir Watkin wishes the thing cleared, and he "wishes to have it all out." He said, "No." I said: "I will waive all objections, I will "put you under the Act, and we will pay it." Mr. Williams' very strong point was that he was under no advantages in farming here. The evidence of William Jones, Sir Watkin's head woodman, who is prepared to come into this box, is this, that Mr. Williams was in the habit always, when he wanted them, of taking the estate men for his own farm work. Well, we all know that even if you can put your hand on men at the proper time, we who farm know what we have to pay, and these men were always taken when they were wanted for hay and corn harvest in suitable weather, and returned to Glanllyn in bad weather. The men were also employed in singling, cleaning out, and raising turnips. They were not paid harvest wages, but if overtime was worked they were paid for it, with an allowance of bread and cheese and beer. Their ordinary wages would be including overtime (I believe the standard is 15*s.*), 16*s.* or 17*s.*, perhaps more, per week, whereas harvest men would get at least—we have heard that to-day here—a pound and over per week and their food. Then it is the duty of the head woodman to make out the sheets every fortnight, and he is prepared to show you the quantity of draining that was done by Sir Watkin's men on the estate. Of course, Mr. Williams did some, but they, on the other hand, did a great deal. I submit that you cannot call a man under ordinary terms who has those advantages. Here I leave that matter. If you wish to see them, I am prepared to place all these papers before you. I wish to confine, with your permission, what I have to say entirely to what has happened during my time, when I am accountable for it; I do not want to make a remark or say a word about the past. I have too great repect and veneration for the memory of the late Sir Watkin. Whatever I have done I will account for. I will not go back. With regard to what has been said here to-day with respect to the other tenants, about 60 or so of them, there was a petition made to Sir Watkin to have the rents adjusted, and at the audit in 1892 I sent a letter, by the direction of Sir Watkin, to Mr. William Morris, which was read to them, to say that he wished every tenant to be on fair terms, and, if any one of them had any cause of complaint or anything to mention, it was to be brought to me, and I was to deal with it. I was unable to do all I should last year; it so happened I was not very well, and could not get about as much as I used to, but this year I have done it; and to the best of my power dealing with the matter just as it was; I have gone over, I think, 52 farms, every field on every farm. Those valuations, when I give evidence in chief for Sir Watkin's estate, I shall be happy to lay before you, if you think fit. As to talk of what may be in the future, I think that is a very wide field; we do not know what may happen. But I took the valuation honestly on a field to field valuation. Out of the 52, practically, I believe 48 have already acceded to the terms. I do not wish to add anything more, or to say a single word about anything except what has happened during the time that Sir Watkin has thought fit to entrust me with his confidence.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

7927. Just one or two questions upon this table that you have put in. As I understand it, you give here the acreage of six farms and the rental, and working it out so as to get the average price per acre, it seems that the price per acre in each case is higher than the price which Mr. Williams fixed on his own farm. Do you understand me?—Yes; it is higher than what I fixed upon the farm, those rentals being fixed by him under the direction of his superior.

7928. Yes; then if Mr. Williams is right in his view these farms are too highly rented?—I have dealt with them all separately. I do not think I am called upon to answer that question now, but I am prepared to do it. I have taken each farm on its own merits as I found it, and have not looked at the rents before.

7929. If you do not think you are called upon to answer the question you must do as you like?—I do not wish at all not to do so.

7930. The inference that I draw from what you say is this, that Mr. Williams was rather a good agent at raising the rents?—If you will excuse me, I do not wish to remark upon anything that took place before my time. Those are facts. I will deal with facts.

Very well then. I have no more questions to ask you upon it.

Mr. Griffiths.

7931. In valuing the farms which Mr. Brynmor Jones has spoken of, are they on an average the same quality of land as Mr. Williams's?—Oh, dear no. They are valued on their own merits. Gwernhefin Farm is a very well-known farm. Put me out of the question altogether; there is not a cattle dealer or a farmer on the whole district who does not know what that land will do. It is well known; it is an extraordinarily good farm. There is more beef turned out from there than from the farms around; that is the fact. Please to put me out of the question. Any cattle dealer or butcher, or anyone in the whole country, will give you the character of that farm.

7932. Does he hold any mountain land at all?—He has a sheep walk in addition.

7933. You know that at the present time farmers are suffering very much from this depression?—I do, indeed.

7934. Have you any remedies to suggest?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Colonel Hughes is only called now to answer this one point.

Mr. Griffiths.

Then I will not pursue that.

Sir John Llewelyn.

7935. The valuations of the 52 farms that you speak of are made upon the present prices, Colonel Hughes?—I submit that they are.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

7936. That is your valuation?—It is.

7937. Made this year?—Yes. Out of the lot over 40 were made in the month of May. They have the 15 per cent. also returned out of those amended rents now under the present depression.

7938. Fifteen per cent. out of the present rents?—Yes, as it is now.

7939. You told me that 48 out of the 52 have been practically accepted?—They have.

7940. With regard to the other four, have you anything to tell us; are they sub judice or are they rejected?—I have not seen them myself personally, but I hope to shortly. I shall be prepared to discuss the matter with them.

7941. Quite so. It is not yet finally decided one way or the other?—No.

7942. Am I right in that?—Quite so.

7943. Would you mind telling me once more the words which I took down in this way, that Sir Watkin's wish was this, that it should be what the farm is worth to a new tenant?—Quite so.

7944. Those were your instructions with regard to the valuations?—Yes, instructions—special instructions.

7945. And that Sir Watkin wishes to thresh out and settle all questions of improvements by an outgoing tenant?—Certainly.

7946. Would you mind referring to your notes, and just telling me precisely the wording of that? Perhaps I have it correctly, but I took it down rather hurriedly?—A letter was written from Shropshire on the 6th August, and that part is this "I have valued upon what I "consider the intrinsic worth of the land, and "Sir Watkin wishes that any claim, if such "there be, should be threshed out and settled."

Chairman.

7947. There are several questions handed up. I had better read them through, and if the Commissioners object to any questions they will kindly say so. These questions are handed up by Mr. John Williams: "Was not Mr. Rigby's "valuation given on the present value of the "farm?"—Certainly, my Lord; on its then state. He had no objection to find with the valuation I had made of the farm in its then state.

7948. "What apart from the expenditure of "my capital and good farming had tended to the "increased value found in 1890?"—I consider that the farm did Mr. Williams immense credit in every way. He would not allow it to be valued by efficient men, which we offered. He would not have that done.

7949. "Will Colonel Hughes put in the cor-"respondence with Sir Watkin and himself?"—Certainly. I have it all here. Sir Watkin only wrote one letter, my Lord.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

7950. One moment; that is a confidential correspondence between you and Sir Watkin, is it not?—No, I read it out here. It is a copy of a letter which Sir Watkin wrote to Mr. John Williams on the 29th October 1892.

7951. That is not what is asked by this question. The question is as to the correspondence between you and Sir Watkin?—I will lay every letter written by Mr. Williams before you. I have them all here, and, if you wish me to hand them in. I will do so.

7952. No, you misunderstand me.

Mr. John Williams.—May I be allowed to explain? The question may be wrongly put. It was between me and Sir Watkin.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Between Sir Watkin and yourself?

Mr. John Williams.—Yes.

The Witness.

If you will allow me, I will read them.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

7953. Is it the one you have read before?—I have not read any of Mr. Williams' letters.

Chairman.

7954. The correspondence has not been put in. Will you kindly give us a copy of the correspondence?—I shall be happy to. The letter of the 4th October is written by Mr. Williams, and the one of the 17th October is written to Sir Watkin. I believe, by Sir Watkin's direction, I replied to that letter saying that Sir Watkin would be happy to see him personally, whenever an arrangement could be made; and the third letter from Mr. Williams is dated the 27th December 1892. Those are the letters.

7955. You will put those in, Colonel Hughes?—Certainly.

7956. "Is not the average value of this farm "22*s.* and the average of Caergai 15*s.*"?—The valuation of Caergai I proposed to leave. That was a farm I went over. I have the valuation here, field for field, made in last year, and I took farm quite independently, and I brought it out at 152*l.* 6*s.* 2*d.*

Lord Kenyon.

7957. Mr. Williams' valuation was 20*s.*?—I have the dates that were given this morning. I have them here in my list when the farm was raised.

Chairman.

7958. "Did Mr. Williams ever have any "estate men without paying them full wages"?—Certainly not, my Lord. He paid them the ordinary wages of the estate, and had them at command. I spoke to the woodman about it; I said, "How can you allow it?"—"Well," he said, "it has always been the way; the agent could take the men when he liked." I said, "I want the work done on the estate," and his answer was that he could not get on with his work; the men were always taken, and it was an acknowledged thing, and certainly Mr. Williams always paid them. I can produce all the sheets from the Wynnstay Office. He always paid them, but then he paid what we call the ordinary rate, and had them in the times when you have to pay the increased rate.

Chairman—continued.

7959. Then he deducted them from the estate pay sheet?—Certainly; most carefully, every one.

7960. That is the question. They were all deducted from the estate pay sheet?—Most certainly; my Lord.

7961. What was the amount of draining done by the estate on Gwernhefin?—I am not prepared now to go into that; but what has been handed to me by the woodman is: "The draining of "the following fields was done by Sir Watkin's "men and at his expense." Then Mr. Williams will correct me if I am wrong, because I want to know everything; the words are: "Rhos "Bach, 12·640 acres; Rhos Llwyn Mawr "(originally drained with stones) 7·703 acres; "Wern Vach (opened old drains and made "new ones) 8·906 acres; Weirgloddlon (not "now part of Gwernhefin) 3·710." I believe that is part of a field that we took at the valuation. We took it for Sir Watkin's own use, and Mr. Morris's, but that is immaterial here. Then "Caebanadl, 8·519 acres; Brynderw "(not now with Gwernhefin), 16·342 acres; Cae "Carneg, 7·784 acres; Cae Cendy Coed (not "now with Gwernhefin), 5·513; Werngoch "(begun by J. Williams and finished by Sir "Watkin's men), say 6·210 acres." So that several portions of 77 acres odd were drained. Then, "Drained by Mr. Williams during the "same period: Werngoch, as above, say, 6·210 "acres; Fridd Newydd, 11·983 acres; corner "of a field above Pentre road, 4 acres; Dol "Friog, about 14 acres." That is the statement of William Jones, Sir Watkin's head woodman.

7962. "Did Colonel Hughes send Mr. Smith, "one of Sir Watkin's local agents, as the referee "to whom the matter was to be referred?"—Certainly not, my Lord. I was naturally anxious, knowing Mr. Williams' experience of the value of the land—I naturally felt anxious—I was only one—whether I had done right or not. I had great confidence in Mr. Smith, and I sent him there to make an independent valuation; and if the thing had gone, as I wished it to go, under the Act, I should certainly not have allowed Mr. Smith to act; I would have had a man outside our staff. It was merely to see how I stood myself.

7963. "Did not Mr. Rigby certify that a very "large sum of money had been expended on the "farm by the tenant"?—I had no figures of the sort, but I admitted all along that Mr. William's treatment of the farm was most generous, but I had no figures put before me. I never wish to see a farm better managed by any tenant.

7964. "What are the farms named by Colonel "Hughes, with rent and acreage." That, I suppose, is this table?—Yes; that Lord Kenyon has.

7965. Those are the farms valued by Mr. John Williams, the six farms all round his own holding, I think?—Yes, he fixed those rents. There was Madog, 26*s.* per acre, Caergai, 20*s.*, Weirglodd-ddu, 25*s.* 6*d.*, that is one of the farms now under consideration, and I last night received a message from Sir Watkin about it, because I have not seen him since the 16th August. He, the tenant, went to Sir Watkin, and I have had his instructions. Then New Inn, 29*s.*; Prys 23*s.* 5*d.*; Dolbach, 30*s.* 2*d.*

7967. Then is his the lowest of all the group?—It is.

7968. They were valued by himself?—Excepting Caer-gai. I do not know that he valued them; I do not wish to go into that; but he let those farms; that is the rent the tenants were paying, and which he received.

7969. Has anyone in Penllyn fed the land as Mr. Williams has done?—No, I do not think there is any farmer who has treated the land as Mr. Williams has; he has fed his cattle well. I never wish to see a farm better managed than Mr. Williams'.

7970. There is one question from Mr. Jenkyn Thomas. He asks: "Is it a fact that the "increase of rent of Gwernhefin was due to "improvements carried out by the tenant"?—I think, with great submission, I have answered that question; I did not go for the improvements. I particularly avoided it; I never took more pains about anything in my life.

7971. Then the answer to that is "no"?—No. I admitted everything about his generous treatment; we wished to pay for it, but I valued the land on its own merits.

Re-examined, 16,791.

The witness withdrew.

Chairman.

The arrangements of the Commission are that to-morrow we have to sit at Dolgelley: as this arrangement has been made, it cannot be altered now. There is only one train which starts at 5.40, so that the Commissioners will have to start by that train. We now have the Rhiwlas estate before us, and we propose to take the two principal witnesses as to the Rhiwlas estate, and then Mr. Price will give his evidence. Any other witnesses on the Rhiwlas estate who would like to give their evidence we should ask to be good enough, as we are unable from pressure of time to take it to-day, to come to Corwen when the Commissioners visit that part of the country. We regret very much that we have not enough time to take all the witnesses. At the same time we must congratulate ourselves on the number of witnesses, which is larger than we had any reason to expect, and it shows the great interest that is taken in the inquiry.

Mr. Thomas Davies called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

7972. Do you speak only for yourself, or are you the spokesman of several other tenants?—Several other tenants as well.

7973. State as shortly and as concisely as you can the principal points you want to emphasise, and state your own case, and then give the cases of the other tenants for whom you are privileged to speak. Give us the points you particularly wish to emphasise.

[The following statement, being the evidence-in-chief of the witness, was read out in English by the interpreter, after it had been previously acknowledged by the witness on being translated into Welsh.]

"Evidence of Mr. Thomas Davies of Fedwlwyd Bala, tenant farmer.

"Evidence will be partly personal as to tenancy of Frondderw (76½ acres), and Fedwlwyd (156 acres), and will partly refer to the general state of affairs on the Rhiwlâs estate in the parishes of Llanycil and Llanfor.

"III. Occupation.

"1. Term of tenancy.—The usual date of entry in the district is March 25th as regards the land, and May 12th to the house and buildings. Farms are chiefly let from year to year. There is a very small demand for leases. Witness once asked Mr. Watkins, the agent of the Rhiwlâs estate, for a lease, but he refused to give one, stating that it was not customary.

"When portions of fields are taken for the purpose of planting, as a rule, no notice is given of the landlord's intention to do so, and no compensation is given for any loss that the tenant suffers. When I was tenant of a farm called Frondderw under Mr. Anwyl, my landlord brought 9,000 young trees and wished to plant them in a field which I had prepared for potatoes. I objected to the planting of them, and eventually they were, with my consent, planted in another portion of the farm. But I never received any reduction in the rent in respect of the land lost on this account.

"In the case of timber cutting it is very rarely that compensation is given for damages suffered by the tenant. Again, when I was tenant of Frondderw, a large quantity of trees were cut down, I have not received any compensation for the damage caused. In many cases trees which formed part of a hedge were cut down, and I had to fill up the gaps myself.

" 2. Agreement and Leases.—I produce copies of the following agreements.

" (a.) 3rd June 1879, lease for five years of Brondderw from Thomas Lloyd Anwyl.

" (b.) 1890, Draft agreement for letting of Brondderw.

" (c.) 1885 Agreement for letting of Fedwlwyd.

" I have marked the clauses which I consider objectionable and oppressive.

" 3. Rent.—In addition to the payment of rent the tenants on the Rhiwlas estate are expected to render other services such as to assist in carting coal for the use of the landlord's establishment, or to perform other services, such as carting manure.

" (iii.) Rent how varied.—Taken generally, rents have been raised considerably within the last 50 years.

" In a Schedule which I put in (see Appendix), I give a list of most of the farms in the parish of Llanycil, with their gross estimated rental in 1869 and 1893.

" Some 18 years ago (in 1876) the rents on the Rhiwlas estate were greatly raised. Before that time the rent of my farm, Fedwlwyd, was 70*l.*; it was then raised to 90*l.* About that time Mr. Jenkins, late of Plas-y-ward, near Ruthin, made a valuation of Rhiwlas estate, and it was in consequence of this valuation, or at any rate subsequently to it, that the rents were raised. As far as I can say this is the only estate in the district upon which rents were raised in consequence of a re-valuation. In most cases rents have been raised without any valuation being made.

See 16,319, 16,832.

" In 1849 the rent of my other farm, Brondderw, was only 70*l.*, by 1866 it was 110*l.*, and in 1878 it was again raised to 120*l.* The rise in the rent was due solely to the improvement in the condition of the farm brought about by the tenant. During the last few years horses have declined 25 per cent. in value, and sheep about 50 per cent. Wool now sells for 7½*d.* or 8*d.* per lb., whereas some years ago it fetched 1*s.* 6*d.* per lb.

" Again, cattle, for which some years ago 18*l.* or 20*l.* would be obtained, now fetch only 10*l.* or 12*l.*

" Beyond this the value of labour is considerably higher than it was some years ago. Thirty years ago the wages of the very best farm labourers were 15*l.* a year, whereas now 26*l.* or 28*l.* a year must be paid. Female house servants then got 6*l.* or 7*l.*, but now from 13*l* to 15*l.*

" (a.) In the year 1888 the rent of Fedwlwyd was reduced from 90*l.* to 82*l.*, the landlord also undertaking to pay the tithes.

" (b.) In the year 1886 five per cent. was returned to me from the first half year's rent of Fedwlwyd. This was in response to a petition for an abatement. Every tenant who had signed the petition received 5 per cent., while those who had not signed received double that amount. The two following half years I received 10 per cent.

Chairman—continued.

" 4. Payment of Rent.—The preferential claim for rent always means that the landlord gets what is due to him in full and generally in good time. In times of depression the effect of this is that tradesmen suffer greatly, as tenants are unable to meet all their creditors, but they have always to be careful to see their landlord paid. I have taken the trouble to call upon all the leading tradesmen in the town of Bala, and a sum not far short of 10,000*l.* is owing to them from farmers of the district. I can produce letters from a large number of tradesmen showing how much they have on their books.

" In many cases, again, the fear of distress compels farmers to borrow money for the purpose of paying the rent.

" 5. Size of Farms.—In many cases holdings have been consolidated. The number of dwelling-houses which have during the last 50 years fallen into ruins in the parish of Llanycil, or been converted into cattle houses, is about 120, without reckoning the town of Bala. The number of houses built in the same locality during the same period is 15. One reason for the joining of farm holdings together is in order to avoid building suitable houses for people to occupy and also suitable buildings. This refusal to build suitable houses has compelled many families to leave the district and to migrate to the town, and in some cases to emigrate to the Colonies. The population of the district has for the last 50 years been gradually decreasing. A tenant who now lives in a farm which had been previously four farms employs fewer hands than each one of the four employed before the farms were joined. The result of this is, that the land gets into poor condition, is left untilled, so that much naturally good land has been so neglected that nothing grows on it but rushes, heath grass, and heather. This is especially seen in the Parc neighbourhood.

" IV.—CULTIVATION.

" 1. State of cultivation and nature of farming pursued.

" A great deal of land in this district is going out of cultivation, and being very insufficiently cultivated. The causes of this are high rents and high wages, coupled with low prices. This makes it impossible for tenants to cultivate the land as they should.

" 2. Improvements.

" There never has been, nor is anything now, paid, in the way of goodwill by a new tenant to the outgoing tenant. Only the amount of the ordinary valuation for unused crops, grass, and manure is paid.

" In my own case I have spent at least 400*l.* to 500*l.* in improvements, such as building,

draining, &c. at Fedwlwyd during the last eight years, and if I were obliged to leave, I should receive no compensation whatever for this.

"When I took Fedwlwyd my landlord's agent promised to do certain things in the way of improvements. I beg to put in a copy of this agreement. Up to the present day some of them have not been carried out. In 1887 I was asked to sign an agreement of tenancy, but I refused to do so until the improvements promised me had been carried out.

"In the case of draining I had to carry all the pipes from the railway station, and also had to cut the trenches.

"Also when the cowhouse at Fedwlwyd was built I had to carry all the materials from the station."

Mr. Richard Jones.

7974. Have you made full inquiries with respect to whether compensation has been given in any case where damage has been done by trees?—No, I did not make any inquiries, but I had no compensation.

7975. You have given figures showing how much labour is higher than it was years ago. Do you consider that the labour is so efficient now as it was formerly?—Much worse than then.

7976. Does it make any difference from what particular farms you get the labourers—because labourers change from one farm to another?—Yes, it makes a difference.

7977. Do you find that the labourers are better that come from a farm that is well managed?—I do.

7978. If you say that the labour is not so efficient, then, according to your process of reasoning, the farming must be poorer?—They are the same farmers, but their means are less now than they used to be then.

7979. That is the explanation you have to offer?—Yes.

7980. You state that a number of the tenants signed a petition for an abatement in the rent or a reduction, which was it?—It was in response to a petition for an abatement.

7981. And those who signed the petition got an abatement of 5*l.*, and those who did not put their names to the petition, got 10*l.*, is not that so?—Yes.

7982. Was that difference made more than on one occasion?—No.

7983. Are there any farms here without any tenants?—I do not know of one.

7984. As farming is such a poor paying business, how do you account for the keen competition for farms?—In my opinion because so many farms have been consolidated.

7985. Is there any other reason?—I do not know of any other reason now.

7986. Would the fact that farmers bring their sons up on the farm have anything to do with it?—I do not think so.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

7987. If farming does not pay, why do not farmers bring their sons up to some trade or other occupation besides farming?—I think they do bring them up to other occupations or trades.

7988. Do you know of any farmers' sons who have sunk into the condition of labourers or quarrymen?—Yes.

7989. Why?—Because they had no means to be at home, and they had to go somewhere, and their parents had no means to bring them up to anything better.

7990. Can you give any instances of consolidation?—Yes.

7991. Give them to me?—At Cwmtylo in Cwm Parc four farms have been consolidated, and are now one.

7992. Are there as many labourers employed on this farm as there were when it was four farms?—No.

7993. Do you know how many less?—The number on the farm now is just equivalent to the number on one of the farms before the four were consolidated.

Professor Rhŷs.

7994. Do you mean on any one of the farms?—Yes, any one of the farms.

Mr. Richard Jones.

7995. What is the result so far as the management of the farm is concerned?—The farm becomes poor and uncultivated, and nothing grows on it worth speaking about.

7996. Are the ditches and the watercourses kept open and the fences looked after?—No, not half what they ought to have.

7997. What amount have you laid out on Fedwlwyd in building and draining?—I spent from 400*l.* to 500*l.*

7998. When did you spend that?—About seven years ago, and six years ago, and five years ago, and here are the bills if any one doubts my word.

7999. Did you proceed under the Agricultural Holdings Act by asking the landlord's consent to erect the building?—No.

8000. Why did not you?—I did not build so much; most of the money was spent in draining.

8001. Did you give notice in accordance with the second schedule of the Agricultural Holdings Act to your landlord that you intended draining?—Oh, yes, that was in the agreement from the outset.

Mr. Grove.

8002. Is the agreement put in your own personal agreement when you had your own farm?—Yes.

Mr. Grove—continued.

8003. And do you find fault with some of the clauses in that agreement?—Yes.

8004. Have you marked them so that we can distinguish those?—No, I have not.

Mr. Seebohm.

8005. Which is the best labour, that of men living in the house or that of men living in cottages outside?—I have no men-servants living outside the house; all my men-servants are in the house.

8006. Are they chiefly young men?—Yes, all.

8007. Are they men laying by money in the hope of some day competing for farms?—Indeed, I cannot say what they do with their money; I pay them their money.

8008. But it is a common thing for a labourer living in the house and saving his money ultimately to compete for the farms?—Yes, it is; that is what I did myself.

Sir John Llewelyn.

8009. Do you employ any labourers yourself?—Yes.

8010. Where do they live?—With me in the house now.

8011. Are there any dilapidated cottages upon your land?—There was a cottage once on my farm, but I cannot recollect it, and there ought to be one now. I should much rather there were cottages there.

8012. You would rather that there were cottages upon your farm for the labourers to live in?—Yes.

8013. How many do you employ?—Three, four, or five as I want them.

8014. They live with you in the farmhouse?—Yes.

8015. Have you proper accommodation for them?—Oh, yes, there is no necessity for me to complain about that.

8016. Do they like it best?—Our rule in this part of the country is that all unmarried young men should live in the house.

8017. Have you any married servants?—No, I have not now.

8018. Cottages would be for married people probably—I do not know—I ask you the question?—Yes, if they were to be had.

8019. In olden times, when these cottages which had gone to ruin were inhabited, were the shepherds and the other servants upon the farm married people?—Yes, most of them; almost each one of them.

8020. On an average how long do your workmen stay with you; are they hired year by year?—They are hired from year to year, and they stay sometimes one, two, or three years, and one of them has stayed over five years.

8021. Are the wages higher now than they used to be?—Yes.

8022. How much?—They are almost double what they were 30 years ago.

Mr. Seebohm.

8023. That is the extra wages beyond the keep?—Yes, the men I pay.

Sir John Llewelyn.

8024. I suppose they live better now than they used to do?—Yes, very much better than it was in my time.

8025. Now I want you to tell me with regard to these trees planted. That was not on Tyny Bedw, was it?—No, they were on the Frondderw farm.

8026. What acreage?—76½ acres.

8027. Was that taken from the farm without any diminution of rent?—The extent of the farm is 76½ acres.

8028. How much of that was taken for planting?—About three acres were taken, but I sent a number of the trees away because I would not allow them to be there.

Mr. J. M. Griffiths.

8029. Would you kindly tell us what other services you are required to give besides paying your rent?—To cart coal or to cart manure, or to plough, to harrow, and something of that kind.

Mr. Seebohm.

8030. How much ploughing?—Two days.

Mr. J. M. Griffiths.

8031. Every year?—Yes, two days every year.

8032. You told us you took the trouble to go round Bala town to see the tradesmen, and the farmers owe something like 10,000*l.*?—Yes, about that sum.

8033. Did you also call on the bankers?—No, I did not call on any bankers.

8034. Is there much money borrowed in this neighbourhood to pay the rent?—Yes.

8035. How are they able to pay it back?—I cannot say how, but everyone does as well as he can.

8036. Do you know the wages that any of the farmers' children earn outside to help to pay the rent?—Yes.

8037. Do any farmers and their children emigrate from this part of the country?—Yes.

8038. Do the farmers who occupy the farms that are consolidated pay the same rent as formerly, when they were undivided ?—I believe they are higher, except this last reduction.

8039. You say you pay much higher wages than you formerly did to your servants. Do they do more work accordingly ?—No, they do not.

8040. Do they do less ?—They work less than when I was in service.

8041. Is the work they do as good as it was ?—Oh, yes ; an occasional one.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

8042. What are the hours of the labourers that you employ ?—From 6 o'clock in the morning to 8 o'clock at night.

8043. Winter and summer ?—Winter and summer.

8044. Are those the general hours of labourers in the district ?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

8045. With meal times, of course ?—Yes, with meal times.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

8046. Are female domestic servants usually employed by farmers ?—Oh, yes.

8047. Do such servants as a rule have to assist in out-door work ?—Not very much now ; a little at hay harvest time.

8048. Are there many women employed as day labourers in this neighbourhood ?—No, not day labourers, but yearly, or some time, except a few in the town of Bala.

8049. There are a few women who do go out as day labourers ?—Yes, a few who do go out to wash and clean in the houses.

8050. I meant to work in the fields ?—Oh no, scarcely anyone.

8051. At what age do the boys generally begin to do farm work ?—Their age now, or many years ago ?

8052. Now ?—From 14 to 15.

8053. Do the farmers themselves do much actual work ?—As much as ever they can.

8054. I mean they do something more than superintend ?—Yes, many of the farmers work as hard as any servant he may have, and his hours are very much longer than theirs.

8055. And notwithstanding that, as I understand from your evidence, farmers find it very difficult in this neighbourhood to pay the present rents ?—Yes.

8056. You have said that you ascertained that farmers round about Bala were very much in debt to Bala tradesmen. Do you think that is to be attributed to any extravagance in diet or clothes on the part of the farmers ?—No, it does not arise from the fact that farmers are extravagant in any way.

8057. Is the general diet better than it was when you were a young man ?—Yes.

8058. I will read a report here which was made 40 years ago in regard to the general mode of living of small farmers in Merionethshire,—"For dinner you will see a small farmer have "half a salt herring, with potatoes and butter-"milk (very poor food for a working man) ; "his wife and family must content themselves "with buttermilk and potatoes, or, perhaps, "after the farmer has finished his part herring "there will be a scramble amongst the youngsters "for the bones to suck as a treat. They some-"times have a little skim-milk cheese with "oaten bread ; some, better off than others, "bacon." Is that a fair average truthful picture of what you remember in your youth ?—Yes, it is certainly so ; I remember it very well.

8059. Then I understand you to say, Mr. Davies, that the diet is now better than that ?—Yes, it is very much better now.

8060. And the farmers have to live upon credit with tradesmen, seemingly ?—Yes.

8061. What suggestion have you to make in reference to any alteration of the law, or in the alteration of agreements, or anything which will improve the present circumstances ?—We want a reduction in the rent of the land, and many other things.

8062. Do you hear often among the farmers of the need of something like a land court, at which the rents should be fixed between landlords and tenants ?—Yes, I do.

8063. What do you think of the expediency of such a tribunal ?—My opinion is that we must have a land court, otherwise we will all have recourse to eating red herrings.

Lord Kenyon.

8064. I did not hear what diet you gave your labourers ?—I will let you know if you like.

8065. Yes, I wish to know ?—Bread and milk, or broth, or "browse." "Browse" is some kind of food made with oatmeal. It is an equivalent to the Scotch term "brose." They have that first of all ; then bread and cheese, or bread and butter and tea. The breakfast consists of that. Then for dinner, meat and potatoes, bacon, and beef, and bread, of course, with it, and a full plate of pudding to eat after it. That is what I give.

8066. Then tea ?—Bread and milk, or broth, or something of the kind, and a cup of tea after it for tea. For supper, porridge, or potatoes and milk, or something of the kind.

8067. Then I take it you do not agree with the evidence we heard yesterday, that the labourer seldom sees fresh meat once a week ?—No. I do not agree with it at all. It is all a falsehood.

8068. "Fresh" meat, I said ?—No. I agree with regard to fresh meat. I give them meat every day in the year. There is no day of the year but that I give my men meat.

Mr. Richard Jones.

8069. What do you mean by "meat" ?—Bacon and beef.

Lord Kenyon.

8070. Salt beef, I take it, you mean?—Yes. It is an exception to buy fresh meat.

8071. Do you ever give them fresh meat?—Yes; I occasionally give them fresh meat.

8072. And do you feed them as well as you feed yourself?—Yes, almost every bit.

8073. Then I did not understood what wages you give your labourers?—I give them from 13*l.* to 26*l.* a year as they are.

8074. Who would be receiving 26*l.*?—This year my chief servant received his 26*l.* a year.

8075. Would he be a waggoner?—Yes, he would be a waggoner.

8076. I did not quite understand. Is your farm, Fedwlwyd, a hill farm?—No, it is not a hill farm. It is near a hill. The boundary of it is on a hill.

8077. Have you got a sheep-walk?—No, I have not.

8078. You cannot answer any question about sheep then?—No. Somebody else can answer it who has a larger experience.

8079. Then you made some remarks as to extra services in your agreement. Are those extra services ever enforced?—Yes, they are enforced.

8080. Which?—Anything, such as carrying coal or manure, or anything of the kind that may be ready at hand.

8081. You have done so?—I have done so myself.

8082. This year?—Not this year.

8083. Last year?—Yes, last year.

Mr. Seebohm.

8084. Two days ploughing?—No, I did not; not last year. I carted manure.

Lord Kenyon.

8085. For your landlord, I understand; not for yourself?—Yes, for my landlord, or his steward.

8086. Then you made some remarks about farmers' sons having sunk into quarrymen or labourers. Would the extra high wages earned by the quarrymen have any effect on their becoming quarrymen?—I do not know that quarrymen get such high wages. There seem to have been some disputes lately, or great struggle with regard to the wages, which were low.

8087. Yes; but I think the average is about a pound?—I believe it is.

8088. Do you not think that might attract them?—Oh, no; I do not think it is enough to attract them there, or to take them there; but they must go somewhere.

8089. You spoke about the time when you worked yourself. Did you work as a labourer, or as a farmer's son?—As a servant I worked then.

8090. As a servant on another farm, not on your father's farm?—No; on another farm for my wages.

8091. Then you are an instance of a farmer who has risen from a labourer?—Yes, I am.

8092. It is very much to your credit. Can you give me any instance of farmers' sons who have sunk into labourers?—Yes.

8093. Will you give one?—The sons of David Jones, of Dyffryn, near Rhyducha.

8094. They are now working as labourers, are they?—They have grown up, and are farmers now, and have married, all of them.

8095. But have they? I thought you said they had sunk into labourers?—They had been servants.

8096. Then they are not cases of men who had been farmers and had sunk into labourers?—No. They had been servants.

8097. Down and up?—Yes.

8098. You spoke of consolidated farms. Can you give me roughly the area of those consolidated farms? Four, I think, you mentioned?—I do not know for certain the number of acres.

8099. Were they consolidated on account of the other houses falling into ruins?—Yes, many of them.

8100. Were they small, or large farms, or middle-sized farms?—Some farms were very large, some were small, and some were about middle-sized.

8101. Then the consolidated farm must be a very large one, I suppose?—Yes. Many of them are very large, taking them altogether.

8102. No; this one instance that you are talking about I want.—Yes.

8103. It is a very large farm now?—Yes.

8104. Then you have handed in here the table of gross estimated rental in 1893, and the gross estimated rental in 1869, in the parish of Llanycil. Can you tell me how you have got those rentals. This is an estimated rental. It is taken from your own paper (handing document to witness)?—From the assessment of the parish; the parish assessment.

Mr. Seebohm.

8105. And does the parish assessment correspond with the rent?—Yes, as near as they can find out the rent.

Mr. Richard Jones.

8106. Have any farmers been coming to you to borrow money?—Yes.

8107. How many?—I cannot say how many, but they have often been, and I have lent them money too.

8108. Do you know of other farmers who have been appealed to for money?—I have heard of some.

8109. Do you know anything about the farms in the English counties, such as Shropshire and Cheshire?—Very little.

8110. Is there any migration of farmers from this district down into the English counties?—Some whom I know have gone. I know of two.

8111. And how are those doing?—One of them does far better now than he did before going from here.

8112. Then why do not more Welsh farmers go down into the English counties?—I cannot say about that.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

8113. Do you think the Welsh farmers are more attached to their homes than English farmers or Scotch farmers?—Some are.

8114. Can you give any reason why that is so?—No, I cannot give a reason.

8115. Is this clause in the agreement enforced: "Not to keep more than one dog, and "not to allow any dog to be at large, except "when in actual use for the driving of sheep "or cattle"?—I know that the clause is here; I never signed it, and I often use two dogs.

8116. Are those dogs allowed to roam wherever they like?—Yes; they do.

8117. That is with respect to Brondderw or Fedwlwyd?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

8118. Will you kindly tell us, has your landlord allowed you any abatements in your rent?—Yes.

8119. How much?—I think four times; I do not remember quite, but the rent book says.

8120. What percentage?—Ten per cent., except on one occasion when I signed that petition, when I only got five per cent.

8121. We have had these abatements for several years; do you not think it would be reasonable to have a permanent reduction of rents, which would enable you to have your rates lowered?—That is what I want, and that is what we all must have.

8122. You mean all of you must have it?—That is all we must have.

8123. How is it to be obtained?—I hope that all these gentlemen will sympathise with us and allow us to have a Land Bill, and time on our land here, and payment for any improvements when any tenant leaves his farm. That is what I want, if you please.

Chairman.

8124. A number of questions have been handed up. The first, by Mr. Jenkyn Thomas, is, "Is not the ignorance of English on the "part of Welsh farmers a reason why they "do not remove to farms in England?"—I should imagine it is; at any rate it prevents me from going. If I was a good Englishman I would go there.

8125. Then there is a question by Mr. Vincent: "Are these services of carrying coals and "so forth an old custom of the estate, which "is duly mentioned in the agreement?"—It is a custom on the Rhiwlas estate as long as I can remember the Rhiwlas estate, but I cannot say anything with regard to the estate of Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, and that of Pale.

8126. Then a question by Mr. Edward Watkins: "Has any planting taken place on Fedwlwyd "since witness became a tenant on Rhiwlas "estate?"—No.

8127. Then I have a question by Mr. Price: "On whose estate are Cwmtylo and Bron-"dderw?" — Cwmtylo is on Sir Watkin's estate. Brondderw is on the estate of the late Mrs. Anwyl of Eryl Aran.

Chairman—continued.

8128. Here is a question by Mr. W. J. Thomas: "Do the tenants feel that this custom "of carrying, &c., is oppressive?"—I feel that it is oppressive, and I have heard several others say so; I cannot speak for all.

8129. Another question, by Mr. Edward Watkin, is this: "Has not Mr. Davies had a "permanent reduction of 8*l.* per annum, and also "his tithe paid for him before the passing of "the Tithe Act?"—Yes.

8130. Mr. Edward Watkins also sends up this: "Has Mr. Davies got an agreement signed "by Mr. Price, and did he refuse to sign the "counterpart?"—Yes.

8131. Further, "Did Mr. Price not supply "you with pipes for draining to the amount of "about 90*l.*?"—Yes; but I wanted as much again as I got. There is a good deal of land yet which is undrained. According to the agreement, I am to get these pipes, but I have not had them; they have been stopped.

8132. Then, Mr. Owen Wynne asks: "Please "give the names of the four farms of which "Cwm Tylo was composed?"—Maes Mathe Cwm Tylo-ucha, Cwm Tylo Isa, and Ffridd-ddu.

8133. Then Mr. Vincent asks, "Would you "rather pay the money value of the services "required" (I take it that is the carting, and so forth) "than render them?"—I do not mind, because my horses must work in order to earn money in some way or other.

8134. Then Mr. Vincent also asks: "There "having been an agreement between you and "Mr. Watkins as to certain improvements to "be made, is it the fact that some of them have "been made, and other improvements not "specified in the agreement have been made "also?"—No, not one for the other. I was to have had a cowhouse by Bendyucha, but I had it near the house instead.

8135. Mr. Vincent continues: "Is not compensation always paid by Mr. Price when he "takes land for plantation?"—He did not plant any trees on my land.

8136. This is again Mr. Vincent: "Am I "correct in saying, on the instructions of Mr. "Lloyd Price, that your rent in 1885, when you "entered the farm, was 90*l.* plus tithe, that it is "now 82*l.*, and the tithe has been paid by the "landlord without being exacted of the "tenant?"—Yes.

8137. "Have 150*l.* been spent on buildings "on the farm by the landowner?"—I cannot say whether that amount was spent on the buildings, but I heard the landlord's steward say something about this before.

8138. Now I understand you have finished your own evidence, and that you are entrusted with the evidence of five other gentlemen. Are they all tenants on the Rhiwlas estate?—No; only one, unless the last evidence of which I spoke has been found; if so, that makes two.

8139. Will you go on with the evidence as to the four other cases on the Rhiwlas Estate?—

Chairman—continued.

The interpreter translated the following statement of the witness into the Welsh language, and it was afterwards read in English:—

See 16,542*a*.

"Penlan Farm, belonging to R. J. Lloyd Price, Esquire, on the Rhiwlas estate.

"The outbuildings on this farm are in a very poor condition. Eight years ago the farm was let to one Mr. David Roberts, upon the understanding that the house and outbuildings should be repaired. He remained there five years, and the house alone was repaired. The present tenant, Mr. Robert Simon, has been there three years, but he has obtained no further repairs. The roofs are so very poor that the tenant's wife has been known to carry the milk dishes to place on the corn in the barn to catch some of the rain coming in. The house is not provided with any privy or offices."

Evidence with reference to the farms of Cadwaladr Roberts, Tyddyntegid, Bala and Ellis Evans, Tyn-y-ffordd Ucha, Bala:—

"Some years ago the late Mr. Anwyl, of Plas Coch Bala, who is the landlord of the above farms, decided to divide the land belonging to the farm of Tynyffordd-Isaf between the above farms. About 16 acres were added to Tyddyntegid, and 15 acres to Tynyffordd Ucha. The rent of Tyddyntegid, which was previously 25*l*., was raised to 45*l*., and the rent of Tynyffordd Ucha was raised 12*l*. Both of these tenants state that they have had considerable difficulty to pay their rent, and to meet their liabilities. Mr. Evans of Tynyffordd has had two sons and a daughter working at home; they have never received any wages, and he has been unable to save any money during the whole time he was there."

Evidence with reference to John Edwards, Ty Cerrig Ucha, Parc, near Bala.

"John Edwards is the tenant of Ty Cerrig Ucha, a farm of 60 acres, part of which is mountain waste, and the rest extremely damp.

John Edwards took his farm in the year 1882 from Mr. Robert Evans, of Talybont, Parc, for 35*l*. rent. The agreement was a verbal one. Tenancy from year to year. The landlord undertook to supply 1,000 draining pipes yearly so long as the tenant required them, and also to build new pig-styes. The first year he gave 1,000 pipes, and the second year 500, since which time he has refused to supply any further quantity. As the land is very damp and requires draining, this refusal of the landlord has caused serious loss to John Edwards. Beyond this, the landlord has all along declined to give Edwards a reduction in his rent, or even to allow him any abatement.

The landlord has never built the pig-styes which he promised. Edwards states that notwithstanding all his exertions, and the fact that a son and grandson of his work at home without wages, he is gradually going back in the world.

Fourteen years ago the rent of this farm was 18*l*., in 1880 it was valued with a view to selling it, and the rent was raised to 28*l*., then, after the present landlord bought it, he raised the rent to 35*l*."

Ysgubor gerig, on the estate of the late Mr. Anwyl of Plas Coch.

"The farm of Ysgubor gerig consists of two parts, 15 acres of land near the house, and 15 acres about a mile off. There are no buildings whatsoever on the upper part, and the land is of an extremely poor character. Forty-two years ago the rent of this farm was 24*l*.; it was subsequently raised to 28*l*., and its present rent is 35*l*. The present tenant is an old man over 60 years of age. He and his wife are compelled to work the farm by themselves the greater part of the year, as they are unable to pay for labour."

Y Foel, belonging to Colonel E. Evans Lloyd.

"This small tenement barely measures 3 acres, and at best maintains only one cow. The rent is 7*l*. 10*s*. The house has no privy or offices. There is no pig-stye, and the pigs and cow are together in the cow-house, which is separated from the house merely by a thin partition, through which the stench comes, and renders the house quite unfit for anyone to live there. The roof of the house is so poor that the sky is visible through it, and it is dangerous for anyone to walk along the upstairs room. When the tenant complains, the only answer his landlord gives is, 'Give it up; I can get more for it.'"

8140. Are all these instances cases which have been given in to you and vouched for by the tenant?—Yes, they are.

Chairman.

The Commission instructs the Secretary to send particulars of all these cases at once to the landlords.

Mr. Richard Jones.

8141. Is there any complaint about game on the Rhiwlas estate?—Yes, very great complaints on the Rhiwlas Estate, exceptional complaints in fact.

8142. Has there any land been taken to form rabbit warrens?—Yes.

8143. Have those warrens been enclosed by netting?—Yes, many of them.

8144. Where do these rabbits feed?—Many of them get their food from the adjoining farms.

8145. Do the tenants avail themselves of the Ground Game Act to shoot the rabbits?—I do not think any of the tenants—not a single tenant—shoots them.

8146. Why do they not?—I believe that they are too much afraid of the keepers and of Mr. Price.

8147. Has Mr. Price ever informed the tenants that they are at liberty to shoot the rabbits?—I do not know that Mr. Price has said that they are at liberty to shoot the rabbits; he has never told me.

8148. Are you aware that you can shoot them?—Yes, I am.

8149. Do you exercise that right?—There is nothing worth shooting where I live.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

8150. Do those tenants who are troubled by rabbits take any other means of keeping them down, if they do not shoot them?—I believe they do.

8151. What did they do with the rabbits?—They caught them in nets, and so on.

8152. Do they sell the rabbits they catch?—They sell some, and they eat the others.

8153. Is there any complaint about pheasants?—I heard exceptional complaints last year, but they do not trouble me.

Chairman.

8154. There is a question put in by Mr. Price: "Will the witness kindly state how "many of the farmers he has referred to in "his evidence are tenants on the Rhiwlas "estate?"—Two.

8155. "How long has the present tenant of "Ysgubor gerig been there?"—I do not know whether next time it will be four or five years.

Chairman—continued.

8156. "Was any advance on the previous "rent made when took it?"—No, I do not think so.

8157. "Has not the rent been subsequently reduced"?—I heard that it was reduced during these last days.

8158. "And abatements made at different times"?—Yes; he has been giving abatements on his estate.

8159. Then as to Tyn y ffordd, "has not the "rent been twice reduced in the last 10 years, "in addition to temporary abatements?"—I do not think that it has been reduced; I do not know for certain.

8160. "As to Tyddyntegid, has not the tenant "had abatements made several times?"—He has had abatements, but no reduction; he told me that himself, unless he has had a reduction during these last few days.

Re-examined. 16,450.

The witness withdrew.

(As the witness withdrew there was considerable applause by people in the hall.)

Chairman.

I wish it to be distinctly understood that the Commissioners are most anxious to have all evidence taken in open court. It is our great interest that everybody should know as much about what we are doing as possible; but if any manifestations of approval or disapproval are made, with the sanction of my brother Commissioners I shall have the court cleared and the doors shut.

Chairman—continued.

(A similar announcement was made in Welsh.)

Mr. John Jones (of Troed y banc) called and examined (through an interpreter).

Chairman.

8161. In giving your evidence will you just answer only as to the game, and give us as succinctly and intelligibly as possible what is your case about the game on the Rhiwlas estate?—I give some evidence in my statement as to game on the Bodweni estate during the time I was there.

8162. That is not on Mr. Price's estate?—No.

8163. Will you confine your evidence, please, to Mr. Price's estate at Rhiwlas.

The interpreter translated the following statement to the witness into the Welsh language, and it was afterwards read in English:—

See 16,332.

"In the year 1885 I took a farm, called Tyn y celyn, from Mr. Edward Watkin, the agent on the Rhiwlas estate. The rent was 48*l.*, or 2*l.* less than my predecessor paid. He had become a bankrupt, and when I entered I undertook to pay Mr. Price 80*l.*, which was the amount he owed him. One thing which had ruined him was the game nuisance, and very soon after I went there I made a wire fence partly round my fields so as to protect myself against the rabbits and other game coming from the woods around.

"During the years I was at Tyn y celyn I lost two dogs and a large number of cats, with the result that the rats increased to an enormous extent. Traps were always being set in the woods and animals strayed into these.

"On the Rhiwlas estate the Ground Game Act has been of very little good. By that Act we can only kill them on our own land, whereas the woods around and in the middle of the farms swarm with rabbits and it is from these that we suffer most. Further, Mr. Price has always objected to our shooting them. (See Appendix for extract from circular.)

See 16,37

"Another cause of loss to the Rhiwlas tenants is the way in which pheasants are scattered through the woods on the estate. They are reared, in the first instance, near the hall, and afterwards they are taken to the various woods. From there they get over the cornfields and potato fields and cause considerable damage.

"In September 1886 I gave notice, but as no tenant was forthcoming I stayed on till 1888. In 1888 I retook the farm and signed an agreement. The rent was then reduced to 44*l.* In the following September I gave notice as I was unable to pay my way. It was let to another person, the rent being reduced to 36*l.*, and he being promised certain repairs and a fence. He has received the fence, but I understood that the other repairs have not been carried out.

"I left in March 1889, and have since then been working upon various farms in the district."

Chairman.

8164. The Commissioners are much obliged to you for your evidence, but do not propose to cross-examine upon it. Mr. Price puts one question to you: "Are not the rabbits on "Llanercheryr adjoining Bodwenni wired-in, so "that they cannot feed on or injure the Bod- "wenni, or any other land adjoining, and is "not this also the case with the other warrens "in which rabbits are kept on the Rhiwlas "estate."—Yes, it is so.

Chairman—continued.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined, 16,623.

Mr. Richard John Lloyd Price called and examined.

Chairman.

8165. You have heard the evidence of Mr. Thomas Davies and Mr. John Jones. We do not propose at this late hour to ask you to go through the whole of your evidence-in-chief. Would you be kind enough to state anything that you wish to say upon the evidence of those two gentlemen, either on the working of the estate or on the game point?—I propose to give my evidence in detail, my Lord. With regard to the questions on the syllabus supplied to me by your Secretary, to which I have prepared answers, I would rather commence at the beginning and go right through.

8166. You see we have only got half-an-hour and five minutes?—Will you let me go as far as I can.

8167. We are entirely in your hands, and, of course, we will do exactly as you wish. Shall we go straight through it?—I should prefer it. I shall finish at Barmouth, or anywhere you like, at any other time that will be convenient.

8168. Where do you wish to begin?—At the commencement of the syllabus.

8169. You own the Rhiwlas estate, which is situate in this county?—Yes, in Merioneth and Denbighshire. I give particular evidence touching the Rhiwlas estate. The acreage of which is about 17,890 acres in Merioneth, enclosed land, and about 68 in Denbighshire, divided into about 164 holdings. The rent of the sheep-walks is included in the farm rents. The estate is held in fee simple, and the average rental is 9*s.* 4*d.* per acre. My tenants have right of sheep-runs on mountain land or commons. The tenants of Tanygarth and Pandyisa pasture their sheep on the Garthgoch, Nantybarcut, Caepoeth, and Plasynghynllwyd, pasture on the Aran; Coedladyr, and Afonfechan pasture on the Berwyn; Rhydyfen, Maesdail, and Nantyllyn and others on Arenig-Bach; Coedybedo, Llwynybrain, and others on Moeldaran, Llaithgwyn; and many others on Moelemoel. Over a hundred of my tenants have sheep-walks on mountain land on this estate, which right is invested in me. I have also, as has been stated, applied certain portions of mountain and pasture land to fencing in with wire for the purpose of turning into rabbit warrens, but as they cannot get out they cannot eat the farmers' crops. The usual date of entry is the 25th day of March, but provisions are made for the incoming tenant to enter for the purpose of cultivating on the 1st day of February. Farms on the Rhiwlas estate are let from year to year. There are no demands that I have heard of for leases. They would be granted if desired. One was granted to the "White Lion Hotel," in Bala, or there was a renewal rather, I should say. If tenants wanted leases, I presume they would ask for them. Changes on my estate have been less frequent during the last 10 years than the previous 10 years. From 1873 to 1883 there have been 48 changes, whereas from 1883 to 1893 only about 30 cases of removals, an average of three per annum. Thirteen removed to other farms, of whom eight went to bigger ones and some to smaller ones.

Chairman—continued.

8170. On the same estate?—On the same estate. Seven gave up farming. I am only giving evidence regarding my own estate.

8171. But do you mean leaving your estate, or moving from one farm on your estate to another farm on your estate?—No; moving from one farm on my estate to a bigger one—better ones. We look upon bigger farms as better ones; perhaps it may not be right.

Chairman.

8171*a.* Will you proceed with your instances?—Seven gave up farming altogether, namely, Thomas Davies, Ffriddfoel, a bachelor, and getting advanced in age, retired; Mrs. Laura Roberts, of Greigwen, widow, of old age, retired; Mr. W. Owen, Vachdeliog, gave up on the expiration of his lease, and would not renew; Mr. John Jones, of Tynycelyn, bachelor, retired; Mr. Simon Jones, Tyisa Bryndu, gave up farming, and, in fact, he went to be a gamekeeper somewhere else, I think; Messrs. R. Evans and brother, of Hafodtudur, retired—they would be joint tenants: Mr. Rowland Edward, of Penmaenfawr, widower, and of old age, also retired, but he is living on the property still. Four tenants partially failed. I am giving you the whole history of the estate. The tenant of Cwmonen was not managing in a proper way, but is still a tenant at Brynpader, a small farm on the Rhiwlas estate. The tenant at Hafodfawr was a non-economical farmer. He was not a good farmer the real English of it would be. The tenant of Bwlchytyno was ditto—not managing in a proper way. The tenant of Brynpader, a widow, and not able to manage that farm, which was too large for her, but is now a tenant at Refailisa, a small farm on my estate. There were five failure cases who have left the estate during the 10 years ending Lady Day, 1893. A tenant at Gloig through carelessness and drunkenness. A tenant at Penrallt, dead now, not managing in a proper way. A tenant at Cwmbethel, of carelessness, and some discontent in family circle. A tenant at Fedwlwyd not managing in a proper way, and a tenant at Carregyddafad the same. There has been one eviction case—at least so we had an eviction described yesterday by a witness as the turning of a man out neck and crop; that is the acceptation, I suppose, of the term now—in the case of a tenant at Berthlafar for bad husbandry, caused mostly by drunkenness and unthriftiness. Then I have a list of tenants who have failed, and yet were allowed to go on on their respective farms after failure. Mr. Robert Williams, at Brynpader, David Rowlands, at Penmaenucha, Mr. William Jones, at Rhydelisa, Robert Edwards, at Caehowel, Mr. Edward Davies, at Brynbanon, who failed by giving surety for his brother, an artificial manure agent. Twenty-three tenants died during the last 10 years, and were succeeded by either widow, sons, daughters, or other relations, as nephews or nieces, &c. I always endeavour, if possible, to keep the farms in the hands of families born and bred on the estate. The tenant of Coegnant died, and was succeeded by her granddaughter. The tenant of Crynierth Bach died, and was succeeded by his widow and son. The tenant of Erwfeirig died, and was succeeded by daughter. The tenant of Defeitty died, and is succeeded by son. The tenant of Garneddlwyd died, and was succeeded by his daughter and grandson. The tenant of Gelli isa died, and was succeeded by his widow and sons. The tenant of Hafodnwydog died, and is succeeded by his widow and son. The tenant of Gwernadda died, and is succeeded by son. The tenant of Llwyniolyn died, and is succeeded by son. The tenant of Llawrycwm died, and is succeeded by her nephew. The tenants of Tyisa Llwyreinon (parents) died, and are succeeded by children. The tenant of Tycerrig died, and is succeeded by niece. At Tynywern both father and mother died, and are succeeded by children, the eldest being 19. At Nantyllyn parents died, and are succeeded by daughter. At Pentre parents died, and are succeeded by son. At Tynyffridd tenant died, and is succeeded by his widow and sons. At Tynycelyn tenant died, and is succeeded by daughter. At Tynybryn parents died, and were succeeded by children. At Tyddynbychan parents died, and were succeeded by children. At Tyucha parents died, and are succeeded by son. At Pentre Cwm parents died, and are succeeded by son. At Tytanyberllan, Denbighshire, tenant died, and is succeeded by son. These are the agreements in use on the estate, and I should like to put them in for the information of the Commission. They are in blank. [The witness handed in two copies of the agreements.]

8172. Are they both the same?—One is in English and one in Welsh. Eight farms on my estate were disunited and made into 16 holdings during the last 10 years, namely, Gorseddan from Pentre. Llwyngwgan from Coedybedo, Efailisa from Brynpader, Greigwen from Hafodyresgobiso, Penmaenganol from Tynant, Tomengastell from Carregybig, Tycerrig Cwm from Hafodyresgobucha, Rhydolwen from Llwyngwgan. Seventeen labourers or workmen were put in farm holdings for the first time during the said last ten years. William Hughes, a farm labourer in Tynypistill; Robert Jones, a labourer in Bryndu Taiisa; Robert Arthur in Hafodtudur, Peter Roberts in Gingefail, William Williams in the Cottage Farm, Robert Simon in Penlan, Jacob Jones in Rhydolwen, John Jones in Creigiauisa, Pierce Davies, a joiner in Bwlchytyno; John Watkin, a carpenter, in Tynant Brynbanon; George Owen in Tynycelyn, William Williams, farm labourer, in Coegnant; John Jones in Murglas, David Humphrey in Maesbyllan, John Roberts in Tomengastell, John Roberts in Gorseddau, Edward Jones in Tynllyn. Notices are given and compensation is given, when land is taken for planting, building, or for other purposes. When damage has been done to the land in timber cutting compensation has been given. We also make a practice of giving compensation if any mining, brickfields, quarries, or other industrial operations are commenced on land in a tenant's occupation, and we shall do so in the future. I have already produced a copy of my agreement.

Professor Rhŷs.

8173. In English and Welsh?—In English and Welsh.

Chairman.

8173*a*. Are penalising clauses common, and are they often enforced?—There are some clauses that might be taken to be of that nature in the agreements, but they are never enforced. Tenants are always supplied with a copy of the agreement in their own tongue, whether it be English or Welsh. The rents are generally fixed at a gross sum. As to whether there is any uniformity in the rents of land of similar qualities on the same or neighbouring estates, I am not quite sure that I am competent to answer that question, my Lord. We think there is, but still some places might be a little higher or lower than others of similar size or quality.

8174. We will pass that by?—We have no instances of tenants grumbling because other tenants holding land of similar quality are rated more cheaply. So evidently uniformity exists on the Rhiwlas estate, but I cannot speak as to other estates. The rent of the smaller tenantry is generally higher per acre than on larger farms, for the following reasons. First, because they are of selected portions of land, and consequently the best of that locality. Secondly, the outlay on house and other building is more in comparison than on larger farms I will give you some specimens of what the usual rent of average lands of different qualities are in my district, e.g., on upland and lowland farms.

Defaidty	344 „	146*l.* „ 8*s.* 6*d.*	„

Average rent of lowland farms is 24*s.* 6*d.* per acre, while the average rent of upland farms is only 7*s.* 5*d.* per acre.

The right of pasture over a common is taken into account by both parties where there is a right invested in the owner of the estate. As to services, other than payment of rent, there is an old custom of doing two days' (duty) work for the landlord once a year during their tenancy as per agreement. The clause is, "To do two days' work annually during the "tenancy for the landlord, with one man, cart, "and two horses, without charge. The days to "be fixed by landlord." Estimated value, 10*s.* to 12*s.* a year. I am asked if I consider it irksome, and I say not in the least. If the tenant cannot easily attend on the day requested of him he is excused until it is convenient for him to attend. The old agreements will show this, or any of the old tenants can be called on the subject, if wished. It is an old custom on this estate, and has been for, I believe, hundreds of years. The rent is fixed partly on the basis of valuation, but most generally by proposal and private treaty between the landlord and the tenant personally, or through the agent. When a farm becomes vacant the farming qualifications of the applicant is the first thing taken into consideration, and so the farm is practically not let to the highest bidder. Religious opinions are not considered one way or the other. Arbitration in few instances has been resorted to in readjusting the rent, as when some portions of land have been severed or resumed for rabbit farming, &c., as at Tynyffridd, Tynybryn, and Cynlasfawr for completing a warren. I may state that as regards that warren referred to, which is called the College Warren, two valuers met, one appointed by the tenant and one appointed by myself, and they failed to agree, and instead of calling in an umpire, as they were entitled to do by the agreement, the tenants mutually agreed to make me the umpire, and referred the matter to myself, and I decided the question, and they were quite satisfied. In fact, I gave them the tenants' valuer's valuation; I thought that was the fairest thing to do. The rents were raised about the year 1877 from a gross rental of 9,060*l.* to 10,579*l.*, or about 1,518*l.* of increase, being an average of about 17 per cent. nearly. Temporary abatements have been given; in the year 1885 lime was given to the value of 5*l.* per cent., and during the years 1886 and 1887 about 10 per cent. was returned nearly to all who paid their rent. Also the tithe has been paid for all the tenants on this estate for about three or four years before it became compulsory. That is to say, we paid the tithe on the estate before it was thought that it would ever become law to do so, and about 400*l.* interest, &c. is paid per annum on money borrowed from the Land Improvement Society and spent in drainage and improvements on the estate. In the year 1888 a permanent reduction was made generally all over the estate of nearly 18 per cent. The raising of rents was done after a valuation but the reduction was done on a mutual agreement between the landlord and tenant. The chief fluctuations in prices affecting the rent have been observed in the sale prices of store cattle, bullocks, sheep, and wool, &c. upon which the Welsh farmer almost entirely depends for his living, and high railway rates preventing small farmers from distributing produce in small quantities. The rent is usually paid in three months after the half-year's rent becomes due, that is, the first half-year's rent becomes due on the 27th day of September, and is paid at Christmas next following, or nine months after the taking on the 25th March previously, and then every six months.

See 7973, 16,915.

Mr. Grove.

8175. So that there is three months then from the end of each half year?—Yes.

Chairman.

8176. What effect has the preferential claim for rent on the position of tenants generally?—That I take to mean the power of distraint. I am not sure that I am right in this. It makes no difference with a tenant of good principle. It would depend upon the landlord and agent's opinion of the tenant from a business point of view. Supposing that this right of distraint did not exist in law, to my mind it would depend upon the landlord and agent's opinion of the tenant from a business point of view. Certain tenants would be trusted and others would not, supposing there was no such thing as distraint for rent. I believe that is the meaning of the question. I puzzled over it for a long time before I could find out what it did mean. As to other charges on land or on incomes derived from land, the tithe is paid by the owner, the land tax is paid by the occupier or tenant, the chief or Crown rents by the landlord, the local rates are paid by the tenant if his yearly rent exceeds 10*l.* per annum. Income tax is paid by the owner.

8177. I am afraid, Mr. Price, I must now interrupt you. Our time has almost come to an end, but you may continue your evidence when we return to the district. I am very sorry we could not take your evidence right through to-day?—I shall resume where I have left off to-night.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

8178. May I ask if this form of agreement, which you have handed in, is the form now in force?—Yes, it is the existing one.

Adjourned to Dolgelly.

Mr. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.

Mr. OWEN SLANEY WYNNE called and examined.

Chairman.

8179. Would you kindly tell us where you live?—At Doluwcheogryd, near Dolgelly.

8180. I believe you were for 16 years the principal agent to Sir Watkin Wynn on the Wynnstay estate?—I was nearly 17 years in all.

8181. On your retirement I believe the tenantry presented you with a portrait of yourself as a token of the cordial relations which existed between you?—Yes.

8182. You have prepared a brief, I believe, to assist us?—Yes.

8183. Would you just kindly give us what you consider the most important points. I do not propose to ask any questions on it, but kindly give the Commissioners what you consider the most important portions of your statement?—I will go through it as quickly as I can. I should like to devote a little attention to it, as it has taken a great deal of time and much trouble in preparing it, although I will not take long. I wish to give evidence, I may say shortly, as a retired land agent and estate auditor of nearly 30 years standing, and I wish to give evidence based on an experience gained in Merionethshire, Montgomeryshire, Denbighshire, Flintshire, and Shropshire, and in over 60 different parishes, as follows: Llanbadarn, Llanidloes, Llangurig, Llandinam, Trefeglwys, Caersws, Carno, Llanerfyl, Llanbrynmair, Dylife, Penegoes, Darowen, Cemmaes, Llanwrin, Machynlleth, Llangadfau Garthbeibio, Llanfair, Llanfihangel, Llanfyllyn, Hirnant, Pennant, Llanwddyn, Llanrhaiadr, Llangedwyn, Llansilin, Llanarmon, M.M., Llanarmon, D.C., Ruabon, Wrexham, Llangadwaladr, Rhydycroesau, Llangollen, Gwersyllt, Gresford, Llanarmon-yn-Yale, Ruthin, Holt, Llantisilio, Llanfwrog, Llanbedr, Llanynys, Llanfawr, Llanderfyl, Llan-y-cil, Llanuwchllyn, Trawsfynydd, Llangower, Llanegryn, Llanfihangel-y-Pennant, Llangelynin, Towyn Merioneth, Mallwyd, Dolgelley, Llanaber, Bangor, M., Overton, Erbistock, Ysceifiog, Halkin, Cilcain, Dyserth, Nannerch, Oswestry,

St. Martins, Penmachno. Those are the parishes in which I have gained some experience in estate work. There was a question as to the rights of pasture over sheep runs. Some of the sheep walks are still unenclosed, but not many, and the boundaries are generally well known. They are not fit for cultivation, in fact, it would be money thrown away. The right of pasture over these sheep walks belongs to the farms lying in the valleys, or lower down, and they are subject to the payment of rent as is the farm. The number of sheep the walk will carry is well known but not always adhered to. Of course, a farm with a sheep walk is worth more than one without, and is rented accordingly. There has generally been a great demand for these sheep walks, and I have frequently wished I had more to let. On Estate No. 1, hereafter referred to, miles of these sheep walks in Montgomeryshire were enclosed with wire fences, thus saving great labour in shepherding. There is a disposition on the part of a "strong" farmer to overcrowd his sheep walk, but it is a great mistake, as it only leads to disputes and bad feeling, and the sheep deteriorate in meat and wool. I have had many such disputes to settle, and it frequently requires much tact. Of course where they are once fenced no further disputes can arise, and if the walk is overstocked the tenant alone suffers. I do not think any very decisive opinion can be expressed, but personally I am inclined to think that the larger estates are best managed. And no doubt it is a benefit to the estate that the owner should reside on it for some part of the year at least. As to whether one is better managed than the other, I do not think I can give any decided opinion. Some small estates are very well managed, but I think, as a rule, on the whole the larger estates are managed the best. I do not think that any difference of language, politics, or religion, has anything to do with the management of an estate. It is never allowed to interfere with the management. Such differences never stood between the landlord or agent and the tenant as regards eligibility for a farm. I know most of the agents in North Wales, and as a rule they are practical men, and experienced in the supervision of agricultural land. For my own part, I began the supervision of an estate soon after I was one and twenty. I refer to the presentation which was made, to which you kindly referred, my Lord, merely to show that as a rule I think tenants and agents get on very well together. The usual date of entry is the 25th March, but the incoming tenant has possession of the land he wants to cultivate on the 2nd February, and the outgoing tenant retains the house and a boozy pasture until 12th May. In Flintshire they usually enter on 30th November. The farms are let from year to year; there are practically no leases. There is no demand at all for leases. I cannot recall ever having had an application for one, and it is very fortunate for the occupiers at the present time that they have not got them. They never ask for a lease, and I do not think they would care to be bound for a long period to pay the whole of a fixed rent; at present they get liberal reductions, which as leaseholders they certainly would not obtain. I have no experience of leaseholders, and therefore I cannot say whether their farming is superior or the contrary to that of yearly tenants. I think there are rather more changes than there used to be, but there is not much difference; frequently a change takes place either through death or because the tenant goes into a larger farm. No cases of hardship have arisen that I am aware of. There is a clause in the agreements providing for the landlords resuming possession of land for planting, and compensation is also provided for, and is always given, as is also done if any mining, brickfields, quarries, or other industrial operations are commenced on land in a tenant's occupation. I put in my brother's agreement because I know he is going to give evidence to-morrow.

See 8187 (Wynnstay Estate.)

8184. Is it in English and Welsh as well?—No, he has not any Welsh copies I think. I am not aware that any of the clauses are considered oppressive, and I do not think that they affect the cultivation at all either one way or the other. The tenant generally goes on in his own way quite regardless of any agreement, in fact, it never troubles his head. I can say that for certain. There are penalising clauses in almost all agreements, but they are never enforced, and they are merely put in to provide against a very bad tenant. I may add that I never remember a case of having to put an agreement in as against a tenant, in all my experience.

"Are tenants usually given a copy of the "agreement or lease, or, if Welsh speaking, are "their contents explained to them?"—Yes, always signed by the landlord or his agent, and if asked for the contents are explained. They generally put them in their pocket and go home, I do not know whether they ever look them over or not—I very much doubt if they do. The rent is usually fixed at a gross sum, but of course in making a valuation we put it as so much per acre, and I cannot see that it matters to the tenant which it is, as if it is on a gross sum it is easily worked out at so much per acre. There is generally uniformity in the rents of lands of similar quality on the same or neighbouring estates. The small places, I think, as a rule, are rather higher rented than the large ones, but, on the other hand, the cost of building and repairs and so on to the landlord of these small places is quite out of proportion to the rent paid. I do not see how you can get what is the usual rent of average lands of different qualities on upland and lowland farms. Of course there are a great many rights of pasturage over the hills and so on, and they are always taken into account when the rent is settled. There are some services in some of the agreements, for instance, in my brother's agreement the tenant is expected to carry coal and keep a dog. I may say that for over a generation now the condition of keeping a dog has never been enforced at all.

8185. Do they keep any foxhounds there?—My brother is not a master of foxhounds. I never heard that the services were irksome. We generally arrange the carrying of coal to suit the convenience of the tenant. I may say the large tenants carry about 10 tons and the small tenants carry about, I think, 1 ton. The rent is sometimes fixed on the basis of a valuation, but generally by private arrangement. Then the question is put: "In the latter case is the "holding practically let to the highest bidder? Certainly not; no such practice is customary, and it is always considered that a fair rent is fixed. I think that the continuance of families generation after generation, is a sufficient proof of this. We always endeavour, if possible, to ascertain a tenant's means before he is accepted. Sometimes I have resorted to arbitration as a means of settling or readjusting the rent, and frequently I have called in an impartial valuer. In individual cases rents have been raised a little, and in other cases lowered.—On the whole, I think the rents are very much the same as they were 50 years ago. There have been a great many permanent reductions and frequent temporary abatements of rent, and a great many allowances of different kinds. I mean allowances for manure and so forth—5 to to 15 per cent. has been given back. I do not know whether I need quote them, but they were:—

Lady Day, 1885	5 per cent.
Lady Day, 1886	12½ per cent.
Michaelmas, 1886	10 per cent.
Lady Day, 1887	10 per cent.
Lady Day, 1888	12½ per cent.
Michaelmas, 1888	10 per cent.
Lady Day, 1889	10 per cent.
Lady Day, 1890	5 per cent.
Lady Day, 1892	5 per cent.
Michaelmas, 1892	15 per cent.
Lady Day, 1893	15 per cent.

And, in addition, many other allowances have been made in money or land in individual cases. They usually know about a fortnight beforehand, but I do not see what difference this can make. When rents are raised or reduced the change does not always depend on a revaluation. If so, some independent valuer is called in. The position of the farm and the capabilities of the land are the chief points in adjusting the rent. As to the chief fluctuations in prices affecting rent within the last 50 years, I cannot answer the question very fully, but when I was a boy, 40 years ago, mutton was 5*d.* per lb. to 5½*d.* in this district. Beef, 6*d.* Geese, 2*s.* 6*d.* per couple. Ducks, 2*s.* 6*d.* per couple. Chickens, 2*s.* per couple, and I once knew 48 fresh eggs purchased for 1*s.*; 36 to 40 you could easily get. This, of course, was before the advent of railways. Cattle and sheep were selling very low, and all of them had to be driven into England to find a market. Horses were less than half the price now obtained. There was a witness yesterday who gave very much the same evidence at Bala as to 35 years ago. He said the things at that time were extraordinarily low; that is very much about the time I quote. The rent is usually paid three to four months after it falls due. For instance, if it falls due at Lady Day, it is paid about June or July, and the Michaelmas rent is paid about Christmas. All rates and taxes are usually paid by the occupier, except tithe and income tax, but the tithe is generally added to rent. Everybody knows the law on that subject, I think, at present. Local rates have increased considerably, especially education and sanitary rates. The increase is borne by the occupier. As to the average size of farms in the district, they vary so much I cannot say; most of the farms are of moderate size, a great number very small. As far as my experience goes there has been but little consolidation of farms. I think there has been in times gone by a certain amount of consolidation, and I may say I have myself consolidated some farms, as I have known instances where two farmhouses were in one farmyard. I know of several such instances, and in those cases if one farmhouse was in a bad state I managed to find some other place for one tenant and consolidated them. On the other hand, I have divided one into several holdings in the parish of Llanuwchllyn, sometime back. Sheep walks have sometimes been given to a lowland farm, which did not possess one before. As I have said before, at one time there was a great demand for these sheep walks, and I think there is still. The subletting of a holding is not permitted by the agreement. They do sublet sometimes and the landlord winks at it, but as a rule it is not allowed. I think the very small farms produce in proportion more than the large ones. I may say in some cases one farm is well managed, and in the next farm over the very hedge crops will be poor and dirty. It all depends upon the farmer. And I think in times of trade depression small occupiers fare better than those in the large farms, because they labour elsewhere generally, and are not entirely dependent on their farm for their support, and the small farm is a great assistance in helping them to provide for their families. The nature of the farming is much alike, but the state of cultivation varies greatly. I think labourers are not scarce generally, but their scarcity or otherwise has no effect on the fences, ditches, or watercourses, which on very few farms are properly attended to, although by the agreement they should be. I know of no land going out of cultivation. I know of very little waste land reclaimed by tenants. It would not pay, I think, to cultivate waste land. I have seen it done in some instances and it is not profitable. It costs an enormous lot to do, and if you were not careful the waste land would go back to its original state immediately. On one estate which I just now referred to, something like 13,000*l.* was spent by the owner, for which he gets no return. The owner in that case is my brother. A large part of the above sum was spent in embanking the river. A little more land has been laid down to pasture—I may say a great deal more—generally by the tenant, but sometimes he has seeds given him. The root crops have rather increased, and there is more attention paid to them. In this country there are some of the very best roots this year, but the early ones are a little bit inclined to go to mildew. However, there is an exceedingly good crop this year, and the effect of the agricultural shows has been very much to encourage the growing of root crops. There is little or no fallowing done here. The probable cause for laying down more land to grass was to save labour, which has increased in value, and to have less corn, which has decreased in value, and as a rule store stock has sold well. The landlords do almost all the improvements, such as buildings, drainage, repairs, &c., &c. The tenants do but few, but they carry for the new buildings or repairs, but if a tenant happens to leave not long after he has carried to new building he is compensated, and in the case of small and weak tenants, either the carriage is done for them or they are given an allowance for it. One witness yesterday said he acknowledged he had had a large house built for him. I built it, and it cost about 800*l.* I forgot to observe at the time and he did not say anything about it, that he was repaid over 100*l.* at once for the carriage to his house. The drainage is generally done by the landlord. In some cases interest is charged, and in some cases the landlord finds pipes and the tenant does the work. Buildings for stock are almost invariably put up by the landlord but the tenant does the haulage. There are no tanks for liquid manure. If protected from river encroachment it is done by the landlord. Thousands of pounds were spent on some estates near Towyn with no return. Gates and posts are provided by the landlord, and sometimes wire is given for fencing and posts. 2*s.* or 2*s.* 6*d.*, or some small sum is charged for the gates, and a quantity of lime is very frequently given by the landlord. I have known a great many cases of that. There is frequently some co-operation in improvements. For instance, in the fencing of sheep walks, in some cases, wire was found by the tenants as well as the labour, and the posts by the landlords, and in other cases wire and posts have been found by the landlord and the tenant puts them down. No remuneration is secured to the landlord, but the tenant can get compensation under his agreement. There is, in some cases, on some estates, an agreement by which the tenant is compensated for his improvements. When I was connected with the property I mentioned just now, I provided compensation clauses in the agreement, which compensation clauses there are still. Very many landlords and tenants contract out of clause 33 of the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883, but it is not legal to contract out of the rest of the Act—some tenants seem to think it is—with the exception, I think it is, of clause 55, which says that if there are clauses providing fair compensation then those clauses shall override the Act. I think that is the law. I have never received any application from a tenant for the landlord's written consent to a specific improvement. I cannot say why, unless it is that they usually expect any improvements to be done for them by the landlord. Such consent would be readily given if asked for. In 1875 I brought out, after great trouble and thought, compensating clauses in the agreements on the estates with which I was then connected, together with a printed form of certificate, but from that time to this I have never but once been asked for one of these forms. I may add that these compensating clauses are mentioned in Mr. Willis Bund's book on the Agricultural Holdings Act, page 180, and he says: "These "examples will show, that although the Agri- "cultural Holdings Act, 1875, has been almost "universally excluded, yet in different parts of "the country liberal provisions have been made "by agreement to compensate the tenant for "his outlay or improvement, often giving him "far more than was given him by the Act of "1875, and even than is given by the Act of "1883." There is very little observance of any custom in this locality, but it is usual for the outgoing tenant to have his interest in the growing crops of wheat, viz., two-thirds, and be allowed for clover or grass seeds sown the preceding year if not grazed. This county I may say is not a wheat-growing county, except about Corwen and Towyn. I know of no cases myself where a tenant has complained of not getting sufficient compensation for his improvements. I have on two or three occasions given compensation for the general improvements of a farm. I cannot remember the instances now, but I have given compensation where a man has gone from a farm for some reason or other, and he has left it in a generally improved condition.

Chairman—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

8186. Did I clearly understand you to say that in your experience there are not many instances of any custom of the country in North Wales?—There is very little what is called "custom of the country" about here. The mountain sheep on sheep walks are always taken by the landlord or incoming tenant. A valuer is nominated on either side, and the valuers appoint an umpire, whose decision is final. The price for sheep so valued is usually a few shillings a head above the ordinary market price of mountain sheep. That is invariably the custom in this part of the country. I have no experience of the working of the Agricultural Holdings Act in the district with which I am acquainted. I have never had any claim under it, and it appears to be a dead letter and of no use. There are rabbits on some estates with which I was acquainted, and a few hares, and some other game. Tenants do avail themselves of the Ground Game Act, I should say, and there are hardly any hares left on the estates with which I am connected. You would not find one now where there were 20 formerly, and I think hares will soon become extinct. As regards rabbits, the landlords and tenants both kill them, and it is now impossible to preserve them, except in the warrens. I do not think very much damage has been done on the estates which I know by game to the crops, and if any damage is done, compensation is given. The tenants are not expected to "beat" coverts, &c. when their landlords go out shooting, but the tenant of the farm on which the shooting is going on almost always comes out to see the sport. Beaters, farm and other labourers are always hired, for which they are usually paid 2*s.* or 2*s.* 6*d.* per day and their dinner, and frequently a meal after the day is over as well. I have no experience of estates on which game is preserved to such an extent as to be really injurious to cultivation. Occasionally a crop may be a little damaged, but, as I stated before, compensation is paid. From my experience game preserving does not affect the relations between landlord and tenant at all, and I know many tenants who are pleased if their landlord has good sport on their farm. It does not affect the labourers at all. I think the worst poachers are frequently to be found where there is least game. The public generally benefit by game being preserved, as they are able to purchase it at a cheap rate. Pheasants have been selling some seasons lately at 4*s.* 6*d.* per brace, less than what you pay for barn-door fowls. There are very few game cases brought before the petty sessions. In my district there is no attention at all being paid to fruit culture. There are a few gooseberries in some of the farm and cottage gardens, sufficient for a few puddings, and here and there a few damson and apple trees. Very little attention is paid to market gardening; the farm gardens as a rule are shamefully neglected, and so are many of the cottages, except in districts in which the landowners have established cottage gardens shows, and these have done wonderful good. The expense of such shows generally is 25*l.*, and is frequently entirely paid by the landlords.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

I know five or six districts in which these shows have been established, very much to the benefit of the cottages; they create a great deal of attention and emulation. Not much attention is paid to poultry farming, but every farm and cottage rears and sells a small amount of poultry and there is a fair trade in eggs. Bee keeping is very little attended to. I do not suppose that any of these are a material source of profit to the farmer at present, except poultry keeping. The climate and the altitude of many of the farms is quite unsuited for fruit growing; but I think poultry keeping might be a source of much more profit if it had more attention paid to it. Of course, this is in the hands of the farmer's wives. There have been dairy classes established in most of the North Wales counties under the technical education committees, and I think they will do great good. There is very little good cheese made in these districts, in Merionethshire hardly any but poor cheese which is consumed, as you may say, on the premises. The dairy classes are being very fairly patronised, and I hope they will do much good. The whole of North Wales, except some of the out-of-the-way districts, is now served by railways, by which farmers can send off their agricultural produce. There are very few places more than 10 miles from some station or other. Most of these railways have been constructed and opened during the last 35 years, and they must be of enormous value to farmers, in spite of the complaints about rates, which in some cases no doubt are high, but which I think are made too much of. I remember the time when the cattle were driven from this country all the way into England, and the sheep, too, to the great fairs, and it took days and weeks. Now quantities of English dealers attend all the local fairs and trucks are ready at the station to send off the cattle as soon as they are sold. I may add that the landlords largely assisted in getting these railways made, either by giving their land or by selling it at a cheap rate, and taking shares. I know on one estate where the landlord let the land be taken at a very reasonable rate, and also took 20,000 pounds worth of shares. Most of the dealers who come down are English and can speak no Welsh, but the tenants have no difficulty in dealing with them. I remember an instance of a presentation being made to one dealer by the farmers of the district, because he had bought such a quantity of stock from them for so many years. I do not know of any instances, being either ancient survivals or modern experiments, where profits or risks are shared between employers and employed. I do not know of any co-operation for purchasing or analysing farm stuffs; I have no experience of it, or for the purpose of selling in butter factories. Farmers help each other generally over threshing and sheep shearing, not in other ways, that I am aware of. They hardly ever insure in any way and as insurance premiums are now so reasonable it is a pity they do not. I know of several instances in which a farmer has lost heavily by fire. There is no combination in the nature of a trade union among landlords not to accept tenants of a certain description, and I do not know of any combination among farmers or labourers to fix wages. A great many labourers belong to clubs of one sort or another, but I do not think it is as general as it is in England, and I am sorry to say there have been many cases of the failure of the clubs. I do not know what provident institutions are used by them. A great many of the proprietor farmers or small freeholders have inherited their holdings from their ancestors. I could name them if required, but I do not like mentioning names. Their number has decreased, and I believe it is because many of them have found it better to be tenants on a good estate, than owners crippled by heavy mortgages. There are several tenant farmers who have bought their own holdings; I conclude it was because they wished to acquire property of their own. I cannot say anything about the purchase money, whether it was excessive or otherwise. So far as my knowledge goes as such freeholders, they are not as well off as yearly tenants who are their neighbours. The farmers themselves and their wives both assist in the several departments of the farm, the man out of doors and the wife in the house. They work very hard. On some of the larger farms the farmer himself merely overlooks, and he does not work himself, but there are not very many farms where the farmer does not work, and often works far harder than anyone else on the farm. The children work at home, but whether they receive wages or not I cannot say. They have their home, and food, and clothing, and pocket-money, as other children have, so far as I can see, in their state of life. A great many children, sons and daughters, are very well provided for by their parents on their marriage or independent settlement in life. The daughters have a sum of money given to them, and the sons have the same, or stock for a farm. I know of very many instances where two or three or more of a family occupy several farms on the same estate, and will give instances, if required, but I do not like bringing forward names. Many of the sons and daughters receive a good education and get on very well in life; frequently the sons enter the Ministry or go away to business in England, and I know one has become a Member of Parliament, if not more. Most of the hired labourers are lodged on the farm premises. Very few of them are settled in cottages, and very few live on their own finding. Most of them live on their employers' finding. A headman will get as much as 30*l.* per annum and his food; undermen, 24*l.*, 20*l.*, and 16*l.*, according to their ability. I believe it is very usual to divide the year into the winter half and the summer half. I cannot actually state the chief fluctuations in wages during the last 50 years, but wages have greatly increased—I should say 25 per cent. The servants, male and female, have comfortable meals, and, as a rule, of the same description and at the same time as the family. There was some evidence given about that yesterday, with which I quite agree. There is always a room called the men's room, or men's loft, set apart for the men, and another for the women; that for the women is usually next to or amongst the members of the family, and that for the men at the outside end of the house, and generally with an independent and separate staircase, and it is just as well it should be so, I think. The supply of cottages is much about the same, I think, as it was some time ago. I agree with what several witnesses have said, that in the rural districts more cottages are required. There are plenty of cottages in the hamlets, but more cottages are required in the rural districts. It is very hard indeed to get people to live in a single cottage; where there is a cottage standing by itself, the wife does not like it, and she will not go and live there. If you put cottages up you must put them up in pairs, and I think more are required. There are very few cottages on the farms in this locality. They are mostly clustered in hamlets and villages, and generally not far from the work. Isolated cottages are not at all popular amongst workmen's wives, as I have already said. The condition and construction of the cottages has been greatly improved during the last 25 years, but many of them are still kept very dirty. Cottages which are merely cottages have almost always a small garden attached, but as a rule they are neglected, except, as I said before, in localities where a cottage garden show has just been instituted. There are very few allotments. I only know of one place where there are allotment gardens. I do not know of any allotment gardens in this neighbourhood or in this part of the country at all. I know of one lot at Ruabon. The cottages are usually held of the owner, and are not subject to any restrictive conditions whatever as to employment. The usual length of notice is three months. On one estate, Estate No. 1, which I referred to before, there are 91 small holdings of 5*l.* and under, 103 between 5*l.* and 10*l.*, and 100 between 10*l.* and 20*l.*, making in all 294 small holdings of 20*l.* and under. Many of them are let at very low rents. I shall be prepared if necessary to quote some of these rents. As regards "the relative "standard of comfort, as to (1) house accom- "modation; (2) diet; (3) opportunities for "self improvement and recreation in the follow- "ing cases:—estate owners"—I do not quite understand that question. As I say, if it means how the estate owners are off in these days, I say at once that in my opinion many of them are quite unable to keep up their establishments as they used to and in a proper manner, or to live in the same comfort as they have hitherto done, owing to the depression in agriculture and the heavy returns they have had to make to their tenants. Everywhere the tendency is to cut down expenses, and the effect will be to throw many house servants and labourers out of work, in fact, I fear many establishments will be altogether closed before long. I do not think proprietor farmers are as well housed as tenant farmers. They do as little as possible in repairs, and it is extraordinary in what a wretched house an owner will live cheerfully which he would not occupy without great grumbling as tenant. Their diet and opportunities for self-improvement would be the same as a tenant farmer's. The house accommodation of the tenant farmers large and small is very much better than it was 50 years ago. Their food, too, is very much better, their dress is better, and owing to railways they have many more opportunities of going about which they largely avail themselves of. The labourers have considerably better house accommodation than they used to have, and their diet is much better. That we heard spoken of yesterday. Almost all the articles they consume are now so cheap. They also dress better, go about more, and are better off in every way. There has been a considerable migration of labourers during the last 20 years from the neighbourhood of Llanbrynmair and Dylife, and all that district of Montgomeryshire owing to the stoppage of the lead mines which employed a large number of men. The mines have stopped owing to the low price of lead ore, which has fallen to a point at which it does not pay to raise it, and this is because lead is now imported into the country from Spain and elsewhere. There was a great mining industry in this district before, and the men went off mostly to the South Wales coalfields. I am afraid very few farmers keep diaries or farming accounts. I think the first really bad year was 1879, indeed, 1879 was a record year so far as a bad year went; it was a shockingly bad year, but the Welsh farmers did not feel the depression much until later. For the last seven or eight years, with the exception of an occasional break, things have been bad, and this has been the worst year yet, I think, owing to the drought in England, although the crops in Wales are as a rule good. The principal cause of the depression undoubtedly is the enormous importation of foreign cattle, meat, corn, wool, and other things into the country, and all classes are affected by the depression, landowners, farmers, tradesmen, and labourers, the latter least of all. Then there is a question, "What remedies "do you suggest for improving the profits "from land?" I think, myself, that some sort of protection on a sliding scale would be a benefit to the country. It would not hurt the labourer, I think, and it would have, probably, a tendency to raise his wages. I should also like very much to see, if it is possible, the producer and the consumer brought more directly together. I think that would be of very great advantage if it could be arranged in any way. There is a very great difference between the price the consumer has to pay and the price at which the producer sells—it is something enormous. The relations between landlord and tenant are generally perfectly friendly, and they are most so when left to settle any little differences there may be without the intervention of interferers. The next two or three sheets I think are entirely intended for a tenant farmer, or an occupier, and I have nothing at all to say about them. Then, as regards expenditure on the estate, which I will call estate No. 1, during the 16 years I was agent for it I spent the following amounts, which are particularised for each year.

Chairman.

8187. Have you any objection to tell us to whom estate No. 1 belongs?—To Sir Watkin.

8188. I think that might as well be put in?—Yes, I have no objection whatever. I did not like to say very much about it, as I have no doubt Sir Watkin's representative will give evidence in chief at some other centre.

8189. This was in your time?—This was in my time.

8190. You have no objection to saying it is Sir Watkin's estate?—None at all. Building and repairs:—1872, 6,859*l.*; 1873, 5,951*l.*; 1874, 8,403*l.*; 1875, 7,703*l.*; 1876, 8,825*l.*; 1877, 8,248*l.*; 1878, 8,862*l.*; 1879, 6,568*l.*; 1880, 7,474*l.*; 1881, 7,996*l.*; 1882, 6,741*l.*; 1883, 6,369*l.*; 1884, 5,974*l.*; 1885, 6,135*l.*; 1886, 5,467*l.*; 1887, 5,685*l.* That is the year I gave up the agency. Those figures amount in all to 113,460*l.*, and that was spent in building and repairing.

8191. Will you give us the acreage of the estate?—It is about 150,000 acres.

Mr. Richard Jones.

8192. That is No. 1 estate?—Yes, No. 1 estate.

Chairman.

8193. Is there any objection to giving the rental of that estate. You have no authority for that?—I do not think I should like to give that. The acreage of this estate is not quite 150,000, it is 140,000 odd, I think. The two estates comprise about 150,000 acres, and there are over 1,700 tenants.

Mr. Seebohm.

8194. It is more than 1*l.* an acre?—I did not say anything about the rent.

8195. But you mean there is 113,000*l.* odd expended?—Yes, 113,460*l.* in 16 years. That is the pounds only. I do not give the shillings and pence.

Lord Kenyon.

8196. What is the average?—I have not worked it out. You see, when times were good we spent more on the estate than when times were bad. Then, as regards drainage and fencing during the same period (I will not particularise it) I spent 15,979*l.* The two together make a sum of 129,439*l.* The amounts are given in pounds only. There was no interest charged. I can put that in if you like, my Lord. I have a separate sheet of it.

Mr. Seebohm.

8197. And will you give us the total acreage?—I will give you the acreage in a moment, sir. I do not know whether I have got the acreage of that estate separate from the other, but I can refer to it again later. The whole acreage of the estates which I have selected is 150,000 acres, and there are 1,700 tenants, or rather over that number. I can give you the acreage of that afterwards. It is referred to somewhere. Then the estate No. 2.

Chairman.

8198. Would you mind telling us the owner of No. 2?—It belongs to my brother. There was spent in building and repairs between the years 1872 and 1892, inclusive, 10,258*l.* and 11,518*l.* in draining and fencing, making, together, 21,776*l.* As to estate No. 3, during the last 12 years about 10,000*l.* has been spent in building and repairs, the rental being about 4,200*l.* per annum. I daresay the owner has no objection to my mentioning that estate. It belongs to Mr. Vaughan, of Nannau. See 8387

Lord Kenyon.

8199. And on that there has been spent how much?—During the last 12 years about 10,000*l.* has been spent. I asked Mr. Vaughan's agent to give me this, so that I know he has no objection to my quoting it. That is on an estate of which the rental is about 4,200*l.* a year.

Mr. Seebohm.

8200. You have not got the acreage of that?—No, I have not. It can easily be got at.

8201. Have the families of tenants been long in the farms?—I cannot say how many cases there are on the estates with which I was connected, of families having held the same farms for generations; but I may say that there are quantities of them. They are very proud to be there. There are descendants of some very old families occupying farms as tenant farmers in this district. I do not like to mention names, as I said before, but I could give instances. That is the end of my evidence so far as that goes. I do not think I have been above the specified time.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

8202. I think, Mr. Wynne, that the agreement you have put in is the one that is at the present time used on Sir Watkin's estate, is it not?—Well, it is very nearly the same as Sir Watkin's. The reason for that was that I happened to be agent for the two estates at the same time.

8203. This is Mr. Wynne's estate?—Yes, it is.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

8204. I want to call your attention to clause 19: "Provided that none of the clauses "or conditions of this agreement shall have "been unfulfilled, transgressed, or evaded in "any way, the landlord will compensate the "tenant, upon quitting, for or in respect of his "outlay during the last three years, as follows:" Then follows the table?—Yes.

8205. There are before that 18 clauses, and upon the construction of clause 19, if the tenant breaks any one of those 18 clauses in any one respect, he loses his right to compensation?—He renders himself liable to lose it, no doubt.

8206. He renders himself liable?—Yes.

8207. Now I will call your attention to section 1 of the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883, which gives a tenant a right to compensation for the improvements mentioned in the first schedule. That is a compensation right, you observe?—Yes.

8209. Now the substituted agreement is provided for in section 5 of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes.

8210. And that is said to be a clause "pro-"viding fair and reasonable compensation, "having regard to the circumstances existing "at the time of making the agreement, and "which is taken by both parties in substitu-"tion of the compensation under this Act"?—Yes.

8211. Now I call your attention to this. Is not that clause inconsistent in substance with the provisions of the Act of Parliament?—Well, the Act says "fair and reasonable." I think it says that if those are not fair and reasonable, of course the Act takes precedence.

8212–3. Is it a fair and reasonable agreement to put in, that if a man, for instance, should neglect to keep a dog—that if he does neglect clause 8 of the Agreement, he is to lose all right to compensation under the Agreement or under the Act of Parliament?—Well, I acknowledge myself that the agreement in some of those clauses is not very well worded. That is meant really to refer to those penalising clauses as regards bad farming, not to the others?—"Should the tenant commit or allow a breach "of any one of the foregoing conditions, he "shall be subject to a penalty of 10*l.* as "liquidated damages." That is to say, if he commits any breach, however slight, of any one of those clauses, you treat it as liquidated damages at 10*l.*, and he is liable at law to that?—I should say at once that that merely referred to the penalising clauses as regards bad farming; and I will say further, if you will allow me, that there is not an agreement on any estate in the country, I think, which cannot be remodelled to very great advantage. There are a great many of the old agreements which have gone on from year to year, and from generation to generation, and they are on the same old lines; and if I were to take up an agency again, I believe I could write a perfectly satisfactory agreement on a sheet of note paper.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

Mr. Seebohm.

Mr. Brynmor Jones, may I call your attention to one point, whether, on that clause being void, the clauses in the Act would be forfeited, they would be substituted for the clauses in the agreement, would they not?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

I should think that is probably so. I am only putting it to Mr. Wynne. I mean I should not now like to undertake to construe this agreement by relation to the Act, or to construe the Act by relation to the agreement. I am only putting a point to Mr. Wynne in order to obtain his opinion upon it.

8214. As I understand, you do not think that is really enforced at all. You do not recollect any case of the tenant losing his right to compensation under that clause?—I never recollect a single instance, as I said before, of having to put in force an agreement against a tenant when he left in any way whatever—never.

8215. But still I understood you put in this agreement as being a fair agreement between landlord and tenant?—Well, I put it in as the agreement existing.

8216. Very well, that is what I want to know?—I have just said that I think there are many things in that agreement which might be modified.

8217. I will call your attention to another clause, clause 6. "If the tenant become "bankrupt, or insolvent, or file any petition or "declaration in bankruptcy or insolvency, or "make an assignment of any of his goods and "chattels for the benefit of his creditors, or "suffer his person or effects to be taken in "execution, or does not reside on the premises, "or underlets, sets, or assigns the same, or any "part thereof, without the consent of the "landlord or his agent, in writing, it shall be "lawful for the landlord to resume immediate "possession"?—Yes.

8218. Supposing a Bala tradesman sues a farmer in the county court, and his bill is taken before the county court judge, and there is a judgment against him on a judgment summons, and he is committed for 14 days to prison for non-payment of his grocer's bill, as I read this clause the landlord can take immediate possession of his premises. Is that a fair clause?—As I said just now, there are many things which could be altered or remodelled, but I never had to use an agreement against a tenant. Of course it might be possible to put it in force, and it might be done, but those penalising clauses are never enforced in any of the agreements.

8219. If they are not enforced at all, I do not see what is the good of having them in. Either this agreement is supposed to be a fair agreement between landlord and tenant, or else it is not fair?—I do not know whether you would like to see one, but I have an agreement here 50 years old on an estate in this county—over 50 years old. I shall be happy to put it in if you like (handing in an agreement).

8220. Have you found in any of the documents agreements for leases upon either the Dyliffe or the Llanbrynmair estate?—No; I never remember a lease upon either.

8221. You have no instance of a lease for three lives, for instance, on any portion of the estate?—No.

8222. Do you agree with this statement which I find in a recent report about the Dolgelly Union: "that the district is one of "the most typically Welsh in the whole of "North Wales in respect of language, customs, "and the general character of its inhabitants?" —Yes, I think it is.

8223. Is it Welsh or English the farmers who are here speak among themselves?—Welsh, entirely.

8224. And the same applies to the labourers, I suppose?—Oh, certainly.

8225. Are most of the tenant farmers and the labourers Nonconformists or Church of England people?—Nonconformists.

8226. I do not think I need ask you any further questions now; I shall have an opportunity of seeing the details of your evidence later on?—Very good.

Mr. Griffiths.

8227. I suppose you can speak Welsh yourself?—Well, I can speak a little, and I can understand it quite sufficiently to understand what is said to me.

8228. You cannot converse with your tenants in Welsh?—No, I cannot, not satisfactorily.

8229. I suppose then in transacting your business you have to depend upon other people?—I should to a certain extent. I mean, if a tenant comes to me and we are shut up in a room together, I can make out pretty well what he says; but if he goes on hurriedly and anyone else is standing by I probably could not give it time and should not be able to follow it, and should appeal to anybody who is with me to tell me what he says.

8230. You spoke of stone wall fences being put; can you tell us by whom they have been built?—Oh, they have been built generations ago, I cannot say by whom they were built. There are some occasionally built at the present time; they are built by the tenants. There have been some in some places built by the landlords, I think; I do not know myself of any; but they are built by the tenants if they are built now, certainly. There are not a great many built by the landlords, unless he builds

8231. Do you mean to say that years ago there never were leases in this neighbourhood?—I do not say there were none, but I have no experience of them.

8232. You never heard of them?—No, I have not heard of them at all. In my experience I remember nothing else but yearly agreements, and as I said before I never had an application for a lease that I can remember.

8233. Is it not a reason why tenants do not apply for leases that they think they may get on better with the landlords in bad times?—Oh, I do not think so at all. If they ever had applied for leases they would have applied for them during those good years in the seventies. From 1870 or 1872 up to 1880 we had wonderfully good years, you could make money out of anything; they never applied then, and, therefore, they surely would not apply now.

8234. You say you cannot see what difference it makes for a tenant to know that an abatement is to be allowed?—Well, I cannot see it. I never could follow that argument at all. They generally know about a fortnight beforehand. I will tell you why. The other day I attended my brother's rent audit—I do not generally go to rent audits, but I attended it because he was away. I have attended hundreds of rent audits of course. The tenant will very often say, "I "am very sorry, Mr. Wynne, I have not got all "my rent to-day, I have not sold my yearlings, "I have not sold my two-year-olds," or something of that sort, "and I hope you will wait." I have always said, "Certainly; when you have "sold them, bring me the money." I do not see that it makes any difference at all.

8235. Then you do not think tenants are obliged to sell their produce in order to meet their rents?—Not at all; I am certain they do not—at least I am pretty sure they do not—because I could instance hundreds of cases where a tenant has said to me, "I have not got all my "rent to-day; I hope you will wait a little "because I have not sold so and so." We always say, "Certainly; when you have sold "it, bring the rest of the rent."

8236. Have you heard that there have been cases in which goodwill has been given to the tenants in times gone by?—No, I never have, but I have known instances where a tenant who has given up his farm through old age, or something of that sort, has come and said, "Would "you allow me to recommend so and so," and in some cases we have taken the persons so recommended. Whether any goodwill passed or not I cannot say, but I should think in those cases some small amount of goodwill was paid. We never recognised it in any way.

8237. You speak about some few small freeholds, are they generally mortgaged?—In almost every instance, I should say; there are very few that are not.

8238. Why do these people not sell their farms?—I do not know. Some of them, I suppose, hold on to them; they have an affection for them and hold on to them. I have known a great many that have been sold, and I have known instances where a man has done very much better occupying a farm as a tenant than they have done on their holdings.

8239. Do you mean to say then that a mortgage costs them more than they would get out of the holding?—They borrow money on mortgage and the interest they have to pay generally is very heavy.

8240. You said you recommended protective tariffs?—A protective tariff, yes. I said I thought that some sort of protective tariff, on a sliding scale, for instance, would be an advantage. For instance, if we got below a certain price there should be a protective tariff for some time. Of course, it is a very difficult thing to arrive at, still I think it would be fair to the owners and the occupiers of land in this county if there was some sort of tariff of that kind, arranged on a sliding scale.

8241. Say there was a tariff on flour and wheat?—Certainly.

8242. Do you think that would injure the labourer?—I do not think it would at all. Wheat, as you know, is only worth now something like 25*s.* or 26*s.* a quarter; that puts the intrinsic price of wheat at about 13*s.* or 14*s.* a bag. If you put, say, a sack and a quarter of wheat to make a sack of flour, that ought to bring flour up to about 18*s.* or 19*s.* a bag. If you go to buy a sack of flour you have to pay 32*s.* or 33*s.* for it. The farmer does not get the benefit of that, and the landlord does not get the benefit of it. The farmer produces the wheat, and the landlord buys the flour; the farmer gets a very small price indeed for his wheat and the landlord has to pay a very high price indeed for his flour. I think some protective tariff arranged on a moderate scale—I certainly should not put it too high—would be a benefit to the country. It is only my idea. I throw it out merely as a suggestion. It seems that in these days we are completely flooded with corn from abroad, and farmers cannot sell the corn that they grow at home.

8243. Do you think the farmers of this district buy more corn than they sell?—No; but the farmers of this district do not sell a great deal of corn, they sell some oats; it is not a corn growing country, all this district, it is a grazing country; they depend here on their store cattle and on their sheep, and to a certain extent on their butter. It is not a corn growing country. They sell some few oats and so on, but do not sell much corn about here. There is no wheat grown here.

8244. In a non-corn growing country the farmers, especially cowkeepers and so on, buy a great quantity of corn?—Yes.

8245. That is not the case here, is it?—That is not the case here. They do not buy a great deal of corn about here, they buy very little I should say.

8246. If there was a small tariff put upon every pound of flour that came in, do you think that would do good?—Well, it would, I think, on the foreign flour you mean.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

8247. What effect would that have upon the district?—You must do something that will benefit the farmer, otherwise it would hurt the labourer. For instance, of course, if you made the labourer's food dearer for him it would hurt the labourer; but what I hold is this, that if you could do anything that will improve the condition of the farmer, improve the prices to be obtained by the farmer, by that he would be able to employ more labour and to give better wages. Then, if the labourer had to give some little more for the flour, he would have a good deal more to go and get it with. That is my theory.

8248. Do you not think that our Government should be strict with respect to the adulteration of food?—Yes, I do.

8249. The flour that is introduced is very white, but I am not at all sure it is the colour of wheat that is seen?—I quite agree with you. As you know very well, when you grind up a thing it is very liable to be adulterated; when you get the whole article they cannot adulterate it. For instance, when you buy your coffee whole it is sure to be pure, but if you buy it ground you probably buy it adulterated.

8250. And no doubt it is injurious to health. I remember when I last came over to this part of the country I used to see rosy-faced girls, but I have not seen one of them here now?—I do not know about that. We are supposed to be tolerably healthy people about here. But certainly all the flour comes into the country now from a distance.

8251. What do you think of the barley. Do you not think there is some adulteration in that. I do not know much about beer, I never tasted it; but years ago they used to make home-brewed beer, and it seemed to be pretty healthy?—Yes, they used to make home-brewed beer a great deal about this country in old days.

8252. Is there as much now?—No. It mostly comes from the great brewers, generally from Burton-on-Trent.

8253. And it is not only hops and barley that the people drink?—I should be sorry to say that it was only that.

8254. I am afraid not?—I have heard complaints of the beer of late years. I, personally, am not a beer drinker; I gave up drinking beer a very long time ago, but I very much doubt whether you can get as good beer now as you could 25 years ago.

8255. I have found some young men of 30 to 40 so stout that it takes two tailors to measure them, one to hold the tape and another to go round; so that it seems to be doing them a great deal of injury. Now, what with regard to butter?—There is a good deal of butter made in this district, not what we call pot butter, they do not pot it very much; they make it mostly about here in what are called pwys o fenyn—pounds of butter—and it is sold in that form very largely. I think that the dairy classes which are established now will do a great deal of good. There ought to be a great deal more attention paid to butter making. They put too much salt in it, and I do not think they are sufficiently careful about the making of it. There is more to be made of that.

8256. Is there any margarine sold in this district?—I dare say there is, but it has to be marked as margarine.

8257. Do you not think the Government could do something to aid us in that?—Yes, I think so, certainly. I think the Government could do something to aid us in many cases, if they would.

8258. In the way of colouring the margarine, do you not think it should be sold in its natural colour?—I have not much experience in margarine.

8259. There can be no doubt, I suppose, that there are many places where margarine is sold instead of butter?—Yes, very likely, and that reduces the price of home grown butter.

8260. And there is also a lot of foreign meat that is sold as English meat?—Yes, there is no doubt of that, and I think that is a great shame. I have no doubt whatever that a very great number of retail dealers in meat in England now sell this foreign meat, Australian mutton and American beef, as English. I think that is very hard. Going back to what I said before, in these days the landlord is expected to keep up an establishment and to live very much as he did, and to give back to his tenants 15, 20, 25, and 30 per cent. If he is is to keep up his establishment he must get his things now at a more moderate rate, but he cannot. He goes to the butcher, and asks the butcher, "I suppose "in these bad times you will sell me this meat "at something less?" The butcher says, "No, I cannot afford to do it." The real truth is, I believe, that a very great number of large establishments in London, and in the great towns, get from their butchers foreign meat which they charge for at English prices.

8262. Do you not think farmers are heavily handicapped with regard to railway rates—that the foreigner can put his produce on the London market cheaper than we can put our home grown stuff on the market?—I think there is rather too much made of railway rates, but I think railway rates for short distances are high, and I should certainly say that English produce should have fair play with foreign as regards railway rates.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

8263. And even with Irish; I believe the Irish can send things cheaper from Ireland to London than we can?—Yes, I believe they do.

8264. And you know they are also in a better position to bring up their produce?—Yes.

8265. And their rents are lowered, most of them, more than ours are?—Yes, I believe they are very much lower.

8266. Do landlords in this part of the country, on the estates you represent, do anything in the way of introducing breed horses and cattle, and things of that sort?—Some landlords have done that. Mr. Corbett, a landowner here, has brought a shire horse on to his estate. There is a friend of mine here, I see him opposite to me now, who got a very nice cob down some time ago to try and improve the breed of horses.

8267. Do the tenants take advantage of it?—No, they do not. It is very disappointing indeed. Although the fees are put at a very moderate rate, they do not seem to take advantage of it. It is very disappointing. I have known a great many instances. Sir Watkin has got a shire horse, I think, on his Llanbrynmair property now, and I know several other instances. And the same in the way of bulls, and so on.

Mr. Richard Jones.

8268. You state that there are more changes made in the tenancies of late than in former years?—A few more I said. There are some few more, I think.

8269. To what cause do you attribute that?—Well, I have no doubt myself that it is the depression. I think it is, the times are not as good as they were; we all acknowledge that the times are not as good as they were and there are liable to be more changes, of course, on every estate.

8270. You say that there are instances where compensation has been paid for damage done by timber cutting. Could you supply the instances?—No, I am afraid I could not, but there have been several. I have myself on many many occasions during the years that I was agent paid money for damage done by timber cutting, but I could not give the instances. It is possible my brother might give some to-morrow. On his estate, I know he has paid damage for timber cutting.

Lord Kenyon.

8271. I suppose those instances could be obtained out of the books of the estate?—Oh, dear, yes, I have no doubt of it, with a little trouble.

Mr. Richard Jones.

8272. You are not aware whether any complaints have been made as regards these extra services that are required by the tenants?—I never heard of any complaints that I can remember now. As to keeping a dog, on my brother's estate it is obsolete; they have not kept a dog for 25 or 30 years if I can recollect.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

8273. Does it still prevail on Sir Watkin's estate?—Yes, I think the tenants there do walk some hound puppies now and then, but I never heard any complaints; they generally get very fond of it, and there is a row in the family when the puppy has to go.

8274. Then the tenant would not consider these services irksome?—Oh, not at all, and I may add I have seen many English agreements in which there have been a great quantity of services of this kind. I know of estates in Leicestershire where tenants have to give the landlord one cheese a year. There are estates in the Isle of Wight (I think they are Lord Winchelsea's, but I am not certain) where the tenant has to provide a certain amount of wheat batten for the stables. There are a great many estates in England where there are services of that sort.

8275. You say that the rents on the estate are pretty well the same as they were 50 years ago. Do you not think it would be more satisfactory to the landlord, and also to the tenant, if the rent was assessed oftener, more in accordance with the ruling prices of stock and produce?—No, I do not think so; it would be one perpetual change. I do not see how you would arrange it either, because one year may be very bad and the next year may be a good year again. You would be perpetually changing the rents backwards and forwards. I think it is better myself, a great deal, for a tenant to occupy at a fixed rent, and for the landlord to give him an abatement in a bad year.

8276. But you acknowledge that there is great fluctuations in prices, do you not?—Oh, certainly, there has been of late years. There did not use to be such fluctuation. Of course, there were bad years; there always will be as long as the world lasts, I take it, good and bad years, fat and lean years; there always must be. In a good year, of course, the tenants would not complain; in a bad year they must trust to the landlord to give them an abatement, and I do not think there are many landlords in this country, none that I know of, who would not meet their tenants very generously at a time of that kind; they always have done so.

8277. Of course a fixed rent is made on the assumption that the prices in 50 years' time would strike on the average about the middle between high and low prices?—Well, a farm is let at the value which it would be to let at the time it is let, I take it. Suppose you send a valuer over the farm; if you send valuers over farms I do not think there are a great many valuers who, if sent to value farms, would not value them a good deal cheaper than they would in these good years; you must take some sort of line of that kind. We had two or three very bad years here some six or seven years ago, I think it was, I cannot remember now; and then we had two very good years immediately following.

8278. You say that the rates have increased?—Local rates have certainly increased. The education rate and, I think, the sanitary rate are higher. I do not think the highway rate or the ordinary poor rates are higher than they were; but I think those two rates certainly press heavier.

8279. And you admit that the increase of rates has fallen on the tenant; on the occupier?—Yes.

8280. Would there be any objection to dividing the rates between the landlord and the occupier?—Well, of course, it would be a little off the tenant's shoulders and a little bit more on the landlord's shoulders. It would be rather a difficult thing to fix up a division of rates between the landlord and the occupier, because rates again fluctuate. The invariable custom for generations has been for the tenant to pay the rates. In some estates I believe the landlords pay all the rates; but then, of course, the rents are assessed accordingly.

8281. I suppose you know that this system prevails in Scotland?—No, I do not know much about Scotch agricultural questions.

8282. Do you not think it would be more just to the tenant, because when he takes a farm he takes it according to the rates at present existing?—Yes.

8283. And you generally find that rates have a tendency to go up?—That is so. Well, it may be; I do not like to express a decided opinion upon it, for it is a thing I have never very carefully considered as to the landlords paying half the rates, but there may be something in it. Of course it would be for the benefit of the tenant. It would be a little more out of the landlord's pockets, but it would be no doubt for the benefit of the tenant.

8284. You say there is little fallowing done in this district?—No, they do not fallow much here.

8285. The soil is light, I suppose?—Yes, there is very little of what you call summer fallowing here.

8286. Did there use to be much fallowing?—No, I do not know that there used to be; when you get to the Ruabon country, between there and Bangor, and in Montgomeryshire, as you know yourself, there is some fallowing done still—a good deal of fallowing—but not down here.

8287. Could you supply the Commission with instances where tenants have been compensated for cartage to buildings?—I could, I daresay, recall cases if required.

8288. Is there any reclamation of land going on?—No, I do not think so. I do not know of any.

8289. Has there been in years gone by?—Do you mean by tenants?

8290. Yes, by tenants?—Yes, there have been some instances of reclamation of land.

8291. When?—Oh, I should think a good many years ago—I cannot remember now.

8292. About 1874 or 1877?—Oh, before then; long before then; many years before.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

8293. Is there as much drainage done now as formerly?—I do not think there is quite so much, but some of the good farmers still go on draining. I know a good many instances where farmers have come to the landlords and asked for pipes to drain, and they generally do the work themselves. There are other cases where the landlord has done the draining for them and charged them a little interest. There are other cases again where the landlord has done the draining and not charged them any interest at all. I think we have tried to help the tenants of late years a great deal, in those small ways by the draining a field or doing some little thing in that way—either draining a field or giving the tenant a truck of lime or something of that sort.

8294. You stated that in some cases compensation had been paid to tenants for damage done by game?—Yes.

8295. Could you give us any instance where damage has been paid for that?—I know some cases have occurred in which damage had been paid on my brother's estate and on other estates sometimes, but I cannot tell you the exact instances. I am quite sure that in old days I paid the tenants damage on Sir Watkin's estate in some instances, but I could not tell you exactly because it is a good many years ago.

8296. You could not give us the names of the persons who received compensation?—No, indeed, I am afraid I cannot.

Lord Kenyon.

8297. They could be furnished as to your brother's estate to-morrow?—Yes, I daresay he could tell you. I am quite sure that there are many instances in which they have received money or something for the damage done by the game. I am quite certain of it—a great many instances.

Mr. Richard Jones.

8298. You say that you know several tenant farmers who have bought their holdings; when were those holdings bought?—Some have been of late years; some many years ago. The other day in Anglesea, I believe, there was a large sale, and a great quantity of the tenants bought their own estates there on Sir Richard Bulkeley's estates, but I do not know the estates personally.

8299. On the district you speak of?—On the district I speak of there have been a good many. I know of one, that Mr. Roberts has bought; I do not care to say where he is of because there are so many Mr. Roberts, I do not like to mention names.

8300. How does the number compare now with what was bought say 20 years ago?—The number of purchases?

8301. The number of freeholds bought by tenant farmers?—I think there are more men buy now than there were 28 years ago.

8302. Or as many?—I believe so. I believe if any largish estate was put up for sale anywhere about here the great quantity of the tenants would buy their holdings. That is my opinion; lots of them.

8303. Do you think that tenants who start with nothing but a bare capital are as able to provide for their families now as they were 20 years ago?—No, I do not know that they are; I should say not. Of course it is always an advantage, not only to a tenant but to the landlord, to have a man with a little capital behind him, and they generally get on better. I think it has been the fault rather in Wales that many men have taken farms too soon, rather before they had sufficient capital to take them. We heard an instance yesterday and there are no end of instances in the country, where labourers have acquired a competency and taken a farm and many of them have got on very well; on the other hand some of them have taken a farm too soon, before they really were strong enough to take it, and have broken down; I think that is the reason why a good many of the smaller farmers have broken down—that they have embarked on a farm too soon. If I remember rightly, there were four or five instances quoted yesterday by one of the witnesses, of men who had gone from labourers to farmers, and I know myself, personally, of several. I know one of the men now (I do not mind giving this instance) who is my brother's cowman; he has a very nice occupation at present and is getting on very well.

8304. Then the inference we are to draw is, that the labourers are better off than the tenant farmers?—The labourers are very much better off now than they were.

8305. But better off than the tenant farmers?—The labourers?

8306. Yes?—Well, I think they are. I think the labourers are better off than the tenant farmers at present. The labourers are certainly doing very well. As I said before they get higher wages than they used to get, I should think 25 per cent. higher, and all the commodities of life which they have to buy are a great deal cheaper. I do not think the labourers have anything to complain of at present at all. The only difficulty I see ahead is this; if things go on much longer and the landlords have to return these heavy percentages to the tenants, and possibly heaver still, by degrees they will cut down expenses so far that they will get rid of the labourers that they employ. I know there is a great tendency now for the landlord, and everybody who employs labour, to cut down his labour bill as much as he possibly can. Certainly the labourers are getting very good wages and doing very well at present. I may say there is one tenant farmer very near here, only about four miles away, who bought his holding the other day. There are heaps of cases that might be quoted.

8307. If you recollect, I asked you on Tuesday about the case of Dorothy Jones. Are you able to state anything to-day as to that?—I can only state this, that as far as I can remember she married rather a large farmer not very long after her widowhood, and it was on that account that she left the farm. She had notice to quit. All the tenants have notice to quit given them on a change of tenancy, in case of death or anything of that sort, in order to put them on a new agreement. She had the ordinary notice and a short time after she went and married rather a large farmer—I think not far from here, as far as my recollection serves me. Then it was a question of his going to her place or her going to his, and it was arranged that she went to him, that she went to the large farm. That was really the truth of it as far as I can remember, but of course it is a long distance of time, and with such a large property, where, as I said before, there are about 1,700 tenants, it is very hard to recollect the circumstances under which every tenant left the farm. It is almost impossible to do it.

Mr. Seebohm.

8308. The first question I should like to ask you is with regard to the question of rates. May I ask whether it is the usual thing for the agents of estates in North Wales, or in this district, to be on the boards of guardians?—Yes, a good many of them are.

8310. Disagreeable for the agent, I mean, in voting the increased rate; would he not feel that he was in a wrong position, from the fact that he was voting for a rate to be paid by tenants of the landlord whom he represented which the landlord himself would not be called upon to contribute to?—I do not know that he would. Personally, I am now a member (an ex officio member, of course, only) of the board of guardians, and it is our earnest endeavour, as far as we possibly can in these bad times, to keep down rates; we try all we can because the rates, of course, do press more heavily upon the farmers at the present time, and we do all we can to keep them down. I do not know that an agent would consider it in that way, but I am quite sure that every agent would do his utmost to keep down rates, and do his duty as a member of the board of guardians.

8311. I can quite understand that, but it always seems to me that the reason why it would be well for the landlord to pay half the rates is that in giving his influence and his vote on such a question as the poor rates he would naturally feel that he was making his own contribution instead of levying a contribution upon his tenants. That is the point of view from which I look at it, and I should like to ask you whether you would not answer the question again, and say whether you think that the division of the rates between landlord and tenant would be an advantage from that point of view?—Well, it ought to be—it might possibly be. I think I told Mr. Richard Jones that I had not thought this point over very carefully, but it might possibly be an advantage for the rates to be shared.

8312. That is what we feel in our neighbourhood. I am on a board of guardians, for instance, and I feel very great delicacy in voting for a charge which I know the tenant farmers are going to contribute to so much more than any of us?—Quite so.

8313. Then the only other point I wanted to ask you about was about these agreements. I am much obliged to you for putting in this agreement of 50 years ago. Perhaps you would like to take it in your hand [handing the agreement to the witness]. In that agreement of 50 years ago——?—This is not on an estate with which I am acquainted; well, I know the estate, but that is all.

8314. But it would be probably typical of agreements 50 years ago?—I think so, yes.

8315. There the landlord reserves the game and fish, and liberty to sport, without any qualification?—Yes, that is very much the same as they do at present.

8316. And the tenant is to use his best endeavour to preserve the game on the premises?—Yes.

8317. Now, since this time we have had the Ground Game Act of 1880, and I see that in your new agreements you say, "Subject to the provisions of the Ground Game Act of 1880," so that, so far as the agreement is concerned, the agreement is loyal to the law?—Yes.

8318. But do you consider that in these districts, after this lapse of time since 1880, there has grown up a feeling of loyalty, both on the part of the landlord and on the part of the tenant to the Ground Game Act?—I think the landlords perfectly recognise that the Act exists and the tenants avail themselves of it.

8319. And, on the whole, there is not so much friction as there used to be in the old times?—No, I do not think there is perhaps. Of course, in the old times, on some estates, for instance, there were a great many hares. As I said before, hares are becoming rapidly extinct.

8320. Then with regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883, this agreement, as Mr. Brynmor Jones pointed out, was so worded, if you take the common reading of it, as practically in case any of the clauses in the agreement were unfulfilled by the tenant to deprive the tenant, not only of those improvements for which he ought under the Act to get the written consent of the landlord, but also those which are absolutely given to him by the law. You stated that that penal clause was practically never enforced?—Never, by any chance.

8321. But do you not think that the time has come when landlords would find it to be in their interest to make their agreements entirely correspond with the law in these respects?—I think, as I said before, it would be a very good thing

if there was a kind of model agreement drawn up; it would do well for almost any estate in the country; I think I could draft an agreement probably a great deal better than the one you have there which I drafted; well, I did not draft all that agreement, I only drafted the compensation clauses; I could draft an agreement, as short as possible, which would do perfectly well between landlord and tenant; they very seldom have any difference. That agreement was not intended in any way whatever to oust the Agricultural Holdings Act, and I did not think it would have that effect; it was meant the other way; it was meant to give the tenant compensation in those clauses for anything that he did.

8322. Quite so. I am not quite sure whether Mr. Brynmor Jones takes that view, that the alternative of these clauses being void would be to set up the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I think it certainly would. That is my idea, that if the clauses of the agreement are not fair and reasonable, then the Agricultural Holdings Act would be set up.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

That, of course, raises the construction of a somewhat difficult section in the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883, section 5. It says: "Where in the case of a tenancy under a "contract of tenancy beginning after the commencement of this Act any particular agreement in writing secures to the tenant for any "improvement mentioned in the Third Part of "the First Schedule hereto, and executed after "the commencement of this Act fair and reasonable compensation, having regard to the "circumstances existing at the time of making "such agreement, then in such case the compensation in respect of such improvement "shall be payable in pursuance of the particular "agreement, and shall be deemed to be substituted for compensation under this Act." I cannot help thinking that the draftsman who drew that agreement intended to try to make that particular agreement a substituted agreement under the Act; but, if so, it hardly seems to me to be "fair and reasonable." That was my point.

Mr. Seebohm.

But if it was held not to secure it, it probably would set this clause in force?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

The Act is somewhat difficult of construction on that point.

Mr. Seebohm.

However, the point I wished to draw attention to was whether, after all, it was not much better that the agreement should be made to correspond with the spirit and the letter of the law.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

That was precisely the question to which I was leading.

Professor Rhŷs.

8323. I have hardly anything to ask you, as I have not been present during a great deal of your evidence. I saw yesterday a copy of an agreement in Welsh, as well as in English. Have you any Welsh versions at all of your agreements?—No, I do not think my brother had them translated into Welsh. I am not quite sure whether he has had that done lately or not; he will be able to answer that question to-morrow.

8324. Do the tenants have the agreements explained to them?—Always.

Mr. Seebohm.

8325. There would be no difficulty in having them translated into Welsh, would there?—Not the slightest. I think Mr. Price, of Rhiwlas, had them translated into Welsh.

8326. Would there be an advantage in having these Acts of Parliament translated into Welsh?—I should think there would, certainly. As one of the witnesses said yesterday, an Act of Parliament is always rather hard to follow.

Professor Rhŷs.

8327. In any language?—In any language. It would take a good many men a very long time to make out the meaning of this Agricultural Holdings Act. It is very difficult to understand what the real sense of it is, and I think it would be a good thing to get the Act translated into Welsh.

Lord Kenyon.

8328. We heard yesterday some complaints from the tenants that they had not received payment for haulage. Is it not usually the case that some agreement is come to beforehand between the landlord and tenant when he is doing the repairs?—It is sometimes, and sometimes not.

8329. I mean to say as a rule, the tenant is called on to do haulage, if the repairs are done for him?—Yes, always; that is always understood. A man says: "Will you build me a new house;" and it is quite understood that he is willing to do the haulage, quite willing. We generally arrange that it shall be done at a time convenient to him.

8330. I suppose the agreement for compensation would be merely in case the tenant should leave his holding shortly after the building was erected?—Yes, there have been some few cases of that kind that I have known, and we have always compensated the tenant.

8331. Similarly, these services in the agreement that were spoken of, I suppose, are well known at the time of entry?—Yes.

8332. They are explained to the tenants?—Perfectly.

8333. And the man accepts them as reasonable when he takes the farm?—Yes.

8334. Many farmers express themselves as in favour of a Land Court. What would be your view as to the benefit of a Land Court?—Well, I do not think a Land Court is necessary at all,

I think it is much better to leave the landlord and tenant to settle their own differences without the intervention of a third party; a third party would be a Land Court. And it would have this tendency also, I think, that if the tenancies were subject to valuation by a Land Court, the landlord would stop entirely doing repairs and improvements on their property; it would have that effect.

8335. That is the very question I was going to ask you; they would take less interest in their estates?—Certainly.

8336. Then, many of the tenants express a wish for fixity of tenure. What would you understand by that?—That would have very much the same effect as a Land Court, I should think. The landlord would cease to take the same interest in his property that he did before, and he would not expend as much money on it, certainly.

8337. Now, we have heard of applications for leases. You said there were not many. Do you know any cases where farmers who have had farms on lease, at the expiration of their lease have taken a yearly agreement in preference to a renewal of their lease?—I cannot remember any. I do not remember any leases.

8338. You never had any leases?—I cannot remember any at present.

8339. As regards the game, would you say that there being game, gave the landlord some amusement and occupation on his estate?—Certainly; and in a great many cases keeps the landlord at home, where otherwise he would go away.

8340. And the tenants rather welcome their landlords shooting?—Yes; I have always noticed almost every tenant on a farm on which the landlord happens to be shooting, goes out for the day, and laughs, and jokes, and talks, and makes himself pleasant. And most of them are very glad to see their landlords have a good day on the farm, and if he does not have a good day they are sorry. I have known many cases of that kind, and the landlords invariably send them some game.

8341. Then you think if the Game Laws were repealed or abolished, it would not contribute to the friendly feeling between landlord and tenant?—I do not think so.

8342. With regard to the cottage shows, are there not cottage shows at Glanllyn and Peniarth?—There are. The oldest one I remember is the one at Llangedwyn, in Denbighshire, which has been established for a great number of years and has been enormously successful there. Then there was another one at Glanllyn, another one at Peniarth, another one at Mr. Vaughan's, of Nannau, and some others, I think. I cannot remember where now. I may say distinctly that the change wrought in the gardens, which are within the district of these shows, is something extraordinary. There was a show the other day at Nannau, and the vegetables there—the flowers too, I may say, but particularly the vegetables and many other products—were extraordinarily good.

8343. From the Report of the Commissioners on the Employment of Children and Women in 1867, I see Mr. Edward Jones, of Dolgelly, farmer and innkeeper, says:—"The cottages in "this part of Wales are very bad and very "inconveniently situated with respect to the "farms. They are built without the least "regard to ventilation, and are often over-"crowded. Gardens are rare, and in both cases "the cottages have not an inch of ground "beyond what they stand upon." Would you say that was the case now, or has that been remedied?—I think the cottages have been very much improved since then.

8344. Do they have, as a rule, gardens?—They have, I think so; most of the cottages, I think, have a little bit of garden to them; but, as I said before, they are not well kept, except within the districts of these shows, where there is some encouragement.

8345. I was sorry to hear you make a remark about clubs. You said that clubs had in many cases failed?—Yes. I do not know about them here so much. I do not think the men quite belong so much to clubs here; but I remember in the Ruabon district a good many cases of old men too. I remember one distinctly who had been putting his little money into the club almost all his life, and then in his old age, when he could have fallen back on the club, the club had become bankrupt. There are many instances of that kind.

8346. That is my experience?—I think they depend now rather on the large clubs like the Manchester Unity and bodies of that kind. I fancy so.

8347. And it would be a good thing, would it not, if the landlords encouraged them to put their money in sound clubs, and made them known?—Yes, I think so. There is an instance near here of a little club. I do not know whether it became bankrupt, but I think it failed.

8348. The Shropshire Provident Society, I may say, is an exceedingly sound body?—I think a good many of these small clubs are very badly managed—mismanaged in fact. It is a very sad thing to see men, or women either, who have been putting their money into clubs all their lives, and who just when they wanted the money have found the clubs have gone bankrupt.

8349. Do you know cases of farmers having started their sons in other farms?—Oh, dear me, yes, heaps of them; on Sir Watkin's property all over it—quantities of cases—and daughters too. Perhaps one or two sons and a daughter and the father all living on the same estate.

8350. A witness stated yesterday that he thought a cottage would cost about 60*l.* to build. What is your experience?—I should be very glad if he would build a lot for me at 60*l.*

8351. So would I. What is your experience of the cost?—You cannot build a decent cottage of any kind under 130*l.* or 140*l.* If you build a pair together you can build them, perhaps, for

250*l.*, but if you build anything under that, they are rubbish.

Mr. Seebohm.

8352. Is that when you have the stone on the ground?—Yes, even with the stone on the ground, because the places where you get stone are rather out of the way, and, of course, you have to pay for the haulage to the cottages, and the haulage is expensive in some of these out of the way places, where some cottages, perhaps, ought to be built. I think the reason why cottages have not been built more is that they are very expensive to build, and they pay you no percentage whatever. You get nothing for it. You build a cottage which costs 130*l.*, and you have to let it for 3*l.* a year, and keep it in repair. Of course the tenant is never expected to do much; the only thing he ever was expected to do was to keep glass in the windows, and he does not very often do that.

Lord Kenyon.

8353. You stated, I think, that on Sir Watkin's estate some of the tenants are expected to walk a hound puppy?—Yes, they are asked to. There is nothing in the agreement about it whatever, but for many generations on that estate, I think—I could go back to something like four Sir Watkins—it has been the rule to walk a hound puppy for him if he asked them. It is generally arranged in this way: that the tenants who walk one this year will not be asked to walk one next year, so that a change is made in that way, so that the tenant does not have to walk one every year.

8354. I think he sends out about 100 pups, does he not?—Yes.

8355. And I think there are hound puppy shows?—Yes.

8356. At which prizes are given?—Yes.

8357. And there is very keen competition for those prizes?—Very keen competition, indeed, and the tenants are very pleased if they happen to get a prize. I know two or three of his tenants in the Llanbrynmair district who had a prize, such as a cup or a teapot, or something of that kind, who are immensely pleased with it.

8358. In fact, they are very glad to have the hounds there?—Yes, in fact, they are generally very sorry to have the hound go away.

8359. Do you know the Welsh term for walking a hound puppy?—No, I do not think I do.

8360. Could you tell me whether there is any difference in the tenure of land in England and in Wales. I mean is it held in the same way?—Exactly.

8361. Exactly, in the same way?—I cannot see any difference whatever. It seems to me exactly the same. The only difference is this, that in many parts of England the tenants enter at a different time to what they do here. Even in Wales, as I said before, the tenants enter in Merionethshire on the 25th of March, and in Denbighshire too. In the Vale of Clwyd they enter in November

8362. So far as other matters are concerned, you think it is the same?—I think it is the same.

Sir John Llewelyn.

8363. This question arose out of what Lord Kenyon asked you. He asked you a question about the abolition of the game laws. The game law, as it stands at present, gives game to the occupier, I believe?—It does.

8364. So that the exercise of those rights by the owner are simply a matter of agreement?—That is all.

8365. Is that allowed for in the rent?—No, I do not think it is. I do not think there is any allowance made in the rent.

8366. If that be the case, who pays the rates for the right of sporting?—The owner always. Of course, if the game is not reserved in the agreement, the game belongs to the occupier, and there are a great many small places where the game is given to the occupier.

8367. So far as the law is concerned, it gives the game to the occupier?—Yes, it gives the game to the occupier.

8368. And it is the agreement by which the occupier parts with it to his landlord?—Exactly.

Chairman.

8369. These questions are put in by Mr. Vincent:—"You have said that you frequently "allow time to a tenant who has not all his "rent in readiness. Could you do this if the "preferential claim for rent were abolished"?—No, I do not think I could.

8370. A question by Mr. Vincent: "Have "you ever within your recollection consolidated "two or more farms without finding a new "holding for any tenant who might be dis-"possessed"?—Never that I remember. We should never consolidate farms unless there was an opportunity——

8371. I think that is an answer. A question put in by Mr. Llewellyn Jones. "In your "evidence you stated that for many years the "clause as to rearing dogs for the landlord was "not enforced on the Peniarth estate. As a "matter of fact, has not the tenant of Pen-y-"Wern within the last four years reared dogs "for the landlord"?—No, not that I know of. It was enforced 20 or 30 years ago.

8372. Not in the last few years?—No, not that I know of.

8373. Another question by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "On upland farms is all the draining "done by means of pipes"?—Sometimes they make bush drains.

8374. Where drainage is carried out by means of stones being used instead of pipes, is the tenant compensated for the cutting of the trenches?—It would have to be a special arrangement. We do not look with favour upon drains made with stone or faggots——

8375. The answer to that is "No"?—No.

8376. A question by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Mr Wynne stated that all the land agents and

" valuers employed were experienced men " ?—I do not think I quite stated that. I said I knew most of the land agents in North Wales, and, as a rule, they were experienced men.

8377. " Do you know that Mr. Edwards, who " was until a few years back a draper at " Pwllheli, without any experience of agri- " culture, is nevertheless employed on several " estates to make re-valuations on the land- " owners' behalf " ?—I do not know Mr. Edwards personally. I know of him, but I do not know him personally.

8378. You are not competent to answer that ?—No.

8379. Mr. Llewellyn Jones also puts this question: " Can you give any idea of the " number of cases where outgoing tenants have " been compensated for general improvements " to farms " ?—No, I cannot; I said there have been some cases.

8380. Could you, on another occasion, give a list of the above cases, with the amount of compensation given ?—I do not think I could.

8381. Question by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: " How many farmhouses on the Nannau estate " have fallen into ruins " ?—I never was agent for the Nannau estate.

8382. Question by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: " Does the witness know anything personally

" of the diet of tenant farmers and labourers " ?—I do not know personally; but I know pretty well what they have, and it was explained very lucidly by a witness yesterday.

8383. I think you have told us, and we need not press that. Another question by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: " In many cases have not " small freeholders been bought out by the " neighbouring landlords at high prices with a " view to increasing the estate of the landlords, " and in many cases to get the shooting of game " over a large estate " ?—I do not think so. There have been freeholders bought out. There was a case quoted yesterday by that facetious witness who told us he sold his little place. When they do sell them to the landlord, they generally get a high price for them.

8384. You are not capable of answering that question ?—No, I do not think I am.

8385. A question by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: " Do you consider it reasonable that a tenant " should do all the haulage, &c. for buildings " and labour in connexion with draining, and " at the same time be liable to six months' " notice, as upon most estates in Merioneth- " shire " ?—I consider it quite reasonable if he makes that arrangement with his landlord. It is a matter of arrangement and agreement.

8386. That is " Yes " ?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Vaughan, of Nannau.

Chairman.

See 8198.

8387. My Lord, if I might be allowed, as the case has been referred to of No. 3, I will put in that agreement [handing agreement]. Perhaps, my Lord, it would be convenient to answer that question now.

I am afraid we cannot take any statements. Any statements you wish to give be good enough to put in in the form of a question, and we shall be glad to receive them.

Mr. CHARLES ALFRED JONES called and examined.

Chairman.

8387*a*. Will you kindly tell me where your property is ?—The small property which I have an interest in, is in the parish of Trawsfynydd, about 12 miles from Dolgelly.

8388. I am told it is 800 acres ?—No, that is a slight mistake. It is between 400 and 500 acres.

8389. You live at Carnarvon and employ no agent ?—No.

8390. And you manage the property yourself ?—Quite so.

8391. I will run through the evidence. We went through the evidence yesterday, and some questions have been put to some of the witnesses which we need not detain you about. If you will allow me to run through the evidence, I can then refer you to points that we want to ask you about, and then the Commissioners can ask you questions. Where there are rights of pasture over " sheep runs, &c.," in whom are such rights vested, and subject to what payments and conditions ? Are they " without stint," or how are they limited ?—There are considerable sheep runs over the two farms which I have, and the tenants are privileged without payment to have the use of them. The land, in my opinion, is not adapted for cultivation 8392. What is the usual date of entry in your district ?—It varies from the 29th March to the 12th November; but on my small property it is the 29th September and the 25th of March.

8393. And I understand you to say yours are yearly tenancies ?—Yearly tenancies.

8394. What are the usual conditions of tenancy ? Can you produce a copy of your agreement ?—I have no written agreement at all.

8395. You have no agreements whatever ?—No, I have no agreements at all.

Chairman—continued.

8396. Were there any letters that passed between you?—There was perhaps a letter or two passed between us about the two farms, and that is about all. One of the tenants has been on the property about 50 years, and I came into the property whilst he was there, and he still remains there.

8397. Do you say you have no written agreement whatever with any one of your tenants?—None at all.

8398. A verbal agreement?—A verbal agreement.

8399. No agreement as to notice at all?—No. I think 12 months' notice is the understanding and I pay the tithe; and so far as those little details go, of course we understand one another.

8400. Have rents been raised generally, or in individual cases, within the last 50 years? Have you anything to say upon that point?—So far as I am concerned, the rents have not been raised for 50 years, in fact, the rent on one of the farms has been slightly lowered.

8401. On your property?—On my property, slightly lowered.

8402. When you let a farm, is the holding let to the highest bidder?—Well, I had a few applications, and I considered this on the last occasion of a vacancy, and I took the man whom I considered to be the most desirable tenant.

8403. Have you had any permanent reductions or temporary abatements of rent?—A permanent reduction in one farm has taken place on the occasion of the present tenant going in, and temporary abatements have taken place within the last few years, varying from 10 to 20 per cent., and in the last few months 20 per cent.

8404. Is there any notice given by you to your tenants of any such abatement?—No, not a long notice. Just about a month's notice.

8405. You let them know a short time before what you mean to do? You do that?—Yes. I let them know.

8406. What is the average size of your farms?—The two farms that I have vary from 200 to 300 acres.

8407. Each?—Yes.

8408. How many tenants have you?—Two. I have only two farms.

8409. You have cut up your estate into two farms?—It has been so for many years.

Sir John Llewelyn.

8410. What is the total acreage?—The total acreage is 200 and 230. I can tell you exactly if you wish to know.

Chairman.

8411. Can you tell me what improvements are usually made in your case?—All the improvements have been done by me in my case.

Chairman—continued.

8412. The tenants have done nothing?—The tenants have done nothing.

8413. Is there any allowance in your part of the country as to crops, manure, and so on, to the outgoing tenant?—I think the outgoing tenant makes the best arrangement he can with regard to the purchase of the stock and the manure with the incoming tenant.

8414. And do they fight it out between themselves?—No. It is generally a matter of arrangement. I say, "If you can come to terms "with the outgoing tenant you can have the "farm." There is nothing to be paid for goodwill or anything of that sort, but it is desirable that the same sheep, for instance, should be kept upon the same farm.

8415. Have you any game on your property?—There are a few grouse.

8416. But no ground game at all?—No ground game at all. I saw one hare there not long ago, and I think that is the solitary one.

8417. I hardly need ask you about the relations with your tenants. I suppose they are very friendly?—Very friendly.

Professor Rhŷs.

8418. Did I understand you to say that the incoming tenant makes the best terms he can with the outgoing tenant; that you tell him he can have the farm if he can arrange with the outgoing tenant?—If he can arrange for the purchase of the stock, and so on.

8419. So that you practically give up your right of making arrangements with the incoming tenant?—Yes. If a man wants a farm I tell him, "You can have the farm if you can come to terms with the outgoing tenant." As I explained, I have only had occasion to change once, and that solitary instance is as I tell you.

8420. You see what I mean?—Yes, I understand. Of course I first of all told the man he could have the farm if he could arrange with the outgoing tenant.

Lord Kenyon.

8421. You settled the rent with him first?—I settled the rent certainly.

Professor Rhŷs.

8422. But the two tenants form a sort of land court in your case in that way, do they not?—Well, they would.

Lord Kenyon.

8423. May I ask the names of your farms?—Bod-y-fuddai and Ysgwrn.

Mr. Richard Jones.

8424. You say that you have no agreements with the tenants?—No; no written agreements.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

8425. Is there liberty for them to sell roots and hay from the farms?—I do not think they have done so.

8426. You would not interfere?—I have not any agreement of that sort. I would not interfere with the matter at all, until the question arose.

8427. You would not raise any objection?—Of course I would not be in a position to do so. Of course I am aware it is not a usual thing to let a farm in the way that I do, but of course I am not an experienced farmer.

8428. You say there is no custom prevailing in the neighbourhood?—Well, I do not know what the custom is in this district; I do not reside in this neighbourhood myself.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

8429. Are these upland farms?—Yes, they are.

8430. Do you know what number of labourers your tenant farmers employ?—I do not think they employ more than three or four. They work themselves, as a rule.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

8431. Are there any labourers' cottages on these farms?—No, there are no labourers' cottages on these farms.

Chairman.

8432. I have some questions here, put in by Mr. Vincent. Do you speak Welsh?—I do.

8433. Do politics or religion make the slightest difference to you in choosing or retaining a tenant?—Not the slightest. I do not know the politics of either of my tenants, or whether they are Churchmen or Nonconformists.

8434. How soon is the rent paid after it falls due?—It falls due on the 29th September and the 25th March, and it is generally paid about Christmas and June.

8435. Can you give any particulars of expenditure on your improvements?—Yes. During the last three years I have spent something like 160*l.* upon the property in building cow-houses and hay-sheds.

8436. Have you any objection to give us the returns of what the property brings in?—Not at all. My gross rental is 130*l.*

8437. And you spent on the property?—And I spent on the property within the last, well, I may say two years, about 160*l.*

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Pugh called and examined through an Interpreter.

The Interpreter read the following statement of the Witness:—

"Evidence of Mr. William Pugh, Pantglas, Trawsfynydd. Tenant farmer, having lived for the last 40 years in the neighbourhood of Trawsfynydd.

"Evidence chiefly relates to the following farms:—

"Defeidiog ucha, Brynllin fawr, Brynllin Bach, Cwmhesgen, and Dolcynafon, on the estate of Mr. Vaughan of Nannau.

"The farms in the district are chiefly pasture and sheep farms, and the farms above mentioned are now almost entirely used for sheep.

"In about the year 1853 I took the two farms of Brynllin and Defeidiog. The two farms cover about 1,000 acres of the most mountainous land in Merionethshire. For about 20 years the rent remained at 90*l.*, but about the year 1873 the estate came into the hands of Mr. Vaughan, Nannau, Dolgelley. It was revalued, and without a proper notice being given my rent was raised 40*l.* Soon after this, when the agricultural depression came, the tenantry petitioned Mr. Vaughan for an abatement. My signature was the first. I was summoned to appear before the agent, who asked me who had prepared the petition. I stated that I was one who had done so. He then reprimanded me for causing a disturbance upon the estate. A short time after this I went to pay him some arrears which I owed—the only arrears I ever ran into. I applied for a reduction which was refused. I then offered to take the farms at the old rent, provided Defeidiog Ucha was inclosed. In a few days, however, I received a notice to quit. I then went to the agent again and all I could get from him was, that he was quite determined to have a change of tenants. With the exception of myself, all the tenants received an abatement of 10 per cent. Six months after I received the notice I left. This was in 1886, which was an especially hard year for sheep farmers, owing to the number of sheep which died during the winter. It means a loss of 600*l.* or 700*l.* for me to leave that year.

"In accordance with my agreement I had to offer all my sheep to my landlord. We could not decide upon the price, and an umpire had to be called in, and there was a considerable delay. During this time a large number of sheep died and the loss fell entirely upon me. Fully 600 of my sheep died that winter, and the rest were in a very poor condition.

"During the time I was tenant I made the following improvements:—

"(a.) I built a large number of stone walls, 5½ feet high, about the farm; I estimate they would amount to fully 100 roods, and at a moderate estimate would cost 10*s.* a rood. These walls are still in good condition and should last for scores of years.

"(b.) I also drained scores of acres of land.

"(c.) I carried all the materials for the repairs which my landlord made, and built a cow-house, towards which I received a sum of 4*l.* from my landlord.

"When I left, I received not a penny of compensation for all the above improvements.

"When I went on the estate in 1853 there was a good tenant on each of the farms, but now there are five farms in the district without tenants occupied by the landlord himself, and these farms are rapidly becoming wild.

"Soon after the present agent was appointed, the tenants of the estate became uneasy as the rents were raised upon the death of an old tenant. If the tenant died, his widow or children had, as a rule, to pay an advanced rent.

"I believe if I had been able to approach my landlord himself, instead of his agent, I would not have suffered the hardship I did. The landlord was an Englishman and I a monoglot Welshman."

Mr. Seebohm.

8438. What is the name of your farm?—I live at Pant Glas, Trawsfynydd.

8439. In the village?—In the parish of Trawsfynydd, six miles from the village.

8440. What is the name of it?—Pant Glas.

8441. That is the name of it now?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

8442. I think you stated that the rent was raised without notice. Do you mean by that statement that your rent was raised without notice to quit?—Yes.

8443. What! That the agent simply came and told you, "Next half-year you must pay me so much"?—They gave papers after valuation. I think that it was so.

8444. And what year did this raising of rent take place in?—I am not sure.

8445. Well, about how many years ago?—Was it 9, or 10, or what?—I should think it is from 10 to 15 years ago.

8446. When was it that you met the other tenants? How long after the rent was raised, or how long before 1886? I am not quite clear about that?—We see each other now and then; we meet together now and then, there was no committee or anything of that kind.

8447. What was the year when the petition was got up?—I do not remember.

8448. How long before you received notice to quit?—Less than six months before receiving the notice to quit—some time in the course of that year.

8449. When you told us that you received no compensation from the landlord, do you mean that you received nothing at all upon leaving the farm either from the landlord or the incoming tenant?—Yes, nothing at all.

8450. What became of the sheep?—The incoming tenant bought my sheep.

8451. And was the income paid to you in respect of the sheep the only payment which you got?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

8452. Did you keep the two farms on till 1886? I was not quite certain?—Yes.

8453. From 1853 to 1886?—I was at Bryn-llin from 30 to 35 years.

8454. Do you object to tell us whether you were able to save any money during that time, or whether you found the farming of these two farms not profitable?—No, I was not able to save any money, inasmuch as they had raised the rent 40*l.*

8455. After the raising of the rent you found it somewhat difficult to get your rent together?—Yes.

8456. Did your children help you about the farm?—Yes.

8457. After they had grown up?—Yes, three of them after they had grown up.

8458. They remained with you till 1886, did they?—Yes. One of them had married and had lived on the farm, and I lived elsewhere.

8459. What sized farmhouse had you got?—Now?

8460. No, from 1853 to 1886?—Including the mountain it was over 1,000 acres, I should say.

8461. I was not asking as to the extent of the farms, but I was asking as to the dwelling-houses to the farmhouses?—It was large enough.

8462. How many rooms?—Seven or eight. No, there were more—a buttery.

8463. You had better name them?—A buttery, kitchen, parlour, a chamber above the parlour, two above the kitchen, and one above the buttery.

8464. How many bed-rooms does that make altogether?—Four, and we used the chamber downstairs for the purpose of sleeping.

8465. Do you employ any domestic servants?—Yes.

8466. How many?—Two or three, as necessary.

8467. Besides your boys, do you have any male labourers living in the house?—Yes.

8468. After 1886, just before you left, how many were sleeping in these five rooms, as a rule?—Eight to ten, but more in the summer. We lived in another farm.

8469. But, in the first place, there were 8 to 10, and in the summer more people?—Yes, sometimes.

8470. Were the female servants employed in the fields at all?—Yes, sometimes in the summer.

8471. Is that the general case in this district?—Yes, up yonder in gathering the hay-harvest.

8472. Are there any cottages at all on these 1,000 acres?—There is one summer house—"hafdy."

Professor Rhŷs.

8473. "Shieling" is the Scotch word.

Mr. Seebohm.

8474. Where is it?—Defeidiog farm.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

8475. Do people live in this schieling?—Yes. Someone lived in this hafdy when I had it.

8476. All the year round?—Yes, all the year round.

8477. Was that one of your labourers?—Yes, those to whom I paid wages.

8478. Generally a husband and wife, and their children?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

8479. The shepherd?—No, not the shepherd, the labourer.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

8480. Was the other the house which you and your wife were in the habit of living in on the same farm?—Yes, towards the end, six years.

8481. Well, that was a pretty good sized farmhouse?—Yes.

8482. How many rooms in that?—When we went there there were three bed-rooms, parlour, a kitchen, and a buttery.

8483. How many people, as a rule, inhabited that house?—Four or five.

8484. Were both these houses in good repair, or were they not in good repair?—Yes, they were in good repair.

8485. Have you any objection to tell us whether you are a Nonconformist?—No, I have not.

8486. What is it?—I am a Nonconformist.

8487. Have you any objection to tell us what your politics are?—They know too well in this part of the country that I am a Liberal.

Mr. Griffiths.

8488. I should like to ask you what was the cause of the disturbance you spoke of?—I have put the facts before you.

8489. And you had notice in consequence of doing so?—As far as I know. I do not know that I had transgressed in any other way.

8490. Did you take any part in the 1885 election?—No, nothing; but I took a part in the 1886 election.

8491. Is it true that tenant farmers have appeared on the public platforms on election days?—We do not sometimes please everybody when we do that.

8492. Do you abstain from attending any meetings?—We believe so; we keep pretty quiet.

8493. Can you give us an estimate of how much walling you did on this farm?—About 100 roods of walling, 5½ feet high.

8494. What would be the probable expense?—At least 15*s.* a rood.

8495. And you received no compensation for so doing?—I had nothing except for the sheep.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

8496. What remedy can you suggest for these grievances?—To get a reasonable payment for what I had done on the farm, which were permanent.

8497. Would you like to appeal to anyone in a case such as this, when you had notice to leave your farm from your landlord for such a trivial cause?—Yes; I should like if there was some court to which I might appeal.

8498. These notices to quit are only three months in this neighbourhood, are they not?—They are not so frequent now. The tenants give notice now rather than the landlords.

8499. When the notices are given, do they generally unsettle the minds of the tenants, so that they do not farm so well?—Certainly. If the tenants are dealt with unfairly when leaving it makes the incoming tenants uneasy.

Professor Rhŷs.

8500. And the going out of the old tenants?—The going out of the old tenants makes the incoming tenants feel uneasy.

8501. The tenants all doubt?—Yes, the tenants doubt.

8502. Not the incoming tenants exactly, but the tenants generally?—Yes, the tenants doubt.

Mr. Griffiths.

8503. When a tenant complains, are the leaders generally spotted?—I think that the general rule now is that everybody complains.

8504. That is not my question. When they complain, do they ask for a reduction of rent or any other concession?—It shows in this evidence that they found out when I was the leader.

Professor Rhŷs.

8505. Do you say, when you were a leader?—Yes. When I had signed I had told the agent.

Mr. Richard Jones.

8506. May I ask you how you came to continue on the farm after receiving notice to quit?—Only until the half year was over, the six months. They did not give me another chance to re-take the farm.

8507. When did you find farming a most profitable occupation?—When they raised the rents things were pretty good, but since then there came a depression, and that was why we made that petition.

8508. Can you give the dates?—About 15 years ago farming paid pretty well. Before then, we had good prices for sheep.

8509. Have you any children?—Yes one, and my wife has three.

8510. What is the one, a son or a daughter?—A son.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

8511. Where is he?—My son is with me.

8512. I will ask you this question. If you started farming in 1880, with just enough money to begin with, would you have saved sufficient money to have placed him in a farm at the present time?—These last few years we have lost a good deal of money which we had put by in the prosperous years.

8513. What is the method of cultivation?—We sowed but little in our valley.

8514. What have you sown?—We have hay, and we keep cows and sheep.

8515. Is the land suitable for raising corn?—Yes, a little of it.

8516. Do you raise oats?—Yes, and a little swedes always.

8517. Potatoes?—Yes.

8518. Did you suffer any losses of sheep three years ago owing to hard seasons?—Yes, I lost a few, but I have not lost much since the year I left, in 1886.

Professor Rhŷs.

8519. I did not quite understand what the occupation of the women out of doors would be. I want to know what the women do in the fields?—They help to gather the hay.

8520. Well, that is only a short time?—From 8 o'clock until 6.

8521. Yes, but I mean that would be only during a few days in the year?—Oh no, many weeks.

8522. Your hay harvest lasts pretty long up in these parts?—Yes, if it is a bad harvest.

8523. Do they not do anything else on the farm outside the dwelling-house?—No, scarcely anything, except looking after the calves and the pigs.

8524. I have here a report of Mr. Lleufer Thomas recently published, "upon the Poor-law "Union of Dolgelley." Here is a statement made by Mr. Edward Griffiths, the agent of the Nannau and Hengwrt-ucha estates, that "the women have "to work very hard on the small farms, that "they do the chaff-cutting and churning, which "are done by hand"?—I cannot say. Perhaps they do sometimes.

8525. Do you know Mr. Edward Griffiths?—Yes.

8526. And he knows your district, does he not?—Yes, a good deal.

8527. Then you do not say that this is true of your district?—Sometimes they do a little, but not so much. There are no women servants with us, although there are with others.

8528. And of some of them I see it is said by Mr. Griffiths, "The husband often goes to work "to the mines or elsewhere, leaving the hard "work at home to be done by his wife." That, I understand, is on the small farms?—That happens. The times are so bad that they are obliged to do so.

8529. I want to know what the food of an ordinary farmer of your position is, if you have no objection to tell us what your ordinary fare is?—No, I have no objection. In summer, gruel to breakfast—flour.

8530. Flour gruel! What do you mean? It is gruel with flour and milk, I suppose?—Flour.

8531. A kind of pap, I think you mean?—And milk.

8532. Yes, flour and milk; it is a kind of gruel. Anything else?—And "shot" sometimes. "Shot" is oat-cake ground and mixed with butter-milk.

Lord Kenyon.

"Oat-cake" it should be.

Professor Rhŷs.

No, it is not oat-cake, it is ground with butter-milk; that would not be oat-cake.

8533. We heard the other day, or the day before, that they finished up with bread and cheese and tea?—Yes, the same with us.

8534. What is your dinner?—Meat and potatoes.

8535. What do you mean by "meat"?—Beef and bacon.

8536. Salt?—Yes, salt beef generally.

8537. Do you have fresh meat?—Very little.

8538. What time? When?—To dinner sometimes, unless we occasionally have a little for breakfast.

8539. What do you have at the next meal?—Tea, and bread and milk before it.

8540. And what is the supper?—Porridge.

8541. Anything else?—"Flummery" in winter.

8542. I think you said that you have a difficulty in not being able to understand your landlord, and not being able to speak the same language?—I have felt that always.

8543. Is it that you cannot speak English or that he cannot speak Welsh?—I cannot speak English and he cannot speak Welsh well. I believe if my conversation with the agent had been with Mr. Vaughan of Nannau I should have been at Brynllin now.

8544. You believe that you would have been tenant still?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

8545. I did not gather what the acreage of the farm you had under Mr. Vaughan was?—The land, besides the mountain, about 400 acres.

8546. And a sheep-walk for how many sheep?—Before they died that year we had 2,000 or more.

8547. Did you always leave your sheep on the mountain in the winter?—Oh no; on the low land a good deal more.

8548. Sent them down to the low lands?—Yes.

8549. Then how did you come to lose so many?—But there were some on the mountain.

8550. You left some on the mountain?—Yes.

8551. What, old wethers?—Yes, for the most part. If it was fine, we would take them up to the mountain.

8552. Did you not consider that the rent was low; 400 acres for 90*l.*?—We paid a good deal for food. We were not able to raise enough food there, and we had a good deal of wages to pay, there was so much work to get the harvest in. We had been doing well there.

8553. Did you ever ask to see Mr. Vaughan yourself?—No, I did not ask, because I thought that the steward had every authority at that time. When I went there, after receiving the notice, to see what he would do, he said that he would change the tenant; that was all.

8554. He said that you could give up the farm, I suppose, if you did not like to pay the extra rent; is that it?—I had the right to give it up if I liked.

8555. Yes, but I suppose the agent told you that. You might give it up if you liked. You had the right I know. You went rather than pay the extra rent; was that it?—I could not remain there after things had gone so wrong.

8556. Do you know what rent the present tenant pays?—Mr. Vaughan is the tenant and landlord now.

8557. Mr. Vaughan farms it himself now?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

8558. Do I understand you were in arrears of rent at the time you received notice to quit?——Yes; I owed six months' rent.

8559. Had you any agreement?—Oh yes.

8560. And under that agreement was there any schedule for compensation?—No, I do not understand that there was.

Chairman.

8561. I have a question put in by Mr. Edward Griffiths. "Is it a fact that Mr. Vaughan "buys largely, cattle, oats, hay, and straw from "his tenants?"—He has been buying cattle from me.

8562. By that I suppose you mean, yes. When the tenant has failed to sell at the fair, does he often sell to Mr. Vaughan on his way home?—That has happened, I think.

8563. Mr. Vincent puts in these questions: "Is not Mr. Vaughan practically always at "home"?—He is home very often.

8564. Is he not a man whom it is remarkably easy to approach?—As far as I know he is, but I cannot speak with him.

8565. Did you ever make any claim for compensation, or any request for compensation in respect of these walls or fences?—I was unable to get anything except to buy the sheep, and I had considerable difficulty to get that.

Professor Rhŷs.

8566. You have not exactly answered the question whether you made any claim for compensation for the walls?—No; I do not think I asked him by the way of sending a bill, or anything of that kind.

Chairman.

8567. Will you answer "yes" or "no"?—No.

8568. Mr. Vincent puts in this question: "Before you received notice to quit, had you "threatened to give notice to quit"?—I told the agent that I could not pay for the farm as it was, that it would be better for him to give notice, and he said he would not.

8569. Mr. Vincent's second question is: "Did "not Mr. Vaughan's son succeed to the tenancy "of Brynllin?" Mr. Vaughan's son, as we know, succeeded to the farm. Then Mr. Edward Griffiths puts in this question: "How many "head of horned stock, in addition to the 2,000 "sheep, did you keep for 90*l.* rent"?—I had an adjoining farm to this one here, Pant Glas.

8570. But on the farm for which you paid 90*l.* a year, how many horned cattle had you?—Forty.

Professor Rhŷs.

But he does not quite divide them in that way.

Chairman.

8571. How many horned cattle on the farm for which you paid 90*l.* a year, had you? You say 40?—Yes; but the 2,000 sheep were allowed to stray not only on that farm, but on an adjoining farm, Pant Glas.

8572. The answer would be that you cannot divide the two farms, but you had 40 head of horned cattle on both?—Yes.

8573. Then another question of Mr. Edward Griffiths' is: "On the expiration of your tenancy "did you not apply at least twice for farms "under Mr. Vaughan"?—Yes.

8574. Questions by Llewelyn Jones: "Have "you any idea from your conversation with "other tenants on Nannan estate, whether the "rents of anyone besides yourself were in-"creased when Mr. Vaughan came into possession "of the estate, and if so, to what extent"?—They "had re-valued some time after Mr. Vaughan "had come to the estate.

8575. You are asked, have you any idea whether the rents of anyone besides yourself were increased when Mr. Vaughan came into possession of the estate?—Almost every farm was raised when they re-valued.

Chairman.

Then his answer is "yes."

Professor Rhŷs.

It involves a question of time.

Chairman.

8576. (To the Interpreter.) Just read the question to him again. (The Interpreter did so)?—Yes, the rents of several were raised on re-valuation.

8577. Then another question of Mr. Llewelyn Jones is: "In the case of valuation of sheep for "sale to an incoming tenant, are the sheep "valued at so much a head"?—Yes.

8578. If that is so, when are the sheep counted?—The 25th March is the time.

8579. Do you know of any cases of hardship having arisen from the sheep being counted after the valuation?—I know that I have had several losses after the 25th March had passed. I do not think that is an important question.

Professor Rhŷs.

8580. I want to ask one question with regard to these sheep. Can you tell us how many sheep you were paid for when you did leave?—About 1,300—a little over.

Mr. Griffiths.

8581. You have told us how many sheep you owned. A far more important question is, how many sheep do you sell per year?—It varies.

8582. How many on the average?—160 perhaps.

8583. At how much per head?—From 1*l.* to 25*s.*, wethers you know, but the others, the old sheep, were about 15*s.*

8584. How much did you get for the sheep last year?—We did not sell any; but for the young wethers we got 14*s.* 6*d.* per head.

8585. It is not only the rent you have to make, but how many times must you make your rent before you make your farm pay?—I must make my rent three times before I can live properly.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

8586. I will ask you this question. How many sheep were you selling each year on an average, at the time that you had a stock of 2,000?—It varied so much. When the sheep were four years old, I would not have half, perhaps, what I would have when the times were good.

8587. Then the answer you gave just now of 160 sheep in the year is what you are selling now, as I understand. I do not want to dictate to you. I only wish to understand what you say?—Yes, they are good years so far as the number is concerned, but the prices are low now.

8588. But the answer that you are selling about 160 sheep, which I put to you just now, refers to the present time?—No. I do not sell as many as that from our farm now.

8589. Then does that 160 sheep which you were selling each year refer to the time that you were on the Nannau estate?—I sold many more sometimes, and sometimes less.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. David Evans called and examined through an Interpreter.

The Interpreter read the following statement of the witness:—

"Evidence of Mr. David Evans, Cae Einion, Dolgelley, formerly tenant farmer, now occupier of his own farm.

"I have lived at Cae Einion since the year 1854, and my farm is as regards size and character of the land, much similar to other small farms in the district. From 1854 to 1860 my brother sublet the farm to me, and I held under him, and in the latter year I became tenant myself. When I took the place the buildings were in very poor condition, and the agent of my landlord (Mr. Ellis-Nanney, of Gwynfryn) promised me repairs if I undertook to cart the materials and to consent to the rent being raised from 25*l.* to 28*l.* I agreed to this on condition that I was to be compensated if I received notice to quit. This was agreed to by the agent, Mr. Evan Parry. The cartage was a very expensive item to me, as I had to cart all the materials (stones excepted, they being on the farm) for about six miles over a very bad road. In the year 1881 I received notice to quit as the place was being put on sale, and by this time there was a new agent, and as the agreement to compensate me for my work in connexion with repairs was not in writing, I failed to receive anything. The walls round the farm were not very suitable, the cattle and sheep from adjoining farms being able to come over. I made constant complaints, but I could not get the walls repaired. The farmhouse and some of the outhouses were totally unfit for use in winter time. I had a new stable and 8*l.* for thatching the dwelling-house. In 1888 I received a copy of the new agreement which my landlord had prepared, as he proposed to pay the tithe himself.

"At that time I had been making a complaint as to the state of walls, and the following is the reply I received:—

"'Estate Office, Criccieth,
"'February 1st, 1888.

"'My dear Sir,

"'I think I was to write if I had good news to send you about the fence. It is quite impossible for any landowner to spend money in the face of the Welsh Land League started by Mr. Gee, of Denbigh, and I fear it will do an immense amount of harm. You will have received the new agreement proposed, and if you will consider it carefully and with an unbiassed mind, I am sure you will say it is fair, and more than fair. When they are all signed I will see what can be done, but tenants will have to choose which they will have as their friends, the landlords or the Welsh Land League; they cannot ride both.

"'Yours, very truly,
"'W. B. C. Jones.

"'Mr. David Evans,
"'Cae Einion, Dolgelley.'

"As I was a member of the Land League the interpretation I put upon his letter was that he was unwilling to give my application a fair consideration until I broke my connexion with the Land League. I appealed again and again for repairs, but in vain; I also appealed for a reduction in the rent. In March 1888 I received a notice to quit, and the agent informed me that he proposed to re-value the farm. I told him I was quite willing provided he would submit the matter to arbitration, and let me appoint one of the arbitrators. This he declined to do; he went over the place and shortly afterwards intimated to me that the rent would be raised to 37*l.* 10*s.*, instead of the previous rent of 28*l.*, together with the tithe, which he now undertook to pay. As I objected to his valuation he got another land-agent, Mr. Gillart, of Machyrelleth, to go over the farm, and his valuation was something similar. A son of mine wrote to Mr. Gillart, asking him his opinion of two land valuers which my son mentioned. Mr. Gillart replied that either of them was a very competent man. I got one of the valuers named to come to value the farm, and his valuation was 25*l.* 10*s.* Subsequently another valuer, Mr. D. P. Davies, a bailiff to Mr. Pritchard Morgan, valued the farm, his valuation being 27*l.* 10*s.*

"I now found that I had either to leave or to pay the increased rent, and in either case to forego any claim I might have for improvements made by me.

"Had it not been for the pecuniary assistance I received from my children I should often not have been able to pay the rent. My children, when at home, had always to work on the farm, and that without wages, and when at school they had to work before going and after returning home.

"I ultimately bought my farm, but the money upon it is money borrowed at a low rate of interest.

"Will make further statement as to necessity for changes in law."

Sir John Llewelyn.

8590. You tell us that the agreement to which you refer was not in writing?—No.

8591. Had you any witnesses?—They are dead. The other agent was yonder with me when I spoke to them.

8592. Do you think that your leaving the farm was in direct consequence of your being a member of the Land League?—That is what I gather from the letter I received from Mr. Jones.

8593. The letter that you have read?

(Interpreter.) He did not hear it, because I read it in English, so that he would not be able to follow it.

Professor Rhŷs.

But it has been read in Welsh?

(Interpreter.) Yes, it has been read in Welsh once.

Sir John Llewelyn.

Will you tell me if that is the letter which is embodied in his evidence?—Yes, the letter which has been read, and this is a copy of that letter.

8594. The letter alluded to a new agreement?—Yes.

8595. Was that new agreement submitted to you, and did you sign it? Did you agree to it?—I had the agreement, but I did not sign it. I had nothing against the agreement but the rent.

8596. That is what I am coming to. Mr. Jones says that he would say probably it was fair and more than fair. Did you agree to that?—The agreement was right enough. It was much better than the former one, or the former ones.

8597. But I gather that you did not agree to the rent?—No, I did not.

8598. What was the difference?—I wanted a reduction.

8599. What was the amount?—3*l.*

8600. Upon how many acres?—Over 200 acres.

8601. So that there is a difference of 3*l.* upon 200 acres?—Yes, but it is very bad land.

8602. That was the reason you were leaving the farm?—I did not leave the farm.

8603. Are you there still?—Yes, I am there still.

Lord Kenyon.

8604. You bought it, did you not?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

8605. What was the amount of pecuniary assistance you had from your children? Do I understand from you that it was pecuniary assistance in buying the farm, or in paying the rent before you bought it?—No, to pay the rent.

8606. At present you are the freeholder?—Yes, but I have a mortgage on it.

8607. Do you consider you are better off now, or that you were better off as a tenant-farmer?—I will be left alone there now.

8608. That is fixity of tenure, because you are the freeholder?—Yes.

8609. But are you better off in a pecuniary sense now?—Yes, better than if the rent had been increased by him.

Lord Kenyon.

8610. I did not follow as to what the rent was in the first instance?—25*l.* to start with.

8611. And it was the increase of 3*l.* that you objected to?—It was raised 3*l.*

8612. Yes, that was what you objected to, was it not?—No.

8613. It was raised from 25*l.* to 28*l.* I see here?—Yes.

8614. Was it raised again?—No, not until just now they said they would raise the rent, or they proposed to raise the rent.

8615. Before you bought it they proposed to raise the rent again. Is that it?—Yes, my statement says so.

8616. Would you object to saying what you paid for the estate?—No, I have no objection.

8617. Well, will you state it?—One thousand six hundred pounds.

8618. Then at a very moderate rate of interest, 3 per cent., the interest on that money would be more than the rent?—There are two farms, and I let one.

8619. What I want to know is the purchase money of this particular farm of which you complain of the increased rent?—The two are included in that purchase money.

8620. What is the acreage of the other farm?—From 65 to 70.

8621. The whole is about 270 acres, is it? The other was 200, you stated?—Yes, or more; I do not recollect.

8622. Would you mind stating at what rent you sub-let that 70 acres?—Sixteen pounds fifteen shillings as it was formerly.

8623. The rent of the farm was 28*l.*, I see?—Yes, and the other 16*l.* 15*s.*

8624. May I take it that the interest you have to pay on the money that this farm cost you is rather more than the rent?—No.

8625. Not more than the increased rent that was asked for. Would you mind stating—perhaps you would rather not—what is the rate of interest you pay upon this mortgage?—No, I have no objection.

8626. What is it then?—Three per cent.

8627. You still have to pay the tithe yourself?—Yes.

8628. And you do pay up the tithe?—Sometimes.

8629. May I ask how much the tithe is?—It is not the same every year.

8630. May I ask how much it was this year?—From 50*s.* to 52*s.* on the two farms. I am not quite sure.

8631. May I ask whether the Welsh Land League proposed any other form of agreement? If so, will it be handed in?—No.

(Interpreter.) The witness wishes to make a statement in answer bearing on it.

Lord Kenyon.

8632. Yes, he may?—I sold wood from the farm to the extent of 480*l.* and so I was able to pay some amount up.

8633. All I can say is that I think although you can hardly get any reduction in the interest you pay for your borrowed money, you might possibly have got a reduction in rent. That is the only way in which I can see you might be better off?—I tried many times to get a reduction in the rent, but I could not get it. I have repaired the house, and the house is much better, and I failed to get those repairs before. I have fenced the land too, and I could not get that either.

Mr. Seebohm.

8634. I should like to just make this one point clear. You gave 1,600*l.* for the two farms?—Yes.

8635. And you got 480*l.* for your timber, and therefore that reduced your actual purchase to 1,120*l.*?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

8636. Four per cent. on that would be just about the rent that you paid before the increase was proposed?—I only pay 3 per cent.

Lord Kenyon.

You mean 3 per cent., do you not.

Mr. Seebohm.

No, I meant 4 per cent. on 1,120*l.* amounts to just the old rent, so that he is really better off, and there really is a substantial advantage; that is all.

Chairman.

8637. The witness need not answer any questions about his freehold farm, as it is not referred to in his statement, unless he wishes to do so?—Yes, I understand that. They tried to show to me that I am at a loss by buying the farm, and I know that I am better off. [Applause.]

We cannot have these manifestations.

(Witness.) But they failed both to let it and to sell it, so that there is no thanks to them that I was able to get it.

Lord Kenyon.

8638. Please tell the witness we only wish to show whether he was better off in either case. We did not wish to show that he was worse off, and we are only anxious to get at the truth?—Well, I tell the truth.

Mr. Richard Jones.

8639. Do you farm now better than you used to when you were a tenant?—I am more encouraged to do so now. No one can raise my rent.

8640. In that case you would recommend fixity of tenure in every case?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

8641. Were there many farmers members of this Land League besides yourself?—Yes, a few.

8642. Did any of them have notices to quit besides yourself?—No, I do not know of any of them.

8643. You were the ringleader, I suppose?—I was as keen about it as any of them.

8644. How were your children ever able to assist you; did they work elsewhere, or what?—Some of my sons worked at the quarries, and assisted us to educate the others, and everything.

8645. What remedies do you recommend for the sake of other tenant farmers who are like you?—That there should be an Act of Parliament which the landlord would be bound to obey, whereby the tenant should have security for compensation for carrying, and for all repairs.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

8646. Mr, Evans, you, I understand, not only are a Liberal in politics, but you have taken an active part in political work in this county, have you not?—So far as I could possibly—so far as it was in my power.

8647. You also took part, did you not, in the agitation against the payment of tithes?—Yes.

8648. Do you remember that the late Colonel Tottenham contested this county in the Conservative interest?—Yes.

8649. Which election was that?—I am not quite sure. Was it 1868?

8650. It was between 1874 and 1880 I should suggest, but I do not pretend to know?—1870, I think.

8651. There was no General Election, then. Was it a bye-election. There was a General Election in 1880.

Professor Rhŷs.

Yes, the member died. It was a bye-election, I think.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

8652. It does not matter much. As it was a bye-election it does not matter very much in what year it was, but do you recollect the election when Colonel Tottenham contested the seat, who was a candidate in the Conservative interest?—Yes.

8653. You were at the Cae-einion at that time?—Yes.

8654. Is it the fact, as I believe has been stated, that you were canvassed by your landlord in the interest of Colonel Tottenham?—Yes.

8655. Did you agree to vote for Colonel Tottenham?—No, I did not say I would vote. I said that I would not vote.

8656. What did the landlord say?—He said that he hoped we would not be less friends afterwards, but he hoped that I would not go and try and influence his other tenants.

8657. Do you remember some time after this asking the agent, I think it was Mr. Walter Jones, for certain improvements on the farm?—Yes.

8658. Did the agent use any words of this kind. "How do you expect to have these things when you always fight against my master"?—Yes.

8659. What did you reply?—I said that I was not doing anything against my master, or against my landlord rather.

8660. Anything else?—I really do not recollect now.

8661. I think it was about 1887, was it not, that the tithe agitation became more pronounced in this district?—Yes.

8662. Did you preside at several meetings in connection with that agitation?—I was chairman at some of the meetings.

8663. And was it about that time that some branches of the Land League were formed here?—Yes.

8664. Can you fix the month in which the nearest branch of the Land League was established?—No, I cannot.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

8665. Was it before or after you received a letter in reference to your application about a boundary wall?—Before. That was in 1888—the letter was.

8666. I understand you to say that you had a copy of a new agreement sent in 1888.

The Interpreter.—He has misunderstood it. He thought that the letter referred to was the letter which I have read, but of course the letter referring to the boundary wall I take it is another.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

I thought I put it to him, but perhaps I did not.

The Interpreter.—Yes, you did, Sir, and he answered "Yes," but he evidently has misunderstood.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

8667. Before you presided at this meeting about the Land League, had you applied to the agent or to your landlord, it does not matter which, in reference to a boundary wall?—Yes, I had applied to the agent.

8668. But you got the answer after these branches of the Land League had been started?—Yes.

8669. What was the substance of the answer of the agent then?—Here it is. You have read it.

8670. That was the letter then?—Yes.

8671. What is the date of that letter?—February the 1st, 1888.

8672. Was it after or before the receipt of that letter that you got a copy of the new agreement?—I am not sure, but it was about that time.

8673. About the same time?—About the same time.

8674. Did you sign the agreement?—No.

8675. I do not quite follow. What was the next step. Did you get a communication from your landlord's agent?—I received a notice to quit.

8676. Before you received that, did you send anybody to the agent, or did you see him yourself?—I had been with the agent myself.

8677. What passed between you then?—He said he would have to value the land.

8678. What took place?—I said I was perfectly content, provided I was also allowed to appoint a valuer.

8679. Your suggestion being, then, that the question of what the rent ought to be should be referred to a valuer appointed by each party?—Yes.

8680. Was that suggestion accepted?—No.

8681. Did you send your son to see Mr. Nanney or the agent?—Not at that time, but after that.

8682. Was that after the notice to quit had been sent?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

8683. What took place? What report did your son bring you?—He said that the agent was going to value the land. He had told me too.

8684. Did any paragraph appear in any newspaper in reference to your case at that time?—Yes, a good deal.

8685. Were you told that the landlord had been made wild about the paragraph in the newspaper?—He told my son. My son was told.

8686. Told what? What were the words?—That he had published that that would do no good, or something to that effect.

8687. Then nothing about the landlord's state of mind was said?—Nothing but that he was pretty wild, or that he was in a temper about it.

8688. I think you had to have a sale, did you not?—Yes.

8689. Was it a successful sale?—Yes, very.

8690. Is it the fact that you had reclaimed two or three fields upon this farm from the mountain waste. I will put the question in a more concrete form.

The Interpreter.—He said "No" to that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

8691. Had you to take and cart stones from different fields?—Yes, I had carried stones.

8692. What was the purpose of doing that?—To raise the stones from the fields.

8693. To improve the fields?—Yes.

8694. Had that been done in more years than one by you?—Yes, many a year. The children when they were working in the quarry or working away, after returning home used to go to the fields and blast the stones and raise them.

8695. Did you get any compensation for all that kind of work which you did?—No, none at all. I also carried towards the buildings.

8696. How many years altogether were you at this farm?—I went there in 1854.

8697. At how much do you estimate the amount which the landlord spent upon the farm during those years?—Indeed I cannot say, but I should say that he had spent 90*l.* perhaps.

8698. As I understand it, you did the haulage, even in respect of those improvements, for nothing?—Yes, I had no compensation for the haulage, and if I had had 50*l.* to 60*l.* for haulage, it would not have been enough for me.

Chairman.

We are much obliged to you for your evidence.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Walter B. C. Jones called and examined.

Chairman.

8699. You will give your evidence of course in English?—Whichever your Lordship pleases. In English or in Welsh.

8700. We had better have it in English. You are a land agent?—Yes, my Lord.

8701. On whose estate was Mr. David Evans a tenant?—On Mr. Ellis Nanney's estate of Gwynfryn, Carnarvonshire.

8702. He became a tenant in 1858?—That I cannot say. I only became agent, I think it was in 1871. I am not quite sure. I think it was either the latter end of 1870, or the early part of 1871.

8703. Did David Evans receive notice to quit in 1881 on account of the property being put into the market for sale?—I believe he did, my Lord. Might I add that after that he retook the farm under an agreement, and that he was under an agreement when the last notice to quit was served.

8704. I do not quite understand?—He has stated that he was not under an agreement, but he was under an agreement and that agreement was produced to him at the White Lion Hotel to show him the fact that he was bound to give up the house on the 25th March instead of May 12th, and when he read the agreement he apologised for the mistake, and asked if he should remain at the house. I merely mention the fact to show that his memory is at fault upon that point.

8705. He received notice to quit in 1881 on account of the property being put into the market?—He did in the usual course.

Chairman—continued.

8706. When did the Welsh Land League come into existence?—That I cannot tell you.

8707. About when?—Well I should think about 1885 or 1886.

8708. You heard the letter of the 1st February read, which was a letter signed "W. B. C. Jones," the end of which was "tenants will have to choose "which they will have as their friends, the "landlords or the Welsh Land League?"—That is so, my Lord.

8709. That is your letter?—Yes, my Lord.

8710. Will you kindly explain what you mean by that?—I mean exactly what is expressed on the face of it, my Lord, that it is impossible for landlords and the Land League to be equal friends with the tenants. Their interests are diametrically opposed to each other, and therefore it is impossible for a man to sail with both.

8711. Do you mean to say that if a farmer is a member of the Welsh Land League he is, in your opinion, an enemy to a landlord?—I do, my Lord, with the Land League principles, as then enunciated—I do, with the principles of the Land League as I understood them at that time. I do say that a tenant farmer who was a land leaguer could by no means be a friend of an owner of property. I do not mean to say that in the case of individual landlords, but the two things were diametrically opposed to one another.

8712. Then you go as far as to say that a tenant who was a member of the Welsh Land

Chairman—continued.

League is looked upon as an enemy by a landlord?—I do not say that.

8713. You do not mean that?—I do not mean that. I mean he is opposed diametrically to the principles upon which the ownership of land was and is now carried out.

8714. Was there a General Election in 1885?—That I do not really recollect.

8715. You do not remember how David Evans voted in 1885?—No, I do not, but I have no doubt he voted Liberal, as he always did and he had a perfect right to do so.

8716. Did he receive notice to quit in May 1888?—No, my Lord; it was in February 1888. David Evans was one out of a batch of 60 tenants of Mr. Ellis-Nanney, who received notice to quit by a registered letter on the same day and David Evans' neighbour, who was across the fence close to him, also received notice, and the tenant close to there, at a place called Hafod-y-Dowyll, also received a notice, the object of serving those notices being to place me in a position as agent of the estate to deal with those 60 tenants who had not signed the new agreement. That new agreement I should like to put in if it has not been already put in, and I should like to put in also the circular that was sent out with that agreement, if your Lordship will allow me to read it; it will take but a very few moments;—"Dear Sir,—I am instructed by "Mr. Ellis-Nanney to inform you that he "intends, for the future, to pay the tithes on "his estates direct to the titheowner, instead "of as at present, each tenant paying the same "as agent for him and on his behalf. He also "thinks it desirable to bring each of his tenants "under an agreement, embodying, among other "clauses, this arrangement. In carrying this "out he is anxious to give each tenant some "pecuniary advantage by the change from the "present unsatisfactory way of his paying the "tithe rent-charge on his property by "means of his tenants acting as his agents "in the matter. Therefore, for each 100*l.* "of tithe on his estate he will only add "80*l.* to the rent, while he himself will "have to pay the titheowner this year "87*l.* 8*s.* 10*d.* I am also desired to say that he "will give for the current year a remission of "10 per cent. on the rent and 10 per cent. on "the portion of tithe added to the rent, which "will make for the year ending March 25th "1888, a total remission of 2*s.* in the £ on the "rent, and 3*s.* 6*d.* in the £ on the tithes you "would have been called upon to pay under the "old arrangement." Then I give an example which I think I might omit now. "I enclose a "copy of the proposed agreement, which has "been carefully considered and fully discussed "by Mr. Ellis-Nanney and myself, and I shall "be very pleased to see you in my office any of "the three following Mondays, to discuss "anything which you think would make the "agreement fairer, as it is Mr. Ellis-Nanney's "wish that his tenants shall hold their farms "upon fair and reasonable terms, as he fully

"recognises the right of compensation for "improvements; at the same time he is strongly "opposed to out-going tenants making their "own terms with the in-coming tenants, which "simply would make it practically impossible "for young men of moderate means to take "farms, as their capital would be swallowed "up by paying the out-going tenants a large "sum of money over and above the fair value "of stock, crops, &c., for which nothing would "be got but the privilege of becoming tenant, "and thus at the very first step the new tenant "would be greatly crippled. The remission "will be paid on completion of each agreement, "and should you find it fair and reasonable, "and in your opinion there is no need of "discussion, you can return it to me, signed "in the presence of a witness, and save yourself "a journey to the office, or you can bring it "with you to the rent audit and sign "then.

"It is not proposed at present to alter the time "of receiving the rent, although power to do so "is taken under the agreement.

"Sincerely trusting this arrangement will give "satisfaction,

"I remain,

"Yours very sincerely,

"WALTER B. C. JONES.

"Agent for H. J. Ellis-Nanney, Esq."

That was sent out in English and Welsh to every tenant on the estate in Carnarvonshire, Merionethshire and Montgomeryshire, and wherever else Mr. Ellis-Nanney had property. A copy of the new agreement was also sent out in English and Welsh.

Mr. Seebohm.

That agreement has not been put in yet, has it?

Sir John Llewelyn.

8717. Have you got a copy?—I have (producing copy). It is in English and Welsh, and there is the circular that was sent out and I should like to add that the whole cost of these agreements, stamping and everything else, was discharged by Mr. Ellis-Nanney himself and not a single tenant was put to a sixpence of expense.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

8718. Have you got another copy?—I have not got any more with me, but I can supply the Commissioners.

Chairman.

8719. Then the tenant received notice to quit in February, 1888, and he ultimately bought the farm which had been on sale since 1881. Is not that so?—Yes, my Lord. But there is a very important matter which I should like to bring before the Commission with regard to dates. I issued my notice to Mr. Evans, as one of 60 tenants in February, 1888, as I have said to place myself in a position to deal with matters during the year which it was my duty to do. Not one single word of hardship was heard about this notice to quit until my valuation was delivered to Mr. David Evans in the month of September following. During the whole of that time he had the opportunity of retaking his farm under that new and more favourable agreement at actually a few shillings less per annum than he was then paying. There was not one word about raising his rent. He had the opportunity of taking that farm for six solid months after he had notice to quit at less rent than he had been sitting under during my agency from 1872 or 1871, and it was only after his persistently refusing to take it at the old rent less a few shillings that I said to him I would walk the farm, and I did so. I said to him and to his neighbour, "If my valuation "comes out higher, you shall have it, and if it "gets less you shall have it," and they practically agreed to do so. I walked every field with him, walked the mountain with him, and discussed matters with him, and my figures came out at what they have been stated. Then I advised my principal that perhaps it was better to have an independent man. He went over it and the valuation came out practically the same. But my point is this, that during the six months the man had an opportunity of taking that farm at less rent than he had been paying for it for 17 or 18 years.

8720. Then he ultimately bought the farm that had been on sale since 1881, is that so?—That is so. In the meantime he had been informed repeatedly by me that it was our great desire to get rid of that outlying mountainous property, and that we would not spend any money on that part of the estate. It is part of the detail of the management of an estate to have some sort of discretion as to spending your money.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

8721. But I understand the original rent was 25*l.*?—That may be so; I cannot say. I am only speaking now of what occurred during my agency.

8722. The rent at the time the new agreement was sent was 28*l.*?—That is so, plus the tithe; the tithe was to be added to that.

8723. But the rent was 28*l.*?—Yes, and he was then paying tithe.

8724. But I want to get it from you that the rent was 28*l.*?—It was so.

8725. In the year before the new agreement had been sent, 3*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.* had been allowed by the landlord?—Certainly, a temporary abatement.

8726. Then the actual rent for the year before this dispute arose was not 28*l.*, but 24*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.*?—Oh no, pardon me; the rent was 28*l.*

8727. But there is the abatement?—That does not affect the question of rent. The rent was 28*l.* Anything the landlord chooses to give back is not a reduction of rent.

8728. That may or may not be so; that is your version of it; but what the tenant had paid for his farm the year before was 24*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.*?—What the tenant had paid for his farm, sir, was 28*l.*, and he had handed back to him the small sum that you mentioned, whatever it was 8729. Do you mean that he actually paid the rent and that you gave that amount back to him in cash?—Yes, I do.

8730. Then that is a mere juggle?—That may be so.

8731. The value that passed from his pocket was 24*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.*?—No doubt that is so, but the actual money which passed out of his pocket was 28*l.*

8732. Well, that is the fact. Now, did he, after receiving the notice to quit, ask for a permanent reduction to 27*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.*?—After the notice to quit?

8733. Yes?—He had over and over again, before and after the notice to quit, asked for a permanent reduction, and over and over again been refused. He never paid his rent without asking for a reduction.

8734. Quite so. Does it not occur to you that when a man has been there as long as that, and is continually asking for a reduction of rent, there is very likely something in it?—Well sir, not always.

8735. Then why did you give back 3*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.*?—Because the whole estate got it back.

8736. That shows that the tenants on the whole estate were being charged too much?—No, not at all.

8737. Then why give back anything?—As merely a matter of good feeling between landlord and tenant. The tenants could not claim it.

8738. But you have just told me that this man was continually claiming it. Whenever he paid his rent he said the rent was too high?—Continually asked for a reduction. That proves nothing, sir.

8739. That is a matter of opinion?—Well, sir, if you knew as much about the tenants as I do you would come to the same conclusion.

8740. What was the rent that you ulimately asked from him?—37*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*, which included the tithe.

8741. What was the amount of the tithe?—I really forget the exact amount, but his rent plus the tithe was 30*l.* 4*s.* 0*d.* That is what we offered him the farm at.

8742. Can you not tell me the amount of the tithe?—As far as I remember, it would be about 44*s.* that we added to the rent.

8743. The tithe was 42*s.* I am told. The rent had been 28*l.*; that is common ground; I say there had been an abatement, but we will call it 28*l.* for the sake of argument, and the tithe in addition made it then 30*l.* 12*s.* 0*d.*?—30*l.* 4*s.* 0*d.* I think it was, because we did not add the full tithe. We took the tithe commutation on every farm, and added 80 per cent. of that as a permanent arrangement.

8744. That is 30*l.* 4*s.* 0*d.*?—That is so.

8745. Then when Mr. Nanney took to paying the tithe himself, you asked from this tenant 37*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*?—We did, after valuation.

Mr. Brymnor Jones—continued.

8746. That was asking for an increased rent?—Certainly.

8747. I thought that that was what was denied?—Oh no, I never denied it.

8748. You had some dispute, I think, had you not on general grounds with these tenants?—No, 8749. You took a very hostile public attitude, did you not, to this combination of the tenants, which appears to have been a lawful combination?—No, not against the combination of the tenants. I have not the slightest objection to a combination of the tenants or a combination of landlords or anybody else. I am for free trade all round in that matter.

8750. And you did not object to it at all?—Not in the least.

8751. Did you think it was a beneficent agitation?—Oh no; I thought it an exceedingly foolish one.

8752. You though it was a bad agitation?—Well, I thought it was a very foolish one.

8753. And you do not object to that?—But I do object to it in principle. It opens rather a large question. What I do object to is this: that there was a misapprehension as to the payment of tithe. The tenant never paid the tithe; he was merely a conduit pipe, simply to pay the money out of the landlord's pocket. That is why I objected so seriously to that kind of thing.

8754. You threatened, did you not, to have a combination of the landlords?—Not only threatened it, but we have one.

8755. Is it that combination of landlords that formed a kind of conservative registry as a medium of communication between landowners wanting tenants and tenants wanting farms?—I never heard of that.

8756. You never heard of it?—No.

8757. Did you write these words to Mr. Thomas Gee in a published letter: "You "cannot monopolize combination, boycotting, "shooting, or any other amusement. If your "league have to employ a scoundrel to shoot a "landlord (I am glad to think we poor agents "are too small game) there is nothing to prevent "the return of the compliment, or to limit the "selection of gentlemen worthy of such a "return"?—I did write it and I adhere to every word I have written.

8758. Do you put this agreement forward as a perfectly fair agreement between landlord and tenant?—I do.

8759. Let us take Clause II. "The tenancy "shall be absolutely determined on the tenant "becoming bankrupt or filing a petition for "liquidation or composition with his creditors, "or suffering his goods to be taken in execution, "and the landlord shall thereupon enter into "possession of the premises." Do you consider that fair?—Yes, perfectly, as between the landlord and the tenant—perfectly. It is far better for the tenant to fall into the hands of his landlord than into the hands of a body of angry creditors. He has some chance of recovering and getting a fresh start.

8760. We had it yesterday that many farmers are indebted to the tradesmen in the towns. According to this clause, if there is a fieri facias from the county court against any one of your tenants, the tenancy is ipso facto void if the landlord likes to resume possession?—That is so, and it is frequently, in my opinion, a very good thing for the tenant that it should be so.

8761. What, that a fieri facias for 5*l.* shall disturb his lease and put an end to it?—It does not follow that his lease is disturbed.

8762. It gives the landlord the right to put an end to it?—Quite so. It is good for them to have many rights, but they do not exercise them.

8763. The more rights the landlord has the better for the tenants, is that it?—In many cases, certainly.

Mr. Griffiths.

8764. Do you consider that the land leaguers required more than their just rights?—If I understand their theory, they want a great deal more than their just rights; they want my rights as well.

8765. Will you please to explain?—As I understand the Land League it means this. That a man is not to be dispossessed of his farm upon any consideration whatever; or, if he applies for a reduction of rent and the landlord says "No," and that man leaves it, that there is to be no tenant to take it; the place is to be starved out. They wish to enforce their terms by recourse to boycotting, and as far as I can understand I do not know what they would stop at to obtain their ends. They wish to deprive the landlords entirely of obtaining what they can get as rent for their property, and to take it at their own terms, and upon their own terms, if I understand them right. I hope I am not wronging them.

8766. Are you able to converse with the tenants in the Welsh language?—Yes, and correspond with them fairly; but I do not say much about the grammar.

Mr. Richard Jones.

8767. Do you think you could get more rent for the farm that Evans held than he paid for it?—Could I?

8768. Yes?—Certainly I do.

8769. Do you think you could get more for the other farms as well as on the Cae-Einion estate?—Yes, I certainly do.

8770. What is the inference to be drawn from that?—The inference that I draw from it is this: that a man does not go to the extreme length that he might go to.

8771. Is not this the inference to be drawn, that practically the landlord can dictate his own terms?—Yes, he can, subject to the market. If he chooses to make his terms so unreasonable that he cannot get a man to occupy, he will have the land thrown on his hands. No man is compelled to take my land, if I am such a fool as to make an agreement or to make terms so stiff that you or anybody else cannot live on it, Mr. Richard Jones; you are not bound to live there.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

8772. But can you be surprised that the tenants should band themselves together in order to obtain land at such a rent that they shall be able to live by farming it?—Well, to answer that question is somewhat difficult. I do not object to any men banding themselves together to make the best terms they can, not in the least; but you know one man will thrive very well where another man will starve, on the same quantity and quality of land. It is not so much the land as the man. You know it well enough, sir.

8773. Do you find fault with the tenants for trying to obtain complete compensation for unexhausted improvements?—Not at all. I hold that every tenant is entitled to compensation for unexhausted improvements, and on a liberal basis too. And my agreement, which I principally drew myself, I think gives compensation. This gentleman here [Mr. David Evans], himself will tell you that it is the best agreement he has ever seen; he told me so, and he will not deny it now—that he has nothing to say against the agreement.

Mr. Seebohm.

8774. How many other tenants did you say had the notice of February 1880 sent to them?—Sixty, on the same day, by registered letter. I am sorry I did not produce the Post Office receipts.

8775. How many of them accepted the arrangement about the tithe?—Every tenant on the estate, with the exception of this gentleman, who has bought the property.

8776. Are you in a position to say whether it has given general satisfaction?—I have never heard one single word of complaint against it. The whole of the tenants were invited to come and discuss the matter with me, and some tenants did come, and we discussed it one or two Monday mornings, and I altered some small things in it. I asked them if they would like the rent to be received once or twice a year, or how they would like to have it. The clause was read in English and Welsh, and they had every opportunity of asking about it to their hearts' content. Every tenant has a Welsh copy, signed by the agent.

8777. What induced you to make the proposal at that particular time?—What induced me to make the proposal at that particular time was this: I felt myself that the landed proprietors were wrong upon the point of the tithe, in permitting their tenants to, what I call act, dishonestly in the matter. The tithe never was paid by the tenants. They simply paid it as conduit pipes of the landlords, and I could not myself see for the life of me how they could stand by and see their agents in this small pecuniary matter trying to avoid payment of what was due from them. The tithe was payable by the land, not by the tenants, and I could not stand it.

8778. And you thought it was a beneficial arrangement for the tenants?—I thought so and I do now.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

8779. And really, on the actual point, taking the rents all round, it was practically a reduction of rent?—It was, some few shillings. I do not claim any virtue for that, because it so happened that adding 80 per cent of the tithe commutation did come out at a few shillings less. Tithe was then worth 85*l.* Now I am bound to say that we gain a few shillings, perhaps, per annum.

8780. Since that arrangement was made, have you made any temporary reductions of rent?—Certainly, abatements, constantly.

8781. So that what you said was strictly true, without the question of abatements at all; that this gentlemen had the right for six months of returning to his farm at a rent which at any rate was not larger than it was before?—He had the option for six months of returning at a few shillings less rent.

8782. And if the question of abatements was a question at all in the matter, they had abatements afterwards as well as before?—Yes, not only upon the rent, but they got the abatement upon the 80 per cent. of the tithe. We now pay the parson, or whoever collects for him, a cheque for the whole tithe in the parish where our property is situated. We do not get any remission, but we gave the tenant 15 per cent. upon the tithe we paid the clergyman, and upon the rent as well.

8783. Now, since the Tithe Act, what is the arrangement that has been generally come to in this neighbourhood? Is it more or less beneficial than the one you offered?—That I cannot say, I cannot speak on that point, except for the estate I manage.

8784. Then this arrangement continues with you?—Yes, and I have never heard one single word said against it by any single tenant. If your Lordship will permit me I should like if it is possible to put in this book, which is called "The Land Question in Wales. Part 1, Series of Letters on Land Leagueism; Part 2, The Cae-Einion Farce." I notice that several gentlemen have it in their possession already, and I should like to have it in. I adhere to every word I have stated in that, and I repeat it now. I would repeat it if possible here in court to-day.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

8785. There are leading articles from newspapers in that book?—I do claim that it has been quoted from; a witness has been cross-examined from points in it by one of the Commissioners.

Chairman.

If there is anything that you wish to say from that book that you have not already said you are quite at liberty to state it now, but we cannot print a great book like that.

Mr. Richard Jones.

The quotation was made from your letter not from the book.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

8786. It is in the sense that the Commissioners have copies, and that we shall read it, but there is no point in printing a lot of articles from the newspapers in our Appendix at the expense of the Treasury?—I am perfectly willing that the articles from the newspapers should be eliminated, but if it is possible I claim the right of having, certainly, the facts put in.

Chairman.

8787. You have made several very strong statements; if you wish to make any more we shall be very pleased to hear them. Is there anything more you would like to state?—I should like to state this. This gentlemen [Mr. David Evans] appeared to wish to convey to the Commissioners that it was in consequence of his Land Leagueism and his Anti-Titheism that he got notice to quit. Now, his neighbour has always had the reputation of being a thorough good Tory; his place is only just across the fence, and he gets a notice to quit. I value both farms. The Tory takes the farm at the increased rent, and says nothing about it except that he wishes to Heaven he had not been led away by some friends near him. What I wish to show is that the whole of this thing about Cae-Einion is an utter farce, and nothing in the world but a piece of agitation, got up for political purposes.

8788. You are quite at liberty to make any statement you like. We cannot possibly put into the evidence large pamphlets; but is there anything more you would like to say?—Nothing whatever. I am perfectly willing to be asked any questions by anybody on the subject.

Professor Rhŷs.

8789. Suppose there happened to be any disagreement or difference of opinion between you and a tenant about his tenancy, would it be possible for him to see the landlord?—Quite. They frequently do.

8790. Is that so?—Yes, they frequently do.

8791. You have never heard it suggested that Mr. Ellis Nanney was considered to be inaccessible to the tenants?—Never. It is quite the reverse. And not only that, but I encourage the tenants. They sometimes ask me "Allaf fi weled y Meister ei hun," and I reply "O gellwch a chroesaw."

8792. But, as a matter of fact, have you ever known a tenant to go to Mr. Nanney?—I have often; a few last Tuesday morning.

Chairman.

8793. Will you translate the Welsh sentences you just used?—Professor Rhŷs just asked me if the tenants could go and see the principal, and I said as a matter of fact, Yes, they could, and frequently did so.

8794. The principal being a landlord?—Yes, and that sometimes they asked me if I had any objection to their going to see the landlord, and I replied "No; go, and welcome." I am only too glad that the landlord should share the responsibilities.

Chairman—continued.

Professor Rhŷs.

The untranslatable thing is the tone in which that consent is given; there is not much encouragement in it; I am sorry I cannot convey that.

Lord Kenyon.

8795. Did Mr. Nanney treat any one of his tenants partially on account of his political opinions?—Certainly not, my Lord.

8796. Mr. Gillart, I think you said, valued this farm?—The late Mr. Gillart.

8797. He was recognised as a capable valuer?—I believe so, and especially for upland farms. It was for that purpose I got him.

8798. There was one point which I was not quite clear about. Had Mr. Evans a chance of having his farm at 30*l.* 4*s.* if he would sign that agreement?—Certainly he had.

8799. For how long?—I think my valuation came in in September.

8800. From February to September?—From February to September, or even more than that. It was from the end of 1887 until September.

8801. In consequence of his not signing that agreement you said you would revalue that farm?—Yes.

8802. And you said, I think, that his neighbour, Mr. Jones, also would not sign the agreement?—That is so.

8803. You revalued his farm also?—I did. I walked every field and the mountain.

8804. And the result, in his case, was the raising of his rent some 6*l.* 5*s.*?—It was. There was a slight difference there between Mr. Gillart's valuation and mine. I forget the exact amount really, but nothing worth talking about.

8805. Mr. Robert Jones just took it at your valuation?—He did.

8806. And has continued to pay that rent since?—The farm is sold. I do not know what rent he is paying now, but I expect more than that.

8807. You say Mr. Robert Jones was a Conservative?—He was always looked upon as a Conservative. He always voted Conservative in the open elections. I only quote the case to show that, as far as I am concerned, I held the two men in the same scales evenly.

8808. You treated them exactly alike?—I treated them exactly alike, otherwise I should not quote these men.

Chairman.

8809. There are three questions handed up that I must trouble you with. Two are from Mr. Vincent. The first is: "Do you not, as a "member of the North Wales Property Defence "Association, know for certain that the circular "referred to by Mr. Brynmor Jones has "absolutely no connection with that Associa-"tion?"

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

I did not refer to any circular. I referred to the question of the Conservative registry, and asked whether that was the sort of combination which the witness threatened in the extract I read.

Chairman.

I do not think it is a very important question, Mr. Vincent.

Mr. Vincent.—We regard it as important.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

The whole circular might be read.

Chairman.

8809*a*. This is the circular referred to:—

"To the Clergy, Landowners and Tenants. When the church and all landed property are so severely and relentlessly attacked, and the spirit of Socialism is so rapidly spreading in the principality, it has become highly necessary for the clergy, and the wealthier among the laity, to know who are their true friends and loyal supporters, and to act accordingly.

"Landowners, in particular, should be on their guard as to the persons to whom they let their land, and should ascertain whether candidates for their farms are the friends of order and justice, or of anarchy and confiscation.

"At the urgent request of several persons of influence, I have opened a Conservative Registry as a medium of communication between landowners wanting tenants, and tenants wanting farms; and with a view of carrying out the suggested scheme, I have to request:—

"1. That incumbents inform me of any farm vacant, or about to become vacant, in their parishes.

"2. That all churchmen and conservatives be made acquainted with the existence of such an office.

"3. That conservative landowners and their agents communicate with me whenever a tenant may be required.

"I remain, yours faithfully."

The gentlemen who wrote this letter has not had the courage to put his name to it. Now I will ask you the question of Mr. Vincent. "Do you not, as a member of the North Wales "Property Defence Association, know for cer- "tain that the circular referred to by Mr. "Brynmor Jones has absolutely no connection "with that Association"?—I do know that, my Lord, that it has no connection whatever with the association, and as a member of that association I strongly disapprove of it. I would call your Lordship's attention to a paragraph at page 22. "We do not make known the "name and address of the writer, but our "readers may be sure that we have them quite "safely." I would suggest that the other side should be asked to produce the name and address of the writer, and that he shall be hauled up before the Commission and explain himself. I think the proper author of that ought to have whatever blame or credit belongs to it. I ignore it altogether.

Chairman—continued.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

8810. It appears in a document printed and published by the North Wales Property Defence Association?—It is printed and published by the North Wales Property Defence Association, but the sentiments are not those of the association. The expense of the printer's ink and paper are theirs.

Chairman.

8811. Here is another question of Mr. Vincent's which will put that right: "Do you "not, as a member of this Association, know "that that circular had absolutely no connec- "tion with the association"?—None whatever.

8812. Now I have another question from Mr. Vincent to put to you: "Were these 60 "who received notices, people of various creeds "in politics and religion?—All sorts.

8813. Then there is a question by Mr Llewellyn Jones: "Would witness kindly say "what practical experience he had in agriculture "before he became Mr. Ellis Nanney's agent"?—Yes. I served an apprenticeship for four years with a tenant farmer in Carnarvonshire, who was also a land valuer. I served my apprenticeship for four years with him. I afterwards set up on my own account in Corwen, where I had the management of some small properties.

8814. Mr. Vincent wants to know, "Was "this circular a quotation from the Baner"?—I believe it was. I am not prepared to say, but I believe it was.

8815. It is so stated in the pamphlet, I think?—I see that is so.

Lord Kenyon.

8816. I suppose you are not acquainted with the name of the author of that circular?—No, I am not.

Mr. Seebohm.

8817 And you consider it a hoax?—I consider it regular humbug. Re-examined, 10,322.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. CADWALADR ROBERTS called, and examined through an Interpreter.

8818. The interpreter read the following statement of the witness:—

Evidence of Mr. Cadwaladr Roberts, of Ynys Gyffylog, parish of Celynin.

"I became tenant of Ynysgyffylog and Tyddyn Bach (now 94 acres) in the year 1866. The rent was 70*l.* About this time 13 acres of good land were bought for the purpose of the Cambrian Railway. I consider that this meant a loss of 1*l.* an acre to me, but I received no abatement in my rent, and in 1870 my rent was advanced to 76*l.* In 1873 it was again raised to 82*l.* I now pay 84*l.* in addition to the tithe, but in the last years I have received 10 per cent. back four times.

"I have been constantly draining the farm, almost every field has been drained by me. When the railway was made, as fields were cut up by it, I had to close some large ditches so as to unite small portions of fields.

"A short time ago I brought under cultivation five acres of the foreshore or marsh, which was very damp and unlevel. In addition to my work, I got 20 tons of lime for it. I also built a shed, for potatoes, and did all the carting for another shed.

"I never had a copy of the agreement, so that it is difficult for me to say exactly what it contained.

"My family have always worked at home, two children in the average, and I have never been able to pay them wages.

"Up to 1890 I paid the Income Tax, but failed to get my landlord to return it, though I frequently asked him."

Chairman.

8818*a*. What estate do you live upon?—Mr. Reveley, of Bryn-y-gwin, Dolgelley.

Lord Kenyon.

8819. What is the acreage?—94 acres.

Mr. Richard Jones.

8820. Is it a common thing on Mr. Reveley's estate that the income tax is not returned to the tenants when they pay the rent?—I never had it except during the last three years.

Mr. Griffiths.

8821. Is there any reason why your rent should be advanced so often. You speak of an advance three times running. Is there any reason for it?—I think my rent was raised twice.

8822. You say your rent was 72*l.*, 82*l.*, and afterwards 84*l.*?—I paid 70*l.* for three years soon after coming yonder, and the rent was raised 2*s.* in the £, and in a twelvemonth or a couple of years another 2*s.* in the £ was put on.

8823. Were the rents generally raised on all the estate?—Yes, on the whole estate just the same.

8824. Do you not think that that was very unsatisfactory to the tenants?—We feel that it was so.

8825. Is it true you drained much land yourself?—Yes, I drained all the land that has been drained, only that my landlord gave me the pipes.

8826. And bought some lime as well?—I bought the whole of the lime myself.

8827. And you drained some additional land?—Yes, I brought those five acres under cultivation, and I paid 9*l.* 12*s.* for draining it alone, without speaking of other expenses incurred.

8828. And did you receive no compensation for all that?—No, I got 2*s.* in the £ reduction the last two years.

8829. Do the children work on the farm?—Yes, all of them.

8830. Do they receive wages?—No, we cannot afford to give them wages.

8831. Have you any remedy for this sort of thing?—I think we ought to have a great reduction in the land equivalent to the market prices now.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. ELLIS WILLIAMS called, and examined through an Interpreter.

The Interpreter read the following statement of the witness:—

"Evidence of Mr. Ellis Williams of Bwlch Gwyn, Arthog, near Dolgelly, tenant farmer.

"Evidence relates to witness's own tenancy of the farms of Penrhyn Gwyn and Tynant, in parish of Dolgelly.

"In the year 1886 I became tenant of Penrhyn Gwyn instead of my mother, who was the previous tenant. My mother had received a notice to contract out of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875. The following year, 1877, Tynant, the next farm to Penrhyn Gwyn, was let to me also, the rent of both places being 70*l.* 10*s.* There was a slate quarry on Penrhyn Gwyn farm, and I received 11*l.* a year in respect of damage caused by the working of the quarry. In the year 1881 Dr. John Jones of Bryn ffynnon, Dolgelley, bought the farm from Mr. Ellis Nanney, the previous owner, and the following year my rent was raised to 85*l.*, and I was compelled to give up my claim for trespass against the Quarry Company, as my landlord undertook to pay it. I had no notice before I had to give up my claim for the 11*l.* I understand that a good deal more than 11*l.* was paid him, but I failed to receive anything from him. I went to law, but was compelled to withdraw as the costs were becoming heavy. In several cases sheep fell into the quarry and were killed. I failed to obtain any compensation from my landlord. He would not consent to have damage assessed by arbitration though he was to pay damages according to agreement. He had agreed with the Quarry Company that the damages of 11*l.* were to be paid him.

"The following is a rough statement of the improvements made by me:—

	£	s.	d.
"1878.—A shippon was built. I carried all the materials, raised the sand, carried lime, and cut the foundation - - -	15	0	0
"1879.—I built a shed for the calves, except that I received timber - - - -	10	0	0
"1879.—I made a garden and a farmyard around the place, building the walls myself. I also bought a waterwheel and fixed it - - - -	35	0	0
"This was when Mr. Ellis Nanney was landlord.
"1884.—The sanitary authority insisted upon a new piece being added to the house. I carted the materials and dug the foundation, &c. - - -	20	0	0
"1884–5.—A hay shed was built; I carted the materials and dug the foundation - - -	10	0	0

"The above prices are very moderate for the work which I did in connection with the above. In addition to these I made a number of other minor improvements.

"With regard to timber at Tyddyn Mawr and Penrhyn Gwyn and Tynant, I have to make a complaint as to the manner in which trespass is committed in connection with the cutting. When I was in Penrhyn Gwyn, some timber was cut, and the trees were dragged through my hayfields just before harvest. I have never received any compensation for this. In cases where, by the cutting of trees, gaps were made in the fences, I had to fill the gaps up myself. These trees were trees belonging to my old landlord, and they were not taken away till Dr. Jones' time. Though cut in winter they were allowed to remain in hayfields till near harvest time, and then dragged out.

"I produce a table giving prices obtained by a neighbour for cattle, sheep, and horses in 1872, 1882, and 1892 respectively. Also prices for wool—amount of wages paid for same years.

Mr. Griffiths.

8832. Could you give us the total expense you laid out on this farm ?—No, I cannot exactly. I have made a summary in my statement.

8833. How did you proceed. You say you went to law to get compensation ; how did you proceed as to your law ?—Six months' rent was due to my landlord and I received a letter from his lawyer. Then I went to Mr. Millard. Mr. Davis was my landlord's solicitor here. It was in the agreement that I was to have compensation from him when he took that 11*l.* from me.

8834. Did you produce that agreement ?—Yes.

8835. Still you do not tell us why you did not proceed with the law suit ?—Because I believed it would cost me more money than I would gain by it. Dr. Jones had more money to spend over litigation than I had.

Mr. Richard Jones.

8836. Is there a quarry on the farm ?—Yes, but it is not worked now. It was worked at that time.

8837. Have you ever applied to your landlord to fence around the quarry ?—Yes ; I often complained to him that the sheep went over the precipice or dropped into the gap and were killed.

8838. Is your sheep walk enclosed ?—No.

8839. Have you ever applied to have it enclosed?—Yes, I have often applied.

8840. What are the disadvantages of sheep farming on unenclosed sheep walks ?— This land was shared by three farms and we did not know the respective land to be alloted to each farm—the limits of each farm. That caused disagreements between the farmers, the tenants of those farms.

8841. Supposing that the three tenants joined and fenced around that sheep walk, is there anything in the agreement under which you could claim compensation ?—No, nothing.

8842. Is the Agricultural Holdings Act operative or inoperative in your district ?—I believe most of the landlords gave notices soon after it was passed.

8843. Do you know that they cannot contract out of it ?—Yes, and we know the consequences as well as that.

8844. What do you mean ?—We should have to leave the farm.

8845. Do you mean that the landlord would put that interpretation upon it—that if you sent a notice that you were going to effect certain improvements the landlord would give you notice to quit ?—I have no doubt whatsoever that he would, but not every landlord.

8846. Is that the impression among the tenants generally ?—That is my belief.

8847. Who does the draining on Mr. Reveley's estate, the landlord or the tenant ?—I do not know very much about Mr. Reveley's estate, but I believe the farmers do the work and the landlord gives many of the pipes. I have left the farm ; I do not live there now.

Lord Kenyon.

8848. When did you leave this farm ?—Seven years ago.

8849. In 1886 ?—My taking of the farm terminated about six years ago.

8850. Did you put in any claim for compensation for unexhausted improvements ?—No, I did not give any notice until I was leaving. They were almost all buildings.

8851. I understand you to say that if a tenant gave notice that he is going to improve his land, the landlord would give him notice to quit ?—I did not say that.

8852. What you said to Mr. Richard Jones was tantamount to that ?—There were other things besides the repairs.

8853. What I want to arrive at is who are the landlords who would give notice to quit. Would you mind giving me instances ?—I think I said I believed they would do so.

8854. Can you tell me why you left your farm ?—Because the rent was too high, that was one reason, and because the doctor dealt with me as he did.

8855. You gave the doctor notice. The doctor did not give you notice, I think ?—Yes, I gave the place up.

Sir John Llewelyn.

8856. Did you hold two farms, the Bwlchgwyn and the Penrhyn Gwyn ?—I live in Bwlchgwyn now, but I held Penrhyn Gwyn and Tynant six years ago.

8857. Do you live in one of those farms now ?—No.

8858. In what farm do you live now ?—Penrhyn Gwyn.

8859. Then the two farms at that time were Tynant and Bwlch Gwyn ?—Yes.

8860. Are those two farms held by the same man now ?—The same tenant as followed me ?

8861. Yes. Are they held by one man ?—No ; they are let separately now.

8862. And the sheep run was open to the three farms ?—Yes.

8863. Are they fenced off now ?—No, I do not think so.

8864. There was a claim on account of sheep that fell into the quarry, and you had an action against the company ?—No, I did not enter any claim ; but I complained to the doctor about them.

8865. In your evidence in chief you said your landlord undertook to pay it ?—It was in the agreement ; yes.

8866. Was the agreement in writing ?—Yes.

8867. Then how was it you did not get the compensation ?—I do not know, I am sure.

8868. Was there a set off in any claim for rent ?—No.

8869. You did not consider that you had any claim, although the agreement was in writing ; could not you enforce it ?—Yes, otherwise I would not have gone to law on account of it, to see about it.

8870. But did you get it ?—No.

Professor Rhŷs.

8871. Was not that claim against the Company ?—No. It was not against the Company, because my landlord had taken that claim from me.

Chairman.

8872. A question is put in by Mr. Vincent. "Will you name the sanitary authority that made you rebuild the houses, and give the date of the order" ?—William Jones, but I had no notice from him, only William Jones called yonder and said that the house was unfit. I do not think that the doctor had notice either.

Chairman—continued.

Mr. Richard Jones.

8873. In the items of expenditure I see that in the year 1879 you made a garden and wall, and water-wheel at an expense of 35*l.* Did you get any compensation for that ?—No, nothing.

8874. Is the water-wheel still on the farm ?—Yes, but there is another one in its stead. I had something from the incoming tenant for the water-wheel alone, but very little.

The witness withdrew.

Dr. Jones called and examined.

Chairman.

8875. You are the landlord of the last witness ?—He was a tenant of mine about seven years ago, my Lord.

8876. Have you anything you wish to say on that evidence which you have heard ?—I wish to make it known that when I purchased the farm Ellis Williams was tenant of two farms, and that before I bought the place he had had notice to quit from Mr. Nanney, the gentleman who sold the farms to me. He then had the offer of the two farms that he held or the other one which was contiguous to them, Tyddyn-Mawr, and of course, having been born at the place, he knew very well which was the best farm, and the best holding, and everything about them. He was born there. As to the quarry, the quarry was worked for about a year, I think, after he left. I received very little from the quarry, as he took those two farms Tynant and Penrhyngwyn on condition that he was to have nothing from the quarry. He did complain about some cattle going over. That was the duty of the quarry owners to protect him from it, and they have since put up things to prevent any accident of that kind. This man went away of his own accord. I found him a tenant to take the sheep from him and everything he had got. He got paid for the water-wheel, and after having left the farm for some time he sent me a writ for damages and things that he had sustained, according to him, at the quarry, which he failed to maintain, and he had to give it up. He put me to a great deal of expense, he has shown great malignity against me since he left, and I tried all I could to make him happy and comfortable at his house. He had the choice of two farms, and I have let the farms since to two tenants. They are perfectly satisfied. It is true they complain now of hard times, as all farmers do. I returned them 2*s.* 6*d.* in the £ on the last two rents, and they are perfectly happy. I get more rent paid on the farms than Ellis Williams paid at this time. The fact is he had an addition made to his house quite willingly on my part, and I paid out about 300*l.* on the house and a hay loft—a hay barn was made for him. I consider that Ellis Williams has had the best of the bargain there, and he has put me to a great deal of expense, I obtained for him a tenant to succeed him in the farm who paid him for the wheel and anything else that he had any claim for. The agreement he talks of is the ordinary agreement as between landlord and tenant, and the very last line in that agreement says that anything that is disputed is to be decided by arbitration, the last line in the ordinary agreement in this district. That is the only thing he had against me, and although he put me to a great deal of expense about it, he failed, and he did not go on with it. He took the farm on the condition that he was not to have anything from the quarry which is worked under the Crown, and he had the choice of another farm, a larger place by itself, than the two other farms. I shall be very happy to answer any questions your Lordship wishes to put, and I only want fair play.

Chairman—continued.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

8877. What is the name of the tenant who succeeded Ellis Williams ?—Two have succeeded him, one is John Williams, and the other is Rees Pugh.

8878. Are they both your tenants now ?—Yes, they are.

8879. Was there not some other tenant, who became tenant, and who left or who was sent away—I do not know which ?—When Ellis Williams left these two persons took the farms. You see he had two holdings under his part at one time. Now I have two tenants.

8880. What was the rent that Williams had had the farm at, when you granted him the reversion ?—76*l.*, I think.

8881. For both holdings ?—Yes.

8882. What rent did the successors agree to pay ?—Oh, they pay more.

8883. How much each ?—They pay 40*l.* each.

Mr. Griffiths.

8884. The first time you paid your rent, was there anything said about compensation for the quarry, the same as he had been used to by his former landlord ?—No, but he had been taking the farms before conditionally that he was not to have anything from the quarry.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

8885. Yes but that he denies?—I should like to ask him.

8886. Have you the agreement?—No; not on that point. The only agreement we had was the ordinary agreement obtainable in this district. There was no separate agreement as to the Quarry.

8887. Not in writing?—No.

8888. He says that he did not hear anything of it until another year after?—That is my version of it and that is the truth.

8889. The only thing is you both differ. Is it not on his improvement you are able to get the same rent for the farm now?—Well, did I not go to the expense of 300*l.* or 400*l.* in building the house for him and the hay place.

8890. And did he not go to a great deal of expense, too?—The usual expense of hauling only.

8891. Did you not raise the rent to 85*l.*?—For the two farms.

8892. Yes?—Yes, I think that was the rent.

8893. You rose his rent from 70*l.* 10*s.* to 85*l.*?—76*l.* it was.

8894. On what ground?—76*l.* was the rent he paid before I had it.

8895. After you had it, it was risen to that. That is his statement?—Yes, after I got the farms I raised the rent, but then, you see, I had got the expense of building for him. I think the house before I added to it was as good a house as most houses in Islawrdre, in the district where he lived.

Mr. Richard Jones.

8896. The two farms are occupied separately now?—They are.

8897. Previously Ellis Williams himself occupied the two?—He did.

8898. Are there two farmhouses? Is there a farmhouse on each holding?—Yes, and one of course got into bad repair during the time Ellis Williams lived at Tynant; my other house got into ruin, and it cost me a lot of money to raise that up again for another tenant.

8899. Was there any mention about the fencing of the quarry when Ellis Williams took the farm?—I do not remember that there was any; but as to the enclosing of the sheep-walks, I promised to do that for him if he paid me a certain amount of interest for the money laid out. I am not quite certain about the fencing of the quarry, which did not have anything to do with me—that was the work of the Quarry people to do—to fence the quarry. They were holders under the Crown.

8900. But do you not think that you should have protected the interest of the tenant by compelling the owners to fence the quarry?—Just so; that is what we did; it is fenced now. Ellis Williams has received a good deal of money from that quarry; more than I ever had. He had for years rent from it.

8901. While Ellis Williams was your tenant did you let one of the two farmhouses without his consent?—Never.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS ELLIS called and examined through an Interpreter.

The Interpreter read the following statement of the witness:—

"Evidence of Mr. Thomas Ellis, Erwgoed, Dolgelly.

"Evidence relates to farms of Tyn llwyn and Wern-y-Barcud in the parish of Dolgelly.

"Successive Landlords.

1. Captain Williams, Bron y gader.
2. Mr. Gibbons, Yewtree House, Neston, Cheshire.
3. Mrs. Gibbons.
4. Mr. R. J. and W. Griffiths, Glyn, Dolgelly.

"Rent.—About the year 1849 I became tenant of a farm called Tynllwyn for the yearly rent of 27*l.* At the end of three years the rent was raised to 28*l.* This was the rent of the farm when Mr. Gibbons became owner, about the year 1860.

"In 1858 I reclaimed some waste land (9 acres), which was very wild and covered with gorse.

"At the end of four years (1862) the rent was raised to 32*l.* on my own improvements, and that before I reaped the fruits of my labour.

"In 1862 I took a farm called Wern-y-Barcud in addition to Tyn llwyn. The previous tenant paid 13*l.*, but when I became tenant the rent was raised to 16*l.* 8*s.*, so that the total amount of rent I paid at that time was 48*l.* 8*s.*

"In 1872 I reclaimed another piece of waste land about 9 acres—very wild, the same as the other, and in consequence my rent was raised in 1876 from 48*l.* 8*s.* to 60*l.* I received no return whatsoever, and 60*l.* was the rent I paid in 1885 when I left.

"Building Improvements made by me.

1875 Cartage for stable, &c. -	18	0	0
1877 Shed at my own expense -	7	0	0
1878–9 Shed cartage - -	5	0	0

"Improvements.—Land.

"I received not a single penny for cartage. An old farmhouse which I had used for keeping cattle was converted into a keeper's house so that I had to carry towards making a new shed.

"Agreements.—I have not got written agreements with my first three landlords and I am sorry that my agreement with my last landlord has gone astray. As far as I can remember the only oppressive clauses that it contained are the following:—

"1. That I was not in any way to burn or remove any brushes that might have been on the land.

"2. That I was not to carry a gun for any purpose whatsoever on the land.

"Upon observing the above clauses I hesitated a good deal before signing it, but I was compelled to do so in order to continue in the farm.

"Children.—My wife, myself, and two of my children used to work hard on the farm, but it was quite impossible for me to pay them any wages."

"Game.—All that I can say upon this matter took place from the year 1878 to 1885, that is, the period I had held the land under Mr. Griffith.

"Before I knew who bought my farm in 1878 I received a letter from a Mr. Edwards of Fwllheli, giving me notice not to carry a gun on the land.

"One of the first things that was done afterwards was the turning of an old home into a house for the gamekeeper, and a place to rear the pheasants, &c. I received no compensation for the loss of this shed, but had to carry stones towards another shed without any payment. It was in this place the game was reared every year and they were let loose on the corn and hay fields, and the keeper was constantly after them, caring nothing what harm he was doing to the crops. Many rabbits were taken there from other places. When Mr. Griffith became owner rabbits had disappeared, but very soon after that hundreds troubled us.

"It was dangerous for a dog to chase any of the rabbits. I should at once be told of it. I was given to understand not to work in some portion of the farm at a particular time of the year in case I might have disturbed the game.

"Servants' Story. — The maidservants had occasion to go to the fields in search of the milking cows, to send them to the milkmaid, when one of the landlords passed by, and asked her what she was doing. She told him. He said that she ought to milk the cows where they were instead of disturbing the game, and at the same time making use of very strong language.

"The landlord and the keeper used to walk the place frequently on Sundays, to look after the game, and they never cared in the least what way they would take. My children and myself tried to persuade the keeper not to walk through the hay in the month of June, but to no purpose, and when I reasoned with him his answer would be threatening.

"I will give an instance of the inconsiderateness on the part of the landlord in this matter. On one occasion I sent a lad to a field, in a portion of which there was corn, to dig up some potatoes, when both landlords and a party, large in number, came to the field to shoot. Upon seeing the boy one of the landlords became angry and stated that I had sent him there to disturb the game, and he and the party, with one exception, walked through the corn crops, backwards and forwards, shooting the game. Subsequently one of the landlords (the one who became angry), accompanied by the keeper, came to the field (which was a cornfield) nearest to me, where I was making up a haystack, and without hesitating a moment they went through this cornfield also.

"Also, I suffered a little loss and inconvenience, owing to animals getting lost and never being seen afterwards, and others dying. I suppose they are being shot by the keepers.

"Instances. — We saw someone shooting in a particular field, i.e., Cae-scybor. A cat was lost, a search was made for the cat, which was found dead near where the shooting took place.

"I lost two valuable bitches, and I know for certain, as it was thrown up, that poison had been given one of them.

"About two years before I lost the dogs, I bought a sow with young ones for 9*l.* 10*s.* The sow and a boar became very ill as if suffering from hydrophobia. According to the testimony of two veterinary surgeons, poison was the cause, and one of them stated that it was strychnine.

"Upon one occasion the maidservant saw a particular man throwing something here and there near the house.

"Notice to quit.—In May 1885 I received a notice to quit. The only reason that I can think of why they gave me notice was that I expressed myself rather forcibly to the gamekeeper with reference to his walking through the corn crops and hay, placing the traps, &c."

Sir John Llewelyn.

8902. Do I understand, by the various landlords you mention, that the property changed hands?—Yes.

8903. And there was no trouble about game till Mr. Griffiths came?—No, not at all.

8904. He was the owner, not a shooting tenant?—Yes, he had bought the farms.

8905. Do you complain that there was a great quantity of game?—There was no game worth troubling about before that, but in his time there was a great deal.

8906. Do you complain most of the pheasants or the rabbits?—The rabbits did most mischief but there were a good many pheasants, as they were reared on the farm.

8907. Did he feed his own pheasants?—No, I did not feed the pheasants, I did not want them.

8908. I am asking about the landlord, did not the landlord feed them?—Oh yes, the landlord fed them and they were reared by the keeper's house, near my house.

8909. Do I understand that you complain most of the rabbits?—Yes, there were a good number of rabbits and they are rather wasteful.

8910. This was in 1878?—Yes, two years after he had bought the farm.

8911. And in 1880 the Ground Game Act was passed?—Yes.

8912. Were you able then to protect yourself?—No, I could not after he had got possession of the farm, because I could not disturb them at all in any way.

8913. Not under the protection of the Ground Game Act?—No, not under that Act; nothing yet.

8914. Did you make any claim for compensation on account of the mischief done?—No, it was no use my doing so.

Chairman.

8915. What is your landlord's name?—Mr. Willie Griffiths.

8916. Where does he live?—He lives now at Penmaen.

Mr. JOHN JONES called and examined.

The interpreter read the following statement of the witness:—

"Evidence of Mr. John Jones, Penrhiw, Rhydymain, Dolgelly, tenant farmer.

"My evidence relates to the farm where I was born and brought up, where my father's family had lived for 300 or 400 years, namely Dugoed Isaf, in the parish of Mallwyd, Merionethshire. At one time Sir Watkin was the landlord, and the rent was 20*l.* Before my father's time it was raised to 30*l.*, and the landowner built a new house and barn. My father carted all the materials for him. The timber had to be carted from a distance of 12 miles, and the lime and slates from distances of 30 and 20 miles respectively. My father had, whilst cultivating the land, raised almost sufficient quantity of stones. The rent was after this raised to 40*l.* I now find it probable that the rent was raised to 40*l.* a few years before this building was done. The building was done 52 or 53 years ago.

"In the year about 1861 the farm was sold to Sir Edmund Buckley. In the year about 1870 a sum of 20*l.* was spent upon repairing the buildings and 5 per cent. was added to the rent in respect thereof, i.e., the rent was raised to 41*l.* My father had greatly improved the land by good cultivation and by using a large quantity of manure, making fences, &c. He had five sons at home working without wages on the farm.

"In the year 1876 the farm was sold to a Mr. Bradwell, and in the meantime my father had died. My mother was refused the farm unless she was willing to pay an increase of 35*l.* She offered to pay 50*l.* As the landlord would not accept this rent we had to leave without receiving a farthing's compensation for the various improvements made on the farm. The new landlord informed us that he had been offered 76*l.* for the place. When we left an Englishman became tenant. Before he had been there 18 months the landlord had to levy a distress for the rent. He was there after that 18 months, and he then sold all his stock off himself and his landlord lost the rent. During those three years the land had been neglected and had begun to run out of cultivation, so that the landlord was compelled to let it to a farmer for 35*l.* for three years and 50*l.* a year afterwards."

The witness withdrew.

[Several witnesses were called but failed to answer.]

Mr. GRIFFITH PRICE called and examined.

8917. The Interpreter read the following statement of the witness:—

"Evidence of Mr. Griffith Price, junior, Cors y garnedd, Llanfachreth, Dolgelly.

"I am the son of a tenant farmer, and have been at home off and on all my life assisting my father on his farm.

"My evidence will chiefly relate to the parish of Llanfachreth. The chief landowner is Mr. John Vaughan of Nannau. The rest of the parish is owned by various persons.

"It is a matter believed through the whole of the district that a Churchman has a better chance of obtaining a farm than a Nonconformist, and that the former can get on better with the landlords than the latter. All the large landowners are Conservatives and Churchmen.

"I can mention a case where a family, after having left Nonconformity, in a very short time afterwards became tenants on one of the farms in the district.

"Farms are let from year to year. I do not know of a single instance in this parish where a farm is let on a lease.

"The clause in agreements which is considered most oppressive is the one whereby the tenancy of a farm is determined by six months' notice. This has, in the testimony of all I have spoken to, a detrimental influence upon agriculture, as farmers will not make the improvements they would if they were more secure in their farms.

I produce a list of cases where farms have been consolidated in the district, and another in which rents have been raised.

Sir John Llewelyn.

8917*a*. You say in your evidence that you think six months' notice is too short to quit. What do you think would be adequate to meet the case, a three years' notice, or less?—Well, less would do. Six months is too short.

8918. I understand from that, that you draw a line between fixity of tenure and the present notice to quit as being too short. What do you think would be adequate?—Well 12 months would be better than six.

8919. Do you think that would be adequate?—It could be better than that. Two years would not be too much for a farmer.

8920. You know the Agriculture Holdings Act, under which you may get compensation for improvements that you make?—Yes.

8921. You know the Act?—We do know it.

8922. Do you approve of that Act?—Yes.

8923. Have you an agreement under which you hold your farm?—No, I have not.

8924. Then you are under the Act?—I am not a tenant.

8925. Your father, I mean?—Yes.

Chairman.

8926. Two questions from Mr. Vincent. "Are not the majority of tenants Nonconformists"?—Yes.

8927. "Could you mention any case in which a Nonconformist landowner has got a Churchman as a tenant"?—No, I do not know of any.

Adjourned till the following morning at Barmouth.

ELEVENTH DAY.

Masonic Hall, Barmouth, Merionethshire, 15th September 1893.

PRESENT :

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

LORD KENYON.
SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
MR. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
PROFESSOR RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
MR. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
MR. RICHARD JONES.
MR. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

MR. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.

Mr. JOHN DAVIES called and examined.

Chairman.

8930. Do you prefer to be examined in Welsh, or will you give your evidence in English ?—I will give it in English.

8931. Have you got a copy of the evidence that you have handed in ?—I believe I have an outline of it.

8932–3. You want to speak about the general condition of the farming population ?—Yes, my Lord.

8934. Will you kindly tell us about that ?—With regard to farmers in my district there are very few peasant proprietors—small freeholders.

8935. Will you kindly tell us what your district is ?—The Duffryn district. It comprises the parishes of Llanenddwyn and Llanddwywe.

8936. How big is your district ? What is about the acreage ?—I cannot say. There are very few peasant proprietors or small freeholders in my district who have inherited their holdings from their ancestors. There are two or three. There are a few tenant farmers who have bought their own holdings for their own occupation. Those are also few. They were induced to buy their holdings when the Cors-y-gedol estate was sold in the year 1852. They had to borrow the money as a rule from private sources—private individuals, and I do not believe they have paid the encumbrancers yet.

Mr. Seebohm.

8937. How many years ago ?

Sir John Llewelyn.

8937*a*. You said 1852 ?—Yes. The present condition of such small freeholders compared with tenant farmers is very much the same. With regard to tenant farmers, tenant farmers and their wives take a considerable part in the manual labour of the farm, and as to the children they work at home as a rule and are not in receipt of wages nor are they otherwise remunerated. They are clothed and fed ; that is all. Their parents, speaking generally, are unable to make any provision on their marriage or independent settlement in life, except when they go to farms they become sureties for them, and I doubt very much as to the majority of tenant farmers, whether present rents could be maintained were they to pay their children wages. I am sure they would not. As to the proportion of farm labour which is hired, it is greater compared with that rendered by members of the household ; the greater part is hired, with the exception of a few farmers.

Lord Kenyon.

8938. They are paid wages ?—Yes, they are paid wages. There are a few cases where the household members outnumber the labourers. The greater number of hired labourers are lodged on farm premises, I should say three-fourths, and one-fourth settled in cottages. With very few exceptions they live on their employers' finding.

Chairman.

8939. They are fed by the employer ?—They are fed by the employer with very few exceptions.

Mr. Seebohm.

8940. Even those in cottages?—Even those in cottages. They work on the farm, and are fed on the farm, and go to the cottages to sleep at night. I am not aware of any that receive payment in any measure in kind in this district. They receive cash wages. The wages are much higher now than they were 40 or 50 years ago. I do not know, my Lord, whether I may be allowed to say what I saw with regard to this, and what I have read. Even the day before yesterday I saw a diary of an old farmer of the wages he paid 40 years ago.

Chairman.

8941. Yes, you may state that?—He had two farms, and he used to pay the best men on the farms from 6*l.* to 7*l.* a year.

8942. And keep, of course?—And keep. He paid the females from 4*l.* to 5*l.* Now, the best men are paid 30*l.* a year; the second best about 23*l.* Housekeepers are paid from 15*l.* to 20*l.* Others that take upon them manual labour, about 14*l.* the best.

Sir John Llewelyn.

8943. By "housekeepers" you mean female servants?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

8944. And the other matter referred to females, I suppose, too—those which you said work upon the farm who receive 4*l.* to 5*l.*?—Yes, they are females.

Mr. Richard Jones.

8945. What is the distinction between housekeepers and the others? Are the housekeepers those who take charge of the house in the absence of the wives?—Yes; labourers or servants are accommodated as a rule in the farmhouse. A few sleep, too, in outbuildings. They take their meals in the house. As for cottage accommodation, there are few cottages on the land on which they work at present, very few. They mostly reside in the farmhouses. In the past there used to be more living in cottages on the farms.

Mr. Seebohm.

8946. That means more married labourers, does it not?—Married labourers, as a rule.

8947. There are fewer married labourers now than there used to be it means?—No, I do not think there are fewer, only I know many cottages on the farms that have got now into a dilapidated state.

Sir John Llewelyn.

8948. And I understood you to say that those who used to live on the cottages on the farms now live in villages?—Those that used to live in the cottages on the farms are gone; they now live in villages.

8949. But the cottages on the farms are dilapidated some of them?—Yes. Those that live in cottages in villages have to walk to their work. The distance averages a mile about. The accommodation of the cottages they live in is fair. As a rule they have gardens belonging to their cottages.

Mr. Griffiths.

8950. Are you now referring to farm cottages or those in villages?—In villages. There are very few farm cottages. A few live in small farms or a house with sufficient land to keep a cow, but those do not live on their employers' farms. They are tenants some of them of the same landlord as the farmers. We know of no small holdings in this district, or allotments within the meaning of the Allotments Act. As to tenant farmers it is as much as they can as a rule to make two ends meet. Labourers compared with tenant farmers are better off as to comfort.

Mr. Seebohm.

8951. Does that apply to married labourers?—Both. There has been a considerable migration of labourers within this district within the last 50 years, and some farmers—a few farmers have migrated as well. The reason they leave this country is to improve their circumstances. Very few farmers keep diaries or farming accounts. As to the periods of trade depression, and the commencement of the depression in this district, I should say the depression mostly felt occurred in 1879. The present depression began about two years ago. The causes of such depression I am at a loss to ascertain. I feel confident that it is not to be assigned to foreign competition. When times were better, and were very good, the competition was the same. The remedies I would suggest for improving the profits from land would be security of tenure, compensation for improvements, land or arbitration court, and the abolition of the game laws. As to general relations between landlord and tenant in this district, the relations are perfectly friendly. They are mostly friendly in this country, where agents and gamekeepers do not interfere. That is all I have to state.

Chairman.

8952. Then I think I understand you to say that you consider the rents in this part of the country too high?—I do.

8953. So high that the children of the tenant farmer working on the land cannot possibly receive any payment for their services, as well as the rent being paid?—They cannot.

Lord Kenyon.

8954. Mr. Davies, you referred to the Corsygedol estate; that was sold in 1852, was it not?—Yes.

8955. Do you know whether the tenants, when they bought those farms, bought them dear?—Well, I should say they bought them rather dear, because the tenants in the auction could not compete with the more wealthy.

8956. You think there was a disposition on the part of the neighbouring landowners to buy at the same time, and to compete with them?—There was.

8957. Do you think, on the whole, that they improved their condition by buying those?—I do not think they have.

8958. They were, perhaps, as well off before?—Quite as well off.

8959. You have said something about children of farmers receiving wages, did the children of the farmers ever receive wages before?—I do not think they did.

8960. Has it ever been the case in your recollection?—Not to my knowledge.

8961. Were the children disposed to be rewarded for their work by being provided for in after life?—I believe it is that tenant farmers' children were better provided for formerly than they are at present.

8962. That would be on account of the bad times, or at least on account of the farmers not being so well off now as they were formerly?—Not so well off.

8963. But I should think that the question of wages being paid in hard cash to the children never occurred?—I do not think it ever occurred in hard cash.

8964. With regard to villages and cottages, I have heard it stated, and I should like you to correct me if I am wrong, that a labourer does not care to live in an isolated cottage in this district?—I do not know about caring; I think he would prefer it.

8965. You think he would prefer to live by himself?—I think he would prefer to live by himself.

8966. Take some of the upland farms. They are rather bleak and cold in the winter. Would not he naturally prefer to live in the village?—No. Should a cottage get vacant on an upland farm, with a field or two attached to it, there would be a lot of labourers going in for it.

8967. It occurred to me that a village is really an aggregation of cottages, and that they would live together for the sake of companionship, and would rather walk a greater distance to their work than live in an isolated place?—No, I do not think that is so.

8968. I do not know whether you know the Treweryn district?—I do not.

8969. I remember a cottage being built on the road there, and it has never been inhabited since it was built. I thought that might possibly have been the case—that it was too isolated?—No.

8970. You do not think so?—No.

8971. You have spoken about the Allotments Act. With regard to allotments under that Act, is there any demand for them?—No, none. May I be allowed to give my reason?

8972. Certainly. Perhaps there is difficulty in obtaining them?—No, we have done away with the Small Holdings Act.

8973. You have not taken it up?—We have not taken it up. I happen to be a member of the Committee that met about a fortnight ago, and we do not consider the circumstances of the county meet it by any means; we take it to be a sham so far as we are concerned, and we feel certain that no Act of the kind will work in this part of the country without a compulsory clause.

8974. The land that is offered to you is not suitable?—It is not suitable.

8975. Are the landlords in this district mostly resident or absentees?—The principal landlord here is resident.

8976. And on that account do you think there are friendly relations?—Yes, I have no hesitation in saying that his tenant farmers and himself are on pretty good terms.

8977. Who is the one you refer to?—Mr. Ansell.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

8978. I understand you to say that the reason why the County Council have not taken up the Small Holdings Act of 1892 is because of the defects in the machinery of the Act?—In the machinery—the construction of the Act.

8979. Do you think that there is any desire among the labourers for small holdings of two acres?—There is.

8980. Are you of opinion that the general application of the Act, supposing the machinery were amended, and therefore proper lands obtained upon reasonable terms, would improve the condition of the labourers in this county?—I believe it would.

8981. In regard to farmers' children, to what age do the farmers' children usually remain on the farm helping their father without wages?—Well, it is difficult to answer. They reside on the farm till they get married, as a rule.

8982. They reside, then, until they become adults, as a rule?—Yes.

8983. Do you know whether or not the attendance of children at school is interfered with or made more inconvenient to the children by the necessity of this work on the farm?—It is made more inconvenient; there is no question about that.

8984. You said that among the remedies which you desired is more adequate compensation for improvements done by farmers. I gather from that that you do not think that the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883 is satisfactory?—No.

8985. Do you remember the schedule to the Act?—I do.

8986. What alteration would you suggest in the schedule to the Act. I will hand it to you. You see they are divided into three headings or clauses?—They are.

8987. They are improvements to which the consent of the landlord is required. Do you think, for instance, that the improvements under Part 1 or any of them ought to be permitted by you without the consent of the landlord?—I would not suggest that. I believe the tenant farmer, before making any improvements, ought to consult the landlord; but when leaving his farm he ought to be compensated.

8988. Take the case of his enlarging a building, for instance. Supposing he does that without the consent of the landlord, do you think he ought to be compensated?—I would not say that.

8989. You would not go so far as that?—No, I would not. The landlord ought to be consulted in my opinion.

8990. But would this be one of the matters upon which you would suggest that a land or an arbitration court should have some jurisdiction?—It would.

8991. So that if I were a tenant farmer and I went to you as a landlord and I said, "Now, I "want to make a new building; I do not ask "you to do it, and I will do it at my own "expense, but I want to be compensated under "the Act," and the landlord says "No," you think I ought to go to the land court?—I think you ought to go to the Land Court.

8992. And if the Land Court thought it was a fair improvement to make, and was a general benefit both for the landlord and tenant in the long run, the Court might give the sanction which the landlord refused?—Just so.

8993. What do you think of the other parts of the schedule?—As to part 3, I believe these matters ought to be left to the jurisdiction of the tenant farmer.

8994. But you see the landlord's consent is not required for it?—It is not required.

8995. Do you hear any complaints in this county about the machinery of the Act as to the requirement of notice by the tenant, that the tenant is to give two months' notice of his claim?—Yes, there are complaints.

Mr. Griffiths.

8996. Is the reason why you wish to get these remedies because you find that tenant farmers, as a rule, now do not get security for their tenure?—It is so.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

8997. And also that they do not get compensation for the improvements that they make, for the same reason?—It is so.

8998. I see you have suggested abolition of game laws. Do you not think that if the game laws were abolished all your landlords would leave the country?—I question it.

8999. Or is there any other reason? Do landlords in this district let out their game to others?—They do. That is the great grievance here.

9000. Do you think tenants, as a rule, would be glad to take this game and pay rent to the landlord for the game, and have it in their own hands?—No, I do not think they would be willing to have the rents increased. They consider, inasmuch as it is they who feed the game, that they ought to get the game.

9001. Well, they would get the game. They could let it then if they wished to?—Yes, that would decrease the rent a little if they wished to.

9002. But it would be very different. The tenant farmer would then be master over the game. The keeper could not trample upon him?—No.

9003. As I remember, in the other evidence it was stated that dogs and keepers go through the corn. We have had several instances of that?—Yes, that is the case here.

9004. If the tenant gave a trifle for the game, do you not think he would be in a better position?—Yes; but the question is, why should he give anything for the game?

9005. You wish to give the game altogether to the tenant?—To the tenant.

9006. I am afraid we should not have much game in this country?—I do think the tenants would feel the loss of it.

9007. What was the reason why these people were induced to buy these farms?—For fear of others buying them, and that they should have to quit.

9008. Then you think landlords ought to build more labourers' cottages out in the country?—As I said, the greater part of the labourers in the farmhouse. As to the few that live in the villages—I said one-fourth, I believe, who reside in the villages—no doubt it will be more convenient for the work.

9009. You did say it would be more convenient if they could live in the farmhouses. But then, of course, you would like the landlord to build a few more cottages for the labourers?—I do not think they would care very much for the cottages unless they could get an acre or two of land.

9010. You are an advocate of every labourer keeping his cow?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

9011. That is what I asked Mr. Davies before?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

9012. I quite agree with you. Do you know of daughters and sons living with their parents and unable to get farms after they are married?—Yes, I do; they have the greatest difficulty.

Mr. Richard Jones.

9013. Has there been a good deal of change in the properties that you are acquainted with; that is, have the properties changed hands?—No, not a great deal. There have been a few changes, but not often. I mean, several years between them.

9014. Do you know of instances where rents have been advanced where there has been a sale of property?—I cannot say with a view to sale.

9015. You say that the wages of the labourers are very much higher than they were 40 years ago. Are there as many employed now on the farms as there were?—Not quite as many.

9016. Have the labourers to be fed better?—They have.

9017. Do they work shorter hours?—They do not, in the majority of cases.

9018. Are they as easy to manage now as they were?—I question it.

9019. Are there as many female servants employed now as there were?—About the same; not quite as many. Female servants formerly used to work on the land, but now they will not.

9020. You say that labourers are better off than tenant farmers?—They are, certainly.

9021. Why do not tenant farmers bring up their children to some other calling?—Many do.

9022. To what?—Different callings; such as clerks, or apprentice them in shops, or put them on the railway.

9023. There are three classes of people who live on the land, the landlords, the tenants, and the labourers; which of those is worse off?—The tenants.

9024. You say that there has been a migration of farmers. Where have they gone to?—I do not say a great migration of farmers; a few. There are many, to my knowledge, that have gone from this district to America.

9025. Have any gone to England?—None to England.

9026. Do you think those people are better off in America?—I cannot say.

9027. They have not come back, I suppose?—They have not come back.

9028. Do you think the Welsh farmer is more attached to his home than the English farmer?—I do; there is no question about that.

9029. Why should he be so?—I cannot answer the question why he should be so. That is the case.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

9030. You have no reason to offer?—No; I believe it is characteristic of the Welsh that they cling to their country.

9031. Their language and religion have something to do with it?—Their language and religion have something to do with it, no doubt.

9032. Where have the labourers gone to?—Labourers, as a rule, go to towns; for instance, there are very many come to Barmouth from our district, and very many have gone to South Wales.

9033. You mentioned the depression in 1879. Was there any great loss of sheep in the year 1879?—I believe there was.

9034. Great loss?—Yes, great loss.

9035. Do you know of any farmers who lost their flocks?—I know farmers that lost a good many.

Mr. Seebohm.

9036. May I ask you a few questions in addition to your excellent evidence. Do many instances arise of farms to let? Is it the common case that there is a farm to let?—No, it is not a very common case here.

9037. Several in a year?—Oh, no. The cases are very far between; very few.

9038. Then when a farm is vacant there is great competition for it?—There is.

9039. Who are the competitors? There are the farmers' sons?—The farmers' sons.

9040. And the labourers who have saved money?—Labourers sometimes, but farmers' sons and farmers from the neighbourhood.

9041. And there is so much competition that people would be apt to give too high a rent to get in, I suppose?—There is.

9042. This is a practical point. Supposing that you had a Land Court, and you had many competitors offering a higher rent than you considered to be a fair living rent, how could a Land Court keep down that market value of the land? Could they let the farm at a less rent than people were willing to give?—No doubt they could; and that is one argument of mine for a Land Court.

9043. Then how would the Land Court choose between a lot of tenants all of whom would be willing to outbid one another, because it would be a sort of gift to a man whom they chose as the one to be admitted?—No, not quite in that light. If the former tenant failed to live on the farm, he could apply to the Land Court for a reduction of rent, and the farm would not become vacant.

9044. Yes, but I am not taking the case of a reduction of rent, I am talking of cases of farms, few and far between, which really became vacant. I want to get this point. How could a Land Court choose between tenants who were wishing to get in, because the lower rent would be a sort of gift to the one whom they chose as the one to be admitted?—Yes, I admit it is very difficult, almost impossible, for the landlord to decide, and we cannot expect him to lower the rent then when a higher rent is offered him.

9045. But do you think the Land Court could?—What I say is that farms get vacant in this part of the country because the tenants fail to live upon them.

9046. I quite understand it?—And then again there is a run for the farm.

9047. I quite understand that the Land Court might prevent a great many tenants from leaving their farms to save them from bankruptcy, or whatever it was. That in itself would lessen the number of vacant farms?—Yes.

9048. They would become rarer; the competition would become greater?—Yes.

9049. Now, the thing I cannot get any light upon is, how the Land Court is to remedy that when it has to deal with a farm becoming vacant?—I do not think that question would come before a Land Court, if there was a Land Court for the former tenant to apply to for a reduction of rent. There would be no such cases for any arbitration court at all.

9050. Then there would be no vacant farms?—Then there would be no vacant farms.

9051. And there would be no chance for a labourer to get a vacant farm?—No, not unless there is death.

9052. That is how you get competition, and that is the point on which we want light as to how the Land Court is to deal with those cases when they arise. It is a very difficult problem?—The Land Court would not have to deal very long with such cases; there would be no such cases for a Land Court in a very short time.

9053. You mean there would be no vacant farms?—No vacant farms, and the rent settled for the former tenant would remain the same for the incoming tenant.

9054. Then the difficulty would be to choose between the number of competitors who offer a larger rent to get in?—Then the question would be decided by the Land Court. It is not possible that a higher rent would be asked by the Land Court.

9055. And the difficulty would be to choose between the different competitors? would it not?—Who would choose in this manner the best tenant in his opinion.

9056. The Land Court you mean?—No, the landlord. I mean this, the rent having been decided by a Land Court, the case of the former tenant remains the same for the next tenant, and suppose there are many applying for the farm the choice the landlord has is to take the best.

9057. The difficulty would be, I think, if that was carried out, and there were no vacant farms, that the chance of people rising in the world, or becoming farm labourers into farmers, would become less, would it not? It is a choice between two difficulties. You do not want to disturb the old tenants to make the vacancies, and, on the other hand, you would be sorry if there were no vacancies to be filled, because the steps in the ladder would be rather destroyed between the tenant and the labourer?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

9058. You told us that there have been some cases of land being sold, and men who had been tenants becoming freeholders?—Yes.

9059. Was that in 1852?—1852.

9060. Can you tell us whether at that time any opportunity was given to the tenants for purchasing?—There was a sale at the time.

9061. Open sale?—Open sale.

9062. Has there been any other sale since that from a land owner?—There have been a few—very few.

9063. Do you know instances where there has been right of pre-emption given to the sitting tenant?—No, I do not.

9064. You know no such instances?—No, I do not.

9065. Then, in your opinion, are the tenants better off as tenants, or are they better off as owners of their own holdings?—So far as I can judge very much the same.

9066. I suppose it would depend upon the rate of interest at which they can borrow their money?—It does; they are very heavily mortgaged, no doubt.

9067. With regard to the children who work upon the farms, I suppose it is not every farm that has got an opportunity of getting children to help them?—Not every farm.

9068. So your remarks with regard to the children apply merely to those instances where there are children able to help?—Where there are children.

9069. Do those children generally help—the boys?—The boys do.

9070. So they get their experience by learning on the farm?—They do.

9071. And become capable of becoming farmers presently?—Yes.

9072. You have given us interesting evidence as to increasing the rate of wages, and you told us the bill has gone up and down?—It has.

9073. And you told us there are many applicants for farms, although the rates are higher?—Yes.

9074. And about the produce; is that about the same as it used to be?—No.

9075. Less?—Very much less.

9076. Can you say how much?—I should say at present, compared with what it has been, it is about 60 or 70 per cent. less in some quarters.

9077. With regard to the Small Holdings Act, you had, I suppose, a Committee of the County

Council inquiring into the working of this Act?—Yes.

9078. Do you think it would be an advantage if there was a compulsory clause?—Not altogether.

9079. With regard to the holding again, I just want to ask this one question: Is there any instance in your own knowledge of any payment from the incoming tenant to the outgoing tenant for goodwill over and above the exhausted improvements?—I have known instances.

9080. And were those instances with the knowledge of the landowner?—I doubt it.

Chairman.

9081. I have two or three questions which have been handed in. The first is from Mr. Llewelyn Jones: "Is it a fact that in your district a large "number of children of tender age are kept "away from school in order to work at home"? Does that come within your knowledge?—No, it is not that there is a large number; there are a few. They are kept to education; not altogether. We have an officer who looks after them; but when the tenant farmers cannot keep them at school, especially in busy times, they are.

9082. These are six questions from Mr. Vincent. "If the condition of the tenant farmer is superior to that of the freeholder," as you told us you considered it was, "do you not "think that fact is due really to the improve-"ments made by landowners?—I did not say it was superior.

Lord Kenyon.

I think he said it was much the same.

The Witness.

The labourer was superior to the tenant farmers, I said.

Lord Kenyon.

9083. I think I can clear that up. You said the tenants who bought their property on the Cors-y-gedol estate were worse off?—No, very much the same.

Chairman.

9084. "In the case of the sale of part of "Mr. Nanney's estate, was not the first offer "given to the tenants, at any rate in the "majority of cases"?—Whose estate?

9085. Mr. Nanney's estate?—I do not know anything about Mr. Nanney's estate.

9086. "May I take it that as part of the "machinery of carrying the Act of 1883 out, "you would be satisfied if the words 'such "'consent not to be unreasonably withheld' "were added in respect of Schedule 1"?—That would mend matters, no doubt.

9087. That would be a little improvement?—That would be a little improvement.

9088. "Will you kindly specify, as far as you "can, the good years, and bad years, and the "average years, which have occurred since "1879, so that we may have an idea of the "nature of the fluctuations"?—1879-80, bad; 1881-83, better; 1885, very bad; 1887-9, better; bad since.

9089. "Would it not be more just to describe "the mass of the farmers of your district as "peasant farmers in a small way of business, "rather than as farmers in the English sense"?—Does that mean that they have any business besides farming?

Lord Kenyon.

9090. With reference to the size of the holdings, are they small farms all through?—There are good-sized farms as well as small ones.

Chairman.

You do not press that, Mr. Vincent?

Mr. Vincent: No, I do not press that.

Chairman.

I do not think it is important.

The Witness.

There are many upland farms; the average there is very large.

9091. "Will you say whether, when you "speak of work done by children without "wages, and of farmer's inability to provide "for their children, you refer to the whole "class of tenant farmers or only to the smaller "ones"?—The largest farmers we have, as well as small ones.

The witness withdrew.

Rev. WILLIAM EVANS called and examined.

Chairman.

9092. You speak English?—Well, I will try, my Lord.

9093. Has your ownership of this mountain, that you state is the property of Mrs. Laura Evans, been attacked before the Royal Commission?—Attacked. What do you mean?

9094. Is there any doubt about the ownership?—Yes. There are persons disputing the right.

9095. What persons?—Well, I may call her a trespasser in the mountain, at present.

Lord Kenyon.

9096. Are you in possession of it now?—Yes. It is a common.

Chairman.

9097. But you see we are not in any way a court that we can adjudicate upon a question of a disputed right. I am afraid we cannot take your evidence. We are come here to inquire into the condition of land, and we are not come here to hear the complaints of any person holding land which it is said he is not entitled to, and to say that he or his sister, or any other relation is entitled to it?—We had it on a rent from the Crown lately.

9098. You paid a rental?—We paid a rental to the Crown, and I have got a conveyance for that rental.

Sir John Llewelyn.

Can you tell us in what way it is a matter of public interest?—It is a matter of private interest, it seems to me.

Chairman.

9099. Yes. It is a matter of private interest to yourself, and it is of no public interest?—I understood the Commission would take these things into consideration. That is the reason I wrote the Secretary to take my name, if it was so, and he wrote to say that he had taken my name, and he would put my name down for Barmouth, and I wrote again to ask whether there was any other communication required, and I did not hear a word, and then I took it for granted that I was to be called.

9100. Yes; but you understand that we cannot take any private dispute; that cannot come before us. If you can give us any general evidence as regards commons, we will take that?—I will do that.

9101. But I am afraid we cannot take any evidence about any dispute between any private persons as to the right to this mountain.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

9102. What I understand is, that either you or your relatives claim this waste or common ground?—Yes, that is it.

9103. And you want to show the nature of the title that you or your relatives have to this waste land?—That is so.

Chairman.

9104. Are there any commoners on this waste land?—No.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

9105. Then why is it "common"—why do you call it "common" at all?—It is stated in the deeds it is property adjoined to certain property long ago. You will see it is by this (handing paper).

9106. May I look at the fine. I think you refer in your letter to a fine and a recovery?—Yes; this is the fine and a recovery, the office copy, and this is the conveyance from the Woods and Forests of the fee-farm rent (producing the documents).

Sir John Llewelyn.

If he will read those through I will ask no questions upon it.

Chairman.

9107. Will you kindly read those, and just tell us shortly what your case is?—

Chairman—continued.

"Ownership of a Mountain or Common at "Barmouth, Merionethshire. Sir, I beg to "submit evidence respecting the ownership of "the above Mountain or Common situated at "Barmouth, and to show that the same is the "property of Mrs. Laura Evans, viz.: (1) By "the Chirograph, and Public Record Office "Copy of a Fine levied on the same in 1775." The parcels are described in the Fine as "Five "Messuages, one Cottage, one Barn, six Gardens, "one Orchard and one acre of Land and Com-"mon of Pasture for all manner of cattle and "Common of Turbary."

9108. Do you put that in?—That is it (handing it in).

9109. That is one claim that has been considered?—"(2) Also by the Public Record Office "Copy of a Recovery exemplified of the same "in 1797." Here it is (handing it in). "And "to show that the same is the property of "Mrs. Laura Evans."

9110. Well you have put in these two statements of yours; I have to ask you these questions. Has your title to your property been in any way attacked during the sittings of the Commission?—No, I do not know.

9111. Nobody has brought any counterclaim for this?—I am not aware of any, I cannot say.

9112. Then we are very much obliged to you for putting these in, and it will be considered. We have your evidence. These are all the papers you wanted to hand in, I think?—Yes, so far as the papers go, unless you take my evidence.

9113. You have given it. You tell us you hand in these documents?—I mean if there is anything you want to know about the commons.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

9114. This is now enclosed. In 1797 the parcels are described as "six messuages, four "gardens, one acre of land, and common of "pasture for all cattle and common of turbary." Is it now all enclosed. Has it a fence round it now?—It was fenced. It is this rock above you here, this mountain above you here, and you see the messuages which are referred to there and the gardens. They run down from there to the sand, and in a certain lease and re-lease dated 14th and 15th December 1728, it is stated, "From the mountain or common next adjoining "thereto down to the sands." And that is the reason the common is included in the fine or recovery.

Chairman.

9115. Then, do you mean to say you claim the whole of Barmouth?—No, my Lord. Oh, no. I only claim what I name there.

Chairman.

Very well; we are very much obliged to you for putting this in, and it will be added to the papers.

The witness withdrew.

The Hon. R. Henley Eden called and examined.

Chairman.

9116. You are the Hon. R. H. Eden ?—Yes.

9117. And you live where ?—At Witley, in Worcestershire.

9118. You are the estate agent to Lord Dudley for the Crogan Estate, Merionethshire ?—Yes.

9119. The acreage of the estate is what ?—10,000 acres.

9120. Ten thousand acres in Merionethshire ?—Yes.

9121. Question No. 21 : Where there are rights of pasture over "sheep runs," &c., in whom are such rights vested, and subject to what payments and conditions. Whether "without stint," or how limited ?—They are vested in the landowner, and the number of sheep is stated in letting the farms, and each tenant has the right to run so many sheep on the moors.

9122. No. 24, about the management. Where land is held by small or large, by absentee or resident landowners, in consolidated or scattered estates, can you tell us anything about the management ?—I should consider the land is better managed on a large estate than on a small estate.

9123. And about your tenants, are they Nonconformists or Churchmen ? — Chiefly Nonconformists.

9124. Does it make any difference ?—None in the world. There is the best possible feeling between landlord and tenant.

9125. Where agents are employed, have they received any special training for the supervision of agricultural land ?—Yes.

9126. You were educated at 16 years of age as a farmer ?—Yes, and land agent, and I have been a farmer and land agent ever since.

9127. What is the usual date of entry in your district ?—Lady Day.

9128. Are farms let on leases or from year to year ?—From year to year.

9129. No leases ? — They have never been asked for.

9130. And no changes in tenancy ?—Very few changes, except from death. I think there have been two from death.

9131. Have any cases of hardship arisen ?—No.

9132. In resuming the occupation of a field or plot out of a holding, for the sake of planting, building, or for other purposes, do owners generally serve their tenants with proper notices for the purpose, and grant them compensation ?—Certainly.

9133. And the usual compensation if damage is done by timber cutting, mining, brickfields, quarries, and so forth ?—Yes.

9134. Will you hand in a copy of your agreement ?—Yes (handing it in).

9135. Are any of the clauses considered oppressive ?—No.

9136. Have you any penalising clauses in hem ? — No, nothing beyond the ordinary clauses. If a man farms badly we should make a claim on his leaving.

Chairman—continued.

9137. And the rent is a gross sum, I suppose ?—A gross sum.

9138. And the rent of the smaller tenantry of course is higher per acre than on larger farms ?—Very slightly on account of the buildings, but it is a little, I dare say.

9139. Do you claim any other services from the tenant than the payment of rent ?—None of any sort.

9140. How do you fix your rent ?—I should value it myself. Directly a farm is vacant I value the farm.

9141. And, of course, you let to the best man you can get ?—To the best man with capital.

9142. Is arbitration ever resorted to ?—Never.

9143. And you have not raised your rents, I suppose ?—No, they have been reduced.

9144. What about permanent reductions or temporary abatements of rent ?—Five tenants' rents were permanently reduced 15 per cent. in 1886 ; 10 per cent. given back on rents from Lady Day 1885 to Lady Day 1889 ; 10 per cent. given back on rents from Lady Day 1891 to Lady Day 1892 ; 15 per cent. given back on rents from Lady Day 1892 to Lady Day 1893, in fact, up to the present time.

9145. You told us you make the valuations yourself ?—Yes.

9146. In 1886 did you go into the question of rents being reduced ?—Yes, I went over the whole estate, and went into them all.

9147. Were there any particular reductions as the result ?—Five. In those cases the farms were bought separately from the rest of the estate.

9148. Five tenants got a permanent reduction in 1886 ?—Yes.

9149. When do you get the rent after it falls due ?—We give four months hanging gale.

9150. What do you think about the preferential claim for rent on the position of tenants generally—what effect has it ?—I think it is a good thing. It enables the landlord to give a larger credit when asked for, as it sometimes is, as it enables the tenants to sell their crops to best advantage, and not to rush them on the markets.

9151. What do you say with regard to the other charges on the land, or on incomes derived from land ?—Since I have been agent the tithes have been merged with the rent. The land tax is paid by the tenants ; it is under 32*l.* on the whole estate. There are a few chief rents paid by the tenants, that is under 3*l.* on the whole estate ; the local rates are paid by the tenants, and the income tax is, of course, paid by the landlord.

9152. What sized farms are there on Lord Dudley's estate ?—12 between 1 and 20 acres, 12 between 20 and 50 acres, 12 between 100 and 200 acres, 5 between 200 and 300 acres, 3 between 300 and 350 acres, but that does not include the sheep walks, that is the bottom land.

9153. Any sub-division or sub-letting?—No, I have none practically.

9154. I suppose the larger tenants farm the best; do you find that or not?—Yes, I think they do.

9155. That is your opinion?—It is very difficult to say—they vary.

9156. Is it grazing and arable?—Grazing and arable.

9157. Is there any scarcity of labourers?—I have never heard of any.

9158. Is there any land going out of cultivation?—None.

9159. Has any waste land been reclaimed?—No.

9160. Is there much land still waste which is capable of profitable reclamation by draining marshy ground or embanking rivers?—There is no draining in that sense; no large protection of land by embanking rivers.

9161. Do you make improvements on your land?—The landlord finds the drain pipes on these farms, and he protects the land from river encroachment when it gets bad, and he finds the gates and posts and wire fencing; he has also had granaries built, and erected more buildings generally, and he has always been charged with those improvements and no interest has been charged on it.

9162. What about the draining?—In a general way the landlord finds the pipes and the tenant puts them in, and if rent is a little dearer we put the pipes in as a bonus.

9163. You do not contract out of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No.

9164. And there is no custom of the country?—No, except that the incoming tenant has to take the outgoing tenant's sheep.

9165. Outgoing tenants have always had sufficient compensation in your opinion?—Always.

9166. And what is the custom about the sale of sheep?—The incoming tenant has to take them by custom.

9167. But is there an obligation, like there is in Scotland, on the landlord to take all the sheep on the farm?—I believe there is, but it has never come before me.

9168. I mean that an outgoing tenant can insist upon his sheep being taken by the landlord, just the same as in Scotland?—Yes. The sheep know the hills, and it is always understood for that reason that the landlord ought to take them.

9169. Has Lord Dudley any shooting in this part of the world?—The shooting is let.

9170. And the ground game, of course the tenants can kill what they like?—And do.

9171. Any damage complained of?—I never heard of any.

9172. And there is no attention paid to fruit culture, horticulture including market gardening, forestry, poultry farming, and bee-keeping?—I have been told there was a lecturer, but cannot say of my own knowledge.

Chairman—continued.

9173. And no co-operation and combination between landlords and tenants?—None.

9174. And no co-operation among farmers?—No.

9175. And no tenant farmers who have bought their own or other holdings?—No.

9176. We have heard a good deal about the children. The man and the wife and children all work on the farm?—All, I think, up to 35 years of age sometimes.

9177. The children up to 35 years of age?—Yes, and more.

9178. Do they get any wages?—They must get wages. I do not know how it is managed. They have money in their pockets, and they must get some wages.

9179. Can you tell us about the chief causes of depression?—Since I have known Wales the chief causes of depression were the large number of sheep which were lost in 1885. I do not go back to 1879. Of course that was the first cause; and the bad prices of all sorts of stock from 1885 to 1888; and again, the great drop in the value of sheep in 1892 and 1893.

9180. Does Lord Dudley ever come down to this part of the world?—He has been.

9181. There is no house on the property which he could occupy?—There is a little house, but a very small one; not a house he could live in.

9182. You have put in, I see, a long list of the families who have held the same farms for generations?—Yes.

9183. There has been very little change on the estate?—There has been none, I think, except from deaths, and I think one was turned out for quarrelling with the neighbours.

9184. And some of them go back for years and years?—An immense number of years. I cannot find out how far some of them go back. I will put that in. [Handing in list.]

Sir John Llewelyn.

9185. You have power under your agreements to make a claim under the penal clauses?—Well, they are very slight. There are penal clauses.

9186. Have you ever enforced them?—No.

9187. You gave us a list of the farms, the size of the farms, the acreage of the farms. If I have it rightly from you, you say there are 5,220 acres. I should like to have once more the size of the farms?—What is the number of the question?

9188. Without troubling you, I took it down as being 5,220 acres. Have you got it?—Yes. 12 between one and 20 acres; 12 between 20 and 50 acres; 12 between 100 and 200 acres; five between 200 and 300 acres; three between 300 and 350 acres.

9189. So that rather more than half of those farms would be under 50 acres?—Yes, that is so.

9190. I want your opinion as to which class of farmers were doing best, the larger ones or the smaller ones?—I should think the larger ones.

9191. And you told us that was exclusive of sheep runs?—Yes.

9192. Another interesting point you stated that I have not heard stated before, was, that the number of sheep is specified in the holdings?—Yes.

9193. That, I suppose, is with the object of preventing quarrelling among the neighbours, is that it?—That is so.

Chairman.

9194. About over-stocking the mountain?—Yes. Of course the over-stocking the mountain is the cause of the quarrelling.

Sir John Llewelyn.

9195. We have had evidence of the quarrelling in respect of that grievance, and we have not yet heard any rectification of the manner of doing away with what has been found to be a grievance; this is the first time I have heard of it?—The only tenant I have had to dismiss has been from that very reason, from quarrelling over the sheep.

9196. Have you consolidated farms?—No.

9197. Have you divided them?—No; not to any extent. I mean a field may have been altered here and there.

9198. That is what I meant; you have not made two farms out of one, or one out of two?—Oh, no.

9199. Then since you have had experience of English agriculture, would you tell us, in your opinion, what are the chief differences between land tenure in England and land tenure in Wales?—I do not quite follow you.

9200. There are some differences, I take it—the mountainous character of the land is one. It is very different in that way?—Oh, yes.

9201. And the size of the farms is considerably different on the average?—In England, the part I have to deal with now, is chiefly fruit growing, hop and fruit.

9202. They are under very different conditions?—Yes, as different as possible.

9203. Does language make any difference as between you and your tenants?—Not a bit.

9204. Do you speak Welsh?—No.

9205. Has religion ever entered into the question of tenancy?—Never.

9206. Would it do so in England?—No.

9207. I suppose language would, but religion would not?—No.

9208. I suppose you have some Churchmen tenants and you have some Nonconformist tenants?—We have very few Churchmen. I really could hardly point to more than one or two.

Mr. Seebohm.

9209. You spoke with reference to the sheep runs being let according to the number of sheep. Is it always sheep, are there never bullocks?—Always sheep.

9210. Nothing but sheep?—Nothing but sheep.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

9211. No cattle breeding there?—None on the hills. I am only talking of sheep on the hills.

9212. Then there is this question I want to ask. I think you stated that most or all of your tenants were year to year tenants?—All.

9213. Do you know how far back that system of year to year tenancy goes. Have you any traditions of there once having been leases for lives—leases for three lives, or anything of that kind?—No, never since Lord Dudley has bought the estate.

9214. Do you happen to know whether there were any before that?—No, I cannot tell you before that.

9215. They have been from year to year ever since when?—Since 1852.

Mr. Richard Jones.

9216. What do you mean by quillets of land?—They are small pieces that run through other fields; little strips in the middle of fields.

9217. You have had experience of Welsh and English estates. What is your impression of Welsh farmers generally?—They are very good tenants indeed. They pay their rent with the utmost punctuality, and they farm well; very well.

Mr. Griffiths.

9218. Your statement with regard to the children working on the farm differs from all that we have had heretofore. You say the children are paid for working on the farms?—Well, I presume they are paid; because they have money in their pockets. I have no proof of their being paid. Of course I cannot prove it; but they always have money, and as they work entirely on the farm, they must be paid by the farm.

9219. Do you spend much time down in Wales?—I am here seven or eight, sometimes nine or ten, times a year.

9220. Do you give the same percentage to the Welsh tenants that you give to the Worcestershire tenants?—Quite different. They do not follow each other at all. Sometimes when it is bad times in Worcestershire it is good times in Wales. I have known that.

9221. You do not mean to say that all the Worcestershire land is laid down with hops?—No, of course not.

9222. You said so just now?—No, I say it is chiefly fruit growing and hops. That is what I said.

9223. I think there is a good deal of dairy farming in Worcestershire. I know a little of it?—I do not think there is.

9224. Have you any dairy schools in Worcestershire?—We have dairy schools; but there is no dairying in the way of cheese-making, or in the way of large dairy farms. It is simply that a man keeps three or four or five cows.

9225. I know they have been teaching butter-making there for some time?—I know; I am Chairman of that Committee, and I know it well; but you cannot call it a dairy country.

Lord Kenyon.

9226. In your experience of English estates and Welsh estates, is there any difference in the treatment of tenants by their landlords, do you think?—None.

9227. They treat them exactly in the same way in Wales as they do in England?—Exactly.

9228. You said that the shooting here was let?—It is let to Sir Henry Robertson, the next owner. It is so intermixed with his estate that neither could shoot without the other. The lands run in and out of each other completely.

9229. Have you had any complaints on that score?—Never.

9230. Have the tenants ever applied for the shooting on their own account?—Never.

Chairman.

9231. There is one question I have to trouble you with, from Mr. Vincent. "Do you think "that if there was a Land Court a landowner "would have as much interest in his estates "as he has now"?—I do not suppose he would. He would have no interest at all, I should think.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

9232. Upon that, just one question. I do not quite follow that answer. He would have the rent still, would he not?—That remains to be seen, I think.

9233. It might be reduced, but there would be a fair rent fixed by the Court according to the produce of the estate?—At present he is master of his own estate; and if there was a Land Court, he would no longer be master of his own estate.

Mr. Richard Jones.

9234. I think you say that farms are better managed on consolidated estates. Will you explain that?—I think they are. I give my opinion that they are better managed on large estates than on small ones. The landowner expends more money in repairs, and probably takes care to get a better class of tenant.

9235. You have not used the word "large" estate, but "consolidated" estate?—Well, I mean large estate. That is the word, I think, in the schedule.

Chairman.

9236. That question refers to the case of three or four small farms being knocked into one. I think you will find the word "consolidated" is in the question?—I took it as being a large estate in reading the question.

9237. It is Question No. 24. "Where land "is held by small or large, or by absentee "or resident landowners in consolidated or "scattered estates." I suppose "consolidated" means a large aggregate of land all put together?—That is what I took it to be.

Mr. Richard Jones.

9238. In what way would the farm be better managed?—I think the estates are better looked after, and a better class of tenant is picked out. A small owner is sometimes careless as to who he gets on an outlying scattered farm. They are more difficult to let, and he does not get so good a class of men.

Sir John Llewelyn.

Arising out of that, is it your opinion that the best class of tenant farmers prefer to hold under a big landowner than under a small one?—Distinctly.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Richard Parry called and examined.

Chairman.

9240. Will you give your evidence in English, or would you like to give it in Welsh?—In Welsh.

(The witness was examined through an interpreter.)

9241. Where do you live?—Late of Henblas, Llangelynin.

9242. Did you live anywhere else previously?—Yes.

9243. Where?—Gwystatcoid, in the parish of Mallwyd, Merionethshire.

9244. What do you wish to speak about?—About my leaving Henblas.

9245. Will you give us the history of that?—I left Henblas in May of 1891.

9246. Who was your landlord?—The Countess De Morella. Mr. Gillart was the agent.

9247. Will you tell us the circumstances under which you left?—My family were increasing so much that there was not sufficient work for them on the farm, so I took a larger farm in order that my children might remain at home.

Chairman—continued.

9248. As well as the other one?—I asked Mr. Gillart whether he would take the farm off my hands before I took Rhydyfen.

9249. What was Mr. Gillart's reply to that?—He said that he would take the farm up, and that he would not be unkind to any tenant who would do better, and that he would come to see the farm—come over the farm. He came. I had not ploughed my farm, but it looked well at the time. I had prepared it for keeping sheep and cows. I had the consent to have the valuation of two men with regard to the sheep and about three tons of fodder which was left behind, including the hay and straw, water-power, and engines, and some wire fences. When the incoming tenant was going to take Henblas, Mr. Gillart asked for 5*l.* increase in the rent. Some refused; but he found a tenant who would give that increase. That is all I have got to say on that point.

See 18,462, 18,491.

9250. Did you get the money for these things that you left on the farm?—Yes, I had a valuation of all that I had left there.

9251. And got paid?—Yes, and I got paid. I had incurred extra expense in manuring before this, and a little in putting up walls.

9252. Did you get any compensation for this manuring, or for putting up the walls?—No.

9253. And you consider that you were fairly entitled to that compensation?—Yes; altogether.

9254. And you consider yourself to have been unfairly treated?—I complain nothing with regard to the agreement as the agreement stands. I did as well as the agreement would allow; but I consider that the 5*l.* increase in rent on the nature of the land is entirely mine.

9255. Can you tell us anything about the conditions of the farmers and farmers' widows and orphans in the district?—Yes. In order that you may understand, I may say that there are 60 to 65 farms in the parish from 20*l.* and upwards in rent.

9256. Which parish is this?—Llangelynin. I only go back 25 years. There have been about 70 changes on these farms during the last 25 years.

9257. Do they all belong to the Countess De Morella?—No; there are several small landowners. Out of these 70 about 20 had become bankrupt or had failed.

9258. What is the condition of these paupers at the present moment?

The Interpreter.—He did not say paupers He said 20 who had failed—who had no capital.

Chairman.

Have these people absolutely failed—have they lost all their money, or have they got a little money left?

The Witness (speaking in English). They have left all their money to get work.

9259. They have lost everything they had?—Everything.

9260. They were farmers on this estate under these different people, and they have lost all the money that they had in farming and now they are paupers?—Some paupers and some poor workers.

9261. Some are on the parish, some are paupers, and some have not any money at all and are obliged to work?—Yes.

The examination was resumed through the Interpreter.

9262. Will you proceed?—In the year 1890, 27, with their families, were in receipt of parish relief who had formerly been farmers.

9263. Twenty-seven all included?—Twenty-seven all told out of the 70. The cost of maintaining these 27 people amounted during the year to 163*l.* 8*s.* That is the amount of the parish relief. It is a little less now, some of them having died, and some of the children being able to go to service. It is 117*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.* There are 25 of them now instead of 27.

Chairman—continued.

9264. What is the condition of the outbuildings in your neighbourhood?—Some of the buildings are in a very bad state; not only the outbuildings, but the houses as well.

9265. Are there any absentee landlords in your neighbourhood?—They all live away with the exception of one who partly resides there. My opinion and the opinion of the neighbourhood is that that has a great deal to do with the poverty of the parish; that it is far better in other parishes where the landlords reside.

9266. Can you say anything about the relative value of the landlords' and the tenants' interest in upland and lowland farms?—We consider that a farm on the lowlands, if there is proper stock on it, is worth three times the stock. If the cost of the stock is 1,000*l.* the cost of the farm is 3,000*l.* on lowlands. We consider that when the farm is properly stocked it is worth three times the stock. It is very different on high land. The stock of upland farms is half the value of the farm as a rule, and in many instances in upland farms the stock of the farm is as valuable as the farm itself.

9267. If it was sold—if it was put on the market?—Yes.

9268. Are there any large number of freeholders?—Two in the parish.

Lord Kenyon.

9269. I wanted to clear up the reason why you left Henblas. Did you ask for a release from Mr. Gillart before, or did you give him notice? Did you ask for a release before the time became due—that you should leave?—Yes.

9270. You asked him to let you off on the 25th March previous to what he might have done; is that it?—I did not give up the farm, but I asked whether he would take it.

9271. Did you ask Mr. Gillart for any more compensation than you received?—No.

9272. Then what you complain of is that Mr. Gillart got 5*l.* a year more?—Yes.

9273. And you never asked for any more?—No, I had some difficulty in getting what I asked for.

9274. You live at Rhydyfen now, under Mr. Price?—Yes.

9275. I know the place very well—at the public-house?—Yes.

9276. Then, with regard to the game. We heard that in this district the letting of the game was a disadvantage. Do you think that?—It would make no difference. There was no game whatsoever.

9277. I mean at Rhydyfen?—I complained but little with regard to the game at Rhydyfen. When the gentlemen come out to shoot the sheep are a little disturbed.

9278. What I meant was whether you think the game should not be let by the landlord to another person as I understand it is by Mr. Price?—I have no particular opinion upon that. I do not quite understand the question. He contracted the farm out of the agreement when I took the farm.

Lord Kenyon.

I will not press the question.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

9279. Is there a village of Henblas?—No.

9280. What is the nearest village to the farm that you are living at?—The nearest village to Henblas, where I used to be?

9281. Yes?—Llwyngwril.

9282. What is the sanitary condition of that village?—It is very bad.

9283. Is it the fact that the people are drinking water from wells near which there are cesspools and privies?—It is not altogether so. It is true that people drink water from the river into which cesspools or privies flow.

9284. The water is not from wells, as I thought, but from the river?—No, not from the wells, but from the river, and there is another thing: there are farmhouses where the water with which they are supplied flows beneath the churchyard, and there is no other water to be had.

9285. What is the condition of the cottages as to repair?—They are in a very bad state.

9286. The landlady has no house near this village, has she?—No, I have never seen her.

Mr. Griffiths.

9287. You say, Mr. Parry, that there have been a great many changes in these farms. How are they found now? Has the rent been reduced?—Yes, in several instances.

9288. You say there are a few freeholders. Do they live any better than the rest around them?—There are two freeholders, and they farm far better than the other tenants.

9289. Why do they farm better?—Because they live on their own farms, and because they have a certainty that labour is not in vain.

9290. It is not that they possess more money but they have security of tenure?—Not because they have more money, or are better off.

9291. Do you think the farmers in that neighbourhood would farm better and produce better crops if they had security of tenure?—I feel certain that they would.

9292. Can you tell us if this water that you speak of has ever been analysed?—The inspector of nuisances, together with the doctor, has often been there examining it.

9293. Did they take away some water in bottles?—I cannot say. I can say this, that I have seen fat—grease—on the surface of the water which we used where I lived.

9294. How long do people live generally there?—A few reach old age, but there are very often young people die.

Mr. Richard Jones.

9295. You say that three times the value of the stock would be the worth of the whole farm?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

9296. That is on a lowland farm?—Yes.

9297. And that on an upland farm the value of the farm would be twice the value of the stock?—Yes.

9298. We will say that on a lowland farm the value of the stock is 300*l.*?—Yes.

9299. Consequently the value of the farm would be 900*l.*?—Yes.

9300. What should be the rent of that farm?—As it would produce.

9301. You are going into another rule now in assessing rent. I want you to keep to this one.

Sir John Llewelyn.

We ought to get Mr. Jones' question a little clearer. I did not quite understand your question.

Mr. Richard Jones.

He says this, that if the value of the stock on the farm is 300*l.*, the value of the farm should be 900*l.*

Sir John Llewelyn.

I quite follow that.

Mr. Richard Jones.

I am asking him, according to that rule, what should be the rent of the farm.

Sir John Llewelyn.

I follow your argument perfectly, and I want to understand your question.

Mr. Richard Jones.

9302. I want to know, according to that rule, what the rent should be?—4 per cent. on the capital; 4 per cent on 900*l.*

Sir John Llewelyn.

That would be 36*l.*

Mr. Richard Jones.

9303. 36*l.* Supposing that the stock on an upland farm was 300*l.*, and the value 600*l.*, what should be the rent of that?—I consider that it should be less than the other; 3 or 3½ per cent. would be enough.

9304. Why do you make that distinction?—Because the landlord has far greater certainty of his rent on highland farms than on lowland farms.

9305. How so?—Because the value of the stock approaches nearer to the value of the farm.

9306. Have you any other rule for assessing rent? On the lowland farm how many times the rent should you make in order that the farm should pay?—Three times.

9307. And an upland farm?—Four or five times at least. I should like to say a word or two to explain that. Farmers on upland farms are obliged to pay for putting their stock down on the lowland farms during winter.

9308. Yes, of course, that is a good reason.

Sir John Llewelyn.

We call it "tack" in our country. He does not know the word very likely.

The Interpreter.—No.

Sir John Llewelyn.

9309. Is it sheep only?—Sheep and ponies as well.

Mr. Richard Jones.

9310. Do you consider, according to that last rule, that farmers have not made a profit on their farm?—No, they have not.

9311. Do you know the rate collector of the parish where you live?—Yes.

9312. Do you know whether there are any arrears on the rates?—I do not know the particulars or the details with regard to the parish during the last two years, but it was so when I left the parish.

9313. You do not know whether the overseers have received notice from the board of guardians with respect to the arrears of rates?—I do not know that now.

Professor Rhŷs.

9314. You mentioned just now the sanitary condition of Llyngwril; would you tell me what are the principal diseases that people die of in the parish according to your impression?—Consumption and inflammation most of them.

9315. What do you mean by inflammation; where is the inflammation?—Inflammation of the lungs, or any of the internal organs.

9316. Do you have epidemics very much?—Scarlet fever and measles.

9317. Does Llwyngwril suffer more from measles and scarlet fever than the average villages about, do you know?—I really cannot say as to that, but they have been suffering from those two epidemics during the last two years.

9318. Has that been ascribed to the bad water by the local authorities?—I have not heard.

9319. Has there been any diphtheria?—No, not lately.

9320. What servants do you keep now?—I have two sons working and a daughter.

9321. Have you any labourers?—Four or five during harvest time, and one during the rest of the year.

9322. What do you pay them?—I paid 16*s.* this year. I used to pay 1*l.* in former years, as well as their food.

9323. About how long do you employ them in the year?—Two months.

Sir John Llewelyn.

9324. Were you the poor-law guardian when you were at Henblas?—Yes.

9325. It was in May 1891 that you left it?—Yes.

9326. Was the parish an exceptionally poor one?—Yes, it is the worst by far in North Wales.

9327. You partly attribute that to the absenteeism of the landlord?—I believe so.

9328. How many landowners were there besides the Countess De Morella?—There were very many, but the largest landowners were Mr. Tylor, Mrs. Royle, of Bala——

9329. I do not care for the names, but there were very many?—Yes.

9330. Has any of that land been sold lately or since then?—Some building land has been sold recently at Llwyngwril.

9331. But at the farms; the holdings?—But few farms have been sold.

9332. To the tenants or to other people?—To other people.

9333. Did you take any steps towards getting a better water supply?—Yes, when I was on the board of guardians.

9334. That has not been carried out?—No.

Chairman.

9335. There are some questions handed in. Question by Mr. Llewelyn Jones: "Have the "local landlords done anything towards im- "proving the water supply near Llwyngwril? "Do you know whether they have been ap- "proached with a view to getting them to do "something in that direction?" I think that question has been put and we need not trouble you about that. Another question by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Who is the chief land- "lord of the cottages, &c., in the village of "Llwyngwril"?—The Countess De Morella did own them, but they have been sold to several tradesmen, and so on.

9336. A question by Mr. Vincent: "Are there "not 'fridds' in your neighbourhood"?—Yes.

9337. What do you mean by "fridds"?—By 'fridds' I mean land between the upland and the lowland specially intended for the use of the sheep in winter.

9338. Then "Are the properties of these "absentee owners of such size that they could "reside upon them and have tenants as well"?—It depends on what should be the extent of an estate to keep the landlord there.

9339. "Were not there more freeholders in "your parish some years ago"?—I do not think there is much difference.

9340. "If so, what has become of them." Well, there is no difference, and, therefore, that does not arise. This is a question by Mr. Gillart: "Has not the Countess de Morella sold "most of the houses in the village lately, and "were not they mostly bought by the occu- "piers"?—A shop was sold to one who occupied a shop, and a public-house to a publican, but nothing else.

9341. I will put that question again: "Has "not the Countess de Morella sold most of the "houses in the village lately, and were not "they mostly bought by the occupiers"?—I do not know the details, but I do not think that any of the occupiers bought the houses except those two I mentioned.

Re-examined, 18,491.

Mr. RICHARD ROBERTS called and examined through an Interpreter.

9341*a*. The Interpreter read the following evidence of the witness :—

"Evidence of Mr. Richard Roberts, Ty Gwyn, Trawsfynydd, tenant of Ty Gwyn and Murmadog farm.

"Formerly tenant of Brynscuboriau, in same parish.

"Evidence relates to Trawsfynydd parish. The chief landlords are Sir Watkin W. Wynn, Mr. Wood, and Mr. Ansel.

With regard to tenancy the term is from March 25th as to land and May 13th as to house. Tenancies are from year to year. There are no leases in the neighbourhood.

"In the year 1811 the population of the parish of Trawsfynydd was 1481, now it is 1636. In the early part of the century the population was entirely agricultural, and managed to live upon the produce of the land. Now there are over 120 men at work in the quarries, and this represents a population of 500, or more, so that the present agricultural population is only about 1,100.
